

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

<http://www.archive.org/details/academyliteratur42londuoft>

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE AND ART.

JULY — DECEMBER,
1892.

30.86
93.

VOLUME XLII.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1892.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XLII.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Acland & Smith's Studies in Secondary Education	280
Ady's (Mrs. Henry) Sacharissa	477
Ainslie's (How) A Pilgrimage to the Land of Burns, &c.	561
Aitken's (G. A.) Poems and Satires of Andrew Marvell	230
Anderson's (Melville B.) translation of De Rémusat's Adolphe Thiers	535
Armstrong's (Edward) Elizabeth Furness	185
Baethgen's (Fr.) Die Psalmen	583
Baker's (Major Eden) Preliminary Tactics	259
Bastable's (Prof. C. F.) Public Finance	229
Batchelor's (Rev. John) The Aims of Japan	207
Beale's (Mrs. C. Hutton) Reminiscences of a Gentlewoman of the Last Century	330
Bell & Fischer's translation of Von Moltke's Letters	5
Bent's (J. Theodore) The Ruined Cities of Mesopotamia	582
Besant's (Walter) London	582
Black's (Charles E. D.) Memoir on the Indian Surveys	305
—— (J. S.) translation of Nöldeke's Sketches from Eastern History	603
Blogg's (Henry Birdwood) The Life of Francis Duncan	126
Blunt's (William Scawen) Esther, Love Lyrics, and Natalia's Resurrection	503
Bourget's (Paul) Nouvelles Pastels	183
Bourne's (H. R. Fox) Sir Philip Sidney	26
Briggs's (C. A.) The Bible, the Church, and the Reason	25
Burns, Robert, Selected Poems of	561
Butler's (Arthur Gray) Harold	87
Cadier's (Alfred) Osse	189
Carlyle, Thomas, Last Words of	165
Carnot, Correspondance Générale de	431
Cartwright's (Julia) Sacharissa	477
Cheyne's (Rev. T. K.) Aids to the Devout Study of Criticism	328
Coke's Mrs. Talbot The Gentlewoman at Home	188
Compton's (Herbert) Account of European Military Adventurers of Hindustan	602
Conway's (Moncure Daniel) Life of Thomas Paine	550
Courtney's (W. L.) Studies at Leisure	46
Cromarty's (Deas) Scottish Ministerial Mutinies	209
Crump's (Charles G.) edition of Lander's Poems, &c.	430
Curtin's (J.) translation of Sienkiewicz's The Deluge	500
D'Alviella's (Count Goblet) On the Origin and Growth of the Conception of God	258
Davidson's (Thomas) Aristotle and Ancient Educational Ideals	407
De Bourgade La Dardoy's (Dr. E.) Paraguay	406
De Broglie's (Duc) Memoirs of Talleyrand	43
Dent's (C. T.) Mountaineering	124
De Rémusat's (P.) Adolphe Thiers	535
Dickens's, Charles, Letters to Wilkie Collins	304
Dobson's (Anstoin) Eighteenth Century Vignettes	531
Duhn's (Bernhard) Das Buch Jesaja	583
Earle's (Alice Morse) The Sabbath in Puritan New England	47
Edwards's (Miss Bethann) France of To-day	7
Ellis's (Edwin J.) Fate in Arcadia, and other Poems	258

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Elton's (Charles I.) The Career of Columbus	355
Englishman in Paris, An	113
Espinasse's (Francis) Life of Voltaire	600
Farrar's (Frederic W.) Social and Present Day Questions	47
Fitzpatrick's (W. J.) Secret Service under Pitt	206
Fleay's (Frederick Gard) Biographical Chronicle of the English Drama	84
Fouillée's (Alfred) Education from a National Standpoint	66
Frederic's (Harold) The New Exodus	478
Froude's (James Anthony) The Spanish Story of the Armada, and other Essays	63
Gale's (Norman R.) A Country Muse	186
Gibbins's (H. de B.) History of Commerce in Europe	306
Gösch, Sir Daniel, Diaries of	279
Graetz's (Prof. H.) History of the Jews	258
Gronstroet's (W. J.) translation of Fouillée's Education from a National Standpoint	66
Griffin's (Sir Lepel) Ranjit Singh	232
Hamann's (A.) Lessing's Laocoon	356
Hazlitt's (W. Carew) The Lively Companies of London	353
Heine, H. Ulrich, The Works of , Leland's translation	208
Hewins's (W. A. S.) English Trade and Finance	479
Hibbert's (F. A.) The Influence and Development of English Guilds	303
Higginson's (Thomas Wentworth) The New World and the New Book	307
Hole's (S. Reynolds) A Book about the Garden and the Gardener	85
Hole, Dean, The Memorials of	533
Hooper's (George) Abraham Fabert	303
Horne's (Herbert P.) Diversi Colores	355
Hosken's (James Dryden) Phaon and Sarpho, and Nimrod	125
Howell, James, The Familiar Letters of	327
Hughes's (Rev. Thomas) Loyola and the Educational System of the Jesuits	407
Hutton's (Laurence) edition of Dickens's Letters to Wilkie Collins	304
—— (Catherine) Letters	330
Huxley's (Thomas H.) Essays upon some Controverted Questions	83
Ingram's (J. Dunbar) England and Rome	8
Innes's (A. Taylor) Studies in Scottish History	209
Ireland's (Mrs. Alexander) The Letters of Miss Jemshury to Mrs. Carlyle	475
Jacobs's (Joseph) Epistolæ Hellenicæ	327
Jefferies's (Richard) The Toilers of the Field	599
Junker's (Dr. Wilhelm) Travels in Africa	385
Kent's (John) Racing Life of Lord George Cavendish Bentinck	383
Kipling & Balestier's The Naulahka	44
Knowling's (Rev. R. J.) The Witness of the Epistles	147
Lambert's (Rev. J. M.) Two Thousand Years of Old Life	306
Lander's (Walter Savage) Poems, Dialogues in Verse, and Epigrams	430
Lamin's (E. B.) Russian Characteristics	64
Lawley's (Hon. F.) edition of Kent's Racing Life of Lord G. Bentinck	383
Leach's (Arthur Francis) Visitations and Memorials of Southwell Minister	257

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Le Caron's (Major) Twenty-five Years in the Secret Service	557
Le Gallienne's (Richard) English Poems	450
Leland's (C. G.) translation of The Works of Heinrich Heine	208
—— Etruscan Roman Remains in Popular Tradition	558
Lessing's Laocoon	356
Laftis, Lord Augustus, Diplomatic Reminiscences of	495
Macfie's (Ronald Campbell) Granite Dust	66
Muelcan & Browne's The Catholics of the East and His People	165
MacMahon's (Maj.-Gen. A. Ruxton) Far Cathay and Farther India	535
Meyrick's (Frederick) The Church in Spain	531
Mills's (James) Account Roll of the Priory of the Holy Trinity, Dublin	9
Minto's (W.) Autobiographical Notes of the Life of William Bell Scott	499
Mivart's (St. George) Essays and Criticisms	163
Nichol's (John) Thomas Carlyle	205
Nöldeke's (Theodor) Sketches from Eastern History	603
Norton's (Charles Eliot) The Purgatory of Dante Alighieri	61
Nowack's (W.) Handkommentar zum Alten Testament	523
O'Clery's (The) The Making of Italy	429
Ohrwalder's (Futner) Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp	451
Onan's (C. W. C.) The Byzantine Empire	101
Parkitt's (George R.) Imperial Federation	187
Parkman's (Francis) A Half-Century of Conflict	164
Payne's (Edward John) History of the New World called America	277
Pike's (Warburton) The Barren Ground of Northern Canada	149
Pollock's (Sir Frederick) Leading Cases and other Diversions	106
Pratt's (A. E.) To the Snows of Tibet through China	45
Quill's (A. W.) translation of Tacitus	357
Rae's (George Milne) The Syrian Church in India	165
Ramsay's (Sir James H.) Lancaster and York	382
Ravenstein's (E. G.) edition of De Bourgade's Paraguay	406
Rees's (W. L. & L.) Life and Times of Sir George Grey	255
Régimacy's (Félix) Le Japon Pratique	357
Ritchie's (Anne) Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Browning	381
Rossetti's (William Michael) Shelley's Adonais	306
Saintsbury's (George) Lord Derby	105
—— Miscellaneous Essays	166
—— Polite Conversation by Jonathan Swift	453
Savage-Armstrong's (George Francis) One in the Infinite	24
Sienkiewicz's (Henryk) The Deluge	500
Skemts & Miall's History of the Free Churches of England	85
Skipsey's (Joseph) Songs and Lyrics	147
Sladen's (Douglas) The Japs at Home	504
Smith's (W. Robertson) The Old Testament in the Jewish Church	83
Sowerby's (J.) The Forest Cantons of Switzerland	27
Stephens's (H. Morse) Albuquerque	320
—— Orators of the French Revolution	449

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Stevenson & Osbourne's The Wrecker	104
Stokes's (Margaret) Six Months in the Alps	231
Swift, Jonathan, Polite Conversation by	451
Swindburne's (Algernon Charles) The Sisters	5
Symons's (Arthur) Si houettes	329
Talleyrand, Prince de, Memoirs of	43
Taylor's (R. Whately Cooke) The Modern Factory System	196
Tennyson's The Death of Oenone, Akbar's Dream, and other Poems	494
Trinity College, the Book of	21
Twenty-five Years of St. Andrews, By A. K. H. B.	452
Upcott's (L. E.) Lessing's Laocoon	356
Verney's (Lady) Memoirs of the Verney Family	501
Vinogradoff's (Paul) Villanage in England	123
Von Moltke's (Count) Letters to his Mother and Brothers	5
Watson's (William) Luchryous Musarum, and other Poems	476
Waughs's (Arthur) Alfred, Lord Tennyson	427
Wedmore's (Frederick) Renunciations	601
Wilson's (H. A.) Classified Index to the Lamine, Gelasian, and Gregorian Sacramentaries	126
Wingate's (Major F. R.) Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp	451
Wright's (Thomas) Life of William Cowper	581
Yost's (W. B.) The Countess Kathleen and Various Legends and Lyrics	278
Zibrt's (Dr. Cenek) History of Costume in Bohemia	232

NOVELS.

Adams's (Mrs. Leith) The Peyton Romance	408
—— (Francis) The Melbourneians	586
Alden's (W. L.) A Lost Soul	562
Alexander's (Mrs.) For His Sake	234
—— The Snare of the Fowler	480
An Exquisite Fool , By —	604
Angus's (Frank F.) Susie	386
Atherton's (Gertrude F.) A Question of Time	10
Bak-r's (James) Mark Tullison	480
Balestier's (Wolcott) The Average Woman	149
Baron's (Frank) George Waring's Choice	168
Barr's (Amelia E.) Love for an Hour is Love for Ever	309
Barrett's (Frank) Out of the Jaws of Death	385
Bell's (Gertrude) True to the Prince	241
Beresford's (Max) Bethaven	127
Besant's (Walter) Verbenæ, Camelia, Stephanotis, &c.	191
—— The Ivory Gate	561
Betham-Edwards's (M.) A Dream of Millions, and other Tales	88
Björnson's (Björnsterne) The Heritage of the Kurlis	233
Black's (William) The Magic Ink, and other Stories	149
Bliss's (Laurence) A Modern Romance	441
Bourget's (Paul) A Saint, and Others	112
Broughton's (Rhoda) Mrs. Bligh	005

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Brown's (Janet) Eleanor's Discipline	231
Buchanan's (Robert) Come Live With Me and Be My Love	211
Bunner's (H. C.) The Runaway Browns	433
Caine's (Hall) Capt'n Darcy's Honey-moon	604
Carey's (Rosa N.) But Men Must Work	191
Sir Godfrey's Grand-daughters	586
Carpenter's (E. J.) A Woman of Shaw-mat.	150
Chetwynd's (Hon. Mrs. Henry) A Brilliant Woman	562
Churchward's (W. B.) Jem Peterkin's Daughter	10
Clifford's (Mrs. W. K.) Aunt Anne	190
The Last Touches	537
Cobleigh's (Tom) Gentleman Upcott's Daughter	595
Coleman's (John) Wife—Yet No Wife	107
Collier's (Hon. Margaret) Rachel and Maurice	505
Collins's (Mabel) A Debt of Honour	89
Couper's (J. R.) Mixed Humanity	505
Cresswell's (Henry) A Woman's Ambition	431
Croker's (B. M.) A Family Likeness	586
Crommelin's (May) Mr. and Mrs. Her-rum	282
For the Sake of the Family	562
Cuddip's (Mrs. Pender) The Honourable Jane	358
Dale's (Darley) The Village Blacksmith	432
Davis's (Richard Harding) Van Bibber and Others	10
Dawe's (W. Carlton) Mount Desolation	29
De Winton's (W. H.) St. Michael's Eve	28
Dod's (S. Bysard) A Highland Chronicle	234
Don's (Isabel) Zohrah, and other Tales	309
Douvan's (Dick) Wanted	261
Doudey's (Sarah) Through Pain to Peace	332
Douglass's (George) Til	211
Dowling's (Richard) Catmur's Caves	68
Duntze's (Lady) Infelix	537
Easley's (William) Rachel Reno	88
Ecilaw's (Ary) A King's Second Marriage	10
Edward's (Mrs. Bennett) The Un-written Law	150
Ellicott's (Grace) A Big Mistake	211
Elmslie's (Theodora C.) His Life's Magnet	260
Emerson's (P. H.) A Son of the Fens	108
Everett-Green's (Evelyn) Wyhola	260
Farjeon's (B. L.) The March of Fate	454
Fate of Penella, The . By Twenty-four Authors	68
Fenn's (G. Manville) Nurse Klisia	562
Fernvale's (C. C.) The Fascinating Miss Lamarche	282
Filmore's (Capt.) translation of Count Tolstoi's The Terrible Czar	190
Fletcher's (Lawrence) Into the Unknown	128
Fort's (Mrs. Gerard) I, Ton	480
Fortyce's (Ella) Had I But Known	234
Forrester's (Mrs.) Of the World, Worldly	88
Forster's (Joseph) Tricks and Trick-ers	308
Francis's (M. E.) Whither?	454
Garland's (Hamlin) A Little Norsk	433
General's Daughter, The . By the author of "A Russian Priest"	231
Gerard's (Dorothea) A Queen of Curds and Cream	68
Etelka's Vow	432
Girdwood's (Charles) The Romance of a Coal-Pit	108
Gissing's (George) Born in Exile	67
Goodman's (E. J.) The Fate of Herbert Wayne	454
Gordon's (Mrs. J. E. H.) Eunice Ansonbe	358
Gosse's (Edmund) Narcisse	604
Gray's (E. McQueen) My Stewardship	605
Gunter's (A. C.) Miss Dividends	28
Haggard's (H. Rider) Nada, the Lily	409
Hale's (E. E.) The New Ohio	64
Hall's (M. E.) Rever, the Black Sheep	586
(Gertrude) For from To-Day	128
Hamer's (Sarah Selina) Millicent's Mistake	333
Hans Vanderpump	333
Harrison's (Mrs. Burton) A Daughter of the South	605
Hawke's (Lionel) Clement Barnold's Invention	88
Havvard's (Gertrude M.) No Place of Repentance	149
Herb of Love, The	191
Hetherington & Burton's No Compromises	48
Ifgh Little World, A	149
Hill's (Castle) Where the Sea-Birds Cry	260
(John) Treason Felony	358
Holbees's (John Oliver) The Sinner's Comedy	28
Hocking's (Joseph) Zillah	260
Hollings's (F. S.) A Story of Guy Laukes Day, &c.	88

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Home-Gall's (W. B.) Where Honour Sits	211
Hopkins's (Tighe) The Incomplete Adventurer	358
Hueffer's (Ford H.) The Shifting of the Fire	386
Hughes's (Mrs. Reginald) Sybil Trevelian	586
Hume's (Fergus) The Island of Fantasy	359
The Black Carnation	108
Humphrey's (Frank Pope) A New England Cactus, and other Tales	211
Hungerford's (Mrs.) A Conquering Heroine	503
Hyne's (F. C.) A New Eden	454
Ida's Mistake, By V. G. F.	137
Innsheim, By the author of "Miss Molly"	322
James's (Charles T. C.) Honours Easy	308
Jelny's (Mrs. Robert) A Big Stake	101
Kappes's (Sophie) A Double Ruin	586
Keeling's (Elsa D'Este) Orchards of Gold	260
Keith's (Leslie) In Spite of Herself	332
Kenn's (Cleveland) Down in the Flats	400
Kenward's (Mrs. Edward) Wedded to Sport	108
King's (Madge) Cousin Cinderella	28
Knights's (H. B. Finlay) In Foot's Paradise	281
A Girl with a Temper	88
Krikorian's (Jessie) A Daughter of Mystery	150
Lady Potty, By the author of "Molly Bawn"	537
Leal's (Fraderick) Wynter's Master-piece	28
Lindsay's (Lady) A Tangled Web	168
Lucas's (F. Lancaster) Katie's Coronet	28
Lynch's (Harriet) The Daughters of Men	454
(Hannah) Roani Harvey	49
Lys's (Christian) A London Coach	536
Maartens's (Maarten) God's Fool	408
Macleod's (Mrs. Alice) The Silent Sea	408
Macquoid's (K. S.) Miss Egon of Egon Court	150
Makar's Dream, and other Stories	9
Mallack's (W. H.) A Human Document	261
Manifold's (Amy) For Hal's Sake	190
Marryat's (Florence) The Noble Ser-	506
How Like a Woman	555
Meade's (L. T.) The Medicine Lady	88
Merrick's (Leonard) The Man who was Good	282
Merton's (Ray) My Cousin's Wife	455
Middlemass's (Jean) How I became Eminent	108
Mills's (Herbert V.) Lake Country Romances	332
Molesworth's (Mrs.) Leona	359
Morgan & Brown's The Disintegrator	308
Motley's (George) Legend and Romance	48
Muddock's (J. E.) For God and the Czar	309
Maid Marian and Robin Hood	168
Murray's (Dora) A Precious Jewel	385
(David Christie) Bob Martin's Little Girl	480
Mysterious Family, A . By a New Writer	562
Needell's (Mrs. J. H.) Passing the Love of Women	190
Nestorion's (Arthur) In Sin or Folly	432
Syringa	211
Neuman's (B. Paul) The Interpreter's House	231
Newell's (Henry) In the Tilt-yard of Life	308
Nicholson's (Edith Mand) Bent on Conquest	29
Nisbet's (Hume) The Bushranger's Sweetheart	167
Oliphant's (Mrs.) Diana Trelawney	408
The Cuckoo in the Nest	537
Parker's (Gilbert) Pierre and his People	168
Parr's (Mrs.) The Squire	149
Payn's (James) A Modern Dick Whit-tington	68
Phillipote's (Eden) A Tiger's Cub	282
Pinsent's (Ellen F.) Jenny's Case	454
Potter's (Canon) The Germ Growers	48
Prowse's (B. Orton) The Poison of Asps	332
Riddell's (Mrs. J. H.) The Head of the Firm	48
Ridgeway's (Algernon) Westover's Ward	603
Rives's (Amelie) Barbara Dering	505
Roberts's (Sir Randal H.) Ridge and Furrow	332
Roberts's (Morley) The Reputation of George Saxon, and other Stories	408
The Mate of the Vancouver	128
Robertson's (Smith) Tom Buxton's Aim	191
Ross's (Henry) Mrs. Smith's Craze	536
Roy's (John) Helen Treveryan	211
Russell's (Dora) An Evil Reputation	409
Russian Stories	29
Scutt's (Frederick George) Elton Hazel-wood	29

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Sergeant's (Adeline) Sir Anthony	386
Sloan's (J. McGavin) Quintin Doorrise	127
Smith's (C. G. Furley) Quixote the Weaver	211
(Constance) One Way of Love	601
Spender's (Mrs. J. Kent) A Waking	28
St. Anby's (Alan) The Old Maid's Sweetheart	190
Stewart's (John A.) The Jolly Pashas	88
Story of a Penitent Soul, The	127
Stratens's (Louisa) Suspected	601
Tasma's A Knight of the White Feather	359
Taylor's (Reginald) The Dynamitards	211
Taylor's (U. A.) The King's Favourite	432
Tennyson's (Misty H.) Paid in Full	358
Theodoli's (Marecha) Under Pressure	386
Thomson's (Auntie) The Honourable Jane	190
Told in the Verandah	168
Tolstol's (Count A. K.) The Terrible Czar	190
Tottenham's (B. Loftus) More Kin than Kind	190
Travill's (H. D.) Number Twenty	504
Travers's (Graham) Mona Maclean	47
Trollope's (Frances Eleanor) That Wild Wheel	386
Twain's (Mark) The American Claimant	108
Tweeddale's (John) Sir Vinegar's Ven-ue	481
Visible To Be, The	260
Walford's (L. B.) The One Good Guest	128
Walmesley's (Hugh Milleneux) Blank-some Lane	68
Walsh's (B.) Through Deep Waters	191
Wardens's (Florence) A Shock to Society	359
Waters's (W. G.) Dr. Campion's Patients	10
Watson's (Aaron) For Lust of Gold	358
Watson & Wassermann's The Marquis of Corabas	409
Werner's (A.) O'Driscoll's Weird and other Stories	308
Westall's (William) Ben Clough, and other Stories	504
Trust Money	128
Whyte's (Haine) In Part to Blame	150
Wiggin's (Kate Douglas) Timothy's Quest	537
Wilkins's (Marry) Young Lucretia	68
Will's (C. J.) In and about Bohemia	128
Winter's (John Strange) My Geff	282
A Soldier's Children	88
Wotton's (Mabel E.) A Girl Diplomatist	480
Wyman's (Margaret) My Flirtations	605
Yorke's (Curtis) Once	585
Zangwill's (I.) Children of the Ghetto	332
Zola's (Emile) The Attack on the Mill	432
The Downfall	432

MINOR NOTICES.

Abbott's (Evelyn) History of Greece	333
Aveling's (Dr.) The Student's Myr	261
Baden-Powell's (B. H.) The Land Sys-tem of British India	283
Beaulieu's (Paul Leroy) The Modern State in Relation to Society and the Individual	261
Bigelow's (Poulney) The German Em-peror and his Eastern Neighbours	109
Bongot's (A.) Rivalité d'Eschine et d'Eschène	334
Bradshaw's (Dr.) Lord Chesterfield's Letters	128
Burke's (Ulrich Ralph) Sancho Panza's Proverbs	129
Butler's (Josephine E.) Recollections of George Butler	587
Carpenter's (Edward) Towards De-mocracy	129
Chamberlain & Douglas's Gentlewoman's Book of Gardening	359
Clarke's (William) Walt Whitman	11
Clouston's (W. A.) Literary Coinci-dences	170
Coit's (Dr. Stanton) Neighbourhood Guilds	261
Compton's (Theodore) A Mendip Valley	90
Cope's (Charles Henry) Reminiscences of Charles West Cope, R.A.	169
Cunningham's (Rev. W.) The Use and Abuse of Money	168
Daudet's (Alphonse) The Fig and the Idler	69
De Lessert's (A. C. P.) Vicaires et Comtes d'Afrique	455
Eyre-Todd's (George) Mediaeval Scot-tish Poetry	129
Fisher's (Major A. T.) Rod and River	359
Fowler's (J. K.) Echoes of Old Country Life	587
Freeman's (E. A.) Sicily	455
Garrett's (Richard) A Chapter from the Greek Anthology	150
"Gentleman's Magazine Library"	89
George's (Mr. Henry) The Condition of Labour	261

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Gide's (Charles) Principles of Political Economy	169
Godard's (J. G.) Poverty: its Genesis and Exodus	262
Graham's (S. Anderson) Nature in Books	176
(P. A.) The Rural Exodus	359
Greene's (Prof. J. Reay) Carlyle's Lec-tures on the History of Literature	120
Grim's (Matt) In Beaver Cove and Elsewhere	11
Hake's (Gordon) Memoirs of Eighty Years	588
Harrison's (Clifford) Stray Records	409
Harris's (Thomas Hake) God's Breath in Man and in Humane Society	11
Hay's (John Ogilvy) Arakan	281
Heath's (Vernon) Recollections	109
Hervey's (Gen. Charles) Some Records of Crime	283
Heygate's (Rev. W. E.) An Old Parson's Anecdotes and Tales	69
Hodgett's (E. A. Brayley) In the Track of the Russian Famine	109
Hollen's (H. A.) Plutarch's Life of Themistocles	29
Hunter's (Sir William Wilson) Bombay, 1885 to 1890	282
Johnson's (Effie) In the Fire, and Other Fancies	69
Jowett's (B.) The Dialogues of Plato translated into English	150
Judeich's (W.) Kleinasiatische Studien	333
Jumpert's (M.) Der Römisch-Karthagische Krieg in Spanien	455
Leeper's (Alexander) Thirteen Satires of Juvenal	150
Leslie's (B. C.) The Sea-Bont	439
Macdonell's (A. A.) Camping Out	110
Marsh's (J. B.) Hops and Hopping	410
Maxwell's (Sir Herbert) Meridians	169
McDonnell's (Miss) Fugitive Slaves	410
Molesworth's (Mrs.) An Enchanted Garden	69
Murray's Han Book to Norway	110
O'Neill's (H. C.) Deanshire Idylls	69
Paske & Atfale's The Sea and the Red	360
Paul's (William) Contributions to Hor-ticultural Literature	359
Pizzamiglio's (Dr. Luigi) Distributing Co-operative Societies	261
Pope's (Rev. G. U.) Longmans' School History of India	281
Ramsley's (H. D.) Notes for the Nile	169
Rimmer's (Alfred) Rambles Romd Rugby	89
Robinson's (W.) Garden Design and Architects' Gardens	359
Salaman's (Malcolm) Woman through a Man's Eyeglass	69
Schaffle's (Dr. A.) The Impossibility of Social Democracy	261
Smith's (Albert H.) The Philadelphia Magazines and their Contributors	11
Spender's (J. A.) The State and Pen-sions in Old Age	169
Stock's (St. George) The Crito of Plato	29
Stuart's (J. A. Erskine) The Literary Shrines of Yorkshire	89
Swanwick's (Anna) Poets the Inter-preters of their Age	129
Szanto's (E.) Das Griechische Bir-gerrecht	333
Thomas's (Margaret) A Scamper through Spain	109
(F. W.) The Mutual In-fluence of Muhammadans and Hindoos	294
Thorpe's (W. G.) The Still Life of the Middle Temple	400
Underhill's (G. E.) Plutarch's Lives of the Gracchi	20
Von Stern's (E.) Das Hannibalische Truppenverzeichnis bei Livius	455
Von Wieser's (F.) Theory of Value	169
Welzhofer's (H.) Geschichte des Orients und Griechenlands	455
White's (Arnold) The Destitute Alien in Great Britain	261
Williams's (James) Education	409
Wormeley's (Katherine Prescott) Memoir of Honoré de Balzac	10
Worthington's (Slack) Politics and Property, or Phronocracy	163

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

"Annexed Prayer-Book," Facsimile of the	310
Baentsch's (Dr. Bruno) Das Bundes-buch	191
Bissell's (Prof. E. C.) Genesis Printed in Colours	191
Canterbury's (Archbishop of) Living Theology	235
Daniell's (Rev. G. W.) Bishop Wilber-force	236
Denney's (Rev. James) The Epistles to the Thessalonians	235
Derry's (Lord Bishop of) Verbum Crucis	235

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE—con.

	PAGE
Driver's (Prof.) Introduction to the Old Testament	192
..... The Use of the Hebrew	192
..... Tenases	192
Ellicott's (Dr. C. J.) Christus Compro- batur	398
Fripp's (Edgar Innes) The Composition of the Book of Genesis	191
Harris's (Helen B.) The Newly Re- covered Apology of Aristides	455
Hellier's (A. M.) translation of Sabatier's The Apostle Paul	300
Hervey's (Lord A. C.) The Books of Chronicles in Relation to the Pen- tateuch and the "Higher Criticism"	387
Hughes's (Rev. Hugh Price) Ethical Christianity	235
Hutchinson's (Dr. John) Our Lord's Signs in St. John's Gospel	309
Kittel's (R.) Geschichte der Hebräer	192
Kneesen's (Dr. A.) Historisch-kritische Einleitung in die Bücher des Alten Testaments	191
Lez's (John Wickham) Missale ad Usam Ecclesie Westmonasteriensis Lightfoot's (J. B.) Dissertations on the Apocalyptic Age	310
Littlehales's (Henry) edition of The Pygmy	309
"Luther's Catechism," facsimile repro- duction of	310
Medd's (P. G.) edition of The Greek Devotions of Bishop Andrews	309
Molesworth's (Mrs.) Stories of the Saints for Children	456
Moule's (Rev. H. C. G.) Charles Simeon Rawson's (Sir Rawson W.) The Gospel Narrative of Life of Jesus Christ	456
Sabatier's (A.) The Apostle Paul	300
Smith's (J. Gregory) Christian Monas- ticism	456
Stokes's (Dr. G. T.) The Acts of the Apostles	231
Ta lor's (Dr. C.) The Witness of Her- ms to the Four Gospels	301
Wakefield's (Bishop of) The Knowledge of God and Other Sermons	231
Wordsworth's (Dr. Charles) Primary Witness to the Truth of the Gospel	381

MINOR POETRY.

Béranger, Songs of . Toynbee's trans- lation	212
Blake's (John Arthur) Love's Vic-ory	49
Cowell's (Elizabeth) Leaves of Memory	212
Kenworthy's (John C.) Amiand and the Fair Lady, &c.	49
Nicholson's (J. G. F.) Love in Earnest Poems . By A. G. R.	212
Townsend's (Richard Francis) A Gar- den and other Poems	211
Toynbee's (William) translation of Songs of Béranger	212
William's (James) Ethandane and other Poems	49
Wilson's (James H.) Zalmoris and other Poems	49

GIFT BOOKS.

Alexander's (Mrs.) Fair Women and Brave Men	506
Allan Gordon, Story of	503
Andrew's (Marion) Cousin Isabel	538
Ballantyne's (R. M.) The Hot-Swamp	506
Banks's (Mrs. G. Linnaeus) A Rough Road	539
Blake's (M. M.) The Siege of Norwich Castle	506
Brightwen's (Mrs.) More about Wild Nature	503
Byng's (Florence) 93, or the Revolu- tion amongst Flowers	481
Carrington's (Edith) Bread and Butter Stories	481
Church's (A. J.) Pictures of Roman Life and Story	505
..... Stories from the Greek Comedians	503
Clare's (Austin) Another Man's Bur- den	482
Clarke's (Mrs. H.) Honor Pontreath	482
..... The Bushranger's Secret	406
Collingwood's (Harry) The Doctor of the "Juliet"	503
Colville's (Harriet E.) The Way She Trod	606
Crompton's (Frances E.) Master Bartemy	433
Dale's (Barley) The Little Doctor	482
Davidson's (Rev. T.) O'er Cranbourne's Oaks	506

GIFT BOOKS—continued.

Dear. By the author of "Tip-Cat"	534
Donnelly's (Sarah) Godiva Darleigh	501
Eady's (K. M.) A Long Chase	606
Everett-Green's (Mrs. E.) The Doctor's Douzen	506
Fenn's (George Manville) Gil the Gunner	537
..... The Grand Chaco	606
Fishguard Invasion of the French in 1797	561
Foster & Cuthell's The Robber Baron of Belford Castle	606
Gellibrand's (E.) Our Picnic	501
Goldard's (Julia) Fairy Tales in other Lands	181
Gordon's (W. J.) Englishman's Haven	503
Green's (R. M.) Nigel	506
Gunsaul's (Frank N.) Monk and Knight	501
Harrison's (Mrs. Burton) Crow's Nest and Belhaven Tales	433
Hay's (Capt. Claude) Randall Davenant	605
Hayercraft's (Margaret) Sunwood Glory	506
Henty's (G. A.) Berie the Briton	505
..... Condemned as a Nihilist	538
Hueffer's (Ford H. Madox) The Feather Huio's (Fergus) Chronicles of Fairy- land	481
Hutchinson's (Horace) Fairway Island	561
Hynes's (C. J.) The Captured Cruiser	563
Jacob's (Joseph) Indian Fairy Tales	433
James's (Dr. S. B.) Ourself and Others	561
Lacey's (W. J.) Cyril's Promise	606
Lane's (Laura M.) Mrs. Lupton's Lodgings	539
Lang's (Andrew) The Greek Fairy Book	433
Leighton's (Robert) The Thirsty Sward	538
Leland's (Charles G.) The Book of One Hundred Riddles of the Fairy Bellarina	635
Lumley's (C. S.) Rag's Discovery	503
Lynsaght's (Elizabeth J.) An Unexpected Hero	606
Lyster's (Annette) A Promising Boy	501
Macaulay's (Dr.) Strange Yet True	538
Macarney's (Mrs.) A Woman in without a Head	606
Mackie's (Charles Paul) With the Ad- miral of the Ocean Sea	503
Marshall's (Emma) New Relations	538
Martin's (E. A.) Amidst Nature's Realms	539
Mason's (Rev. G. E.) Round the Round World	539
Mead's (L. T.) A Ring of Rubies	441
..... Out of the Fashion	605
Metcalf's (W. C.) Steady Your Helm! Miles's (Alfred H.) Fifty-two Other Stories for Boys	538
..... Fifty-two Other Stories for Girls	538
..... Fifty-two Fairy Tales	538
Milman's (Constance) Mum Fidge's	538
Molesworth's (Mrs.) The Girls and I	537
Neal's (Elizabeth) In Her Own Right Noeldeche's (W.) Baron and Squire	505
Oram's (Blanche) Brownies and Rose- leaves	433
Oxley's (J. Macdonald) Bert Lloyd's Boyhood	561
Paton's (Rev. James) The Story of John G. Paton	482
Pea's Annual	591
Pereira's (Mrs.) translation of Noel- deche's Baron and Squire	505
Phillips's (E. C.) Little Joan Maitland Rand's (Rev. E. A.) A Candle in the Sea Robinson & Leyland's In the Queen's Navee	481
Saxby's (Jessie M. E.) Yoking Boys	482
Shipton's (Helen) Spitewinter	538
Spender's (Mrs. Kent) No Humdrum Life for Me	506
Stehling's (Grace) Lilla Thorn's Voyage	539
Stockton's (Frank R.) The Great Show in Kobol-land	481
Stredder's (Eleanor) Lost in the Wilds of Canada	561
Stuart's (Esmé) A Brave Fight	506
Swan's (Annie S.) The Guinea Stamp	538
Thorpe's (Isamy) Little Sisters of Pity Captain Geoff	561
Walford's (L. B.) For Grown-Up Chil- dren	538
Ward's (E.) St. Dunstan's Clock	538
Weber's (Alice) An Affair of Honour	605
..... The Clock on the Stairs	606
White's (Roma) Brownies and Rose- leaves	433
Wilford's (Florence) Nigel Bertram's Ideal	506
Wilson's (H. Mary) Nearly Bedtime	606
Winchester's (M. E.) Adrift in a Great City	481

ORIGINAL VERSE.

	PAGE
Avenge	151
Clematis, Purple	219
Dying Norseman, A	91
Friends in Youth	51
Hawker, Robert Stephen, Vicar of Mor- weston, In the Footsteps of	311
Last Evening, The	411
Laureate, The Dead	315
Love in the Water-Meadows	237
Mohere (On), after Reading "Le Misanthrope"	483
Nature's Laboratory	70
Northumberland Arms, By the	31
Not in Vain (To E. H.)	115
Outside the Gate	607
Prayer, A	139
"Say, Pilgrim, art thou for the East indeed?"	594
Skate, An Elf	508
Song	245
Sonnet	263
Sphinx, The Quest of the	193
Stream of Life, The	349
To a Friend, with a Scarab	110
To Two Friends	171
To Bernadine	457
Tuscan Skies	13
Venus Anadyomene	540
Westminster Abbey, In, Oct. 12th, 1892	361

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Art and Book Sales	607
Bibliographical Jottings	445
Cambridge University Library	51
Civil List Pensions	31
Dublin, The Honorary Degrees at	91
Hastings, Warren	508
"Indian Field Sports"	151
In Memoriam: Sir Daniel Wilson	483
..... Thomas Adolphus Trol- lope	131
Lee versus Gibbings	589
London University Problem, The	51
Shelley Centenary, The	361
Slavica	261
Sacred Science Series, The	589
Teaching University for London, The	91, 589
New	456
Tennysoniana	12, 30, 50, 70, 90,
University Jottings, 12, 30, 50, 70, 90,	285, 311, 331, 361, 388, 411, 431,
467, 481, 507, 510, 565, 588, 607

CORRESPONDENCE.

Aristotle as an Historian	52, 111, 152, 171
"Adyapawo Hwariela, The New	133
Babylonia, Early History of	132
Betham-Edwards's (Miss) France of To-day	53, 72
Burke, A Misprint in	399
Chaucer's "Italian" Period, Date of	191
..... Canterbury Tales, Date of	608
"Convale"	389, 412, 437, 458, 512, 667
Cramer's Draft-Services for the Prayer	13
Book
Creation of Man, Babylonian Legend of	72
the	509
"Crescent"	436
Cromwell, A Letter attributed to	71
Cryptogram, A Medieval	338
Dante, Did he know Hebrew?	543, 568, 592
Dante's "Guizzante"—The Mediaeval	133
Port of Wissant	288
Dates, Erroneous, in Westminster Abbey	461
Economic History, The Perversion of	191
English Women's Literary Work at	171
Chicago	93
Enoch, The New Greek Fragment of	191
..... The Genesis of the Reading,	485
in Lake II. 14	72
"Father Christmas," The Origin of	390
"Filipino at the Fair": an Explanation	33
Florida's Montaigne	171
French Peasant, The	568
Funeral Custom in the County of Wex-	14
ford	215, 266
"Guillaume le Maréchal, L'Histoire de"	568
Hakluyt Editing.—A Correction	481
Hierodas, Notes on 72, 93, 133, 153, 173, 195	509
Iron in Homer	509
"Jack," and some Allied Names	609
Jacob's Well and its Skent	481
Jewish and Indian Parallels	509
"Judeo-Persian Priore, Une"	509
Juvenius Cryptogram, The	509
King Solomon's Wives	509
Le Gallienne's English Poems	481
Leasing, a Selection from	509
London University Problem, The	509
MacCompline, The Vision of	481
Masora, The LXX. in the

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

	PAGE
Miss. of the LXX. and Catena at	503
Milan, Verona, and Venice	399, 412
Namaki, The Story of	14, 32, 249
Newton Stone, The	54
Nimrod in the Assyrian Inscriptions	172
Pentland Firth and Pentland Hills	507, 591
Peter, The Gospel of	412, 460
Prayer-Book of Edward VI. for House	313
hold Use	215
Pseudo-Smollett, The	501, 608
Saints and Sequences	512, 602
Scott's (Mr. W. B.) Autobiography	512, 602
Semite Scholarship and the Edinburgh	71
Review	13
Shaden's (Douglas) The Taps at Home	288
St. Columba, The Obit of	91
..... Tennysonian	483
Stephen's Charter of Liberties	483
Submission, An Ancient Form of	483
Tennisi—Danae	483
Tennysonian	483
Uppingham Nettleship Memorial Fund	483
"Vahel": Numbers xxii, 14	14
Willerforce University	541
Wissart, The Mediaeval Port of	541

OBITUARY.

Curtis, George William	237
De Vries, Dr. Matthias	197
Fuson, Dr. Villiam	31
Lapins, Dr. R. A.	194
Netleship, Richard Lewis	194
Nicholson, Brinsley, M. D.	412
Peto, John	285
Renan, Ernest	311
Robertson, Prof. Croon	285
Skene, Dr. William Forbes	213
Tennyson, Lord	335
Trollope, Thomas Adolphus	483
Whittier, John Greenleaf	217
Wilson, Sir Daniel	130, 151
Woods, William Noel	596

NOTES.

Almanach de Gotha , for 1893	607
Autographs, Collection of, in honour of	410
Columbus	540
Basque Inscriptions	90
Bayonne archives, publication of	236
Beljame's (M. Al.) books on Enoch Arden	151
Biagi's (Guido) Gli Ultimi Giorni di P. B. Shelley	70, 110, 387
Bibliographical Society	192
Boston (U.S.) Public Library	507
Burns, translations of poems of, into	606
Czech	482
Caird's (Prof. Edward) Gifford Lectures	12
Chambers's Encyclopaedia , concluding	170
volume of	30
Cohn's (Dr. Albert) Shakspeare Bib-	110
liography	110
Dante Society, The American	33
Dublin (tercentenary festival)	50
Edwards, Miss Amelia B., Pension	110
of	110
Enoch Arden , foreign translations of	110
Genoueix's (Léon) Les Indites	110
Hutton & Cohen's Speeches of W. E. Gladstone	50
India, Vernacular literature published	130
in	130
Lowell Memorial at Westminster, The	130
Pearson's (Dr. C. H.) National Life and Character	539
Quaritch's Dictionary of English Book-Collectors	387
Smith's (G. Barnett) History of the English Parliament	212
St. Andrew's University, L. L. A. Ex-	130
amination at	130
Tudela, Tournament at, in 1620	456
Tuer's (Mr. Andrew) In Eye and an I.	50
West London Ethical Society	50
Wordsworth's Cottage	30

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

American Journal of Psychology	131, 348
Antiquary	31, 266, 313, 435, 511, 588
Art Journal	565
Asiatic Quarterly Review	263, 588
Boletín of the Real Academia de la	91, 361, 506
Historia
Bookman
Brain

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Cassell's Family Magazine	457
Cassell's Saturday Journal	236, 585
Century Magazine	170, 360, 483, 588
Chums	213
Contemporary Review	457
Cosmopolitan	236
Eastern and Western Review	151, 361, 435
Economic Journal	457, 483
Review	334
English Illustrated Magazine	151, 360, 540
Euskal-erria	456

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Expositor	51, 111, 193, 411, 508
Expository Times	262
Folklore	71
Good Words	151, 361, 457
Great Thoughts	213
Illustrated London News	334
India	588
Jewish Quarterly Review	111, 411
Ladies' Treasury	334
L'Art et l'Idée	13, 91, 238, 286, 457, 508
Leisure Hour	360
Library	71

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Library Review	171, 263
Little Folks	565
Mind	131, 388
Musical Herald	483
National Review	334, 360
Newbury House Magazine	457, 588
New World	51
North American Review	170
Religious Review of Reviews	213, 540
Reliquary	588
Revista Contemporanea	213
Scottish Pulpit	151, 171

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

	PAGE
Scottish Review	361
Scribner's	151, 483
St. Nicholas	361, 588
Strand Magazine	213, 540
Sunday Magazine	151, 457
Temple Bar	585
Theatre	263
Theologisch Tijdschrift	51, 411
United Service Magazine	588
Vegetarian Messenger	171
Young Man, The	540
Young Woman, The	151, 236, 540

SCIENCE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Bury's (J. B.) The Isthmian Odes of Pindar	15
Clark's (Albert C.) Collations from the Harleian MS. of Cicero, 2682	73
Conybeare's (F. C.) edition of Lotze's Outlines of a Philosophy of Religion	289
Crusius's (Otto) Untersuchungen zu den Mimiamben des Herondas	413
Herondas Mimiambi	413
Darmesteter's (James) translation of the Zend-Avesta	173
De la Lantbeere's (Léon) De la Race et de la Langue des Hittites	390
Dixon's (Charles) The Migration of Birds	314
Goldschmidt's (W.) Vingt-quatre Tablettes cappadociennes de la Collection de	34
Gomme's (G. L.) Ethnology in Folklore	93
Houtsma's (Th.) Histoire des Seldjucides de l'Asie Mineure	216
Krall's (J.) Die Elraskischen Mumienbinden des Agramer National-Museums	338
Lotze's (Hermann) Outlines of a Philosophy of Religion	289
Lubbock's (Sir John) The Beauties of Nature, &c.	491
Martin's (Heraclitus) Castorologia	569
Prellwitz's (Dr. Walther) Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Griechischen Sprache	510
Ribbeck's (Otto) Dichtung der Kaiserzeit	544
Scott's (Rev. David Clement) Cyclopaedic Dictionary of the Mang'anja Language	241
Simaika's (Abdallah) Essai sur la Province romaine d'Egypte	593
Sully's (James) The Human Mind	113
Tell el-Amarna Tablets, The, in the British Museum	196
Wilkins's (Prof. A. S.) M. Tulli Ciceronis De Oratore Libri Tres	438

MINOR NOTICES.

Aiyar's (S. Radhakrishna) Text-Book of Elementary Algebra	486
American Journal of Mathematics	53, 485
Ball's (W. W. Rouse) Mathematical Recreations and Problems of Past and Present Times	54
Barwell-Carter's (Mrs.) Selections from the Correspondence of Dr. George Johnston	217
Brown's (N. E.) English Botany	134
Buckley's (Arabella B.) Moral Teachings of Science	216
Burnet's (J.) Early Greek Philosophy	153
Caird's (Edward) Essays on Literature and Philosophy	153
Constantinides' (Prof.) Neohellenica	570
Dunham's (Robert W.) The Structure of Wheat	545
Dupuis's (N. F.) Principles of Elementary Algebra	486
Edwards's (J.) Elementary Treatise on the Differential Calculus	54
Goodfellow's (J.) The Dietetic Value of Bread	206

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Greenhill's (A. G.) The Applications of Elliptic Functions	485
Hall & Knight's Algebra for Beginners	486
Hardy's (Dr. James) Correspondence of Dr. George Johnston	217
Hobson & Jessop's Elementary Treatise on Plane Trigonometry	496
Jarman's (J. A.) Algebraic Factors Classified and Applied	486
Klein's (E.) The Etiology and Pathology of Grouse Disease, Fowl Enteritis, &c.	134
Ladenburg's (Dr. A.) Handwörterbuch der Chemie	267
Leveit & Davison's Elements of Plane Trigonometry	54
Macmillan's (H.) Cyclopaedia of Nature's Teachings	216
Mathews's (G. B.) Theory of Numbers	486
Newman's (F. W.) The Higher Trigonometry	54
Nixon's (R. C. J.) Elementary Plane Trigonometry	486
Richardson's (A. T.) Graduated Mathematical Exercises for Home Work	54
Roberts's (H.) Grammar of the Khassi Language	610
Sidgwick's (Alfred) Distinction and the Criticism of Beliefs	153
Torrend's (J.) Comparative Grammar of the South-African Bantu Languages	610
Tregear's (Edward) Maori-Polynesian Comparative Dictionary	610
Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry	266

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Anthropological Jottings	366
Bloomfield's (Prof.) Contributions to the Interpretation of the Veda	134, 364
British Association Grants	154
Chinese Dictionary, A New	462
Indian Jottings	74, 197
Oriental Congress, The	242
Orkhon Inscriptions, The	267
Petrie Papyri, The	267
Psychology, Experimental, International Congress of	73
Tibetan Literature	174

CORRESPONDENCE.

Agram Etruscan Text, The	414
Arzawa, The Language of	154
"Asavene," Old Prussian	115, 135
Belgum, Race and Speech in	156
Bengali Philology and Ethnography	175
Burmese (Old) Inscription at Buddha Gaya	366
China and Babylonia	218
Egyptian Dynasty, Fourth, Date of the	391
Egyptian Place-Names, Pronunciation and Spelling of	268, 290, 315, 439
Ethnology in Folk-lore	115, 135, 155
Etruscan Text, The New	414

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

	PAGE
Hebrew Loan-Words from the Greek	365
"In- η " = "Water"	16, 31, 54, 74, 95
Israelitish War in Edom, An	365
Jacchini's Sâtras, Note on some of	611
Lane-Poole's (Stanley) History of the Moghul Emperors	218
"Licorne," The French Word	570
Mendes, The Library of	503
Pali "Upacikâ" = Skt. "Upajihvikâ"	462
"Cumbala" = Prakrit "Cumbhala"	511
Plautus, "Persa," 1.3.40, Note on	16
Prakrit and Pali Words, Notes on	91, 217, 242, 315
Soma and Rohini	439
"Tel" and not "Tell"	218, 243, 267, 290, 315
Tel El-Amarna Tablets, The	315
Vedântasâra, Note on	196

OBITUARY.

Bellew, Henry Walter, M.D., C.S.I.	115
Saint-Denis, Marquis d'Hervey de	487
Schütz, Dr. C.	391
Williams, W. Mathieu	511

SCIENCE NOTES.

Aryans, European Origin of the	366
Beddoe's (Dr.) Rhind Lectures on "The Anthropological History of Europe"	95
"Cambridge Natural History, The"	75
Clerke's (Miss Ellen M.) Jupiter and his System	339
Dodo, Collection of Bones of the	439
Ethnographical Survey of the United Kingdom	391
Galileo at Padua, Tercentenary of	511
Gaye's (Selina) The Great World's Farm	546
Howorth's (Sir Henry H.) The Glacial Nightmare and the Flood	486
Royal Society Council's Election	463
Medals, 1892	486
Sakai Dialects of the Malay Peninsula	611

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Alphabets, the Origin and Diffusion of	176
Bharati Inscriptions, The	244
Buck's (C. D.) Vocalismus der Oskischen Sprache	291
Burma, the Alompra Dynasty of	611
Chamberlain, Mr. A. F., on the Language of the Missiasia Indians	291
Chauvin's (M. Victor) Arabie Bibliography	243
Fumagalli's Bibliografia Etiopica	463
Greek Indirect Negative, The	367
Harvard Studies in Classical Philology	35
Hausa Association, The	339

PHILOLOGY NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Hittites, Inscriptions relating to the	176, 198
Hoppli's Pocket Grammars and Dictionaries	546
Hyperides, A new MS. of	75
Jackson's (A. V. Williams) Avesta Grammar in comparison with Sanskrit	546
Maya Hieroglyphs, The	214
Oriental Congress, Publications of the	511
Pilling's (James Constantine) Bibliography of the Algonquian Languages	156
Polynesian Society, New Zealand	35
Powereau, Sylvain, Petites Œuvres Basques de	440
Schrader's (E.) Sammlungen von assyrischen und babylonischen Texten in Umschrift und Uebersetzung	546
Slang, English, M. C. Stoffel's Studies of	95
Smith, Mr. Vincent A., on Graeco-Roman Influence on Indian Civilisation	214
Tals of Nadiya, The	136
"Walther of Aquitaine, The Saga of"	96
Zinjirli, Inscriptions from	176, 198

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

Anthropological Institute	35, 392, 611
Aristotelian Society	487, 612
Bibliographical Society	612
British School at Athens	55
Cambridge Antiquarian Society	493
Cambridge Philological Society	440, 571
Cambridge Philosophical Society	463
Clifton Shakespeare Society	415
Enzabethan Society	339, 440, 571
Hellenic Society	17, 367
Historical Society	511
Meteorological Society	17
Philological Society	410
Royal Asiatic Society	35, 612
Royal Society of Literature	35, 512
Ruskin Society	572
Society of Historical Theology	511
Victoria Institute	115
Viking Club	367, 440, 447

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Babylonian and Oriental Record	178, 218, 392, 497
Classical Review	75, 367, 571
Hermathena	16
Indian Antiquary	136, 244, 439, 611
Internationale Archiv für Ethnographie	176
Journal of the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society	16, 611
Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal	176, 244
Journal of Philology	208
L'Anthropologie	75
Medical Magazine	75
Science	244
Scottish Review	95

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Bonnar's (Thomas) Biographical Sketch of George Mickel Kemp ...	116
Gardner's (Percy) New Chapters in Greek History ...	488
Hodgkin's Examples of Early English Pottery ...	340
Jerrold's (Blanchard) Life of Gustave Doré ...	75
Kermode's (R. M. C.) Catalogue of the Manks Crosses ...	198
MacGibbon & Ross's Castellated and Domestic Architecture of Scotland ...	441
Middleton's (Prof. J. H.) History and Practice of Illuminating ...	367
Munro's (Robert) The Lake-Dwellings of Europe ...	316
Nisbet's (Alexander) Heraldic Plates ...	208
Ollivier's (Emile) Michel-Ange ...	136, 156
Perrot & Chipiez's History of Art in Phrygia, &c. ...	291
History of Art in Persia ...	291
Poole's (Reginald Stuart) Coins of Alexandria and the Nomos ...	96
Quilter's (Harry) Preferences in Art, Life, and Literature ...	572
Ridgeway's (William) The Origin of Metallic Currency and Weight Standards ...	218
Stern's (Alfred T.) The Life of John Linnell ...	512
Strang's (William) The Earth-Fiend ...	170
Symonds's (J. A.) The Life of Michelangelo Buonarroti ...	415
Thomas's (Gabriel) Michel-Ange, Poète ...	136, 156
Tours et Tournois Historiques de la Belgique ...	214
Von Scheffer's (Ludwig) Michelangelo ...	136, 156
Wallis's (Henry) Persian Ceramic Art, in the Collection of Mr. F. Ducane Godman, F.R.S. ...	55
Wroth's (Warwick) Coins of Mysia ...	96

MINOR NOTICES.

	PAGE
Bell's (Clara) translation of Fraipont's Art of Sketching ...	392
Conway's (W. M.) Dawn of Art in the Ancient World ...	591
Crane's (Walter) The Claims of Decorative Art ...	392
Fraipont's (G.) The Art of Sketching ...	392
Gerard's (Francesca A.) Angelica Kauffman ...	591
Hamerton's (Philip Gilbert) Drawing and Engraving ...	591
Nisbet's (Hume) Where Art Begins ...	392
Ward's (James) The Principles of Ornament ...	392

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Art Sales	76
Cuneiform Tablet from Palestine	36
Egypt Exploration Fund	612
English Art Club, The New	488
Fulleylove's "Leicester"	516
Indian Art at the Imperial Institute	17
Portrait Painters, The Society of	36
Rassam, Mr., and the British Museum	97
Royal Scottish Society of Painters in Water Colours	463
Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours	512

CORRESPONDENCE.

Agean Pottery in Egypt	18, 56, 77, 97, 117, 137, 177, 178, 198, 221, 245, 270, 292, 317, 341, 369, 412
Amherst Papyri, The	513

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

	PAGE
"Currency, Metallic, The Origin of"	245, 270, 292, 317, 340, 417
Cylinders in Egypt	117
Goodyear's Grammar of the Lotus	57
Inscription, Roman, from Carlisle	591, 615
Mahabodhi Temple, Models of the	392
Ox, The, as a Unit of Value	117
Papyri, The Moeris-Fayoum and Labyrinth	517
Phoen, Raamises, and (or) On	369
Scolari, Filippo, Portrait of, by Andrea del Castagno	461
Thera, The Vases from	177

OBITUARY.

Gilbert, Josiah	369
Wild, James William	189
Woolner, Thomas, R.A.	341

NOTES.

American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Papers of the	490
Archaeological Institute of America	393
Buddhist site, Discovery of a	138
Busts, plaster, from El-Kargeh	37
Carton Head Catalogue	37
Chaldean Monument discovered at Telloh	199
Chaldean Bas-relief from Constantinople	341
Courtois's (Miss Dering) Exhibition of Pictures	369
Dobrukscha, A Monument in the	78
Falerii, Excavations on the site of	38
Guildhall Loan Exhibition of Pictures	19
Decorative work at	158

NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Halfa, Egypt, Excavations at	117
Herneum at Argos, Excavation of the	393
Little Bas-relief found at Angora	293
Kochler, Mr. S. R., on White-Lime Engraving for Relief-Printing in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries	591
Memphis, Excavations of the site of	245
National Portrait Gallery, Additions to the	97
National Gallery of British Art, Site for the	513
Ohnefalsch-Richter's (Max) Die antiken Cultusstätten auf Kypros	34
O'Shea's (Henry) Guide to the Collections of the Louvre	221
Paton's (Sir Noel) Picture "De Profundis"	221
Rembrandt's "Hundred Guilder Print"	573, 595
Rodger's (Mr. J.) Collection of Indian Coins	159
Roman Inscriptions in Britain, Discoveries of	547
Royal Exchange, Proposed Interior Decoration of the	117
Sarcophagi found at Sidon	512
Tabella devotionis found at Hadrumetum	56
"Walden School," The	399

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

American Journal of Archaeology	221
Archæologia Aelianna	178
"Archæologia," Oxoniensis	573
Art Journal	97, 199, 245, 418, 616
Journal of the Ex Libris Society	37
of the Asiatic Society of Bengal	615
Magazine of Art	245, 341
Portfolio	245
Temple Bar	199
Yule Tide	221

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Dramatic Notes from Paris	318, 490, 513
"Duchess of Melfi, The," at the Independent Theatre	393
"King Lear," at the Lyceum	465

OBITUARY.

Leslie, Fred	547
--------------	-----

NOTES.

"David," at the Garrick	466
"Gold-fish," at the Opera Comique	57
"Haste to the Wedding," at the Criterion	118
"Hoodman Blind," at the Princess's	514
"Niobe, All Smiles," at the Strand	118
"Shakespeare," at the Globe	57
"Silent Battle, The," at the Criterion	573

MUSIC.

REVIEWS.

Heron-Allen's (Edward) De Fidiculis Bibliographia	158
Front's (Ebeneszer) Fugue	138
Spark & Bennett's History of the Leeds Musical Festival	118

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

	PAGE
Baring-Gould & Sheppards's Songs of the West	178
Best's (W. T.) Joh. Seb. Bach's Organ Works	98
Bridgman & Bendall's He Stoops to Win	293
Carmichael's (Mary) Age and With Early Horn	293
Clutsum's (G. H.) To the Distant One	98
Cobb's (Gerard F.) Quintet in C	270
Courvy's (Madge E.) In Years to Come	293
Cowen's (Frederic H.) The Silent Chimes	293
Edersheim's (J.) Israel in Chaldea	199
Ellie's (W. Ashton) Wagner-Sketches, 1840	158
Frangcon's Going for Patagonia	199
Forrester's (J. Cliffe) Parting Time	270
Green's (Lilias) Sing Leigh-It	199
Gurliut's (C.) Miniature Trio for Piano, Violin, and Cello	98
Heale's (Mr.) Glees and Choruses	98
Jensen's (G.) Vier Lieder	98
Johnson's (Noel) Bright be the Place of thy Soul	270
Kellie's (Lawrence) My Fairest Child, &c.	293
Luke's (Ernest) My Love and Delight	293
Lockname's (Clement) Old England	199
Loge's (Henri) The Silent Ferry	293
MacCunn's (Hamish) The Ship o' the Fiend	98
Macfarren's (Walter) Piano-forte Method	293
Mallard's (Clarissa) Keramos	270
Mascagni's (Pietro) Songs and Romances	246
Moffat's (Alfred) Folk-songs of England	178

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS—continued.

	PAGE
Monsigny's (Pierre) Chaconne du Ballet Héroïque	97
Morgan's (R. Orlando) The Legend of Elöisa	199
Noskowski, Sigismund, Four Piano-forte Pieces by	98
Noskowski's Melodies Ruthéniques	98
Organist's Quarterly Journal	246
Papini's (Gido) The Rose of Castile	199
Paner's (E.) Mendelssohn's War March of the Priests from "Athalia"	98
Pfeiffer's (Georges) The Light of Thy Love	293
Plüddemann's (Martin) Song of the Gondolier	270
Redhead's (Alfred) Twelfth Night	293
Roedel's (Joseph L.) An Eastern Lament and The Arena	293
Romano's (Joseph) Speriamo	199
Sauret's (Emile) Quatre Morceaux de Salon	293
Schytte's (L.) Scherzino	98
Squire's (W. H.) Minuet and Scène de Bal	98
Sweepstone's (Edith) Foreshadowing	98
Thompson's (Christiana) The Winter it is past, and Summer is a-coming in	270
Vianesi's (A.) Donceur	199
Wackerlin's The Dame of the Farm	98
Westbrook's (Dr. W. J.) Christmas Bells	191
ist's Library	293

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
"Eugene Onegin," at the New Olympic	370
German Opera at Covent Garden and Drury Lane	57, 78
Gloucester Musical Festival	221, 246
"Irmengarda" and "Orpheus"	573
Leeds Musical Festival	319, 341
Mascagni's "I Ranzani"	466
Opera at Covent Garden	34, 342
Royal Italian Opera	342
Verdi's "Requiem"	595
"Walküre, Die"	19

OBITUARY.

Franz, Robert	394
Stephens, Charles Edward	78

NOTES.

"Caedmar," at the Olympic	394
CONCERTS:
Crystal Palace	19, 379
Richter	19, 38
Monday Popular	394, 548
Saturday Popular	394
Musical Times, Special Beethoven
Number of the	615
"Schauspielfirector, The," at the Olympic	394

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1052.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1892.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

By Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier.

THE NAULAHKA:

A Story of West and East.

Price 6s.

"A remarkable book."—Daily Telegraph.

A French Translation by M. GERARD HARRY will appear shortly, and a German Translation is in preparation.

These will be published by Messrs. HEINEMANN & BALESTIER in Paris and Leipzig respectively. "THE NAULAHKA" will also be included in their "English Library," of which series it will form the 150th Volume.

BY WOLCOTT BALESTIER.

THE AVERAGE WOMAN.

With a Memoir by HENRY JAMES.
Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE OLD MAIDS' CLUB.

By I. ZANGWILL,
Author of "The Bachelor's Club."
With 41 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Uniform with the above, price 3s. 6d.

WOMAN—THROUGH A MAN'S EYE-GLASS.

By MALCOLM C. SALAMAN.
With Illustrations by Dudley Hardy.
Second Edition.

Daily Chronicle.—"The very thing for a punt-cushion or a garden hammock."

LOVE SONGS OF ENGLISH POETS, 1500-1800.

With Notes by RALPH H. CAINE.
Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

*. Also 100 Copies printed on Dutch hand-made paper, extra binding.

HEINEMANN'S POPULAR 3s. 6d. NOVELS.

THE MASTER of the MAGICIANS.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS and HERBERT D. WARD.
"In narrative, in description, in character-drawing the book is excellent."—Guardian.

DAUGHTERS of MEN. By Hannah LYNCH, Author of "The Prince of the Glades," &c.
"Eminently a book to be recommended to all who want a new literary sensation."—Sunday Sun.

THE SCAPEGOAT: a Romance. By HALL CAINE. The New (Fifth) Edition.
"Excels in dramatic force all the author's previous efforts Matchless of its kind."—Times.

THE GREAT EDUCATORS.

A Biographical History of Education from the Earliest Times to the Present Day.
Times.—"A series of monographs on 'The Great Educators' should prove of service to all who concern themselves with the history, theory, and practice of education."
Each Subject will form a complete Volume, price 5s.

The following Volumes are now ready:—

ARISTOTLE and the ANCIENT EDUCATIONAL IDEALS. By THOMAS DAVIDSON, M.A., LL.D.

LOYOLA and the EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM of the JESUITS. By Rev. THOMAS HUGHES, of the Society of Jesus.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN,
21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

LOAN EXHIBITION OF PICTURES

AT THE

GUILDHALL OF THE CITY OF LONDON, 1892.

With the sanction of the Library Committee of the Corporation of London, and by the kind permission of the Owners of the Pictures, it has been decided to publish, by Subscription, at Two Guineas, a thick drawing royal 16o volume, containing REPRODUCTIONS by the COLLOTYPE PROCESS of about FIFTY of the RAREST and more IMPORTANT PICTURES in the COLLECTION. Each Picture will be mounted on an India Tint and accompanied by a Descriptive Note, as in the published Catalogue. On the completion of the Subscription List the price will be raised to Three Guineas.

One Hundred and Twenty LARGE-PAPER COPIES only will be printed on Whatman's Thick Imperial Drawing Paper, at Four Guineas. These will be numbered and signed in order of application.

About Thirty of these Reproductions will be selected from the Pictures by Early Masters, and about Twenty from Modern Works, many in each case having never before been reproduced in any form. Among those selected will be the following:—

OLD MASTERS—Madonna and Child (J. Van Eyck); A Dutch Gentleman (Frans Hals); The Wreck of the Minotaur (J. M. W. Turner, R.A.); Lady Hamilton as Circe (G. Romney); Lady Elizabeth Foster (Sir Joshua Reynolds); View on the Maas (A. Cuyp); The Enchanted Castle (Claude); The Smoker (Jan Steen), &c.

MODERN—Love among the Ruins (E. Burne-Jones, A.R.A.); The Vale of Rest (Sir J. E. Millais, R.A.); Ophelia (G. F. Watts, R.A.); The End of the Day (G. Mason, A.R.A.); A Highland Spate (Peter Graham, R.A.); Rorke's Drift (Lady Butler), &c.

Applications for copies should be sent in at once to

Messrs. BLADES, EAST & BLADES,

Fine-Art Printers to the Corporation,

23, Abchurch Lane, E.C.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL beg to announce

A NEW ISSUE OF

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

Printed from the Edition that was carefully Corrected by the Author in 1867 and 1868, to be called

THE HALF-CROWN EDITION.

The Edition will contain the whole of the Original Illustrations, and will be complete in about 18 crown 8vo Volumes, 2s. 6d. each.

THE FOLLOWING ARE NOW READY:—

THE PICKWICK PAPERS. With 43 Illustrations by Seymour and Phiz.

BARNABY RUDGE: a Tale of the Riots of 'Eighty. With 76 Illustrations by George Cattermole and H. K. Browne.

OLIVER TWIST. With 24 Illustrations by Cruikshank.

TO BE FOLLOWED BY:—

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP. With 75 Illustrations by George Cattermole and H. K. Browne.

NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. With 40 Illustrations by Phiz.

MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT. With 40 Illustrations by Phiz.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

SWINBURNE'S THE SISTERS, by G. COTTERELL	5
MOLTER'S LETTERS TO HIS MOTHER AND BROTHERS, by JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS	5
MISS M. BETHAM EDWARDS'S FRANCE OF TO-DAY, by the REV. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	7
DR. DUNBAR INGRAM'S ENGLAND AND ROME, by DR. G. W. CHILDS	8
TWO ANCIENT DOCUMENTS FROM IRELAND, by MISS L. TOLMIN SMITH	9
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	9
SOME AMERICAN BOOKS	10
NOTES AND NEWS	11
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	11
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TUSCAN SKIES" AND "MONTE OLIVETO," by PROF. WARR	13
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	13
THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY	13
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	13
CORRESPONDENCE—
Cramer's Draft-Services for the Prayer Book , by W. H. FERE; On the Newton Stone , by WHITLEY STOKES, Prof. W. M. RAMSAY, and the Earl of Southesk; "Une Prière Juive-Persane," by Prof. Cheyne; Wilberforce University , by W. E. A. AXON; An Ancient Form of Submission , by G. A. GRIERSON	13
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	15
BURY'S ISTHMIAN ODES OF PINDAR, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	15
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Πηνελόπη" Water, by E. Sibree; Note on Plautus, "Persa" 1.3.40., by N. L.	16
SCIENCE NOTES	16
PHILOLOGY NOTES	16
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	16
INDIAN ART AT THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE, by STEPHEN WHEELER	17
CORRESPONDENCE—
Aegean Pottery in Egypt , by Cecil Torr	18
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	19
STAGE NOTES	19
"DIE WALKÜRE," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	19
RECENT CONCERTS, by E. F. J.	19

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—Every Description of Work. Literary, Scientific, &c., undertaken. Orders carefully and promptly attended to. Moderate Terms. Extra Copies at reduced rates.—Miss THOMAS, 419, Wandsworth Road, S.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS.,
Plays, Reviews, Lectures, Legal, or other Articles, COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Terms moderate. Duplicate copies.—Address E. THOMAS, 23, Maitland Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

STAMPS.—WANTED a COLLECTION, small or large, loose or fixed. References given.—DUNDANON, Moffat, Scotland.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

CATALOGUE of the MANX CROSSES, with the Runic Inscriptions, and various Readings and Renderings coll. and arranged by P. M. C. KEMMER, F.S.A. Scot. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with the Addition of the Latin and Gaelic Inscriptions, and some Illustrations.
Isle of Man: C. B. HEYES, Ramsey;
London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS & NORGATE.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO
THE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

HOLIDAYS in NORMANDY.—
M. BARBIER, French Master, Glasgow Athenaeum, Examiner in French to Intermediate Education Board, receives at his country residence in Normandy, during June, July, and August, a few GENTLEMEN desirous of improving their knowledge of French by a stay in France. Backward Candidates coached for Examinations. Beautiful country. Tennis. Every comfort. Highest references.—For particulars and Prospectus apply to M. BAUMANN, Ecosseville, par Louviers, Eure, France.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form, are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration. MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved will be published in the early Autumn.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.,

Publishers of THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL, 5s. (5th Edition),
18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

VOL. IX. now ready.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

A Dictionary of Universal Knowledge, with numerous Maps and Wood Engravings.
In 10 vols., imperial 8vo. Entirely New Edition. Vols. I. to IX. are now ready.

Price 10s. each, cloth; 15s. each, half-morocco.

SPECTATOR.—"The leading literary, political, scientific, and artistic subjects have been intrusted to specially qualified writers, whose articles are, as a rule, entirely new. It is evident that the new edition of "Chambers's Encyclopædia" will reflect the highest credit on its editor and its publishers."

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, 17, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; and EDINBURGH.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, Burlington House, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at EDINBURGH, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3RD.

PRESIDENT-ELECT—

Sir ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, LL.D., D.Sc., For. Sec. R.S., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom; Corresponding Member of the Institute of France.

NOTICE to CONTRIBUTORS of MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that the acceptance of Memoirs, and the days on which they are to be read are, as far as possible, determined by Organising Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. Memoirs should be sent to the Office of the Association. Information about local arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, Edinburgh.

G. GRILLITH, Assistant General Secretary.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL Congress of Orientalists, 1892.

PRESIDENT—PROF. MAX MÜLLER.

All Communications as to Papers and Membership to be addressed to the Secretaries, 22, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C.

Tickets, £1; Ladies, 10s.

The CONGRESS will be held SEPTEMBER 5–12. Prof. MAX MÜLLER'S ADDRESS will be delivered on the Morning of MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, and Mr. GLADSTONE'S, at 3 P.M., on SEPTEMBER 7.

N.B.—Orientalists are informed that invitations have been received from Geneva, for holding the Tenth Congress there.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL

PROFESSORSHIP of LAW.

The COUNCIL invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of LAW.

Applications, with references, should be sent on or before the 16th JULY to the REGISTRAR, from whom particulars may be obtained.
E. LONDONI, Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM, 13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, AND SCULPTURE.
OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and FRIDAYS, in JULY and AUGUST.

Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained from the Curator, at the Museum.

Will be ready in a few days.

NEW NOVEL by JOHN COLEMAN. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"WIFE—YET NO WIFE."

By JOHN COLEMAN.

Author of "Rival Queens," "White Lady of Rosemount," "Curly," "Players and Playwrights I have Met," &c., &c.
HENRY J. DRANE, Wine Office Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

ON the ORGANISATION of SCIENCE:

An Essay towards Systematisation. By A. FREE LANCE. 1s. net.
"A powerful idea."—Academy. "A weighty protest.... Suggestive and interesting.... such vigour and incisiveness."—Nat. Sci.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application.
FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

B. BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

BY I.

Florence Marryat.THE NOBLER SEX.

By the Author of

"My Sister the Actress," "Facing the Footlights," "Under the Lilies and Roses," &c. 3 vols.

BY II.

Mrs. Alexander Fraser.A MODERN BRIDEGROOM.

By the Author of

"Daughters of Belgravia," "The New Duchess," "She Came Between," &c. 2 vols.

"Mrs. Fraser is a mistress of her art and takes her place in the front rank of the society novelists. Her style is easy and polished—her manner of telling a story commands the reader's interest."—Life.
"Mrs. Fraser's novel is clever as well as vigorous, and its moral tendency is undeniably good."—Court Journal.

BY III.

Annie Thomas

(Mrs. Pender Cudlip).

OLD DACRES' DARLING.

By the Author of

"Kate Valliant," "Allerton Towers," "Denis Donne," &c. 3 vols.

"There is so much of keen perception, humour, and bright dialogue in 'Old Dacres' Darling' that it worthily continues the series of the author's lively works."—Morning Post.
"The story is throughout deeply interesting, and presents sketches of some very excellent people."—Scotsman.
"Annie Thomas's novels always have the merit of being carefully constructed and free from those glaring inaccuracies in social affairs."—Public Opinion.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

WHOM GOD HATH JOINED; or, a

Question of Marriage. By FERGUS HUME.

DRAWN BLANK. By Mrs. Robert

JOCELYN, Author of "The M. F. H.'s Daughter," &c. [Immediately.]

In picture boards, 2s. each.

THE SAVAGE QUEEN: a Romance of the Natives of Van Dieman's Land. (2nd Edition.)

By HUME NISBET.

A HOMBURG BEAUTY. (3rd Edition.)

By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD. [Immediately.]

In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

A CONQUERING HEROINE. By

Mrs. HUNGERFORD, Author of "Molly Bawn." [Immediately.]

"BELGRAVIA."

A LONDON MAGAZINE. Price 1s.

Serial Tales by ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) and IZA DUFFUS HARDY are running in the above Monthly Magazine.

"LONDON SOCIETY."

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE. Price 1s.

Serial Tales, entitled "The Countess Pharamond," by "RITA," and "A Buried Sin," are running in the above Magazine.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.O.ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

In tasteful fcap. 12mo, antique paper, olive cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d.; Large-Paper Copies, price 15s. net.

THE ELIZABETHAN LIBRARY.

VOLUME I.

A Cabinet of Gems. Cut and Polished by Sir

PHILIP SIDNEY; now, for the more radiance, presented without their Setting, by GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D.

With Portrait of Sir Philip Sidney.

"Here indeed is a 'box where sweets compacted lie,' a real pocket companion, a vinaigrette for the soul. Such a book may cheer us all the day, checking our pessimism, and restoring our faith in human nature."—Daily Chronicle.

In tasteful fcap. 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

From Punch to Padan Aram; or, Thoughts by aRambling Philosopher. By ALFRED T. STORY, Author of "A Book of Vagrom Men," &c.
CONTENTS:—Punch and Judy—The Anchorite—On Fools—The Pan Harmonica Man—The Toll Gatekeeper—On Dogs—On Characters in Fiction—The Gleaner—The Female Vagrant—Concerning Girls—The Cornfield—The Wail—The Vagrant Earth—The Angler—The Inn—The Bird Catcher—Samuel's Mare Maggy—On the Road to Padan Aram.

In fcap. 8vo, tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in half-parliament, price 5s.; Large-Paper Copies for Collectors, price 21s. net.

Res Judicata: Papers and Essays. By AUGUSTINE

BIRRELL, Author of "Obiter Dicta," &c.

"One of the most charmingly written books of criticism which has ever been penned. Mr. Birrell won his fame by 'Obiter Dicta,' and he will assuredly not lose it as a result of his latest work."—Daily Telegraph.

In tasteful fcap. 8vo, blue cloth, gilt lettered, price 2s. 6d.

Sermons from Browning. By the Rev. F. EALAND,

M.A., Curate of St. Anne's Holloway.

CONTENTS:—The Life That Now Is. "Rabbi Ben Ezra," "The Ring and the Book," "The Pope—The Life Which is to Come." "La Basiaz," "Cleon," "Aht Vogler," "Prospect"—The Next to Nothings of Life, and the Romance of the Unromantic. "Pippa Passes," "The Boy and the Angel"—The All-important in Life. "Christmas Eve," and "Easter Day."

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Lake Country Romances. By HERBERT V. MILLS.

With 8 Illustrations of Local and Historic Scenes by Cuthbert Rigby.

CONTENTS:—The Wooing of Katharine Parr—A Tragic Coronation—Ralph Rodman's Atonement—The Crier of Claife.

In handsome crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

The Lone-Star of Liberia. Being the Outcome of Reflections on our own people. By FREDERICK ALEXANDER DURHAM, an African, of Lincoln's Inn (Student-at-Law). With an Introduction by Madame LA COMTESSE C. HUGO.

CONTENTS:—The Afro-American—Is the Ethiopian inferior to the Caucasian?—Immortality—Superstition in the Nineteenth Century—Under Caucasian Rule—Africa Governed by African Repatriation and Liberia.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

Just published, 8vo, pp. 672, price 18s.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER:

A Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1891.

The first portion of this Volume (pp. 1-247) is devoted to a résumé of the Political History of England during the year 1891. The events of Parliamentary Life are noted, and the principal speeches summarised. Foreign and Colonial History are dealt with in pp. 248-436. In the Second Part a Chronological Summary is given of the principal events of the year, both foreign and domestic; this is followed by a Retrospect of Literature, Science, and Art, and an Obituary of Eminent Persons. A full Index is added, which is an important feature of the book, and adds very materially to its value as a work of reference.

* * * Volumes of the ANNUAL REGISTER for the years 1883-1890 can still be had, price 18s. each.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

THE PROTEST OF IRISH PROTESTANTISM. By Professor A. V.

DICEY.

ULSTERIA and HOME RULE. By AN IRISH PRESBYTERIAN

MINISTER.

THE RUSSIAN CRISIS. By A FORMER SIBERIAN EXILE.

SACERDOTALISM. By Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.

GENERAL BOOTH'S SOCIAL WORK. By FRANCIS PERK.

ARE WE REALLY SO BAD? By the Right Hon. G. OSBORNE

MORGAN, Q.C., M.P.

PROBLEMS OF REPRODUCTION. By Professor MARCUS HARRPOO.

THE POPULAR SONGS OF FRANCE. By ELEANOR C. PRICE.

THE MIGRATIONS OF THE RACES OF MEN. By JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

THE BISHOP OF COLCHESTER, and the OLD TESTAMENT

Letters from Canon CHEVYSE and Archdeacon WILSON.

J. HUNTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JULY.

ELEGY. By A. C. SWINBURNE.

NONCONFORMISTS and HOME RULE. By H. M. BOMPAS, Q.C.

SOME RECENT NOVELS. By FRANCIS ADAMS.

THE RELIGIOUS WAR IN UGANDA. By G. S. MACKENZIE.

THE PROPOSED PAN-ANGELIC FESTIVAL. By R. P. ROWE.

GUY DE MAUPASSANT. By EDWARD DELILLE.

THE SERVANT QUESTION. By Lady JEVRE.

LORD TOLLEMACHE and his ANECDOTES. By the Hon. LIONEL

TOLLEMACHE.

THREE ESSAYETTES. By COVENTRY PATMORE.

MENTAL IMAGERY. By ALFRED BINET.

EARLY PARLIAMENTARY DAYS. By H. W. LUCY.

THE TRUTH about the SALVATION ARMY. By ARNOLD WHITE.

THE STRENGTH and PROSPECTS of UNIONISM IN IRELAND.

By AN IRISHMAN.

CORRESPONDENCE: The Eight Hours System in Gasworks. By

GEORGE LIVERSEY. CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

Price ONE SHILLING.

JULY, 1892.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 38.

THE ULSTER PROTESTANTS and HOME RULE.

I. By Dr. BALL.

II. By the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A.

THE FIRST STEP. By Count Leo Tolstol.

EMERALD UTHWART. By WALTER PATER. (Conclusion.)

STUDY in CHARACTER: Lord Salisbury.

A CONTRIBUTION to the ALCOHOL QUESTION. By Dr. ROBERT

ROOSE.

THE MARRIAGE MARKET, FRENCH and ENGLISH. By

MARIE ANNE DE BOVET.

THE TROUBLE IN UGANDA. By the Rev. WILLIAM JOSEPH SMITH,

M.A., F.R.G.S.

CULTURE: Its Meaning and Its Uses. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

LITERATURE } By H. D. TRAILL.

AND THE DRAMA. } By A. E. WALKLEY.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

And New York: 15, East 16th Street.

All rights reserved.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other

Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.,

Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging

Christ," &c.

"It is superfluous to recommend with praise a volume by Dr. Alexander MacLaren, of Manchester, England."

Christian Union (New York).

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,

21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

TWO NEW SERIAL STORIES are appearing in THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE for July, 1892, "GOD'S FOOL," by Maarten Maartens, Author of "An Old Maid's Love," "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," "AUNT ANNE," &c.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

JUST READY.

THE STORY of a PENITENT SOUL. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

COUSIN CINDERELLA. By Mrs. PAUL KING. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

BY A NEW AUTHOR.

A HIGH LITTLE WORLD, and What Happened There. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

WESTOVER'S WARD. By

ALGERNON RIDGEWAY. In 3 vols., crown 8vo. "The story is romantic and pathetic, racy of the American soil, bristling with Far West Dialect, and a good sample of Transatlantic fiction It also contains incident, excitement, and brightness."—Athenaeum. "The author of this book is a coming man, very nearly, if not quite come. The novel is singularly clever."—World.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

THAT WILD WHEEL. By

FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "Aunt Margaret's Troubles," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo. "The author's faculty for making vigorous and lifelike character-studies is very conspicuous.... Nothing can be better than the keen observation and good-tempered ridicule bestowed on the ways and manners of Madame Martin's third-rate pension and its frequenters."—Morning Post.

At all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS. NEW 3s. 6d. EDITION.

Sale over One Million Copies.

EAST LYNNE. (Two Hundred and Fiftieth Thous.)

THE CHANNINGS. (One Hundredth Thousand.)

MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES. (Seventy-third Thousand.)

THE SHADOW of ASHLYDYAT. (Fiftieth Thous.)

LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTERS. (Fiftieth Thous.)

VERNER'S PRIOR. (Thirty-ninth Thousand.)

ROLAND YORKE. (Sixtieth Thousand.)

JOHNNY LUDLOW. First Series. (Thirty-fifth Thousand.)

MILDRED ARKELL. (Forty-fifth Thousand.)

ST. MARTIN'S EVE. (Fortieth Thousand.)

TREVLYN HOLD. (Fortieth Thousand.)

GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL. (Forty-fifth Thousand.)

THE RED COURT FARM. (Thirty-seventh Thous.)

WITHIN the MAZE. (Forty-fifth Thousand.)

ELSTER'S FOLLY. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

LADY ADELAIDE. (Twenty-ninth Thousand.)

OSWALD CRAY. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Second Series. (Twentieth Thousand.)

ANNE HEREFORD. (Twenty-ninth Thousand.)

DENE HOLLOW. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

EDINA. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

A LIFE'S SECRET. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

COURT NETHERLEIGH. (Eighteenth Thousand.)

LADY GRACE. (Now appears for the first time in cheap form.)

BESSY RANE. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

PARKWATER. (Twentieth Thousand.)

THE UNHOLY WISH. &c.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Third Series.

THE MASTER of GREYLANDS. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

ORVILLE COLLEGE. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

POMEROY ABBEY. (Twenty-first Thousand.)

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Fourth Series.

ADAM GRAINGER. &c.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Fifth Series.

The Volumes are in crown 8vo size, bound in scarlet cloth and lettered on the side, each one sold separately.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOTICE.

THE SQUIRE,

By Mrs. PARR, Author of "Dorothy Fox," will be published on July 7, in 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY JAMES PAYN.

NOTICE.

A MODERN DICK WHITTINGTON.

By JAMES PAYN, Author of "Lost Sir Massingberd," &c., is now ready, in 2 vols., price 21s.

"There is plenty of the humour in it in which Mr. Pavn excels, but besides that there is a well-told plot, and highly sensational incident."—Daily Telegraph.

MR. STEVENSON'S NEW WORK.

NOTICE.

THE WRECKER,

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON and LLOYD OSBOURNE is now ready, Illustrated, price 6s.

Mr. ANDREW LANG says:—"The Wrecker" seems much the most enticing romance at present before the world."

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

PER ASPERA (a Thorny Path.)

By GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. (First Issue in Book Form).

A SON of the FENS. By Dr. P. H. EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE EFFACEMENT of ORIEL PEN-ILLIGON. By E. M. HEWITT. 8vo, picture covers, 1s.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and LETTERS. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, B.A. With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page and 44 smaller Illustrations, including 15 Photogravures. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, 250 copies, demy 4to, boards, with extra illustrations, Three Guineas net. [Next week. "Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from the story."—Saturday Review.

THE STORY of KING EDWARD and NEW WINCHELSEA: the Edification of a Medieval Town. By F. A. INDERWICK, Q.C., Author of "Sidelights on the Stuarts," "The Interregnum," Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada, Japan, and China, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"Picturesque and practical."—Globe.

CONVERSATIONS with CARLYLE.

By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G., &c. With 2 Portraits of Mr. Carlyle and 1 of Mrs. Carlyle. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Sir C. G. Duffy's delightful volume."—Athenaeum.

THE TOURIST SEASON IN NORWAY.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY. By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

DARK AFRICA and the WAY OUT;

or, a Scheme for Civilising and Evangelising the Dark Continent. By the Rev. W. HUGHES, F.R.G.S., Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay, North Wales. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

LIFE of SIR EVELYN WOOD.

By CHARLES WILLIAMS, War Correspondent. With Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

"A record packed full of adventure; a story of personal valour, tempered by real gifts of generalship and of the management of men."—Daily Chronicle.

SOME RECORDS of CRIME.

Being the Diary of a Year, Private and Particular, of an Officer of the Thuggee and Dacoite Police. By General CHARLES HERVEY, C.B. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 30s. "Full of interest and incident."—Times.

UNDER THE EXPRESS SANCTION OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

LOW'S HANDBOOK to the CHARITIES of LONDON. Edition for 1892. (Established 1836.) In paper covers, 1s.; in red cloth, 1s. 6d.

JUST READY.

THREE FEATHERS

By WILLIAM BLACK. 2s. 6d.

Being the New Volume in the Uniform and Cheap Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S NOVELS.

"An excellent shillingsworth is 'Scribner.'"—St. James's Gazette.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MAY Number just ready. An Illustrated Monthly. Price One Shilling.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd. St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1892.

No. 1052, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Sisters. A Tragedy. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE penalty of distinction is never more actual than in the case of the poet or man of letters. His best work is the standard by which his inferior work is judged; and though his admirers do not admire him the less because he occasionally falls below his highest level, they carefully discriminate between his better and his worse performances. So, when Mr. Swinburne offers us a poem which he calls a tragedy, our expectations take their cue from "Erechtheus" and "Bothwell," from "Mary Stuart" and "Marino Faliero." To be offered a poem of any kind by Mr. Swinburne is to be reminded of some of the most perfect verse in the language, and to have our hopes raised by the prospect of a fresh addition to a rich accumulation of song. The Sisters will not satisfy these hopes; nor will it be read as a tragedy, for there is nothing really tragic in it. It is true that the two principal characters come to a sudden end—by misadventure rather than foul play—but they die as placidly as though they were only falling asleep, and the lookers-on speak of the incident with as much unconcern as they might have shown if they had been discussing the weather. Of passion, the most essential thing in a tragedy, there is scarcely any trace from beginning to end of the poem, except in the interlude—the play within the play—in which the performers do invest the parts they assume with some show of life.

The plot of the poem is not without its possibilities. Two cousins are in love with two sisters, and both sisters are in love with one of the cousins. Of the latter, the particular one who is the object of this regard is poor, while the other has a good inheritance. Because he is poor, Reginald thinks he ought not to declare his love for Mabel, and he tells Frank to win her if he can. Frank tries, but finds that Mabel will only accept Reginald, whereupon he retires, and Reginald is made happy. But Anne, the other sister, is disappointed and jealous. She does not mean to hurt any one but herself, and she had laid up some poison, which she intended to take before the wedding day. Mabel finds the flask, the liquid in which smells sweet, and asks Anne to let her taste it. The temptation is too strong for the unhappy sister. She utters a few words of half-dissuasion, but Mabel sips the poison. Reginald comes in, tastes it also, at Mabel's wish, and the placid death-scene follows immediately afterwards.

The dramatic opportunities of such a story are few, but Mr. Swinburne might surely have used them to better purpose than he has done. The rivalries of the two men, and the jealousy of one of the girls, could have been made to yield matter for passionate treatment. But the men are without a particle of fire. Reginald has not pluck enough to propose to Mabel, and Frank is too faint-hearted to press his suit. The theory of Frank's unselfishness, and of Reginald's modest self-depreciation, might pass muster if the virtues it implies were not so obviously the result of weakness rather than of strength. Most of the talk of the two lovers is of a very feeble sort, and almost reconciles one to the abortiveness of Anne's attempts at jealousy. It is not surprising that she never flames up, for there is really nothing to make her do so. But it is surprising that the style as well as the matter of the talk of all the characters is so poor. There is no greater master of eloquent diction living than Mr. Swinburne, yet he is content here to put into verse, which is almost necessarily inferior, passages that would be bald even in prose.

One gladly admits, however, that there are better things in the poem. The few lyrics in it are alone enough to make it welcome. Mr. Swinburne has seldom surpassed the beauty and sweetness of the song with which the fourth act opens:

"Love and Sorrow met in May,
Crowned with rue and hawthorn-spray,
And Sorrow smiled.
Scarce a bird of all the spring
Durst between them pass and sing,
And scarce a child.

"Love put forth his hand to take Sorrow's wreath for sorrow's sake,
Her crown of rue.
Sorrow cast before her down
Even for love's sake Love's own crown,
Crowned with dew.

"Winter breathed again, and spring
Cowered and shrank with wounded wing
Down out of sight.
May, with all her loves laid low,
Saw no flowers but flowers of snow
That mocked her flight.

"Love rose up with crownless head
Smiling down on springtime dead,
On wintry May.
Sorrow, like a cloud that flies,
Like a cloud in clearing skies,
Passed away."

Reginald's tardy confession of love is in the true vein both of poet and lover. He had been wounded at Waterloo (the time of the poem is 1816), and Mabel asks him—

"When you lay hurt it might have been to death—
Will you not tell me what you thought of then?"

He answers that there is nothing to tell, but she presses him with more questions, and at last exclaims

"O Reginald,
Must I say everything—and more—and you nothing?"

Then Reginald takes courage and opens his heart to her:

"I thought,
Between the shoots and swoonings, off and on,
How hard it was, if anything was hard
When one was dying for England, not to see
Mabel, when I could see the stars. I thought
How sweet it was to know they shone on her Asleep or waking, here at home. I thought
I could have wished, and should not wish, to send
My whole heart's love back as my life went out,

To find her here and clasp her close and say
What I could never—how much I had loved her.
Then
I thought how base and bad a fool I was
To dream of wishing what would grieve her. Then
I fell asleep."

In the first flush, too, of his new happiness Reginald made one or two other pretty speeches worthy of the poet who writes them. This, for instance:

"I never was or could be fit for you
To glance on or to tread on. You, whose face
Was always all the light of all the world
To me—the sun of suns, the flower of flowers,
The wonder of all wonders—and your smile
The light that lit the dawn up, and your voice
A charm that might have thrilled and stilled the sea—
You, to put out that heavenly hand of yours,
And lift up me to heaven, above all stars
But those God gave you for your eyes on earth
That all might know his angel!"

The thoughtful reader of the poem will now and then stop to con over again some short passage in which a fine thought is forcibly expressed or a graphic picture conveyed. The following is such a passage:

"The windy darkness creeps and leaps by fits
Up westward: clouds, and neither stars nor sun,
And just the ghost of a lost moon gone blind
And helpless."

And this is another:

"Death's wings beat round about us day and night:
Their wind is in our faces now."

If The Sisters, as compared with Mr. Swinburne's greater works, must be deemed a piece of somewhat indifferent workmanship, the extracts which have been given will show that the poet has nevertheless left upon it the mark of his genius.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

Letters of Field Marshal Count Helmuth von Moltke to his Mother and his Brothers. Translated by Clara Bell and Harry W. Fischer. In 2 vols. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

These volumes consist of a series of letters, written by Moltke to his mother and two of his brothers, and extending over a period of more than sixty years. They do more honour to the warrior's memory than his précis of the war of 1870-1, which, despite the praises of the gobe-mouches of flattery, has found, we suspect, very few readers, and is a shallow, one-sided, and inaccurate book. The Letters give us a clear idea of Moltke's real nature and character, of his industry, perseverance, high sense of duty, intellectual tastes, and great capacity, and, at the same time, of a certain narrowness of view, and of a want of sympathy and original genius, which may be distinctly traced in his thoughts and his acts. They contain, too, his passing opinions on many of the great questions of his time, expressed with the freedom of intimate converse; and these are interesting in the extreme, as showing the judgment of a Prussian Junker of remarkable gifts, on the wars, the politics, and the tendencies of the age. We see clearly in them, among other things, intense dislike of France, and of French ideas and influence, strong and becoming patriotic pride, the prejudices of an aristocratic caste, belief that organised force is everything in war, and profound contempt of popular movements:

convictions, in a word, which, in 1793, led to the discomfiture of old Feudal Europe, and which, in 1870, as these volumes prove, were more nearly falsified by the event than mere soldiers imagine.

The letters of Moltke to his mother, a woman of fine parts and a strong nature, most clearly, perhaps, disclose his character. Whether at a desk at the State College of Berlin, or engaged in making surveys of Prussian territory, he was a patient and indefatigable worker; and we are not surprised that "the thoroughness of his work" attracted the attention of even a listless sovereign. He was also a very high-minded man, strict in principle, moral, sedate, and scrupulous; and he evidently became, at an early age, the mentor and real head of his family. His acquirements in every sphere of learning were immense; his understanding was penetrating and strong; but there was nothing of the bookworm or the pedant about him; he loved nature, and could represent her grandeur and beauty with real skill; he was a constant and enthusiastic traveller; and he was, withal, playful, joyous, a good companion, and steady in his affection to friends and kinsmen. Such a man was destined to rise to eminence. And yet Moltke's nature was not free from defects: he was wanting in imagination and commanding genius; and, possibly owing to the associations of his life, he remained a Prussian Junker to the end of his days—that is, an aristocrat of the truest military type, such a Tory of the Tories as is unknown in England. He bitterly complains in one of his letters, that the extreme privations of his earliest youth had a pernicious and deadening effect on him; but here he is not just to himself; they may have checked the expansion of his fine intellect, but they did not impair the strength of character he exhibited at grave crises in war:

"As I had no education but thrashing, I have had no chance of forming a character. I am often painfully conscious of it. The want of self-reliance and constant reference to the opinions of others, even the preponderance of reason over inclination often give me moral depressions, such as others feel from opposite causes. They were in such a hurry to efface every prominent characteristic, every peculiarity, as they would have nipped betimes every shoot of a yew hedge, that the result was weakness of character, the most fatal of all."

The most interesting parts of these Letters, however, are the reflections they contain on passing events. As early as 1831 Moltke appreciated the change in European politics, which has made nations, not governments, the arbiters of war, though this really began with the French Revolution.

"The Belgian question becomes so complicated that nothing but a regular European war will cut the Gordian knot at last. This is the more likely because in these days war and peace and the relations of nations are no longer Cabinet questions; in many countries the people themselves govern the Cabinet, and thus an element is introduced into politics on which it is impossible to reckon."

Moltke had the soldier's love of distinction in arms; but he does not seem to have loved war; and curiously he does not once refer to the War of Liberation which set Germany free. In 1847, long before he became famous, he seriously thought of leaving the service.

"I do not want to rise any higher than chief of the general staff of an army corps, and shall then retire. At least, that is my intention, unless the proverb comes true for both of us, that the jug that goes often to the well breaks at last."

When the Crimean War closed the long years of the Peace, Moltke carefully watched every military event. His sympathies were with Russia at Sebastopol; and this acute remark shows how strategically false the position of the Allies was, even after the fall of the great fortress: "The Allies are fixed in the Tauric Chersonese, at very close quarters, and, as it were, besieged by the Russians. Their position is very strong and hard to take . . . but they cannot get out." In fact, Moltke condemns the whole strategy of confining the operations to the siege; and really, but for the exhaustion of Russia, of which the allies were not aware, the fall of Sebastopol would have been but a first act in the war.

In 1859 Moltke had high hopes that Prussia would take the field against her old enemy France; and he is indignant with Austria for making peace:

"Austria was convinced that Prussia was bent on war, that the advance of 400,000 Germans would force the Emperor Napoleon to withdraw a considerable part of his army from Italy to France, and that she might conquer his provinces of Lombardy and Piedmont; but she was also aware of the motion made to the Confederation on July 4, and peace was concluded. Prussia missed a great opportunity. Only four weeks ago we might have placed ourselves at the head of all Germany."

Moltke was far from confident in 1866 of what would be the result of the struggle with Austria; and the following confutes an apology that has been made for his hazardous and ill-conceived march into Bohemia, that he knew he could safely underdate his enemy. Political rather than military views, we believe, were the ultimate cause of a movement, excused only by the worshippers of success; and Moltke possibly was not its real author: "The struggle will be terrific. Austria has made greater preparations than ever before, and we, too, are ready to put our whole force into the field."

France and the War of 1870 fill a not inconsiderable part of these volumes; but not so large as might be supposed. Like a good Prussian, Moltke hated the French, and especially like one of the aristocratic caste, which had been trodden into the dust at Jena, and which was, and is, the enemy of French ideas. He considered France the disturber of Europe, the "principles of 1789" as a curse to the world, and the democratic despotism of Louis Napoleon "a gigantic swindle." He longed for a war with France in 1867, when he knew that France was wholly unprepared. Remarks like these show the falsity of the statement that France was the only aggressor in 1870:

"Louis Napoleon must be aware that he is not prepared for war; but he cannot say so to his vain Frenchmen. . . . Nothing could be better for us than that war, which is bound to come, should be declared at once."

Moltke has not a word to say of his great achievements in the first part of the war of 1870: he was, no doubt, too busy to write private letters; but this reticence is in keeping with his fine modest character. When the last Imperial army had succumbed at Sedan, he believed that Paris would fall like the walls of Jericho, at the first blast of the Prussian trumpet, and he advanced to the capital on this assumption—an assumption that nearly cost Germany dear. He regarded the first attempts of the nation to resist with a kind of grim and impatient scorn, and ridiculed the efforts of mere rûde levies. Jules Favre, Gambetta, and the Provisional Government were all treated with sovereign contempt:

"La France, 'qui est plus forte que jamais,' even under these circumstances, talks big, as usual. Any army in the field has ceased to exist, but they still have the Rochefort 'professeur des barricades' and 'la poitrine des patriotes invincibles.' Nevertheless, 'La République' made her appearance at headquarters yesterday in the person of M. Jules Favre."

The magnificent national rising of France, one of the noblest efforts ever made in history, is represented in these letters as the tyranny of ambitious demagogues coercing a weak and half-mad people. So said the Yorks and Coburgs in 1793, so Napoleon described the resistance of Spain, and so cynicism and prejudice will always reason.

"The terrorists drag every man, up to the age of forty-six, from house and farm, from home and family, to follow the flag. That such a mode of warfare is an atrocity to the country, and inflicting on it the deepest wounds, is the last thing that troubles them; their first object is to secure their own power in such a way that the nation dares not question its legality."

The resistance of Paris especially annoyed Moltke, and bathos could hardly fall below this:

"It is a great waste of ammunition, when we consider that firing one shot costs ninety-three thalers. As chance will have it, a shell hits sometimes, and we thus lose about a dozen men daily, besides others killed by chassepôts at from 1000 to 1500 paces."

The situation ere long changed; the German army, far too small for the purpose, and thrown forward without proper supports, was held in check by the beleaguered city, and was seriously endangered by the armed rising of France. The petty reverse of Coulmiers all but caused the siege to be raised; and had Chanzy been in the place of D'Aurelle, he probably would have advanced to the capital. But for the fall of Metz—largely due to the intrigues of Bazaine, on which Moltke had no right to count: the fortress ought to have held out some weeks longer, even on the marshal's miserable system of defence—the invaders would have been placed in the gravest peril at the close of November, 1870. The anxiety of Moltke was not concealed:—

"After Sedan and Metz it may have seemed to you in Berlin that all was over; but we have been having a very anxious time. The greater part of our forces are detained round Paris, and the obstinate endurance of Bazaine's army—though he is now proclaimed a traitor—hindered the earlier advance of fresh troops. Meanwhile the terrorism of the Provisional Government has contrived to work on all the good and bad qualities of the French nation, their patriotism and courage, their conceit and ignorance. Surrounded as we are by hostile bands of armed men, within the circle we have had to face desperate sorties and treachery and surprises from without. Now, when the whole French army has migrated, as prisoners, to Germany, there are more men under arms in France than at the beginning of the war."

The anticipations of Moltke, in a word, proved vain; his scoffs and gibes returned on himself. And, in truth, the heroic resistance of France was far more nearly successful than is generally believed.

Moltke was not versed in European politics; in his public life he was always a soldier. He contemplated the extraordinary drama of continental affairs since 1815 from the point of view of a Prussian noble, that is, of a member of a more military caste. Revolution and Democracy were his bêtes noires; and he thought that 1818 had brought the Deluge. He disliked Austria as the natural foe of Prussia; and if he had sympathy with the idea of German unity, he simply meant that Prussia should be supreme. He mixed freely in the high life of Poland, and felt a kind of interest in the sad fate of the nation; but he regarded the Poles as an inferior race, and told his mother she need not fear a Polish daughter-in-law. He could not understand, as we see from this passage, why Holland and Belgium could not be friends—a passage that Marlborough and Wellington would have smiled at:

"It has always been a puzzle to me what can have so embittered two nationalities like the Belgians and the Dutch that fifteen years of peace have failed to amalgamate them; for they have a common origin, and a country in common, and long shared the same cruel fate."

Alsace and Lorraine, we have little doubt, are an equal puzzle to German soldiers at this hour.

The great general was justly held in the highest honour during the later years of his life. He was sincerely attached to the Royal Family, especially to his aged sovereign; and he thus describes a scene at Court before the old Emperor's death:—

"The bride [Princess Irene], with the crown on her head and covered with crown jewels, looked charming. In the midst of all the splendour the Empress Augusta was brought in, in her wheel chair, all in black, without any kind of ornament. The tears came into my eyes as her grandchildren knelt before her to kiss her hand. Then the Emperor came in, his tall, noble figure unbowed, greeting the company with a kind smile. Only his eyes to me looked sunken, and his breathing was rapid and very painful. It is heart-breaking to see him struggling with inexhaustible patience and sweetness against his cruel fate; one foot on the throne and the other in the grave."

Moltke has left a deep mark on the history of his time; but he was hardly a man of real genius.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

France of To-day: A Survey, Comparative and Retrospective. By M. Betham Edwards, Officier de l'Instruction de France. Vol. I. (Percival.)

This work of Miss Betham-Edwards might almost form the complement, or pendant, to Mr. Augustus Hare's volumes—North-Eastern, South-Eastern, South-Western France. Mr. Hare writes chiefly for persons of artistic, architectural, and ecclesiastical tastes. His volumes are admirable guides for those who seek direction in such matters, and for the ordinary information of travellers. Miss Edwards scarcely touches this last subject; but she gives what neither Mr. Hare, nor any other writer with whom we are acquainted, gives—a survey of agricultural and industrial France. She aims at bringing before her readers what French peasant life and what French farming really are; and she describes, still more happily, we think, life in French country towns. She shows the wonderful progress made there in late years. But this useful work is marred by some faults. It is such a pity that Miss Edwards will spoil really good work by one-sided exaggeration. She calls her book "A Survey, Comparative and Retrospective," thus directing attention to its historical aspects; and it is here that she chiefly fails. She writes as if the course of property and of agriculture in France since 1789 had been one of uniform progress and prosperity. Yet how different are the facts! There have been times of depression as well as of advance, years of misery as well as of success. Again and again have we had pointed out to us in different parts of France properties formerly, and again now, valuable, which in the years from 1820 to 1830 were sold for a mere song; some that were even offered for nothing but to pay off the taxes that had accumulated on them. Men who in those years were forced to dispose of some of their estates knew not what to sell, and often sacrificed needlessly the most valuable of all. And the tales of the peasants and labourers corroborate this fully. It was not till past 1830, when emigration and migration began to ease the rural districts, that matters slowly improved, and not till the second Empire did the era of rapid prosperity fairly set in. Doubtless the advance of commercial and economic science, the revolution in industrial machinery by steam, and the improved modes of communication consequent thereon, had far more to do with the bringing about of this prosperity than the initiative of Napoleon III.; but it was from this date that the marked general increase of rural prosperity in France really began. It was so in the Sologne, in the Auvergne, in the Landes, throughout the Pyrenees. The changed condition of some of these places during the reign of Napoleon III. was very great. The war-tribute of the milliards, the surrender at Sedan, the capitulation of Paris, the loss of the provinces, will ever lie heavy on the man of December 2nd; but it is none the less true that it was owing to the material prosperity which his rule had given to France that, after all the ravages of war, she was so quickly able to pay off that enormous sum, to rise from her fall, and to continue her progress. It was the Second Empire that taught the French peasant to invest instead of to hoard his savings, and that sent back the English guineas of the old Peninsular War to the London mint. As truly as the Paris of to-day—except for the destructions of the Commune—dates from the Second Empire, so certainly the enhanced industrial and agricultural wealth of France began then. But even since the fall of the Empire the course of agriculture in France has been by no means uniformly prosperous. Miss Edwards mentions the losses by the phylloxera, the supplanting of madder by aniline and chemical dyes, the silkworm disease; but she omits the general agricultural depression which France has shared with other nations, and from which she is now emerging. That she did not suffer to so large an extent as her neighbours may be fairly put down to the credit of her systems of peasant farming; but the fall in the value of landed property was very great.

Miss Edwards brings out well the singular adaptability of the French peasant within certain limits, but she hardly notices his obstinate conservatism in others. No one watches the fluctuations of the market more keenly than he does; he always tries to grow the crop or crops, or to rear or fat the cattle, that will pay best at the moment. Since railways and other modern uses have rendered soft-wooded trees more valuable, he has almost ceased to plant the oak and the walnut for timber. Yet, with all this suppleness, nothing will persuade him to adopt an improved implement, or to give a fair trial to an improved breed of cattle. One rather unfortunate impression left by Miss Edwards's book arises from the fact that so many of her descriptions are taken only in summer. Is it always summer in France? A French village is often very pretty and picturesque then, when all the cattle are at pasture, when doors and windows are all open, manure heaps at their smallest, or almost invisible. But in winter, when the greater part of the cattle, and perhaps the sheep, are housed in the village, and have to be driven daily to water through the ill-paved lanes, when every window and door is closed, and flanked by ever increasing heaps of manure, when the widest and deepest sabet is not too large where-with to wade safely through the slush, the scene is very different. Men and women do not wear sables in France for nothing.

We are sorry to see Miss Edwards join in the unworthy cry (p. 148-9) against the practice of medicine by nuns, while praising it (p. 259) in the case of Protestant deaconesses. It is neither the nun nor the deaconess that the country doctor in France has still most to dread, but the sorcière, the hereditary bone-setter, the user of superstitious charms, and the quacks of all kinds that infest the country markets and fairs. And, again, it is going much too far to say that "a drunken woman in France may, indeed, be pronounced non-existent." There are spots and districts in France where the women drink more almost than the men. In one such locality, a devoted priest and missionary deemed it hopeless to reclaim the mothers; but he tried to save the children, and did it to a great extent. Is there not also some mistake in the wording, at least, of the following passage (p. 225)?

"The Cher contains many very large farms, which have been handed down from father to son, anteriorly to the Revolution. Some of them number five or six thousand hectares, occupations of a thousand frequently occurring."

Does not Miss Edwards here mean estates, instead of farms? Five or six thousand hectares are twelve to fifteen thousand acres. We hardly see how it is possible to treat this quantity of land as a single farm in an enclosed and cultivated country.

What, too, is the interpretation of this (p. 345)?

"Village communism existed here in full force down to the Revolution, and the last commune was not broken up until 1848."

Village communism in various forms was at the base of half the communes of France before the Revolution; it is not wholly extinct yet. The commune is still the unit of French administration.

This book certainly shows the great progress made by France in late years, intellectually as well as materially; but, as suggested on p. 317, the question remains, is not the gulf between the intellectual classes and the peasant labourer widening instead of narrowing? The two have now fewer tastes in common: the educated classes forsake the country; the agricultural labourer is thrown more exclusively among his own class, his life becomes duller and duller, relatively he is falling back in civilisation; the education given him is just such as to make him feel his shortcomings, not to supply them: to arouse desires, not to satisfy them; to give him distaste for his daily toil. All cannot migrate to towns, nor emigrate to foreign lands, and those who remain behind are in danger of becoming a separate and discontented caste. It has not yet attained this point, but there is serious cause for apprehension.

Miss Betham Edwards knows more of rural life in France than probably does any other Englishwoman. The present volume describes the South-West, the South, and the East of France. No one interested in agriculture and industry will regret taking it as a companion there. We look forward eagerly to the volume which will complete the work.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

England and Rome. By J. Dunbar Ingram, LL.D. (Longmans.)

THE alternative title of this work is "A History of the Relations between the Papacy and the English State and Church from the Norman Conquest to the Revolution of 1688." It is, in fact, the work of an advocate rather than of an historian, and is likely to attract attention from the support that it lends to certain views which are popular and fashionable at the present time rather than historical and likely to be permanent.

The author proceeds upon two assumptions, both of which are plausible, but neither is to be accepted without important qualification. The first is, in his own words, that "In almost every case, if not in all, when the word Spiritual occurs in our legislation, what we properly call Ecclesiastical is meant." This we take to be a very misleading statement. It is true in many cases, but not in all; and if it is to do the work to which the author puts it, it ought to be universally true. The only enumeration which the writer himself gives of the cases which came under the spiritual court—for the purpose of showing that many of them were purely temporal—is enough to prove this. Including, as it does, matrimonial and testamentary causes, with their close relations at once to property and to conscience, it suffices to suggest the true account of the matter, which is that ecclesiastical and spiritual administrations perpetually ran into one another, and that the two terms were used of old, as, indeed, they sometimes are to this day, interchangeably.

Dr. Ingram's second assumption is, in fact, that statutes are history, and not only history, but adequate and complete history. That they are an important element in history no one probably will deny; but the fact that so many of them have been mere dead letters shows that in themselves they are no more adequate evidence of the state of society which led to their being passed, than the existence of a physician's prescription is adequate evidence in every case of the nature of the disease from which his patient is suffering.

His reliance upon these two assumptions loads Dr. Ingram to conclusions which, however gratifying they may be to certain theorists of the present day, are quite inconsistent with the facts of history as known to us from other sources. Thus, he takes the anti-papal statutes of the Plantagenet kings as proving that the Royal Supremacy existed almost in the same degree before Henry VIII. as it did after him, in this following a number of ecclesiastical writers from Archbishop Bramhall to Dean Hook. Before accepting a statement so like a mere paradox, we might well ask, if it were so, how came it that the Plantagenet legislation produced so little effect, and that of Henry VIII. so much? But without stopping to answer this question, we may point out at once two considerations which suffice to negative the whole theory. The first of these is the language of Henry VIII.'s Act of Supremacy, which certainly transfers the whole spiritual authority of the Pope to the King as completely as words can do it, and was explained by Dr. Bancroft as having done so in so many words more than fifty years later. The second consideration is that Henry's contemporaries entertained no doubt on the subject whatever. Chapuys writing to his master, Charles V., when the Supremacy Act was passed and long before the excommunication by Paul III., says that "the clergy have been compelled, under pain of the said law of Praemunire, to accept the King as Head of the Church, which implies in effect as much as if they had declared him Pope of England."

Again, in reporting a visit of Henry's council to Queen Katherine, the same authority puts into the Queen's mouth the following words:

"He [the King] was sovereign in his realm as regards temporal jurisdiction, but as to the spiritual it was not pleasing to God either that the King should so intend or that she should consent: for the Pope was the only sovereign and vicar of God, who had power to judge of spiritual matters, of which marriage was one."

The vulgar saying that Henry "was a king with a pope in his belly" could not easily have arisen if he had been scrupulous, as Dr. Ingram suggests that he was, in not interfering with the strictly spiritual supremacy of the Pope.

A further contention of Dr. Ingram is that "Henry's part in the settlement of doctrine was of the smallest" (p. 188). This statement, if it means only that the great divergencies in doctrine which took place at the Reformation occurred mainly after Henry's death, is little else than a truism; but if it is intended to imply either that no such divergencies occurred in his lifetime or that in such as did occur his personal share was small, it is absolutely contrary to the facts. Thus, the first set of Articles were sent down to Convocation in his own handwriting, and were driven through that assembly under the immediate superintendence of the lay viceroy with a rapidity which is itself a proof that Convocation was no free agent in the matter; and the whole history of the Act of Six Articles proves the same thing, and shows, moreover, that the "King's will" was the efficient cause of the action of Parliament and still more of Convocation. When he passes from the reign of Henry VIII. to that of Elizabeth, we have to thank Dr. Ingram for a very complete vindication of the Queen from the charges of religious persecution which have of late years been so freely revived against her. He shows clearly from the mouths of Roman Catholic witnesses the entire truth of the assertion made both by Burleigh and by James I. that she "had never punished any Papist for religion." If persons hold that the assassination of heretic princes is lawful or that no faith need be kept with heretics, it is plain that such persons must be held to be dangerous and warned off. If they neglect the warning and enter the dominions of the heretic prince, their blood is on their own heads. In his account of this reign, moreover, as of Henry's, the author has entirely omitted to notice the important part played by the Queen personally, and by the State as distinct from the Church, in the most important and the most strictly spiritual transactions: that the foundation of the Elizabethan Reformation was laid by the Queen and Parliament without any regard to Convocation, and that to the Queen alone was it due that the ceremonies and habits were retained, and that the Lambeth Articles were not forced upon the Anglican Church. It is difficult to see how a book which omits such matters as these can be fairly called a history of the relations between the Papacy and the State and Church of England.

The noticeable feature of the latter part of the book dealing with the Stuart times, is the way in which the author shows up and denounces the policy of the Popes from Pius V. to Clement VIII. inclusive, and traces to them all the misfortunes of the Roman Church in England, and the establishment and perpetuation of the national hatred of "popery" which subsisted almost to our own day.

The book is one which will well repay perusal by persons who care to make in any sense a special study of the writer's subject; but as we have already shown, it is not to be trusted by those otherwise uninformed on the matters which it treats.

G. W. CHILD.

TWO ANCIENT DOCUMENTS FROM IRELAND.

Account Roll of the Priory of the Holy Trinity, Dublin, 1337-1346, with the Middle-English Moral Play, "The Pride of Life." From the original in the Public Record Office, Dublin. Edited, with Translation, Notes, and Introduction, by James Mills. (Dublin: Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland.)

Notice sur un recueil d'Exempla renfermé dans le MS. B. IV. 19 de la bibliothèque capitulaire de Durham. Par M. Paul Meyer. (Paris: Notices et Extraits. Tome xxxiv., 1^{re} partie.)

THE interesting accounts now printed by Mr. Mills were preserved, along with other early documents, by the Canons of Christ Church, Dublin—a house that escaped suppression in the sixteenth century. They were removed for safe custody a few years ago to the Irish Record Office, but have remained practically unknown till the present publication. They add yet another source for our knowledge of the internal economy of the old religious houses before the Reformation, and may usefully be compared not only with Bishop Swinfield's Household Expenses of the previous century (published by the Camden Society), but with the accounts of Finchale and Coldingham priories and others, printed by the Surtees Society, &c.

Here we get the seneschal's accounts for four different years, as well as those of the bailiff of Clonken, one of the manors from which produce found its way to the Priory of Holy Trinity. The various items of the Prior's household expenditure, as to his rooms, table appointments, clothing, the persons of his retinue, the guests entertained, the food they ate, and many more are set down in detail. The Prior or other officers of the convent went journeys at fixed times in spite of the bad roads, the horsemen being accompanied by a servant on foot to take charge of the horse, the distance travelled being about twenty miles a day; but messengers on foot at a penny a day seem to have accomplished a greater distance. The management of the home farms and the work and the workmen upon them also receive considerable illustration; and studied in the light of Walter de Henley, these accounts may yield interesting results. Wages and dues were often paid in kind; so also the compensation for a broken head, which even then had a healing power; but how odd it sounds: "To William Frankan, for healing his head which was broken when the cow-house fell, by command of the seneschal, 2 pecks [of grain]."

But old accounts sometimes shelter unexpected treasures. On the blank at the back of one of these Mr. Mills discovered that two hands, about a century later, had written an English poem, in four columns of short lines. This turned out to be a Morality of much interest, no other copy being known, which from its subject the editor has entitled "The Pride of Life." It consists of a Prologue and Play; not, however, perfect, as a considerable portion is evidently wanting at the end, where a skin has been lost. The whole that is preserved runs to 500 lines in four-line stanzas. There is no precise date found; but from the handwriting it is assigned to the first half of the fifteenth century, perhaps rather earlier than the "Castle of Perseverance," hitherto considered the earliest English Morality. That the play may have been composed within this period is also indicated by one allusion: Mirth is personified as a messenger (an office, it may be noted, specially rewarded in the Middle Ages), the King (Life) promises him for his services:

"þe castel of gailispre on þe hil
And be erldom of kente."

The first of these has not been identified, but of the second it is pointed out that "the earldom of Kent became extinct in 1407, and remained at the disposal of the Crown until 1462." The alliterative lines of the King's speech, and the complaint of the Bishop's prologue, which recalls poems by Lydgate and others in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries bemoaning the corruptions of the times, point to the same period. The personages of the allegory—Life, with his knights Strength and Health, the Bishop signifying Holy Church, and the Queen, Love—move with some dramatic life. That this interesting relic of rural English, mainly of the Southern dialect modified by the Midland, found its way to Ireland through ecclesiastic channels can only be surmised.

The second publication in our title lets us see a glimpse of Ireland in the thirteenth century through a valuable MS. now in Durham Cathedral library. Prof. P. Meyer has here unearthed another contribution to the early history of the Franciscans in these islands, in the shape of a collection of Exempla till now unknown, made by a friar belonging to the Minorite convent at Cork, where he exercised the office of reader. This man, whose name is lost, was born in England, probably near Arley, in Warwickshire. He appears to have recorded his anecdotes and tales between the years 1275 and 1279, as indicated by his references to known events and persons. He was a companion of Roger Bacon in Paris before 1267, and speaks of Bonaventura as a fellow scholar there. His stories, like those of Bozon, are of interest, not only for the incidental notices of contemporary life which they contain, but for the light they throw on the "methods which the popular preachers employed to act upon the mass of the faithful." This writer, besides gathering the stories, indicates here and there certain modifications to be made according to the audience, and a discretion in the use of well-known names.

M. Meyer has transcribed such of the Exempla as appear to be original, adding suggestive critical notes; especially has he taken pains to identify the place-names, of which a considerable number occur in England as well as in Ireland, an important point too often neglected. Several Irish officials, bishops, and other inhabitants of the green isle are commemorated in these tales, among whom the Minorite John of Kilkenny, warden of houses at Cork and Drogheda, appears to be hitherto unknown.

L. TOLMIN SMITH.

NEW NOVELS.

A Human Document. In 3 vols. By W. H. Mallock. (Chapman & Hall.)

The King's Favourite. In 2 vols. By H. A. Taylor. (Methuen.)

Jem Peterkin's Daughter. In 3 vols. By W. B. Churchward. (Sonnenschein.)

A King's Second Marriage. From the French of Ary Heilaw. (Elen, Remington & Co.)

For Lust of Gold. By Aaron Watson. (Walter Scott.)

A Question of Time. By Gertrude F. Atherton. (Gay & Bird.)

Van Bibber and Others. By Richard Harding Davis. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

I ADMIT that I am puzzled how to take Mr. Mallock's new book. In common with many who, from perusal of the prologue on its appearance some months ago in the Fortnightly, were conscious of a keen expectancy in the revelation of this human document, I looked also for a novel of psychological interest, and at the least for one of exceptional literary value. There has, I believe, been a good deal of discussion whether the extremely suggestive introductory chapter is to be accepted as a candid statement of facts. It really does not matter, since Mr. Mallock expressly affirms at p. 21 his full responsibility "for the method of narration and style"; in other words, he, and no one else, is the author of this book. Criticism, particularly criticism of fiction, has so few standards, and is so generally the expression of temperament rather than of trained and controlled conviction, that it nearly always savours of arrogance to say of any novel, having any claims to be critically considered at all, that it is a failure. One cannot bring forward Matthew Arnold's test for poetry, and endeavour to estimate a new work of fiction by ringing its metal, so to say, alongside the stamped ore of what has long been accepted as sterling and immutable. Mr. Mallock's book is the work of a man of letters of repute; but is one really any the better able to test the inadequacy of his style by citation of that, say, of Esmond, or of The Bride of Lammermoor, or of The Ordeal of Richard Feverel, or of The Master of Ballantrae? His novel professes to be a human document; but are we to discount his measure of realism by balancing it against the realism of Fielding, of Balzac, of Zola, of Dostoevsky, or, to come nearer, of Mr. George Gissing, Mrs. Margaret Woods, Lucas Malet, Mr. George Moore? Can we say that his construction is good or bad, because his capacity falls short of the constructive faculty of Thackeray or Dickens, Charles Reade or Wilkie Collins? To all objections Mr. Mallock could reply that a work of art takes no heed of conventions or comparisons. True; but what is a work of art, and is A Human Document worthy of the classification? This is a question that naturally cannot be gone into here. All that the present critic can say is that, so far as he is concerned, the above tests would be fatal to Mr. Mallock's work. It seems to him the most unconvincing realism that any uncompromising or tentative realist has put forward, and to be neither one human document, nor (as the preface indicates) two skilfully compounded human documents, but to be as remote from the realities of the life of the mind and the body as though written by any ordinary novelist desirous only of telling well a good tale. In style, again, it seems to him that the author of The New Republic has, in his latest book, been unfortunate. The writing is at times so careless, occasionally so slipshod, that one is tempted to believe he had no opportunity to revise his "copy," either in MS. or in type. For one thing, the word "only" is commonly misplaced—perhaps the most exasperating as well as one of the most frequent of minor errors in composition. There are even slips, or at least vulgarisms, of another kind—e.g., "It will not be a change in the direction of what is commonly called license," where "licence" is obviously the word intended. The very fact that there are many ably and even brilliantly written descriptive passages brings into relief the general lack of charm. Twenty delightful pages do not compensate for the many score that are devoid of grace, of delicacy, of any allurements. It is only fair to Mr. Mallock to admit that the fault does not lie wholly with the writer: the method of his fiction is to blame. Nothing can be so intolerably dull as the diary-record, if it have any continuous verisimilitude; and if it be too clever or too entertaining or too literary to impress one as unstudied and genuine, it inevitably and doubly fails to convince. Of course, this method can be used—as it often has been—with great effect, either when strictly adhered to throughout a narrative, or when used only partially and intermittently; but its employment is always dangerous, and is generally a heavy handicap on success. To do well with it, one must have an exceptional faculty for vicarious living: one must be able, in other words, not only to conceive divers characters, but to enact them, to identify oneself with each, as absolutely as though one were for the time being translated from one's actual self. This faculty Mr. Mallock does not demonstrate in A Human Document. The diary of Irma Schilizzi might, personalities aside, as well have been written by Grenville, and Grenville's by Mrs. Schilizzi: and both are at all times obviously the production of no other than Mr. Mallock, who himself is always better worth listening to than Mr. Bobby-Grenville-Mallock or Mrs. Schilizzi-

Mallock. It is with unfeigned gratitude we note that never once does Mr. Mallock "drop into poetry" with the deplorable results so painfully obvious in the instance of his too cultured "Bobby Grenville." On the other hand, A Human Document contains much that is notable; is in parts extremely clever; and is occasionally lit up by delightful or suggestive epigrams:

"To love intensely is to be always saying one's prayers." . . . "Such [absorbing, concentrated] love creates sins, just as a Scotch Sunday does. It turns a career into a kind of mental adultery." . . . "He admired generosity, refraining from it solely on account of its expense." . . . "Expectations are like lamps, which cost nothing to keep burning, and events are able only to blow out one at a time." . . . "I have often reflected that a man of imaginative temperament buys his moral furniture cheap." . . . "[Fictions are often] sponges soaked with truth."

Many such sayings light up the general dullness. The novel is simply the clumsily constructed story of a man and a married woman who are in love with each other, and of how they pay comparatively little heed to generally accepted conventions. Mrs. Schilizzi has a brute of a husband, and she loves Grenville with all her heart. They do not wait for fate to make things easier for them, though at the last Mr. Schilizzi does die in a convenient fashion; and, again, they do not wait till the conventional period of mourning has elapsed and allowed them to become man and wife in name as well as in fact. That is the skeleton of this human document. It might have been so wrought as to be profoundly convincing; as a matter of fact, it is simply a rather ordinary novel, and nothing more. One great flaw is the uselessness of Grenville's worse than Quixotic attempt to save Schilizzi's life by sucking the diphtheritic poison from the corrupt and syphilitic mass which passed as the human body of Paul Schilizzi. Absolutely no good was to be done, and evil to himself and others was almost certain to accrue; and his action, far from being praiseworthy, was criminally foolish. To conclude, A Human Document is worth reading, though, artistically, it is a failure. When the book was laid aside, one reader at least felt that he had parted neither with friends nor enemies, neither with pleasant nor unwelcome companions, but simply that he had not unreluctantly left the two shadows which Mr. Mallock had so industriously trailed throughout three goodly volumes.

Miss Una Taylor writes very intensely. The King's Favourite is a story of spiritual struggle and disaster. The sombre House of Waters might be called The House of Lost Causes, and Ursula, the Heroine Simona, Monk Tristram, Mad Peter, Lord Giles, and Prospero the King's Favourite, the personifications of those causes. The story is cast in the Cromwellian period and the first years of the Restoration, and is as striking a study of the religious sentiment of the time as any I have encountered. But the author takes herself a little too seriously. She is so persistently intense as to be sometimes wearisome, and she speaks throughout as one in a dream. There are many striking and even noble passages, and occasionally a rare dramatic power. It is difficult to say whether the diction be natural or calculated, but in any case it is not likely to please the majority of readers. It is to be regretted that an unrelieved monotony of style should so impair a really noteworthy book of its kind.

Jem Peterkin's Daughter is certainly a striking contrast to The King's Favourite. It is an excellent New Zealand romance, with much movement and many picturesque details, and ought to be appreciated by those readers who rejoice in fiction dealing with colonial life. The "daughter" in this instance is a girl of Maori blood. The verisimilitude of the story may be taken for granted, as the novel is from the pen of Mr. W. B. Churchward, who wrote My Consulate in Samoa, and a book that was particularly noticed in the ACADEMY, Black-birding in the South Pacific.

The novel, which is now published as A King's Second Marriage: or the Romance of a German Court, is an English version of Ary Ecilaw's much talked of roman d'occasion, Le Roi de Thessalie. Where so much that is good awaits translation, it seems a pity that this political romance should have been rendered into English. It can have little interest for the ordinary reader, who will not understand the allusions. Though closely founded upon fact, and though it introduces our own Royal Family in anything but a pleasant fashion, the book is dead in France and Germany, and it can have but a ghostly existence here. The translation is fairly good.

There is always room for a good story of adventure; and though Mr. Aaron Watson cannot cut out Mr. Haggard or Mr. Westall, he ought to win the suffrages of many boys (and perhaps not boys alone) by his stirring romance of the days of Sir Walter Raleigh. For Lust of Gold has the further advantage of some attractive illustrations.

The next two books on my list are each American, and both consist of reprints. Mrs. Atherton's Question of Time (a suggestive study of a union between a young man and a middle-aged woman) appeared, if I remember rightly, in Lippincott's. The first and longer story is interesting, but the shorter, "Mrs. Pendleton's Four-in-Hand," is much more amusing. As for Mr. Davis's new volume, there is nothing but praise to be given. He is one of the best of short-story writers, and there is not one of the tales in this delightful collection that is not worth reading. Mr. Davis has been fortunate enough to create a new type for us in Van Bibber. He must be careful not to overwork that most excellent of "dudes"; one such effort as the street-fight episode in "Eleanore Cayler" ought to suffice, in the direction of bodily prowess, for a long time.

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME AMERICAN BOOKS.

WE have received Katherine Prescott Wormeley's Memoir of Honoré de Balzac. (Boston: Roberts.) It is a volume towards which the lovers of the great novelist are likely to be well disposed, on account of the service which the writer has rendered in translating so many of the works of Balzac for the American public. And, indeed, as a popular introduction to those translations, the book will not be without its use. It is pleasantly and of course sympathetically written; but it contains little that is new to the critical student, and we are almost warranted in supposing that it might never have been undertaken had the writer known, when she was beginning her task, that Life by Mr. Frederick Wedmore (in the "Great Writers" Series), of which in a footnote she makes such particularly appreciative mention. Be that as it may, however, we are here face to face with a popular and somewhat rudimentary account of the leader of French fiction—an account in which too lavish use has been made, for English taste, of Mme. de Surville's memoir of her brother, whole pages of which are embodied in what for the time ceases to be Miss Wormeley's own narrative. Now Mme. de Surville's memoir, though welcome enough in its day, as a stopgap and a mémoire pour servir, was so distinctly written à l'usage des jeunes filles that it cannot possibly be made the basis of an adequate appreciation of the penetrating novelist whose early years alone does it record with anything approaching authority. The familiar letters too—contained in the Correspondence—and such well-known accounts as Théophile Gautier's, are drawn upon at needless length. Thus the book, though not actually large, has far too much padding. Its strong point, as against two or three French and American estimates of Balzac, consists in its reasonable conservatism; in its recognition of the spirituality that underlay all that to the limited intelligence of the sceptic seems materialist and, in the narrow sense, realistic in the writings of Balzac. Now Balzac was anything but a materialist. Nobody was ever less so. And, apart from the evidence of the general tendency of his work, he has himself told us that he wrote "by the light of an eternal truth," and that he perceived in Christianity "the principal element of social order." When Miss Wormeley further takes us into the mystic territory of Scraphita—which she considers she understands and can expound—we cannot quite follow her, though her expositions are not without interest by any means. To base the claims of Balzac upon the more mystic of his novels is at all events better than to base them, after the fashion of some of the duller of his critics, upon the fantastic and amazing tours de force of the Contes Drolatiques. These indeed are of obvious cleverness: they are remarkable inventions. But Balzac's reputation will really rest upon the finer imagination and the more poetic realism of the great stories in which he dealt with contemporary life, and, finally, it may be—to use a phrase which Mr. Wedmore has employed already—upon "the profundity of Balzac's soundings in humanity's ocean." Though it is impossible to speak with unqualified approval of the latest American contribution to the mass of literature that has grown up around this great writer, from Champfleury and Gautier to our own day, we can at least welcome Miss Wormeley's book as an effort in the right direction.

Walt Whitman, by William Clarke (Son-nenschein), is a well-written and thoughtful study of the famous "poet of democracy," written, as the author says, mainly "as an exposition," but in a spirit of sympathetic criticism—as every exposition should be. The author has made himself master of his subject, and as a consequence is self-possessed and dignified. Herein he differs from too many of the professing admirers of Walt Whitman who do not understand him, and think all that is required of them—and indeed all that is befitting when he is the topic—is to gush. Of course writers like Mr. Clarke do him, as well as themselves, more real justice; and they are useful in a way the gushing enthusiasts are not useful, in attracting and helping new comers to study and understand a teacher, by no means attractive at the outset or readily understood. According to Mr. Clarke, "the claim made for Whitman is, not that he is a great artist, for he is not, not even that he is a great poet, but that he has apprehended the needs of our time, has perceived that some restraining shackles must be cast off, and has led the way, as a strong valiant pioneer, to a new literature, which shall chant the deeds and faith of the modern man" (p. 75). Nevertheless, although neither a great artist nor a great poet, Mr. Clarke surmises that "his formlessness holds the germs of new forms," and the old rhymes will rather be used in the future for "mere vers de société than for great poetry," while it may be that Whitman's work affords in some degree "a hint of things to come." The fact remains that Whitman's style, or if Mr. Clarke prefers, Whitman's want of style, grows upon careful readers; and some have found, or thought they had found, form of a notably musical kind within the formlessness. Mr. Clarke cites lines and passages which he says "every rational person who knows what poetry is, and who is willing to concede the widest limits to poetic form, will rightly declare" are not poetry. Yet we confess that even in some of these passages, specially chosen to be scorned, we discern, or fancy we discern, melody and appropriateness which gives them a title to be called poetry, if Whitman's chants are admitted to be poetry at all. The "shocking lines" from the "Song of the Broad Axe," do not appear to us, in their own proper place, in the least shocking, but on the contrary, decidedly picturesque. Familiarity with Whitman's style may have blunted us to its defects, which indeed seemed at first very manifest; or, as we think, it may have amended our own defect of mental perception which prevented us from recognising the appropriateness of the description or image. That there is much that is clumsy in the form of Whitman's work, we believe; but certainly not as much as appears at first, or second, or third reading. In passing, we may note this happy definition of freedom: "It is not in the absence of restriction, but in the presence of opportunity, that freedom consists. Where there is the possibility of expansion for all, there is freedom" (pp. 87-88); and that Tennyson never "exclaimed" unrythmically "Give us 'the reward of going on and not to die'"; the word he used was "wages." For the rest, we commend the book for its general excellence; and, as it is the only work of the kind relating to Whitman which is at once able, interesting, brief, and cheap, it ought to be in demand.

In Beaver Cove and Elsewhere. By Matt. Grim. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.) Mr. Douglas has shown his usual good judgment in adding these stories of Georgia Life to his excellent "American Library." They form a suitable companion volume to the stories of New England life contributed by Miss Mary E. Wilkins, which, when they appeared, we welcomed and recommended to our readers. We can with equal heartiness welcome and recommend the present book.

The Philadelphia Magazines and their Contributors, 1741-1850. By Albert H. Smyth. (Philadelphia: Robert M. Lindsay.) A work of this description causes some painful reflections. Writers on passing subjects, in newspapers and magazines, must of course expect their work to be forgotten when the occasion for it is past. This is only natural; and if their work has served its purpose, it is not to be seriously regretted. A history like the present is, however, in a great measure the history of efforts which have failed even to serve their temporary purpose—efforts often of a very earnest and able description. Of lost and forgotten good work, much is interred in periodicals which survived only a few weeks or months, and whose readers were numbered by tens. What all this meant in the way of broken hopes, loss, and disappointment, we can only surmise. This is the tragical aspect of the subject. In other cases, efforts to found periodicals have been so absurd or so discreditable that their failure cannot excite pity. To this class, we should suppose, belonged The Lanchester, "boiled for people about six feet high by Simon Pure." This purported to be "a monthly satirical paper," and it made its first appearance in Philadelphia in 1815. The second number contained a libellous notice, in consequence of which the paper was discontinued a few months later. Mr. Smyth writes of magazines, but does not clearly define what he means by a magazine. The type of the monthly periodical was fixed by Edward Cave in 1731, he says; but clearly a magazine is something more and also something less than a "monthly periodical." Moreover, the monthly periodical of to-day is in certain essentials different from The Gentleman's Magazine of 1731. The Gentleman's was, to a considerable extent, a newspaper; and a large part of the remaining space was given to selections from the current literature of the day, for the purpose of serving the busy reader, in a manner which has lately come into vogue again. In these days a clear definition of the aims and uses of the magazine is much needed, for modern projectors of periodicals, weekly and monthly, have very confused notions on the subject. The function of the weekly periodical is essentially different from that of the monthly; and many of the failures of the present day, which future historians will have to record, are directly due to the incapacity of editors to understand this difference of function. Mr. Smyth's diligent researches have resulted in a book full of curious information, of interest beyond the limits of the city to which it directly relates.

God's Breath in Man and in Humane Society. By Thomas Lake Harris. (E. W. Allen.) Since we discussed, at some length, several of Mr. Harris's recent publications, this important work has come to hand. It treats of certain leading principles maintained by the Brotherhood of the New Life. A discussion of the questions it raises does not come within the scope of a literary journal; and we must, therefore, content ourselves with calling attention to the work, and advising all who are interested in the philosophical ideas of Mr. Harris to study it for themselves.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that the Life of Sir Henry Sumner Maine, upon which Sir M. E. Grant Duff is engaged, will be ready for publication early in the autumn season. Mr. Whitley Stokes has written the chapter dealing with Maine's legal work. The publisher is Mr. John Murray.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co. have in the press a volume of Speeches and Addresses by the late Archbishop Magee, edited by his son. It will be published in a style uniform with three volumes of his Sermons.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately a cheaper edition of Mr. Henry Jephson's book on The Platform, with a new preface.

MESSRS. W. BLACKWOOD & SONS announce, as in the press, The History of Philosophy in Europe, in three volumes, by Prof. Robert Flint, of Edinburgh.

THE centenary of Hew Ainslie—a Scottish poet who was born in 1792, and died in the United States in 1878—is to be commemorated by the publication of a complete edition of his works. These include A Pilgrimage to the Land of Burns (1820); Scottish Songs, Ballads, and Poems (New York, 1855); together with a few hitherto unpublished pieces. The volume will also contain a memoir and three portraits, and will be issued by Mr. Alexander Gardner, of Paisley.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication Nooks and Corners of Herefordshire, by Mr. H. Thornhill Timmins. The work will be published by subscription, and will be illustrated with about one hundred drawings by the author.

MR. A. WILSON VERITY has engaged to edit Gibbon's Autobiography for Messrs. Methuen's series of reprints of "Lives and Letters."

THE first large edition of Mr. Stevenson's new story, The Wrecker, which was published on Wednesday, has been already exhausted. A second edition is now in the press, and will be ready early next week.

MR. MACKENZIE BELL has written for the Christian Leader a poem with an historical basis.

At the annual meeting of the Royal Statistical Society, held on Tuesday, Mr. Charles Booth, author of Labour and Life of the People, was elected president for the ensuing session. At a dinner of the society, held the same evening, the Guy medal, recently founded in recognition of original statistical work, was also presented to Mr. Charles Booth.

At the annual meeting of the Swedenborg Society, held on June 21, Dr. Blyden, minister from the Liberian Republic, gave an address on "The Effect of the New Church Doctrines upon the African Race." It was stated that translations of Heaven and Hell into Dutch and also into Hindi were in preparation.

A RECENT meeting of the Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques was entirely devoted to the reading of an elaborate paper upon "The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer," by M. Henri Michel. He insisted upon the resemblance between Mr. Spencer's fundamental principles and the metaphysical doctrines of the eighteenth century; and he argued that Mr. Spencer had abandoned some of his earlier practical conclusions in the face of the growing pressure of the tyranny of the majority. Incidentally, we learn that Social Statics has never been translated into French.

AUCTIONS fixed for the beginning of July cannot be postponed even for a general election. During the early days of next week, the firm of Messrs. Sotheby will be selling, in different rooms of their mart, two collections of exceptional interest. One of these is the second part of the autograph letters of that prodigy of collectors, the late Sir Thomas Philipps, of Middle Hill and Cheltenham. One lot alone consists of several thousand letters of statesmen, peers, generals, lawyers, gentry, &c., bound up in sixty-six volumes. Then there is a valuable collection of Americana, including letters by Lawrence Washington, the elder brother of George; by Seaborn Cotton (1678); and by one Nathan Barnum (1790), who relates how he had himself inoculated with smallpox when in prison, in order to procure the postponement of his trial. We have only space to mention, further, the Greville Correspondence, composed of letters addressed to a member of the Duke of York's household in the last decade of the last century, together with a number of "private and confidential" letters written by the Duke of Kent and his secretary about the time of the birth of the Queen. The other collection is that of a number of choice books, chiefly French, made still more notable by their bindings and by the names of their former owners. We may specially mention, among other Aldines, a very large copy of the Poliphili Hypnerotomachia (1499), with the woodcuts from the designs of Carpaccio; Montaigne's Essays of 1588; the Elzevir Molière—both bound by Trautz-Bauzonnet; the first edition of Gulliver's Travels (1726), and the second edition of Robinson Crusoe (1719).

UNDER the title of Lrs Inédits, M. Léon Genonceaux has undertaken to publish for the first time various letters and other documents illustrating the literary history of France, which are to be found in the British Museum and other collections of MSS. in this country. The mode of publication is in livraisons of sixteen pages, with facsimiles, at the price of 1 fr. Subscribers should address themselves to M. Genonceaux, 30, Store-street, Bedford-square. The first livraison opens with an exceedingly interesting letter from Diderot to John Wilkes, whom he addresses as "très honoré Gracchus," and concludes thus:

"Je vous embrasse, vous, de tout mon cœur, quoique vous soyez un grand vaurien; mais je ne sais comment cela s'est fait. Toute ma vie, j'ai eu et j'aurai un foible pour les vauriens, tels que vous s'entend. Votre très humble, très obéissant serviteur, et un peu vaurien aussi, Diderot."

Then follow some military instructions of Napoleon to Berthier, dated at Mayence in the year XIII; these are illustrated with a not very familiar portrait, after a drawing made by J. Phillips, R.A., during the Peace of Amiens. There is also given, in facsimile, a page of Rousseau's memoranda of his daily expenses in England in 1766.

AFTER an interval of some years, we have received a further instalment of Dr. Albert Cohn's Shakspeare Bibliography, reprinted from Vol. XXVII. of the Shakspeare Jahrbuch, dealing with the publications of 1889, 1890, and 1891. It is needless now to explain the method, or to praise the carefulness, of this established undertaking. The English and American works, which come first, fill not less than forty-six pages, as compared with twenty-three for Germany, and only three for France and one for Italy. Under Croatia we find mention of translations of several plays, some of which are not printed, but only MSS. for stage purposes; and under India a list of the vernacular translations recently presented by the Government to the Shakspeare Memorial Library at Stratford-on-Avon.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

WE have received the programme of the Dublin tercentenary festival, which occupies the whole of next week, including a cricket match with Cambridge and an athletic contest, in which also representatives of Cambridge will take part. There will be two processions, which guests and delegates are expected to attend in academic robes or official costume. The honorary degrees are to be conferred on Wednesday.

It is proposed to found a magazine which shall be in some sense common to the three universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin; and a meeting to discuss details will be held at Dublin next week.

THE prologue for the dramatic performance to be given in the Gaiety Theatre on Thursday evening, has been written by Mr. Edwin Hamilton. It was hoped that Mr. Irving would recite it, but he will be compelled to leave Ireland before that date.

THE revised Tercentenary Directory was published on Saturday. It contains full directions for visitors, and lists of the guests and hosts arranged alphabetically.

MR. J. S. SEATON and Mr. W. A. Copinger have been elected to the two professorships of Law at Owens College, Manchester.

THE annual gathering of old pupils of Queen's College, Harley-street, is to take place on Saturday, July 2, at 3.30 p.m., when Canon Browne has undertaken to deliver an address.

THE June number of the Eagle prints the English poem on "Raphael," to which the chancellor's medal was awarded at Cambridge this year. Then follows the MS. letter-book of a member of St. John's College in the reign of Charles II., enriched with notes by G. C. S. M. Under the title of "Bibliotheca loquitur," we have an account of four years occupied in examining and arranging the books of the college library. The most interesting discovery was a copy of that rarest of Shelleys—The Defence of Atheism (Worthing, 1814)—bound up with a volume of religious tracts, but now given a place of honour by itself, "in stately morocco." Finally, we have some further anecdotes about the early career of Prof. J. C. Adams.

WE have received Part I. of the Archæologia Oxoniensis (London: Frowde), the object of which is to treat prehistoric, oriental, classical, and mediæval antiquities and architectures, with special attention to topics of local interest. Mr. Oman, with the help of a coloured plan and an elaborate index, maintains, against Mr. Parker, that there is ample evidence for the occupation of Oxford in Romano-British times; and another article assigns to the same period the "pit-dwellings" found on the site of the New Schools. Mr. F. Haverfield examines the MS. materials for Romano-British epigraphy to be found in the Bodleian, dealing chiefly with a collection of inscriptions, almost entirely from printed sources, made by Samuel Woodford circa 1658. Mr. J. Park Harrison returns to the subject of the pre-Norman clearstory window and other early work lately discovered in Christ Church Cathedral. Finally, we have a useful account of recent finds and of the proceedings of archaeological societies.

MR. CORNISH, of Manchester, has published a useful pamphlet entitled British Universities, consisting of summary descriptions written in view of the Welsh University discussion, with a general introduction by Prof. W. Rhys Roberts, of Bangor.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE, New York, at its recent commencement, conferred the degree of Doctor of Letters upon Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman, who is, we believe, not a graduate of any university.

IT has been resolved to publish a Harvard Graduates' Magazine, the aim of which is—

"To furnish a field wherein educational and other topics concerning the university can be discussed; to supply graduates all over the country with complete and authentic reports of the current life of the university; and so to bind more closely the relations between the alumni and Harvard."

THE Sargent prize of one hundred dollars (£40) at Harvard, for the best metrical translation of an ode of Horace, has for the second year in succession been awarded to a woman, a pupil at the Harvard Annex, who bears the appropriate name of Miss Herrick.

A SAD case is reported from Yale, in which a freshman died from the result of "hazing," which seems to mean some brutal mode of initiation into a secret society.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TUSCAN SKIES.

"Dolce color dell' oriental zaffiro."

The gross Etruscan felt within these skies
Only a fiery finger that pursued
His body till the glutton soul renewed
Its pastime in the painted tomb.—Such lies
Their augurs spake to Heaven. Otherwise
The seer of Florence saw, whose spirit, thewed
By trial, soared unto the heights and viewed
The azure light that fell from Paradise.
For, lo! Italia, risen from the Hell
Of heathen gods and temples, dead and bare,
Awoke and mounted to the ardent air;
By Roman virtue purged and taught to dwell
Aloof from earth, she read with chastened eye
A holier religion in her sky.

MONTE OLIVETO.

Amid an ashen silence that forbade
The world, dwelt lordly hermits, who had fought, Hated, and toiled too long. God's peace they sought
Where you white steep is yet with olive clad,
As though of Athens' fallen queen they had
One gift, who knew her not, but only taught
Their souls the love that lived in pious thought
And pictured mystery and vigil sad.
Knowledge withal she offered, such as shone
Of yore from Hellas. But the light was dim,
And pale the glory of the Parthenon.
They only knew, with saints and seraphim,
To wonder on the Mount and wisely hymn
Of man with God and God with man made one.

GEORGE C. W. WARR.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE sixth number of L'Art et l'Idée (for June) contains, besides the index and the wrapper—a grey green gold wrapper lustrous to see—of the volume and the usual miscellaneous information for the month, two articles by the editor, each of which has interest. The first is devoted to the actual Hôtel Drouot (of which M. Uzanne has hard things to say), and its ancestors, the Hôtel Bullion and others. It is abundantly illustrated, the chief full-page illustrations being engraved by M. Courboin, after M. Vidal, and two of them etchings. The second is on Charles Monselet, and contains not a few personal reminiscences, besides a whole series of those portraits which leave one the choice of two theories: the first, that they represent not one person but about a dozen; the second, that no portrait of anybody is possible, and that it would be simpler and better to make up our minds to the fact. But these articles, in themselves and for their illustrations, are very well worth having.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

WE quote the following from the report of the Library Syndicate for 1891:

"Among the presents made to the Library are two books printed by Caxton: The Chronicles of England (second edition), and Lydgate's Life of Our Lady, both presented by Mr. Samuel Sandars. No addition had previously been made to the collection of Caxton's since Bishop Moore's books were presented in 1715. Mrs. Edward Conybeare has provided for the case in which Codex Bezae is usually exhibited a handsome covering embroidered with appropriate designs. A large collection of fragments of Hebrew MSS. from Egypt were presented by the Rev. Greville J. Chester, and have been partly examined and classified by Mr. Schechter.

"The purchases made during the year include a collection of six manuscripts from the Paris library of Brent Leigh: (1) Vita et passio S. Willelmi Norwicensis auctore Thoma Mone-mutensi; Isaac abb. Stellensis de officio missae;

Johannes prior de Forda, vita Wilfrici anach. Haselberie; Walteri (?) abbreviatio vitae Godrici de Finchale. Twelfth century. (2) Boethius de consolatio philosophiae (imperfect), thirteenth century, bound with Accentuatorius and Marilianus Capella (also imperfect). (3) Lives of saints in English verse (St. Michael—St. Patrick); on vellum. Fifteenth century. (4) Petrus de Vincis, on paper. 4^{to}. A.D. 1348. (5) Alphabetical catalogue of such saints as the collector hath taken notice of, to have graced our Island of Great Britain, &c.; on paper. Seventeenth century. Imperfect. A very large collection. (6) A small devotional book (north country) containing among other things Richard Rolle's devout meditations of the Passion of Christ: on vellum. Fifteenth century.

"Among other manuscripts purchased are (1) Terentius. A handsome Italian MS. on vellum; fifteenth century, early. (2) A Franciscan Gradual; Italian MS. on vellum; fourteenth century. (3) Latin Bible, in various hands, on vellum; thirteenth (?) century. (4) Old Testament in Arabic (Joshua—Kings; Ruth, Esther, Judith, Tobit); Anno 1071 Martyrum (A.D. 1355)—Bought out of a special sum given by Prof. Robertson Smith for the purchase of oriental manuscripts. (5) New Testament in Greek; MS. on vellum; eleventh-twelfth century; and seven other Greek manuscripts.

"Several valuable additions have been made to the collection of books printed in the fifteenth century. Among them may be mentioned (1) Latin Bible (Cologne: N. Götz, 1480. 2 vols. 8^{vo}). (2) Gemmula vocabulorum (Hertogenbosch: G. Leempt, 1488. 4^{vo})—A perfect copy, in the original binding. (3) Sinte Rochus leven (Hasselt: P. Barmiento. 4^{vo}). CA. 1403. Formerly in the collection of Dr. C. Inglis. (4) Speculum stultorum (Leipzig: C. Kacheloven. 4^{vo})—This edition (Hain *16,217) is ascribed in catalogues to J. Koelhoff, &c., but wrongly.

"Mention may also be made of The Imitation of Christ (8^{vo} circa 1530)—W. Herbert's copy, described at p. 322 of his Typographical Antiquities, under Thomas Godfrey, though in a note, apparently added after going to press, he attributes it to R. Redman as printer, and mentions it again at p. 402 among the books printed by Redman."

We also quote the following report from the Librarian, of later date, specially describing the Sandars bequest:

"Last year Mr. Sandars presented to the library two books printed by Caxton. One of them was the second edition of the Chronicles of England, which, though only dated two years later than the first edition, shows numerous traces of careful revision in language, spelling, &c. He has now given a copy (formerly belonging to W. Herbert, the bibliographer) of the very rare edition printed at Antwerp by G. Leen in 1493. The text of this edition does not exhibit the peculiar readings of Caxton's second edition. The Chronicle printed at St. Albans (about 1485) is not less rare; indeed, only one perfect copy is known to exist. Lyndwood's Provinciale printed at Westminster in 1496 by Wynkyn de Worde, and the Manipulus Curatorum, printed by Pynson about 1498, are two choice specimens of books of a small size, of which very few were printed in England so early. The collection of books printed in Holland and Belgium receives some remarkable accessions. These are—the first book printed at Haarlem with a date (1483), of which no copy is certainly known to exist except this, formerly in the Eusebius collection; and, as an appropriate pendant, one of the rarest of the "Costeriana," the Facetiae Morales of Laurentius Valla, printed in type which is not found in any other book; the first book printed at Schiedam (1498), the Vita Lydwinae, illustrated with remarkable and beautiful woodcuts; and, finally, a Cistercian Breviary printed by R. Paffroet, at Deventer, about 1490, the only known copy, and the only known book printed on vellum by Paffroet. Indeed, with the exception of the Donatuses and Doctrinales, books printed on vellum in the Low Countries are almost unknown. A single leaf (on vellum) of the Mainz Bible of 1462, a Mainz Pognostication of 1495, and a very interesting specimen of French local typography, Les Etablissements du Duc de Bretagne (octavo, Lantreguet, 1485) complete the list."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ALBERT, F. R. Die Geschichte der Freiheit in Deutschland bis Luther. 1. Th. Göttersloh. Berlin: Mann. 2 M. 80 Pf.
Aus dem Goethehause. Briefe F. W. Schlegels an die Familie Frommann in Jena 1801-1821. Hrg. v. F. Heilmüller. Stuttgart: Cotta. 6 M.
FARRICI, C. V. Filippo Brunelleschi. Sein Leben u. seine Werke. Stuttgart: Cotta. 20 M.
GILLHOFF, J. Das mecklenburgische Völkerrecht. Gesam-melt, eingeleitet u. in den Varianten hrg. P. Rohm. Weidemann. 2 M.
MAYALLON-BOUYET, Viollette-Duc et Alphonse au siège de Paris. Paris: May & Motteux. 5 fr.
NOLHAC, P. de. Pétrarque et l'Humanisme, d'après un essai de restitution de sa bibliothèque. Paris: Bouillon. 16 fr.
SCHMID, K. A. Geschichte der Erziehung vom Anfang an bis auf unsere Zeit. 2. Bd. 1. Abthg. Stuttgart: Cotta. 20 M.
SEWERS, M. Studien über die Zukunft des Geldwesens. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 2 M.
WOLF, J. System der Sozialpolitik. 1. Bd. Stuttgart: Cotta. 12 M.
ZOLA, Emile. La Débâcle. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY.

- BAUMGARTEN, H. Geschichte Karls V. 3. Bd. Stuttgart: Cotta. 7 M.
BENJAMIN, C. De Justiniani Imperatoris notatae quaestiones militares. Berlin: Weber. 1 M.
DELLARD, Mémoires militaires du Général Baron, sur les Guerres de la République et de l'Empire. Paris: Lab. illustrée. 7 fr. 50 c.
ESTIENNE, A. Le Parlement de Franche-Comté de son installation à Besançon à sa suppression (1674-1790). Paris: Picard. 15 fr.
FRÖHLICH, F. De rebus inde a Caesare occiso usque ad senatum Liberalibus habitum gestis. Berlin: Weber. 1 M. 20 Pf.
GESCHICHTSBLÄTTER, hantische. 1890-91. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 4 M. 80 Pf.
GESCHICHTSCHRIBER, die preussischen, d. 16. u. 17. Jahrh. 8. Lfg. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M. 60 Pf.
LAVOIX, H. Catalogue des monnaies musulmanes d'Espagne et d'Afrique de la Bibliothèque Nationale. Paris: Maisonneuve. 25 fr.
PISTON, J. Der Chronist Wigand Gerstenberg. Kassel: Brunnemann. 2 M.
WETZEL, E. Das Zollrecht der deutschen Könige von den ältesten Zeiten bis zur goldenen Bulle. 1. Th. Das königl. Zollrecht bis zum Ausgang d. 12. Jahrh. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- RANKE, J. Beiträge zur physischen Anthropologie der Bayern. 2. Bd. München: Bassermann. 12 M.
RRIES, W., u. A. STREHL. Reisen in Süd-Amerika. Geologische Studien in der Republik Colombia. I. Petrographie. 1. Die vulkan. Gesteine, bearb. v. R. Kieh. Berlin: Asher. 20 M.
WALLENSTEIN, L. G. Einleitung in das Studium der modernen Elektrizitätslehre. Stuttgart: Enke. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BIRT, Th. Commentariolus Catullianus II. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 80 Pf.
GOLDSTAU, M., u. H. WENNER. E. toso-venerianischer Bestiarius hrg. u. erläutert. Halle: Niemeyer. 12 M.
GRAP, E. Pindars logooische Strophen. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M.
HAUFMANN, H. Beiträge zur Syntax der hebräischen Sprache. 2. Stück. Wittenberg: Wunschmann. 2 M.
RINCK, O. Geschichte der römischen Dichtung. III. Dichtung der Kaiserherrschaft. Stuttgart: Cotta. 9 M.
SIECKE, E. Die Liebesgeschichte d. Himnells. Untersuchungen zur indogerman. Sagenkunde. Strassburg: Trübner. 3 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CRANMER'S DRAFT-SERVICES FOR THE PRAYER BOOK.

Pusey House, Oxford: June 23, 1892.

Those who have studied the development of the Divine Service in the Prayer Book from the older services, with the aid of Cranmer's draft-services printed by Father F. A. Gasquet and Mr. Bishop in their Edward VI. and the Book of Common Prayer, will be interested to hear of the discovery of other documents of a similar character.

A MS. Psalter Collectarius and Hymnal in the Bodleian Library (MS. Laud, Latin 95) seems to have been used under Cranmer's direction, and possibly also by Cranmer himself, in working out the new schemes. The Psalter itself has marginal annotations dealing with the arrangement of the Psalter, which is that of Cardinal Quignonez with the addition of Antiphons. The Collectarius has similar notes dealing with the Collects and Preces, in which the arrangement ultimately adopted in the Prayer Book is foreshadowed. Also prefixed to the book is an outline of the Services of the first week in Advent with the same arrangement of the Psalter, and a full scheme of lessons to be read at Mattins, with alternative Hymns and Antiphons for various seasons. The whole follows very closely the Breviary of Cardinal Quignonez, and seems to be earlier than the documents previously printed.

Further investigation is necessary to clear up individual points, but of the general nature and importance of the MS. there can be little doubt.

WALTER HOWARD FRERE.

ON THE NEWTON STONE.

London: June 25, 1892.

To-day's ACADEMY contains a letter from the Earl of Southesk which, mutatis mutandis, might have been written by Sir Arthur Wardour to Mr. Oldbuck immediately after their famous quarrel about the Piets. In this letter, Lord Southesk says that Bishop Graves's paper on the Newton Stone, which I quoted in the ACADEMY for June 4, 1892, appears in the same volume of Proceedings as his own paper on the same subject, that "therefore [sic!]" Dr. Stokes must have seen both," and that "Dr. Stokes (inadvertently, of course) has appropriated without acknowledgment" Lord Southesk's transliteration of the penultimate word. . . as well as many of the letters in the word preceding it."

I beg to assure Lord Southesk, firstly, that I quoted the bishop's paper from a Separatabdruck which he kindly sent me about five years ago; secondly, that I never saw the volume referred to until after my letter of May 16, 1892, had appeared in the ACADEMY; thirdly, that I did not then, or at any other time, examine Lord Southesk's transliterations, though (or rather because) I had read his wonderful translations of the inscriptions in a copy lent me by Prof. Rhys; fourthly, that I now for the first time learn that Lord Southesk was lucky enough to decipher the penultimate word (maggi) of the second inscription, and to read correctly four out of the nine letters of the preceding word; and, lastly, that in case I write again on the subject, I shall give him due credit for these achievements.

I trust that his lordship will not be offended if I say that there is nothing else in his letter that calls for a reply. But I wish to add, with reference to the Ogham, that Prof. Rhys, in a letter dated June 15, 1892, declares that the first word is iddar, and that in the copy which he sent me one of the five strokes of the i was accidentally omitted. With reference to the other inscription, the flisi of Cassa-flisi, which I deduced from the root spilid, may be cognate with the Irish slissiu, sliss "a chip," "splinter." For initial s in Irish from sp compare seig, "spleen," cognate with O. Slav. slezena, Gr. σπλήν, σπλάγχνον, Skr. plīhan, and Bret. felch, from spely*. So Ir. seir "heel," = Welsh ffer "ankle," is cognate with Gr. σφυρὴν, and Ir. sennim "I play the harp," with Skr. spaul "zucken." WHITLEY STOKES.

P.S.—In my letter in the ACADEMY for June 18, 1892, p. 593, col. 1, lines 22 and 25, for CC read C.

Aberdeen: June 27, 1892.

Being occupied with other work, I did not observe till to-day the discussion in the ACADEMY about the Newton stone.

I shall take an early opportunity of re-examining the stone, and shall carefully verify Lord Southesk's criticisms of the readings given in Dr. Stokes's letter, for many of which I am responsible. In one case Lord Southesk is right; and Dr. Stokes has been led astray by a clerical error in Prof. Rhys's copy. The first Ogam (according to Prof. Rhys's and my own opinion), or the second (according to Lord Southesk's), is, as the latter rightly says, certainly i not r. That was the reading in the copy which Prof. Rhys sent me to verify on the stone, and which seemed to me perfectly clear.

While I should like to re-examine with all possible care the readings which Lord Southesk refuses to accept, before I defend finally my own readings, I may add that I had with me at Newton his pamphlet (lent me for the purpose by Prof. Rhys), with his admirable photographs and careful copies, and that in the few cases where I felt bound to differ from his readings, I did so only after careful scrutiny.

W. M. RAMSAY.

Kinnaird Castle, Breechin, N.B.: June 27, 1892.

Allow me to correct an important misprint in my letter of June 25 (ACADEMY, p. 615, col. 1). In the sentence printed "Aiddai Qnnn." Bishop Graves concurs in this as far as regards the last digit, for "as regards" read "up to." That is to say, the concurrence extends to nine letters out of ten, not to one out of ten. In same column, for "involves the removal of five scores," read "involves a removal in five scores"; and for "Gaedbil" read "Gaedhil." In col. 1, p. 616, for "Aedh, Gil-cochy" read "Aedh, or Gil-cochy."

The accompanying tabular arrangement of transliterations may be useful for reference. Each author's summary has been compared with his whole text, and important alternatives are noted. My own first paper is in Proc. Soc. Ant. Scot., vol. xvii.; my second and the Bishop of Limerick's are in vol. xx. of the same:

OGHAMS.

Southesk, 1882.

Aiddai Qnean Förrerr I^{bh}na . Iosi^c.
P i

Southesk, 1885.

Aiddai Qnnn Förrerr Iphua . Iosii.

Bishop Graves, 1886.

Aiddai Q(=Cu)nnning Orrkonn Ip[. . .]rosii.

Dr. Stokes, 1892.

. Eddar Aenⁿ Vorrenni PuiH Iosir.
i

MAIN INSCRIPTION A.

Southesk, 1882.

Aittai Furⁿr-ingn S^hol O Uose.
y y

Southesk, 1885.

Aittai Furⁿr-ingn S^hol Uose.
y y

Bishop Graves, 1886.

Ædda E^rurtri(h)tⁿ Atolou Oc(?)
F r

Dr. Stokes, 1892.

Edde Ecnun-Uaur Huolocoso.

MAIN INSCRIPTION B.

Southesk, 1882.

Urchn Elisi Mazdi Logoⁿ-Patr.
y

Southesk, 1885.

Urchn Elisi Ma^{qq}i Logoⁿ-P at^r.
gg y n n

Bishop Graves, 1886.

Urkneyri [.] r[.]si Logotriotr.

Dr. Stokes, 1892.

Cassafliis Maggi Lopou . aita.

SOUTHESK.

"UNE PRIÈRE JUDÉO-PERSANE."

Oxford: June 27, 1892.

Dr. J. M. Mitchell's letter in the ACADEMY for June 25 raises several interesting points. I venture, however, to ask him to reconsider his criticisms. It is indeed not impossible (though coincidences are often misleading) that the three benedictions in the Jewish morning prayer (second century A.D.), which M. Darmesteter regards as the original of the parallel Parsi formula, are in fact derived, as Dr. Mitchell suggests, from a traditional Greek saying. But how can this create a presumption that the formula in the Namāzi Ormazd was also derived from a Greek source? Dr. Mitchell really appears to think that it does. The closing words of his letter are—"From whom did the Jews derive them? Not improbably from the Greeks. From whom did the Parsis derive them? Quite possibly, as Prof. Darmesteter thinks, from the Jews; but no less possibly—must we not say?—from the Greeks." Now I am well aware that there are traces of Hellenic influence upon the later Zoroastrianism (in the Minokhired); the learned Dastur Jamasp Asana in vain attempts to prove that Hellenism borrowed from Zoroastrianism (see Casartelli, Philosophy of the Magdazanian Religion under the Sassanians). But surely, granting the existence of a large quasi-official Judeo-Persian syncretism in the fifth century A.D., it is very difficult not to believe that the parallel liturgical formulae are historically connected. Has Dr. Mitchell read M. Darmesteter's articles in the Revue des études juives (Jan. 1889, pp. 1-15, and July 1889, pp. 41-56)?

Dr. Mitchell further says that "M. Darmesteter's conclusions, if generally acquiesced in, will powerfully affect the criticism of the future." What does this mean? The conclusions referred to have exclusive reference to the period of the Sassanid kings, when circumstances were specially favourable to the closest religious intercourse between Judaism and Zoroastrianism. Dr. Mitchell does not seem to be justified in supposing that the question of "possible Zoroastrian influences upon the religion of Israel" (I venture to prefer my own statement of my position to Dr. Mitchell's) is in the least affected by M. Darmesteter's conclusions, which indeed I have expressly adopted elsewhere (Expositor, Jan. 1892, pp. 79, 80).

But I thoroughly agree with Dr. Mitchell's implied opinions that the question of the relation between Judaism and Zoroastrianism (or Mazda-worship) is a complicated one. Possibly it cannot be definitely settled, at any rate as regards the pre-Christian period. Dr. Mitchell (whom I only know from an apologetic "Present Day Tract" on Zoroastrianism, published by the R. T. S.) will, I think, more readily grant a (possible) moderate Zoroastrian influence on late Old Testament writers than a Greek philosophical one, though his views on the "higher criticism" (which I assume to be unfavourable to that criticism) may make the concession inoperative. And I may express gratitude to him for his help in drawing the attention of students to a group of subjects connected with the history of religion as interesting as they are difficult. The influence both of Hellenic and of Zoroastrian ideas on Jewish and in general on Oriental religion well deserves a more thorough investigation. If we could only put aside "apologetic" prejudices, we might make more rapid progress!

T. K. CHEYNE.

WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY.

Arm; tage, Ashley-road, Bowden, Manchester: June 13, 1892.

An incidental mention in the ACADEMY of a paper read at the American Philological Society by my correspondent, Prof. W. S. Scarborough, induces me to ask for a little space about him and his work.

He was born at Macon, Georgia, in 1852, and graduated at Oberlin College, one of the earliest of the higher schools for the education of the negro people. After declining an offer to go to Africa as a missionary, he received in 1877 his present appointment. He is now professor of ancient languages and literature in Wilberforce University, and has written an essay towards a theory of interpretation of the "Birds" of Aristophanes, and is at work on an edition of Andocides. He takes a keen interest in the welfare of the negro race to which he belongs, and has contributed to various American periodicals in advocacy of a policy of justice. That the negro has a claim upon the equity and generosity both of America and England, no one who knows the history of the race is likely to doubt.

The Wilberforce University is appealing for additional funds. It is an institution for the education of "coloured" youth, and was named after that great champion for the freedom of the negro, William Wilberforce. It is situated at Xenia, Ohio, and since its foundation in 1863 nearly 3000 students have passed through it. It has collegiate, theological, scientific, law, medical, and normal departments. It is chartered by the Ohio Legislature, and has had a grant in aid from that source. In answer to the question, "Why should this school be helped?" the committee answer:

"Because it had been and is proving a successful attempt of the coloured people in efforts at self help in the lines of education, general intelligence, and usefulness. Because education is to be the chief means of solving the race problem in this Republic. The founders of Wilberforce saw in 1863 that, to make secure the results of the war and the benefits of the acts of reconstruction, there must be the second emancipation—that of the mind from the weakening and degrading bondage of ignorance. Because this is a southern school on northern soil, to which the southern parents send their children to be trained in different surroundings and under better conditions. Because they are in this manner striving to arise above that condition for which they are not responsible. Hence upon these grounds we earnestly appeal to all friends of education for their sympathy, their prayers, and for their aid in this good work."

The negro problem is the most difficult that the American people have to face, and it is clear that education will be the most powerful factor in its peaceful and successful solution. Wilberforce University now asks for £3000. Any British friends who are disposed to help may send their contributions either direct to Dr. Scarborough or to the undersigned.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

AN ANCIENT FORM OF SUBMISSION.

Howrah, Bengal: June 5, 1892.

In the ACADEMY for May 14, Mr. Whitley Stokes draws attention to the custom of grovelling on the ground and eating grass in token of submission. Examples are given from Kashmir and from Spain.

Further examples will be found in the Indian Antiquary for September 1891 (pp. 338 and 339).

It is mentioned in a Sanskrit inscription on the Delhi Siwālik Pillar, dated 1164 A.D. So also, when Babar conquered Afghanistan:—

"When the Afghans saw the impossibility of resisting, they presented themselves holding grass between their teeth, as much as to say 'I am your ox.'"

Compare also Major Temple's Legends of the Panjāb, ii. 101, 103, i. 37.

GEORGE A. GRIERSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, July 4, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "The Physical Geography and Resources of North-West British Guiana," by Mr. Everard F. In Thurn, illustrated by the Dioptric Lantern.
WEDNESDAY, July 6, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Antiquities at Buda-Pest," by Prof. B. Lewis; "Prehistoric Bawa versus Bickles," by Dr. Robert Munro.
THURSDAY, July 7, 5 p.m. British School at Athens: Annual Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Isthmian Odes of Pindar. Edited, with Introduction and Commentary, by J. B. Bury. (Macmillans.)

MR. BURY, in the Introduction prefixed to this second instalment of his Pindaric labours (p. xv.), pronounces the Isthmian Odes, "on the whole, perhaps not so striking as the Nemean, Olympian, or Pythian groups, though certainly not less artistic in form than they." With this opinion, I think, most readers of Pindar will concur, except that they will omit his cautious "perhaps." True though it be (p. xvi.) that the Fourth and Seventh are inspired with the pride, which to a Theban was also a pang, of Grecian victory over Persia—καλὸν γὰρ ἔν' Ἀρεὶ μαρτυρῆσαι κεν πόλις Ἀθῆναις ἄρθω-θεῖσα ναῦταις

ἐν παλαιοῖσι Σαλαμῖς Διὸς ὕμῳ ἀναρίθμωτον ἀνδρῶν χαλαζέοντι φόνῳ—

yet even these poems are hardly in the highest sense memorable, though they touch on most memorable scenes. I cannot doubt for a moment that Mr. Bury exercises a wise self-denial in following Pindar upwards, through Nemean and Isthmians to Olympians and Pythians, rather than by the downward course.

Noting that no less than eleven of Pindar's Odes commemorate Aeginetan victors—of which eleven, six are Nemean and three Isthmian—Mr. Bury has wisely inserted in his Introduction a sketch of Aegina (pp. xvi.-xxiii.) in her historical, social, and artistic aspects. This sketch is, I think, one of the best things in a book where much is good. I am not aware of any other description of Aegina where the glory of the Aeacid sailors is so fully realised, and their rivalry with Athens so vigorously presented. Unfortunately "Aegina, like Sparta, was never productive of literary talent" (p. xxii.): carens rate sacro, she had to depend on "her sister Theba;" and, were it not for Pindar's Odes, her naval and artistic glories would be almost entirely eclipsed by those of Athens. And yet, as Mr. Bury shows, "the sculptors of Aegina were in high repute throughout all the Greek world." Working out the allusions of Pindar, Mr. Bury gives an eloquent and attractive, if somewhat fanciful, sketch of the life and art of Aegina (pp. xxxi.-xxxiii.), its buildings and "local colouring." If he is right in thinking the last of these Aeginetan odes to be Pindar's latest surviving poem, there accrues to it a pathetic interest, a light as of sunset. Yet he is surely right in saying that this group of odes gives us no adequate idea of the "variety of Pindar's powers as a teller of tales."

A prominent feature of Mr. Bury's edition of the Nemean Odes was, as most readers will remember, his reliance on the "theory of verbal responses" or echoes, clues to the arguments of Pindar's hymns. The ingenuity with which Mr. Bury detected and unravelled these clues has not apparently convinced his critics: some think that they do not exist, others that a few are discoverable, but that Mr. Bury finds them everywhere and "carries the method to extremes." Mr. Bury admits the probability of his having taken some fortuitous coincidences for intentional signals, yet on the whole maintains and develops his theory—arguing that these echoes, like the names written under the figures on Greek vases, were "a device intended to assist the study of the odes and as a technical aid to memory, yet not supposed to be there." The interesting but difficult argument by which he maintains this thesis is to be found in the Preface, pp. x.-xi. I call it difficult because the circumstances which, after the poet's death, would make these echoes serviceable in the interpretation of the poem, are not, I think, clearly explained. In judging of the likelihood of such a cryptogram, we are driven to try to divine an intelligible motive for its insertion. Mr. Bury, I believe, divines one—but the passage on p. x., in which he adumbrates the motive, appears to me to be vague. Perhaps I may here say, both with reference to this point and another—Mr. Bury's disposition to see the joyful glory of Pindar's poetry more clearly than its pathos and sadness—that I am sorry to have seemed to Mr. Bury to be "taking him to task" (p. xi). My previous words are not before me now; very likely they were ill-chosen, but they were meant to be "sceptical" or critical, not admonitory—one is fain to abhor the didactic manner, if possible.

In the commentary on these Isthmian Odes, there is very much to admire. The unpardonable sin, in commenting on a poet, is to treat him as if he were a prose writer, and to forget his tone, his imaginative standpoint. Of this fault I have not seen a single instance in Mr. Bury's notes. If he is sometimes over-ingenious—see, e.g., Isthm. i., l. 63, note, where he finds in the form σεσωπαμένον a wish on Pindar's part to "emphasise an etymology of the name of the victor's father Ἀσωπόδορος"—he never forgets, either in note or translation, that the poet must be treated poetically, and that the horizon, the atmosphere, so to speak, of his words, must be sought for, if we would grasp his meaning. There is a danger, no doubt, of subtlety and of over-explaining things that bear their truest and simplest meanings on their face; but, compared with the arid prosiness of many commentaries, Mr. Bury's work breathes of the Muses themselves. As one specimen, where many might be given, I would instance the note on Isthm. iv., l. 22, p. 26. In the celebrated passage, Isthm. ii., ll. 6-8, ἡ Μοῖσα γὰρ οὐ φιλοκερδὴς . . . ἀοιδά, thus rendered by Mr. Bury, "For in those days the Muse was not yet mercenary nor hireling, nor did Terpsichora traffic in sweet honey-voiced warbling songs with silvered faces," it is hard to accept his view that "there is nothing bitter or even depreciatory in the phrase ἀργυροβάται πρόσωπα." If there is not, the phrase certainly does not suit the context, which contrasts the old days of unpaid singing—

"The constant service of the antique world, Where service sweat for duty, not for meed"— with the more venal modern practice, to the disadvantage of the latter. Mr. Bury repudiates, though with hesitation (see App. C., p. 166), Mr. Paton's curious idea that there is a reference to a still existing Greek custom, by which the musician, standing in the middle of the dancers, sticks the silver coins, which he receives for his services, on to his face, "in order to attract further contributions." But he struggles, not quite successfully I think, with this difficulty—Where songs are compared to maidens, and at the same time depreciated for being "tinged with silver"—i.e., venal—is it possible to apply the epithet, "tinged with silver," to the maidens, in the purely complimentary sense of bright and fair?

Sometimes, though not often, Mr. Bury's notes lean to indecision, as e.g., in the note on Isthm. iv., l. xi., κρίνεται δ' ἀλλὰ διὰ δαίμονας ἀνδρῶν, certainly a hard phrase, on which one would like a clearer opinion—I do not mean a dogmatic decision—from Mr. Bury. On the other hand, he occasionally discards old views for new with too much facility: e.g., in Isthm. i., ll. 67-8, εἰ δέ τις ἐνδον ρέμει πλοῦτον κρυφαῖον, ἄλλοισι δ' ἐμπύπων γελᾷ, κ.τ.λ.

he rejects the ordinary interpretation—that the selfish hoarder insults and derides other and better men—on the ground that ἐμπύπω by itself, if used for "attack," implies physical violence, and especially the impact of disease (as in Thucyd. ii. 49, λὺγέ τοις πλείοσιν ἐνέπιπτε κενή), and would take it simply as—"laughs when he lights on men of another sort." It seems to me that a word like ἐμπύπων, even if it be ordinarily used for physical attack, passes by an easy transition to the attack of derivative words by being coupled with γελᾷ, while in Mr. Bury's rendering the word has almost no point whatever; all men, whether they hoard or not, surely "come across" other men: it is a mere superfluity to mention it. Perhaps also, at the end of the same note, the double sense ascribed to τελέων is somewhat far-fetched.

But so far am I from presenting these flaws, if flaws they are, as typical of Mr. Bury's work, that I think them the rare exceptions to its general merit. The annotation is perhaps too copious; but I have not found one note that is not interesting, nor one translation that is not poetic and forcible. Though he strives to match himself with Pindar, as interpreter if not as rival, I trust that the wax may not melt from his wings, nor he himself sink into the sea, before he has given us his commentary on the Olympian and Pythian Odes.

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Ἰππη" = "WATER."

Indian Institute, Oxford: June 8, 1892.

On comparing the equation ἀσπίς : ἀσπίς : ἄσπις : ἄσπις with ἀσπίς : ἀσπίς : ἀσπίς (ACADEMY, November 7, 1891) it would be difficult to urge, in the face of the first equation, that such a form as Ἰππη cannot be the complementary Greek form in the latter. But the difficulty of showing that Ἰππη corresponds to aqua in the same way as ἵππος does to equus is evident. I cannot find a single instance in which this word occurs in what may be termed a "free" state; and the same may be said of the Skt. āśvī and the Iran. aspi. Hence there is no means of fixing with the least degree of certainty the identity of Ἰππη and aqua, beyond that of indirect evidence afforded by analogy.

I propose to offer two instances. Firstly, the geographical name Μελανίππιον is thus defined by Stephanus Byzantinus "ποταμὸς Παμφυλίας." Berkel in his commentary says: "Apagē illud ποταμὸς, quod in omnibus libris conspiciatur, et reponē τόπος. Non enim fuit in Pamphylia hujusmodi nominis fluvius." Now, as a matter of fact, there was a river Μέλας in Pamphylia, and this may very well have been in the mind of Stephanus when he wrote those words. Μελανίππιον in form, however, points conclusively to the name of a town rather than to that of a river, as it seems also to have suggested to Berkel himself. The name of a river would rather be Μελανίππη, as will be seen below. If, then, Stephanus has confounded Μελανίππιον (or rather Μελανίππη) with Μέλας, we may conclude that Μελανίππη means "Black-water."

I will now attempt to show by another instance that Μελανίππη may be a legitimate form of the name of a river. One of the old names of Thyatira in Lydia, Pliny tells us, was Euhippa, "Intus et Thyatira alluitur Lyeo, Pelopia aliquando et Euhippa cognominata (Plin. v. 31). Now, the etymology of Lycus, Λυκος, is evident, the root λυκ- being akin to Skt. ruc ("to shine"), and the name means the "clear or limpid" river; and, since Euhippa stood on its banks, it no doubt took its name from that of the river (cf. Thame, town and river). Further, the first part of the name Euhippa is the Greek Εὐ- (Skt. su-, Iran. hu-), and means "good." Again, the name Χοάρις (Herod. v. 49) is clearly the Greek form of the Iranian hu-aspi*, which means the river of "good water"; and, if -hippa corresponds to -aspi, then Euhippa would also mean the river of "good water," "the clear stream," and in fact would be identical in meaning with Lycus. If Ἰππη does mean "water," Μελανίππιον would mean "Blackwatertown," and would correspond exactly to the name of a town in co. Armagh (Ireland). It is possible that Μέλας and Μελανίππιον were interchangeable names for the same river. The connexion of Ἰππη with "water" is also seen in the name of one of the springs in Helicon, Ἀγανίππη, meaning perhaps the "great spring." At an early period a confusion between Ἰππη ("water") and ἵππος ("horse") must have arisen, as Poseidon is said to have created the horse (ἵππος) by striking it out of a rock, pointing probably to the discovery of water (Ἰππη) by the same means. These suggestions, among others, may tend to confirm the above theory of the etymology of Ἰππη.

E. SIBREE.

NOTE ON PLAUTUS, "PERSA," l. 3.40.

"Nihil parasitus est, cui argentum domideste."

So B., save that it has nihil. C.D. have argentum domidē (see Schoell).

The reading of this much disputed verse seems clearly

"Nihil parasitus est cui argentum dómi Midaest."

"A parasite is a poor creature, if he has the wealth of Midas." A similar corruption occurs in Catullus, long since corrected by Voss.

N. L.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MANY of the friends and admirers of the late H. W. Bates—author of The Naturalist on the Amazons, and for twenty-seven years secretary to the Royal Geographical Society—have expressed a strong desire to manifest, in a substantial manner, their personal regard for his character. With a view to carry this out, an account has been opened with Messrs. Cocks, Biddulph & Co., in order that a fund may be raised to be presented to his widow, as a suitable memorial to their late friend. Subscriptions may be sent to Mr. S. W. Silver, 3, York-gate, Regent's-park.

WE have but recently received the Journal of the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society for June, 1891 (No. xxiii.), the contents of which are almost entirely concerned with natural history. Mr. H. N. Ridley contributes a list, filling thirty pages, of the grasses and sedges (Gramineae and Cyperaceae) of the Malay Peninsula. The same writer gives an account of a day spent at Christmas Island—a remote islet in the Indian Ocean, occupied by an Englishman, and lately annexed to the Straits Settlements—adding a list of the fauna and flora, and also a bibliography. Dr. A. Keith prints some curious notes on the anatomy of Malayan apes, based upon the dissection of a considerable number of examples of different species. He finds no evidence that they suffer from enlargement of the spleen, as do 80 per cent. of the natives in the same region (the Bangtaphan province of Siam). Finally, we may notice a catalogue of the Chinese and Tamil names of streets in Singapore. It is interesting to learn that Singapore has a Balestier-road, called after Joseph Balestier, a former consul for the United States, who died circa 1818.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE have just received the new number of Hermathena: A series of papers on literature, science, and philosophy, by members of Trinity College, Dublin, which is now published only once a year (London: Longmans). A feature that we have before remarked upon, is here very conspicuous. Apart from a few original papers, to be mentioned below, the number consists entirely of reviews of the books of Oxford men. And—in view of the honorary degrees that have anticipated the forthcoming tercentenary—it is pleasing to add that the reviews are, without exception, enthusiastically favourable. Of Mr. A. C. Clark's collations from the Harleian MS. of Cicero's 2682, in the "Anecdota Oxoniensia," it is said: "This is a treatise which will mark an epoch in the criticism of Cicero. It is as fine a piece of work as we have ever seen"; of Prof. Peterson's edition of the Tenth Book of Quintilian: "This work . . . ranks with the finest specimens of the scholarship of the day . . . it exhibits great originality, learning, and completeness; of Mr. Furneaux's Annals: "His work may fairly be called the most complete and scholarly edition of Tacitus that has ever issued from any Press"; and so on. Among original articles, the most important are those dealing with early Christian documents. Provost Salmon, discussing at length the newly discovered Commentary of Hippolytus upon Daniel, comes to the conclusion that, instead of being one of his earlier works, it was his latest, not finished until A.D. 235, and possibly even published posthumously. The Rev. J. Quarry continues his Critical Notes on the Clementine Homilies and the Epistles prefixed to them; and the Rev. Dr. T. K. Abbott contributes bibliographical information about several MSS. and printed books in the University Library. Finally, Prof. A. Palmer has collected and reconsidered his emendations on Herondas (most of which first appeared in the ACADEMY), in the light of the various editions that have been published, though we regret to see that he does not speak confidently of bringing out an edition of his own, which he had at one time promised. Our readers may be interested in Prof. Palmer's estimate of Herondas as a writer:—

"He has, it seems to me, been very much underrated. Although he has not the charm and grace of Theocritus, he possesses very great and uncommon merit of his own. There is a certain quiet reserve in all his pieces, a calm classicality which never palls upon the reader. His pieces grow in favour the oftener they are read. In dramatic power he is at least equal to Theocritus. His Mimes are so many genre pictures, in which the subjects are chosen from the commonest scenes of everyday life, but painted with dexterous touch and in striking colours. His characters are all individual. The staid Mandris, the Penelope of the Mimes; the shameless Battarus, with his coarse jests and reckless self-humiliation; that really noble picture of the women in the temple of Aesculapius, which contains some of the simplest and most dignified lines in Greek literature; the furious, jealous, changeable Bitinia; those lewd, gossiping queans, Coritto and Metro; the chattering, chaffering, bald-headed shoemaker—these are portraits which, once surveyed, live distinctly in the mind. Herondas is the Teniers of Greek literature."

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Wednesday, June 15.)

DR. C. THEODORE WILLIAMS, president, in the chair.—Mr. F. C. Bayard read a paper on "English Climatology." This is a discussion of the results of the climatological observations made at the society's stations, and printed in the Meteorological Record for the ten years, 1881-1890. The instruments at these stations have all been verified, and are exposed under similar conditions, the thermometers being mounted in a Stevenson screen with their bulbs four feet above the ground. The stations are regularly inspected and the instruments tested by the assistant secretary. The stations now number about eighty, but there were only fifty-two which had complete results for the ten years in question. The author has discussed the results from these stations, and given the monthly and yearly means of temperature, humidity, cloud, and rainfall. His general conclusions are: (1) With respect to mean temperature, the sea coast stations are warm in winter and cool in summer, while the inland stations are cold in winter and hot in summer. (2) At all stations the maximum temperature occurs in July or August, and the minimum in December or January. (3) Relative humidity is lowest at the sea coast stations and highest at the inland ones. (4) The south-western district seems the most cloudy in winter, spring, and autumn, and the southern district the least cloudy in the summer months, and the sea coast stations are, as a rule, less cloudy than the inland ones. (5) Rainfall is smallest in April and, as a rule, greatest in November, and it increases from east to west.—Mr. W. Ellis read a paper on "The Mean Temperature of the Air on each Day of the Year at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, on the Average of the last Fifty Years." The values given in this paper are derived from eye observations from 1841 to 1848, and from the photographic records from 1849 to 1890. The mean annual temperature is 49.5. The lowest winter temperature, 37.2, occurs on January 12, and the highest summer temperature, 63.8, on July 15. The average temperature of the year is reached in spring on May 2nd, and in autumn on October 18. The interval during which the temperature is above the average is 169 days, the interval during which it is below the average being 196 days.

HELLENIC SOCIETY.—(Annual Meeting, Monday, June 20.)

PROF. JENN in the chair.—The proceedings began with the reading of the report by the secretary (Mr. Macmillan). The report, after an account of the large collections of photographs for the purpose of giving assistance to lecturers on Greek archaeology which had been made by Mr. W. J. Stillman, Mr. J. L. Myres, Mr. Walter Leaf, and others, stated that the school at Athens had continued its excavations at Megalopolis, and that a full report upon the theatre, with careful plans prepared by Mr. R. W. Schultz, would be published in the course of the present year. The treasurer's accounts showed ordinary receipts during the year of £976, as against £898 during the financial year 1890-1. The total ordinary expenditure had been £767, as against £598. The financial year, which began with a balance at the bankers of £254 12s., closed with an effective balance in favour of the society of £239. Since the last annual meeting, sixty-four new members had been elected. On the other hand, by death or resignation, the society had lost thirty-three, showing a net increase of thirty-one. The present total of members (including twenty honorary members) is 721. The report concluded by urging upon all members the constant duty of bringing new recruits into the ranks.—The chairman expressed the regret which all members would feel at the loss during the last year of two vice-presidents of the society—Sir William Gregory and Prof. Freeman. He was glad to say that the great work on which Prof. Freeman was engaged at the time of his death was in a much more advanced stage than had been hoped. It would be found that Prof. Freeman had raised another enduring monument and claim to the gratitude of all scholars, and especially of Hellenic scholars. There never was a great historian who in the department of Greek and Roman literature was more conscientious. He had hoped that Dr. Waldstein would have been among them to give an account of his discoveries at Argos, where he had been excavating the site of the second temple of Hera, which succeeded the temple which was burnt down in 429 B.C. There was no doubt that Dr. Waldstein had found sculptures of the highest interest. Among them were three heads in the best style of the fifth century, one of which at least Dr. Waldstein was disposed to ascribe to Polyclitus. He asked Mr. Penrose to give them some of the results of his recent labours.—Mr. Penrose said that he had seen Dr. Waldstein's discoveries, of which the quality far surpassed the quantity. The head ascribed to Polyclitus was of extreme beauty. With respect to his own work, his researches, which were confined to the orientation of temples, had been based very much on Mr. Lockyer's labours with respect to the Egyptian temples. In Egypt the temples were orientated with a view to their bearing on stars, and a like object was served in the early Greek temples. He described the temples at Rhamnus to Themis and Nemesis, especially in connexion with their orientation. The importance of this question would be realised when it was remembered that, in the days before the introduction of clepsydræ or water clocks, the sun and the most important constellations were the most accurate timekeepers available. He had been able to examine nearly forty temples in the course of his journeys.—Mr. Theodore Bent gave a short account of his explorations in South Africa, tendering an apology for the introduction of a subject so foreign to the objects of the Hellenic Society. He had come to the conclusion that the people who raised the buildings of which he had examined the ruins were of Semitic race. He had found many indications of gold mining, and there were points of resemblance between objects found in South Africa and others found in Cyprus and in our own country at Falmouth.

FINE ART.

INDIAN ART AT THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

SUMMING up the character of the people of Hindustan, in a bold, comprehensive way which some modern authors also affect, the Emperor Babar said that they had no genius, no mechanical invention, no skill or knowledge in design.

It would be difficult to determine precisely how far the exhibition of Indian art work in metals at the Imperial Institute bears out this assertion. The glowing lustre of enamel from Jaipur, splendidly exemplified in the Prince of Wales's atar-dan and the Countess of Mayo's cup, the grace of form and wealth of decoration displayed in the gold and silver work of Kashmir and Lucknow, the beautifully mounted weapons from Agra and Delhi, the delicate filigree of Cuttack, the damascenes and niello work of the Punjab, the copper ware of Tanjore, the brass chiselled and chased at Benares or hammered by the craftsmen of Upper India—specimens of every variety of metal work are here, which evince an artistic feeling and a skill in expression of a very high order.

But there are two considerations to be taken into account before we can hope to reach definite conclusions as to the value and significance of Indian art. Endless imitation and mechanical reproduction, it has been said, with never a new impulse, is not art, however artistic the first origins; and much of the art here exemplified lacks the vital quality of intelligent progress. There is dexterity and often exquisite taste, infinite patience, and always, in the best workmanship, a true perception of the principles of decorative art, which can adapt the forms of flower and fruit, in symbolic shape, for the ornament either of household utensils, or implements of worship and sacrifice, weapons of war, or the luxuries of wealth and power, with an unerring sense of the fitness of things. But how much of it represents an art that is sterilised and dead? how much, again, was the forced labour of bondsmen? When a grandee, says François Bernier, required the services of an artisan, he sent to the bazaar for one, and compelled him to work; and the fellow was fortunate if he was not beaten as well as underpaid. As likely as not, this is how the beautiful silver-gilt vase, said by the best judges to be the gem of the present collection, was painfully wrought. Its date is about the time of Bernier's visit to the court of the Great Moghul, when he reported that it was impossible the arts should flourish in India "as they flourish in our happier France." Here is the official description of this masterpiece:—

"In the midst of exquisite conventional flowers in slight relief, the artist has delineated birds and animals in the most truly artistic manner; the pyramidal shape and the handle are both in the best taste."

Not that this particular chef d'œuvre (it stands in case 12 of the second room) can be taken as a fair specimen of Indian art. Indeed, it points directly to the second of the two considerations mentioned, for it bears obvious traces of foreign influence. Foreign influence has affected, if it has not mainly inspired, Indian art from the earliest ages. Purely indigenous art, it may be, can be seen in the simple, elemental jewellery worn by wild hill tribes and jungle savages; but almost everywhere, and in everything but the rudest ornaments, the decoration or the shape, if not both, has been introduced from outside. One race of conquerors after another has brought in new ideas; trade by land and sea has continually set new fashions from a remote antiquity to the present time. Egypt, Assyria, and Greece on the one side, China and Central Asia on the other, have taught the Indian artist so much, and he has learnt so quickly, that the inquirer soon begins to think Indians never invented anything. Yet until the historians can come to some reasonable agreement as to the origins of the various races of India, it is surely unprofitable to speculate over-much on the early history of Indian art. Only the other day a theory was propounded, and received the imprimatur of the Royal Asiatic Society, according to which the Rajputs, of the Solar and Lunar race, instead of being Aryans, or even Scythians, are a Dravidian people who came from Assyria. The early history of India, as told by Mr. J. F. Hewitt, would indeed explain many things that seem remarkable in the arts of India; but it is no more than a theory, and we are treading on dangerous ground.

Unlike the more elaborate collection of Indian art in the South Kensington Museum, the present exhibition has not been arranged and classified on any systematic plan; nor has any special object been aimed at, it would seem, beyond showing numerous examples of Indian workmanship, most of which are interesting or instructive in some way or other. The handbook compiled by Surgeon Lieutenant-Colonel Hendley will tell visitors what they should be most careful to look at, and will provide them with much solid information concerning the various handicrafts here illustrated; while by noting which tickets are marked by one, two, or three red stars, they will know how to distribute their admiration. In the Royal room will be seen the many precious works of art which have been lent by the Queen and the Prince of Wales, and the Dukes of Edinburgh and Connaught, together with others collected by different viceroys and governors. There are hookahs which were studded with gems for Lord Clive; swords with hilts of subtlest jewellery that belonged to Tipu Sultan; caskets made to contain addresses in which enlightened natives were wont to overwhelm the Marquis of Ripon with their gratitude for the boon of local self-government. To single out the choicest treasures in this room would be only to repeat what has been said before by such a competent critic as Sir George Birdwood, who has described the Prince of Wales's Indian presents in his work on The Industrial Arts of India. Many of the Queen's eastern treasures, however, have never been exhibited till now, and the collections lent by the Dukes of Edinburgh and Connaught will also be new to the connoisseur. The Duke of Connaught's shield of carved rhinoceros hide, with enamelled margin, is a wonderful piece of work. Yet while there is much to admire in the room, there is also something to censure. More than one expensive piece of gold or silversmith's work presented to the late Governor of Bombay—notably a casket supported by three figures of Indian women—only shows execrable taste. It is curious, too, that Lord Reay should have sent for exhibition pieces of gold brocade in which aniline dyes have been used.

Of the other rooms, that devoted to Sir Edward Durand's collection of brass work from Nepal is the most noteworthy; containing, as it does, not only an immense number of articles illustrating the peculiar form of Hinduism found in this secluded hill state, but many curious specimens also of Tibetan workmanship. Here and in the adjoining room will be found most of the implements used in Buddhist ceremonial, drums and trumpets, bells and thunderbolts, the triangular nail required in exorcism, vases for holy water, and, I think, the mirror over which the holy water is poured. In room No 2 are some magnificent pieces of Burmese silver ware; and what is still more uncommon, specimens of Shan art. But the things most worth studying both here and in the other rooms are the examples of Indian art before it was degraded by the vandalism of Anglo-Indians and English travellers. One need only compare such things as Sir George Birdwood's copper lotahs, Dr. Thornton's rose-water bottle of Lucknow silver-work, the Cutch silver-ware lent by Sir Trevor Lawrence, Sir Owen Burne's Benares brasses, or Mr. Seymour King's tea-service of Kashmir enamel, with the beer-tumblers, milk-jugs, inkstands, toddy-kettles, and even dish-covers made to order, to realise the mischief that has been done by the ignorant patronage of Europeans, who saw nothing incongruous in having the vulgar shapes of western hardware decorated with eastern ornament.

In the Jaipur room are exhibited the first fruits of a bold but promising experiment. Much has been done, in different parts of India, to stimulate and encourage and even to revive the ancient artistic handicrafts, which, whence-soever borrowed, have become the heritage of the people; but nowhere has such a degree of success been attained as in the Native State of Jaipur. Here, for some years, Dr. Hendley has acted as a kind of unofficial minister of the fine arts; and both the past and present Maharajas have been liberal and munificent patrons. A School of Art has been founded, a museum started, and artisans inheriting the skill of forefathers who wrought for the contemporaries of Akbar and Shah Jehan, have been supplied with models and designs of approved excellence. All the exhibits in this room are of modern workmanship, and may be bought at Jaipur, or ordered through agents in England to-day; but the shapes and the decorations mostly represent Indian art in its prime. There are urns in repoussé work copied from pictures in Akbar's own illuminated translation of the Mahabharata, which the Mulla of Badaun, to his great disgust, was ordered to make for him. There are salvers with arabesque patterns taken from the old tombs near Delhi, nobly-wrought shields displaying the sun-god and the signs of the zodiac, the sacrificial vessels of polished brass used by the Jains, as well as vases from Isfahan, coffee pots from Bokhara, and tea-pots from Thibet. It may be hoped that, if the effort illustrated in this collection be continued, and wisely directed, a fresh impetus will be given to the artistic handicraft of Jaipur; and in any case a visit to this and other rooms in the exhibition can hardly fail to impress even a novice with some conception of what is excellent in Indian art, and with a dislike of what is vulgar in ignorant adaptations.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: June 28, 1892.

In replying, on May 21, to Mr. Petrie's letter of May 14, I found that he had limited his defence to four points,* though many more were raised in my article in the Classical Review. And now, in replying to his letter of June 25, I find that he is limiting his defence to three points. He says nothing more about the Aqanasha and Achaeans.

One of these three points, the dating of the Kahun pottery, was practically given up on May 14. Mr. Petrie said then that he had "always particularly stated [the question] to be debatable." In reply, I quoted a statement of his from Illahun, p. 9: "the evidence unmistakably shows that [this pottery] must be of the time of Useratesen II." He now quotes from Illahun, p. 11: "for the present I feel compelled to conclude," &c., and lays stress upon the words "for the present." I do not think that this mild reservation on p. 11 overrides the round assertion on p. 9, and some others of the same sort. But I will not occupy space with a discussion whether he did, or did not, maintain last year that the question was settled. He admits now that the question is debatable.

Of the two remaining points, one relates to the tomb of Maket. Mr. Petrie gave a very inaccurate account on May 14 of what I had said about this tomb in the Classical Review; and I took care on May 21 to quote some of my own remarks side by side with his version of them, to show beyond all doubt that he had really misrepresented my views. Now, on June 25, he announces that he cannot leave my letter unanswered, as I have charged him with misrepresentation. But he does not meet the charge. He neither justifies his statements nor retracts them.

In this tomb he found nothing that he could assign to the XVIIIth, early XIXth, XXIInd or XXVth Dynasties; and he argued that the absence of objects of the early XIXth Dynasty showed that the tomb was later than the early XIXth, while the absence of objects of the XXIInd Dynasty showed that it was earlier than the XXIInd. I commented on the inconsistency of such reasoning; remarking that negative evidence was never worth much, and that here it no more placed the date between the early XIXth and XXIInd than it placed it between the XXIInd and the XXVth, or after the XXVth, or before the XVIIIth. Now, in his last letter, he says, "not only is there no inconsistency, but it is so obvious that this is ruled by the nature of the objects, and the historical considerations, that it is fruitless to pursue this as a verbal question." I do not quite know what this means; but I think it means that he takes it for granted that the tomb must be earlier than the XXIInd Dynasty. In other words, he just begs the question. For this is not a case of using negative evidence to confirm a conclusion which has been partially established by positive evidence. In Illahun, p. 23, he admits that, for fixing the lower limit of date, the evidence is merely negative.

The remaining point relates to the false-necked vases from Gurob. I showed, in the Classical Review, that Mr. Petrie had dated these vases capriciously, and had then deduced the date of the whole class of false-necked vases from the supposed dates of these few, without regard to the dates assigned on surer grounds to others of the same class. He has never attempted to defend his method of dating the vases from Gurob. Yet he seems to think that he is nevertheless entitled to deduce the date of the whole class from the dates which he has assigned to these. In replying, on May 21, to his letter of May 14, I had to remark that he had misrepresented the scope of my argument, and that his rejoinder, so far as it went, was irrelevant. Now, on June 25, he says only this:

"In the next matter Mr. Torr first based his argument upon the ornamentation of certain vases, and now he turns and says, 'I spoke of vases that are very closely related. If he really means patterns, his remarks are irrelevant.' That ornamentation of bands, lines, and dots, means vases, and does not refer to patterns, is hard to be understood."

As a matter of fact, my contention here was that two groups of vases were very closely related, not only in their form, but also in their ornamentation; and that Mr. Petrie ought not to have noticed one group and ignored the other in assigning a date to the whole class, seeing that (upon his own hypothesis) there must be an interval of 250 years between those two groups. In reply, he talked vaguely about the survival of patterns. I apprehend that there is a great difference between the survival of a mere pattern and the survival of a particular system of ornament in combination with a particular form of vase. If he does not recognise this difference, and is prepared to admit that such a combination of form and ornament might continue in vogue for centuries, just like a pattern, he will have to give up all his former generalisations about the dates of vases; for these have all proceeded on the assumption that, if he can anywhere find a vase under circumstances which fix its date, he may then assign that same date to all vases of the same sort.

* I am citing letters throughout by date of publication, instead of date of writing, to save the reader trouble, if he should wish to verify quotations.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY

To commemorate the very successful loan exhibition of pictures at the Guildhall (which closes this week), it has been decided to publish, by subscription, a handsome royal quarto volume, containing colotype reproductions of fifty of the more important works, some of which have never been engraved. Among the pictures selected for reproduction are—Van Eyck's "Madonna and Child" (Charles Weld-Blundell, Esq.), Frans Hals' "Portrait of a Dutch Gentleman" (Antony Gibbs, Esq.), Jan Steen's "The Smoker" (Charles T. D. Crews, Esq.), Claud's "Enchanted Castle" (Lord Wantage), Cuyp's "View on the Maas" (Earl Brownlow), Reynolds's "Lady Elizabeth Foster" (the Duke of Devonshire), Turner's "Wreck of the Minotaur" (the Earl of Yarborough), Mr. G. F. Watts's "Ophelia" (in the artist's own possession), Sir J. E. Millais's "The Vale of Rest" (Henry Tate, Esq.), George Mason's "The Return from Ploughing" (The Queen), and Mr. E. Burne-Jones's "Love among the Ruins" (Frederick Craven, Esq.). All the owners have given their permission; and the volume will be issued, through Messrs. Blades, East & Blades, fine-art printers to the corporation, at the subscription price of two guineas.

THE annual meeting of subscribers to the British School at Athens will be held at 22, Albemarle-street on Thursday next, July 7, at 5 p.m., when the Marquis of Bute will preside. All persons interested in the subject are invited to attend.

THE Royal Society of British Artists have opened, at the end of this week, a special summer exhibition in their galleries, Suffolk-street.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to us that an ancient causeway, made of transverse pieces of wood, is just now being uncovered, below 40 inches of peat, in Somerset, on the moor that lies between Glastonbury and the sea. He has seen the causeway himself, and expresses the hope that it may be examined by some archaeologist competent to determine its age, before it is entirely destroyed by the peat-diggers and the action of the weather.

THE STAGE.

THE Independent Theatre will give a performance at the Opera Comique on Friday next, July 8, of Mr. W. G. van Nieuwuijs's "The Goldfish," translated from the Dutch by Mr. A. Teixeira de Mattos.

MISS JANETTE STEER will give a special matinée at Terry's Theatre on Tuesday next, July 5, in aid of the East London Hospital. The pieces to be played are "The Idylls of the Heart," and a new version of "The American Bride."

MUSIC.

"DIE WALKÜRE."

THERE are certain works in which the manifestation of genius is so great that discussion seems impertinent—words hopeless. In presence of one of Bach's Fugues, or Beethoven's Symphonies, who would care to enquire as to whether the fugue or the sonata form was a suitable vehicle for the communication of these composers' thoughts and feelings?

And after hearing "Die Walküre" one is still less disposed to hold a discussion, even though held with sweet reasonableness; for Bach and Beethoven worked on lines laid down by their predecessors, but Wagner on those of his own choosing, and hence with him form and contents were absolutely one. Analysts have dissected his works and revealed the wonderful ingenuity of their structure; philosophic writers have explained to us the limits of the old forms, and the possibilities of Wagner's new art-form; theorists are beginning to discuss the new and bold harmonies and progressions of the master, and to give quotations from his music-dramas; and each and all are undoubtedly doing useful work. But there is a right moment for everything, and while under the immediate sway of the poet-musician, such men are decidedly in the way. The tenderness and pity of the music in the first act of "Die Walküre," the dramatic skill displayed in the second, and the noble and at times impassioned strains in the third, appeal to one with such direct and irresistible power that the means by which that effect is produced are, for the moment, altogether forgotten. Strange, indeed, does it seem that certain critics will acknowledge this wonderful power, will dilate upon the beauty and grandeur of the music, and yet consider the master mistaken in his method. Wagner strikes home, extorts homage and admiration even from the most hostile, and yet we are asked to believe that his new wine poured into old bottles would have had a better taste. One ounce of conviction is, however, worth pounds of argument: the public have felt the power of Wagner, and opposition has been able only to retard his victory, which now appears the more impressive.

With regard to the performance of "Die Walküre" at Covent Garden on Wednesday evening there is not much to say, for the simple reason that nearly everything was so good. Fräulein Bettaque as Sieglinde was at first somewhat stiff, but rising with the occasion she displayed unexpected power both as vocalist and dramatist. Frau Ende-Andriessen, in the rôle of Brünnhilde, also did not impress one at the very beginning, but in the closing act she made full amends for any shortcomings. Frau Heink as Fricka sang with marked declamatory power. Herr Alvary as Sigmund acted well; but there was frequently a sluggishness, a holding back in his singing, which made some of the strongest music comparatively tame. Herr Reichmann (Wotan) and Herr Weigand (Hunding) deserve praise. The concerted "Walkyrie" music of the third act was impressively rendered. The orchestra, under Herr Mahler, was admirable. The staging of the piece, with the exception of the first act, was very fine.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

Mlle. CHAMINADE, whose clever compositions have of late found many admirers here, gave a concert, consisting entirely of her own compositions, on Thursday last. Of these, a piano Trio, played by the composer, M. Johannes Wolff, and M. Hollmann, made the greatest impression. We do not remember any work by a female composer showing such breadth of conception and treatment, sustained power, and fertility of idea. Mlle. Chaminade, who is a pianist of great refinement and charm of style, played a number of her best pieces, both solos and duets—being assisted in the latter by Miss Amina Goodwin—and Mr. and Mrs. Oudin sang seven of her songs. The audience was large and very appreciative.

The programme of Sir Charles Halle's fifth Schubert Recital contained the fine Sonata in G, Op. 78 (commonly called the "Fantasia Sonata"); that in C minor—the first of those composed in the last year of Schubert's life; three of the "Clavierstücke," and five of the Lieder. These were sung with customary charm by Miss Fillinger, who had the advantage of Sir Charles's perfect skill in the accompaniments.

Mr. Alfred Reisenhauer, who gave a piano-forte recital at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday, is a pianist of the "sensational" school. In swiftness and strength of finger, in elasticity and power of wrist, he can hold his own with the best; and as regards higher qualities, he phrases intelligently, has passion, and can make his instrument sing very delightfully. Unfortunately he lacks restraint, and is much too fond of violent contrasts. He was heard at his best in Chopin's D flat Nocturne, Schubert's Impromptu in A flat (Op. 90), and some Liszt pieces. In Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques" and Beethoven's thirty-two Variations in C minor, the virtuoso prevailed over the artist. Neither can the readings given of well-known pieces by Scarlatti, Handel, and Mozart be regarded as successful, the "Rondo alla Turca," for instance, being played with "echo" effects. Mr. Reisenhauer would also do well to occasionally remind himself that an Erard piano is not an anvil.

One of these magnificent choral performances that can be heard only at the Crystal Palace was given there on Saturday, when the London contingent of the Handel Festival, with Misses Albani, Patey, and Clara Samwell, Messrs. Lloyd, Santley, and Maldwyn Humphries, set forth the many beauties of "Judas Maccabaeus" before an audience of over twenty thousand persons. Mr. Manns had, as usual, taken great pains; and the result was a rendering which, if not absolutely faultless, was too good to afford reasonable ground for complaint in any important particular. The work had not been given in its entirety on the same scale since 1857.

The programme of the fifth Richter Concert was more varied than usual, Wagner being represented solely by "Verwandlungs-musik und Graal-Feier" from "Parsifal." As, however, this is a long piece, Wagner lovers had no reason to complain. The excerpt is not particularly effective in a concert room at any time, and on this occasion the vocal portions were inadequately rendered. By far the best performances of the evening were those of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Brahms's "Schicksalslied," both of which—that of the Symphony especially—were on the highest level. Mr. Santley, in capital voice, gave a vigorous rendering of Handel's "O voi dell' Erebo," and Dvorák's "Hussite" Overture, "repeated by general desire," was played at the opening of the concert. Late comers had little to regret.

The wonderful success of Sir Augustus Harris's "Wagner" concert at St. James's Hall on Wednesday morning deserves record, though space is lacking for a detailed notice. The chief members, both of the Italian and German companies, were heard. Herr Mahler conducted the orchestral items with marked ability. E. F. J.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 1	0 8 8	0 4 4

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

PROFESSOR C. F. BASTABLE.
Now ready, 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

PUBLIC FINANCE. By C. F. Bastable, LL.D., Professor of Political Economy at Trinity College, Dublin, Examiner in the University of London.
SCOTSMAN.—"It is likely to be a standard work.....It will be welcomed by students of political science everywhere, and not a few men more or less prominent in political or municipal life will find instruction and warning in its pages."

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.
Now ready, Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUTLINES of the HISTORY of ETHICS. By Henry Sidgwick, LL.D., D.C.L., Knightsbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge. Third Edition.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.
Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE WITCH of PRAGUE. By F. Marion Crawford, Author of "Mr. Isaacs," "A Roman Singer," "Sant' Ilario," &c.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Blends the supernatural with the real in that masterly manner to which we are accustomed with this writer.....Mr. Crawford has great skill in blending the past with the present."

ACADEMY.—"Is so remarkable a book as to be certain of as wide a popularity as any of its predecessors.....It is a romance of singular daring and power which shows a growing and not a waning maturity of talent."

COMPLETION OF THE FIRST VOLUME.
Now ready, Vol. I., super royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. net.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE.

By J. R. GREEN, M.A.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORGATE.

Vol. I. (containing Parts I. to X.). With 10 Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations.

* Cases for binding, 1s. 6d. net.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Far and away the best edition of the 'History' that has been published."
TIMES.—"Copious, appropriate, and admirably selected illustrations.....Cannot fail to sustain and increase the popularity of that fascinating survey of national history."

GLOBE.—"What is now promised is likely to be the most thorough production of its species."

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 393, JULY, 1892, price 1s., contains—
1. DON ORSINO. By F. Marion Crawford. Chaps. XV.—XVI.

2. MONTAIGNE. By Arthur Tilley.

3. THE FORCES OF DISORDER.

4. THE BRUT-BABY.

5. MIDSUMMER MAGIC. By Vernon Lee.

6. EDUCATION for the COLONIES. By Arthur Montefiore.

7. THE REAL HISTORIAN.

8. A LESSON in THRIFT. By E. Chilton.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

For JULY, 1892, price Sixpence, contains—

1. JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE. With Portrait.

2. ROUND HENLEY REGATTA REACH. Roderick Mackenzie.

3. THE MAN WHO WAS BRAVE. Alan Adair (Mrs. J. Everett-Halloway). Illustrations by R. Catterson Smith.

4. TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN. W. R. Scott, First Sen. Mod.

5. HOW to SPEND a CHEAP HOLIDAY in NORWAY. Mary Howarth. Illustrations by H. R. Millar.

6. IN a SCOTCH LOCH. Dix Lerron.

7. GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY WORKS at STRATFORD.

Alex. P. Parker, Sec. to Loco. Superintendent. With Eighteen Illustrations from Official Photographs.

8. RIMINI. Helen Zimmern. Illustrations by Norberto Pazzini.

9. A DEPLORABLE AFFAIR. VIII.—IX. (Concluded) Illustrations by L. Leslie Brooke.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

PLAYING CARDS of Various Ages and Countries,

Selected from the Collection of Lady Charlotte Schreiber.

Vol. I.—ENGLISH and SCOTTISH; DUTCH and FLEMISH.

With 144 Plates, folio, £3 13s. 6d. net.

[Next week.]

NEW PUBLICATION BY MR. GLADSTONE.

SPECIAL ASPECTS OF THE IRISH QUESTION:

A Series of Reflections in and since 1886.

Collected from various Sources and Reprinted.

By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK FOR NORWAY.

A New Edition. Thoroughly up to Date.

Revised and almost Rewritten by THOS. MICHELL, Esq., C.B. H.B.M. Consul at Christiania.

An Appendix, with Cycle Routes and Vocabulary, is printed separately at the end.

Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE TER-CENTENARY CELEBRATION, TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

To be completed in 2 vols., 8vo.

THE HISTORY OF CORNELIUS TACITUS.

A New Translation of the Text, with Notes, by ALBERT W. QUILL, Trinity College, Dublin.

Vol. I. contains Introduction and Books I. and II. Now ready, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE

LINO TYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1053.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE BOOK OF TAINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN, by J. COOKE	23
ARMSTRONG'S ONE IN THE INFINITE, by T. W. ROLLESTON	24
DR. BRIGGS'S THE BIRLE, THE CHURCH, AND THE REASON, by Prof. CHEYNE	25
FOX BOURNE'S SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, by R. DUNLOP	26
SOWERBY'S FOREST CANTONS OF SWITZERLAND, by REYNOLD HUGHES	27
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	27
SOME CLASSICAL BOOKS	29
NOTES AND NEWS	29
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	30
ORIGINAL VERSE: "BY THE NORTHUMBERLAND ARMS," by PERCY ADDLESHAW	31
OBITUARY: DR. VILHJALM FINSON, by TH. P.	31
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	31
THE HONORARY DEGREES AT DUBLIN	31
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	32
CORRESPONDENCE— On the Necton Stone , by the Earl of Southesk; "L'Histoire de Guillaume le Maréchal," by J. H. Round; The Pedigree of "Jack" and some Allied Names , by Dr. F. Chance	32
THE KAPPADOKIAN CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS, by Prof. SAYCE	31
CORRESPONDENCE— Greek "ἄννη" = Latin "aqua," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew	34
SCIENCE NOTES	35
PHILOLOGY NOTES	35
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	35
THE SOCIETY OF PORTRAIT PAINTERS, by F. WEDMORE	36
A CUNEIFORM TABLET FROM PALESTINE	36
CORRESPONDENCE— "The Grammar of the Lotus," by W. H. GOODYEAR	37
NOTES OF ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	37
OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN, by J. S. SHEGLOCK	38
CONCERTS OF THE WEEK, by E. F. J.	38

ESSAYS, RECOLLECTIONS, AND CAUSERIES.

By the Hon. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.

1. SAFE STUDIES. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

2. STONES OF STUMBLING. Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The essays are mainly biographical, and are full of wit and humour. They abound in good stories of all kinds. Every page shows the classical humanist, the man of taste and scholarly refinement; but like the essays of Montaigne, of whom Mr. Tollemache is almost an English counterpart, there is a richer vein of thought and of philosophy running through all this lighter matter."—Anglican Church Magazine.

"Mr. Tollemache's essays seem to us to possess literary merit of a rare and high order. He is not only pleasantly anecdotic; he is eminently sympathetic, ingenious, thoughtful, and appreciative, and many of these qualities are also exhibited in his more speculative and less personal papers. His recollections of Grote, Charles Austin, and Pattison are full of interesting anecdote and suggestive comment, while those of Babbage, Sir Charles Wheatstone, Dean Stanley, and Canon Kingsley belong to the same order."—Times.

"Since the death of Hayward, we know no English littérateur who has, in the same degree as Mr. Tollemache, the happy knack of recollecting or collecting the characteristic sayings and doings of a distinguished man, and piecing them together in a finished mosaic."—Daily Chronicle.

"Both these volumes have been previously printed for private circulation, and in this form have found their way to the British Museum and other great libraries. They have now been reprinted and published 'at cost price,' and may almost be said to mark an epoch in the history of cheap books."—Guardian.

LONDON: WILLIAM RICE, 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.

ROYAL STATISTICAL SOCIETY.

The HOWARD MEDAL (Bronze), together with £20.
The following is to be the subject of the Essays in competition for the Howard Medal of 1892:
"PERILS AND PROTECTION OF INFANT LIFE, with STATISTICAL ILLUSTRATIONS where PRACTICABLE."
The Essays are to be sent in on or before 30th June, 1892.
The Medal will be awarded in November, 1892.
Further particulars may be obtained from the ASSISTANT SECRETARY, at the Society's Office, 9, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, W.C., London.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the appointment of PROFESSOR OF WELSH at the above college. Salary £150. Full particulars of duties, &c., may be obtained from the REGISTRAR at the College, to whom applications together with copies of testimonials must be sent, on or before July 20th.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

PROFESSORSHIP OF LAW.
The COUNCIL invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of LAW.
Applications, with references, should be sent on or before the 16th July to the REGISTRAR, from whom particulars may be obtained.
E. LONDON, Registrar.

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

"BLACK AND WHITE."
The COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

EDITORIAL ROOMS, "ONCE A WEEK," New York, June 20, 1892.

BRITISH AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS
having pure-toned FICTION of a high grade of literary excellence to DISPOSE OF, under the International Copyright Law in this country, will enjoy many advantages in dealing with the undersigned. One advantage in particular I would insist on is, that authors so desiring can have their stories copyrighted and published at once—in many cases within a week after the close of negotiations. Two hundred thousand copies of the story are then circulated in all the States and Territories of the Union, thus giving the author the benefit of a wide and appreciative reading. First class Fiction is always in demand for the "Once a Week" Library. Authors will be able to dispose of all of their high-class fiction on the most liberal terms, for I want the best—the three-volume British novel preferred.

Will the author of the "American Girl in London" kindly send present address to this office
P. F. COLLIER.

THE TENTH

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

LISBON (23rd SEPTEMBER to 1st OCTOBER, 1892).

President-Patron: HIS MAJESTY DOM CARLOS I.

Orientalists and friends of Oriental studies are specially invited to take part in the above Congress, which will be followed by literary excursions to Cintra and other places of interest in Portugal, and to Cordova, Seville, and Granada in Spain. The programme of work comprises all known branches of Oriental learning, as also recent explorations, and subjects bearing on "Portugal and the East." The subscription (£1), papers to be read at the Congress, books for presentation, or collections for exhibition, may be forwarded to "The Delegate General," at the Portuguese Legation, 12, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., from whom also particulars may be learnt regarding Prize-translations and the award by the Congress of Diplomas, Medals, and other honours. The dates of the Congress and of its excursions have been so fixed as to enable members to attend the Americanist and other Congresses, Exhibitions, and Columbian Festivities that will take place in Spain between September 12 and the end of October. Reductions in Railway fares, &c., are being arranged for Members.

FOR PUBLICATIONS of the NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS, including SUMMARIES of ORIENTAL RESEARCH in Sixteen Specialities, apply to PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT, ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WOKING.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form, are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration. MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved will be published in the early Autumn.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.,
Publishers of THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL, 5s. (5th Edition), 15, Bonville Street, Fleet Street, London.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL Congress of Orientalists, 1892.

HON. PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK.
PRESIDENT—PROF. MAX MÜLLER.
All Communications as to Papers and Membership to be addressed to the Secretaries, 22, Albemarle Street.
Tickets, £1; Ladies, 10s.
The CONGRESS will be held SEPTEMBER 5–12. Prof. MAX MÜLLER'S ADDRESS will be delivered on the Morning of MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, and Mr. GLAISTONES, at 3 P.M. on SEPTEMBER 7.
N.B.—Orientalists are informed that invitations have been received from Geneva, for holding the Tenth Congress there.

AS LITERARY ASSISTANT, SUB-LIBRARIAN, or SECRETARY.—The daughter of a Professional man, well connected, but desiring RE-ENGAGEMENT. She is thoroughly educated, well read in English and French literature, with some knowledge of Latin and German; good arithmetician, accustomed to secretarial work, to make researches in public libraries, to correct for the press, and to index; she can read aloud intelligently, and writes a legible hand; would undertake Copying or anything else for which the above qualifications would suffice; whole or part time; several years' reference; excellent testimonials.—Address D. H., 30, Theobald's Road, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.
TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—Every Description of Work. Literary, Scientific, &c., undertaken. Orders carefully and promptly executed. Moderate terms. Extra Copies at reduced rates.—Miss THOMAS, 419, Wandsworth Road, S.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS., Plays, Reviews, Lectures, Legal, or other Articles, COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Terms moderate. Duplicate copies.—Address E. TROAK, 23, Maitland Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

ARTIST'S STUDIO.—To be LET (central), excellent STUDIO and RESIDENTIAL CHAMBERS combined. Rent £45 per annum. Modern building situate midway between City and West-end. North-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light. Hall porter.—Apply to MANAGER, Collector's Office, 63, Chancery Lane, W.C.

CATALOGUES.
BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 105.—Items selected from 120,000 Volumes on Sale. All marked cheaply.—Apply to WM. J. SMITH, Bookseller, Brighton.

Just Published, demy 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; by post, 3s. 9d.
CATALOGUE of the MANX CROSSES, with the Runic Inscriptions, and various Readings and Renderings compared. By F. M. C. KENMUR, F.S.A. Scot. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with the Addition of the Latin and Ogmie Inscriptions, and some Illustrations.
Isle of Man: C. B. REYES, Ramsey;
London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS & NORWICH.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION

NOW READY.

THE STORY OF A PENITENT SOUL,

Being the Private Papers of Mr. Stephen Dart late Minister of Lynnbridge, in the County of Lincoln.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

BY A NEW WRITER.

A HIGH LITTLE WORLD,

And What Happened There.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The story is strong and is strongly constructed and admirably written."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

COUSIN CINDERELLA.

By Mrs. PAUL KING.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

THAT WILD WHEEL.

By FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE,
Author of "Madame Leroux," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

WESTOVER'S WARD.

By ALGERNON RIDGEWAY.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The author of this book is a coming man, very nearly if not quite come. The novel is singularly clever."—World.

"Mr. Ridgeway's sketches of men and manners, theatrical and otherwise, 'out West' are spirited and vividly graphic.
He is no less successful in painting the inhabitants of the old Virginian household, in which Westover's parents try to civilise Angelo for their dead son's sake. The opening scene is placed at Alamosa, in South-Western Colorado, at which old Spanish settlement there are woven the threads of a comedy of errors that is developed with an unfailing vivacity overlying a vein of deeper feeling."—Morning Post.

POPULAR EDITIONS OF POPULAR NOVELS.

NOVELS by MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.

VENETTA.

THELMA.

ARDATH.

WORMWOOD.

Uniformly bound, each in 1 vol., 6s., may be obtained separately at all Booksellers.

NOVELS by RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.

GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.

NANCY.

JOAN.

NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.

RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.

SECOND THOUGHTS.

BELINDA.

"DOCTOR CUPID."

ALAS!

Uniformly bound, each in 1 vol., 6s., may be obtained
separately at all Booksellers.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

A LITTLE TOUR in IRELAND. By the present DEAN of ROCHESTER. With nearly 40
Illustrations by John Leech. Large imperial, 10s. 6d.

A BOOK about the GARDEN and the GARDENER. By the Very Rev. S. REYNOLDS HOLE, Dean of Rochester. Crown 8vo, 6s.

EDUCATION from a NATIONAL STANDPOINT. Translated from the French of ALFRED FOUILLEE by W. J. GREENSTREET, M.A., Head
Master of the Marling School, Stroud. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE NAME ABOVE EVERY NAME,
and other Sermons. By CHARLES D. BELL, D.D., Rector of Cheltenham and Honorary Canon of Carlisle.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MEN of MIGHT: Studies of Great Characters. By ARTHUR C. BENSON, M.A., and
H. F. W. TATHAM, M.A. Square 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BOOKS FOR PRIZES, &c.

ANIMAL SKETCHES. By Professor
LLOYD MORGAN. Nearly 60 Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

FRIENDS of the OLDEN TIME. By ALICE GARDNER. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.

BAREROCK; or, the Island of Pearls.
By H. NASH. Illustrated by L. Speed. 6s.

LAMB'S ADVENTURES of ULYSSES.
With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. 1s. 6d.;
gilt edges, 2s.

THE COLLEGE SERIES OF GREEK AUTHORS.

THUCYDIDES. Book I. Edited by Prof. C. D.
MORRIS. 7s. 6d.

THUCYDIDES. Book V. By Prof. FOWLER. 6s.

THUCYDIDES. Book VII. By Prof. C. F. SMITH. 6s.
INTRODUCTION to the LANGUAGE and VERSE of HOMER. By Prof. SEYMOUR. 4s. 6d.

HOMER.—ILIAD. Books I.—III. By Prof. SEY-MOUR. 6s.

HOMER.—ILIAD. Books IV.—VI. By Prof.
SEYMOUR. 6s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY. Books I.—IV. By Prof.
PERRIN. 6s.

SOPHOCLES.—ANTIGONE. By Prof. DOOGUE. 6s.

AESCHYLUS.—PROMETHEUS VINCTUS.
By Prof. F. D. ALLEN. 7s. 6d.

PLATO.—APOLOGY and CRITO. By Prof. L.
DYER. 6s.

PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. By Principal TOWLE. 6s.

PLATO.—GORGIAS. By G. LODGE. 7s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—BACCHANTES. By Prof. BECK-
WITH. 6s.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENIA in TAURIS. By Prof. FLAGG. 6s.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE CLOUDS. By Prof.
HUMPHREYS. 6s.

AESCHINES.—IN CTESIPHONTEM. By Prof.
RICHARDSON. 6s.

XENOPHON.—HELLENICA. Books I.—IV. By
Prof. MANATT. 7s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—HELLENICA. Books V.—VII.
By CHARLES E. BENNETT. 6s.

THE GATE to CAESAR. A Latin
Reading-book for Beginners, containing—(1) A Simplified
Text of Gallic War, Book II.; (2) The Original Text; (3)
Notes on both Texts; (4) Exercises on the Simplified Text; (5) Vocabulary; (6) Etymological Vocabulary.
Now ready, cloth, 2s.

THE MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC.
By Dr. WORMELL, Head Master of the Central Foundation Schools of London. A Complete Manual, especially adapted for Pupils going into Business or Commerce.
With Additional Chapters on the Metric System, Discounts, Percentages, &c. Large crown 8vo, 350 pp., 3s. 6d. net. With Answers (64 pp. additional), red edges, 4s.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK of MECHANICS. By Dr. WORMELL. A New Textbook, specially designed for London Matric., Science and Art, College of Preceptors, and other Exams. Illustrated.
Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,
37, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.
Publisher to the India Office.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

Just ready, at all Booksellers.

THE MEMBER FOR WROTTEN-
BOROUGH: Passages from his Life in Parliament.
Edited by his "Alter ego," ARTHUR A'BECKETT.
Author of "Papers from Pump-handle Court," &c., &c.
With fancy cover design by E. J. Wheeler. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CONVERSATIONS with CARLYLE.
By Sir C. OAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G., &c. With 2 Portraits of Mr. Carlyle and 1 of Mrs. Carlyle. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A book which is well entitled to a place of honour, for it is by far the most sane, the most kindly, and the most critical estimate of Carlyle as yet published."—Saturday Review.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and
LETTERS. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, B.A.
With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page and 44 smaller Illustrations, including 15 Photogravures. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

The LARGE-PAPER EDITION, 250 copies, demy 4to, boards, with extra Illustrations, Three Guineas net, is just ready.
"Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from first to last."—Saturday Review.

THE STORY of KING EDWARD and
NEW WINCHELSEA: the Edification of a Medieval Town. By F. A. Inderwick, Q.C. Author of "Sidelights on the Stuarts," "The Interregnum." Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN
WITHOUT a GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACEY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN
CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT.
With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada,
Japan, and China, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT,
C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo,
cloth extra, 7s. 6d. "Picturesque and practical."—Globe.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY. By
E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

DARK AFRICA and the WAY OUT;
or, a Scheme for Civilising and Evangelising the Dark Continent. By the Rev. W. HUGHES, F.R.G.S., Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay, North Wales. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

LIFE of SIR EVELYN WOOD. By CHARLES WILLIAMS, War Correspondent. With Photogravure Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

"A record packed full of adventure; a story of personal valour, tempered by real gifts of generalship and of the management of men."
—Daily Chronicle.

SOME RECORDS of CRIME. Being the Diary of a Year, Private and Particular, of an Officer of the Thuggee and Dacoite Police. By General
CHARLES HERVEY, C.B. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 30s.
"Full of interest and incident."—Times.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GEORGE EBERS'S NEW NOVEL.

PER ASPERA (a Thorny Path). By
GEORGE EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c.
2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales.
By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
(First Issue in Book Form.)

A SON of the FENS. By Dr. P. H.
EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo,
cloth, 6s.

THE EFFACEMENT of ORIEL PEN-HALIGON. By E. M. HEWITT. 8vo, picture covers, 1s.

THREE FEATHERS
By WILLIAM BLACK. 2s. 6d.
Being the New Volume in the Uniform and Cheap Revised
Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S NOVELS.

JULY Number, now ready at all Booksellers.
FASHIONS of TO-DAY. Price Half-a-Crown. A New High-Class Monthly Illustrated Magazine for Gentlemen.

"Fashions of To-Day is a work of art as well as of fashion, the illustrations, especially those in colours, being simply admirable."
—Daily Telegraph.

"An excellent shillingworth is 'Scribner.'"—St. James's Gazette.
SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE. July
Number. An Illustrated Monthly. Price One Shilling.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1892.

No. 1053, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Book of Trinity College, 1591-1891.
(Belfast: Marcus Ward & Co.)

The Book of Trinity College is a fitting memorial of the celebrations held this week in Dublin with pomp and splendour to commemorate the completion of the third century of the foundation of the college. It is the work of many hands, and is produced in the best style of typography by the firm of Marcus Ward & Co., Belfast. It is adorned with numerous illustrations of the college, of its greatest men, and of the rare treasures of its library, such as the Book of Kells, the satchel of the Book of Armagh, and the shrine of the Book of Dimma.

The first four chapters are written by Prof. Mahaffy, "in default of a specialist to perform it." Notwithstanding the necessarily short time at his disposal, Prof. Mahaffy has surveyed the first two centuries of the history of the college in a manner well suited to the work and the occasion. He acknowledges his indebtedness to the recently published work of Dr. Stubbs in the Dublin University Press Series, which is the most painstaking history of the college yet written. Taylor's work is chiefly valuable as giving a review of the parliamentary history of the college, and Heron's was written for a special purpose from a Catholic standpoint.

As early as 1311 an attempt was made by John Lech, Archbishop of Dublin, to found a university in that city; and a bull was issued by Clement V. with this object. Alex. de Bicknor, Lech's successor, founded a college in St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1320, which existed as a theological institution to the reign of Henry VII. The English were subsequently too much occupied with wars and insurrections to attend to such matters as education, and no attempt was again made to found a college until the reign of Elizabeth. Sir Philip Sidney made an effort in 1568; and in 1585 the Lord Deputy, Sir John Perrot, proposed to appropriate the lands and revenues of St. Patrick's Cathedral to that purpose, alleging that "there were two cathedrals in Dublin, of which St. Patrick's, being held in more superstitious reputation than the other, ought to be dissolved." This was strenuously opposed by Adam Loftus, Archbishop of Dublin and Lord Chancellor of Ireland, who had been fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and had come to Ireland as chaplain to the Earl of Sussex, Lord Deputy. The men, however, who were instrumental in founding the university were Luke Challoner, formerly of Cambridge, and two Scotchmen, James Hamilton and James Fullerton, who kept a school in Dublin, and who had been sent over to promote the interests of James VI. to the succession to the throne. The Queen's interests in the scheme were secured through the efforts of Henry Ussher, Archdeacon of Dublin and uncle to the famous James Ussher. Accordingly, in December, 1591, she gave her consent to the foundation of "a college for learning, whereby knowledge and civility might be increased by the instruction of our people there, whereof many have usually heretofore used to travaile into France, Italy, Spaine, to gett learning in such forreigne universities, whereby they have been infected with poperie and other ill qualities, and so became evill subjects."

The old Augustinian monastery of All Hallows, founded by Dermot MacMurrough in 1166, had been granted by Henry VIII. on the dissolution of the monasteries to the corporation for their loyalty during the rebellion of "Silken Thomas." The buildings were then in ruins; and by a vote of the corporation, at the instigation of the Lord Mayor, the meadows and orchard of the priory were given as a site for the new college, and £100 a year was granted from the Concordatum fund and also some crown rents. These have practically disappeared; but "the modest gift of the corporation of Dublin, consisting of twenty-eight acres of derelict land, partly invaded by the sea, has become a splendid property, in money value not less than £10,000 a year." Over £2000 was subscribed from private sources. The building was commenced in 1591, after the passing of the charter appointing Lord Burleigh the first Chancellor, Adam Loftus first Provost, and Henry Ussher, Luke Challoner, and Lancelot Monie first Fellows. The Lord Mayor of Dublin, Thomas Smith, laid the foundation stone, and Prof. Mahaffy remarks that "for at least 150 years the liberality of the corporation of Dublin was commemorated in our prayers."

James I. generously patronised the new institution. He gave it an annual grant of £388 15s., endowed it with forfeited estates in Ulster, bestowed on it the patronage of eighteen livings, and in 1613 granted the privilege of returning two members to parliament. In 1601, on the defeat of the Spaniards at Kinsale, the English army gave a sum of money for the purchase of books generally estimated at £1800, which Dr. Stubbs reduces to £700. This, as is well known, sent James Ussher (M.A., 1601) to London to purchase books, where he met Sir Thomas Bodley engaged in a similar mission for the University of Oxford. In 1654 Cromwell's army was equally munificent; and as Prof. Mahaffy says, "there is probably no other so great library in the world endowed by the repeated liberality of soldiers." They became the purchasers for £2200 of Ussher's library, which had been confiscated by parliament because he had refused to attend the Westminster Assembly of Divines. The books and MSS. were placed, by order of Cromwell, who wished to reserve them for a new college, in Dublin Castle, where they suffered from neglect and pilfering; but after the Restoration they were removed by an order of the House of Commons to the college library. By 1630 greater accommodation became necessary for the increased number of students; and the government, responding to an appeal for room, appropriated "two Popish mass houses" and a Jesuit college and chapel in the city, and gave them to the University. The buildings of the Elizabethan college were of red brick and ranged round a small quadrangle; the vast grounds now so splendidly laid out, and from which rise the stately pile of halls, library, chapel, and schools, were mostly unenclosed, undrained, and partly waste.

Prof. Mahaffy gives us an interesting glimpse of student life at that period, chiefly derived from Dr. Stubbs's extracts from the Register of Bishop Bedell. The students were mere boys, who entered at the age of twelve or fourteen. Hence there were rules of the schoolboy order against apple stealing, wall climbing, card playing, ale tipping, town haunting, fighting, and other freaks of hot-blooded youth. Punishments and admonitions were administered for these, as well as for swearing, beating the butler, absence from grace and prayers, keeping a hawk, pig stealing, killing the same and treating friends to roast pork. The boys were birched, put in the stocks, placed standing at the pulpit or against the wall at meals, seated at the foot of the table, making confession for faults on the knees in public, and many other indignities, beside public expulsion. Life, indeed, at the time was dull and monotonous. It was monastic in its strictness, and presents a striking contrast to that of our present universities and public schools, where some consider sports and pastimes to be the serious pursuits and not study and learning, and where the selection for the crews at Henley seems of greater importance than the election to fellowships. Snipe were not allowed to be shot in St. Stephen's Green, or the low-lying lands about the college. Bowls were forbidden in the orchard, and long afterwards marble playing on the hall steps was a privilege reserved for fellows. Plays and cards were allowed at Christmas, following the custom in England.

The early fellows troubled themselves too much about politics; and Laud, when Chancellor, speaking from reports made to him, said that the college was "as ill-governed as any in the kingdom." In 1637 he consequently forced on it the Caroline Statutes, giving to the Provost sole management and taking it from the Fellows. During the Parliamentary wars misfortunes thickened: the estates were in the rebels' hands, the plate was pawned or melted, and Martin, one of the best of the early Provosts, died of the plague. The "Crowd of Geneva" came in under the strong rule of Cromwell, his brother Henry being appointed Chancellor, and Winter, a zealous Puritan, Provost. The period was marked by the foundation of the school of mathematics, since so famous. The Revolution gave the college its most serious blow. Tyrconnell stopped the rents, and the Register tells a dismal tale during the subsequent months of terror. The college was broken into, some of the fellows fled to England, their horses were taken away, the place was made a prison for suspected persons, the chapel was reconsecrated and mass said; but it was afterwards turned into a powder magazine. The college was handed over to the Roman Catholics, and Dr. Michael Moore was appointed Provost, and Teague McCarthy Librarian. Their rule was conducted by moderation and good sense, and they were able to save the college from pillage and destruction. Archbishop King states the college was "damned" to the extent of £2000.

The first centenary was celebrated in 1694, of which an interesting account is given. An entirely new state of things grew up with the second century. The Provosts no longer held their posts for a few years until they stepped into a bishopric. The buildings as they practically now stand were all erected in the eighteenth century. Provost Baldwin, "the architect of the college," brought his influence to bear on the Irish Parliament, and large grants were then and subsequently given for building purposes—altogether as much as £60,000. Serious internal troubles, however, occurred from time to time. King wrote to Addison complaining of the "nest of Jacobites in it." Provost Brown died from the blow of a brick received in a row, and a junior fellow named Ford was shot and mortally wounded in an attack made upon his rooms. Laxity of rule and bad management were the chief causes of all these troubles.

In 1745 Burke founded the Historical Club, which subsequently grew into the Historical Society. "It has been the palestra of many of the most eloquent speakers of the English tongue," Mr. Dixon rightly says in a subsequent chapter. It has given to the country Burke, Grattan, Curran, Plunket, Bushe, Sheil, Butt, Davis, Archbishop Magee, Lecky, and many another known to fame at home and abroad.

The provostship of Andrews, "the most brilliant in the annals of the college," and that of Hely Hutchinson, are well sketched by Prof. Mahaffy in his closing chapter: the school of music was founded under the former (the Earl of Mornington being the first professor), and the chair of modern languages under the latter. The jobbery, corruption, and nepotism of Hutchinson are considered by Prof. Mahaffy, who comes to the conclusion that until the MS. history of his own time by Hutchinson is thoroughly examined, the case fulminated against him by Duigenan in Lachrymæ Academicæ and others cannot be considered complete. It was of Hutchinson that Lord North said, in reply to George III. for his opinion, that "if his Majesty were pleased to bestow on him England and Ireland, he would ask the Isle of Man for a potato garden." The close of the century saw serious trouble from political causes. Several committees of United Irishmen were discovered within the college walls, one of the secretaries being Robert Emmett. Strong measures were taken, a number of students were expelled, and the difficulty tided over.

Dr. Stubbs gives an excellent historical summary of the affairs of the college down to our own day from the beginning of the century. Dr. Abbott, the Librarian, writes a chapter on the library—the best description we now have of the famous literary treasures it contains. The catalogue of the library was completed by Dr. Hutton after fourteen years' labour, and printed at an expense of £4,500. The printed books now number 222,648, and the MSS. 1938. Then follow chapters on the College Observatory at Dunsink by Sir Robert Ball, the Early Buildings by Mr. Ulick R. Burke, and the Botanical Gardens by Prof. Wright.

We cannot close without noting that one of the most important chapters in the book, that on "Distinguished Graduates," contributed by Mr. W. Mac Neile Dixon, a very recent graduate of the university. It is admirable in matter and style, and presents in graceful touches a series of medallion portraits from James Ussher down to Charles Lever. Mr. Dixon deserves congratulation for his work: the confidence of the committee was not misplaced in giving to the repeated winner of the "blue ribbon" of the university in English verse such a fitting task in English prose.

J. COOKE.

One in the Infinite. By George Francis Savage-Armstrong. (Longmans.)

THERE are few living writers of verse who have devoted themselves to the service of the muse with more constancy than Mr. Savage-Armstrong. From the volume of lyrical poems which, in 1869, won a tribute of warm admiration from Sainte Beuve, to the volume just published, we have had from his pen a body of poetic work which testifies at once to his industry and his genius. Industry may seem a curious term to apply to the exercise of a poetic gift, but the poets know better—"great is the glory for the strife is hard." And in Mr. Armstrong's work the evidences of strenuous intellectual activity are very clearly to be perceived—a fact which increases our respect for its abundance.

The present volume is entirely and avowedly philosophic in tone, so much so, indeed, that one might well wish it had concerned itself a little with action as well as with thought. It gives in a series of lyrics the history of a human intellect startled, by the presence of death, from the unquestioning faith of childhood, then traversing the creeds of the world, and the non-credo of science, in search of a satisfactory answer to the problems of existence, or trying to forget them in the distractions of sensual delights, and finally returning to a deeper but unformulated belief in the divine guidance of the world, and with it to happiness, hope, and fruitful energy. It is the history of many a human mind in these days, and many a reader will acknowledge that the very problems which oppress him have been vividly and subtly conceived by the poet. The point at which one would have wished a dramatic element to come in is that at which the imaginary personality who forms the subject of the poem turns in his downward course and begins to re-ascend towards the light. One sees no particular reason for this crisis. It would not have taxed Mr. Armstrong's power of invention to have devised some incident which brought home to his hero's mind the reality of a spiritual force in the world. As it is, we feel at this point a certain want of that natural sequence of thought and emotion which in other parts of the scheme is carefully and justly indicated.

But, perhaps, there really is some subtle link of connexion which I have failed to discover. And, perhaps, many readers can supply the link out of their own experiences. They will be not the less grateful to Mr. Armstrong for the luminous and eloquent expression which he has given to many of the phases of modern thought. Here, from an early section of the book, is a fine utterance upon the "God of Love," whom the seeker finds a transitory satisfaction in substituting for the cruel Deity of the orthodox creed:

"Horrible vision! Weigh the loss and gain,
And live content to find the deeps left void
Of such a tyrant; that for thee remain
The lucid airs of morning unalloyed,
The azure fields of heaven without a stain.

"Ay, with what different hands these lakes, these hills
Were moulded, and the fleeting shadow sped
Across the waving meads, and all the rills
With rapturous music from their mountains shed,
And the woods' wildered with the thrushes' trills!

"How merciful, how gentle, He who gave
So much of beauty in the span of days
Vouchsafed to me, Who gladdens the blue wave
That, laughing, quivers to my feet, and plays
Along the glittering sand its waters lave;

"Who lulls my soul in sorrow with the breeze
That ebbs and flows amid the boughs a-way:
With many-coloured wings among the trees
Varies the eye's joy all the summer's day;
Who strews with dust of gold the bloomy leas;

"Who love hath given and friendship—the soft eyes
That gaze with faith and longing in mine own,
And the hand's grasp that speaks the soul's replies,
And all life's sweetness from His Edens blown Adown the radiant hollows of the skies!"

It is, of course, impossible for the analytic intellect to rest in this comfortable theology, and Mr. Armstrong shows with great skill and insight when and how it fails us. The reconstructive part of the work offered greater difficulties both to the thinker and the artist—for how is one to express a serene and lofty faith in that which by its very nature is inexpressible? Poetry alone can do this, and poetry can do it only by indirect ways. It can give no account of the "Universal God" as Mr. Armstrong names the Power which he at last finds it possible to adore; but it can paint the soul which believes in such a power, and thus show it to us, as it were, reflected in a somewhat dim and unsteady mirror. Mind, the poet declares, he cannot sever from infinite being nor goodness from infinite power:

"But oh, how far above my childhood's dream
Towers now the vision of that Life Supreme!

In how much deeper reverence I frame
With trembling hand the letters of His name."

To become aware that that name, when formed, has an emotional but not a logical value seems the conclusion of Mr. Armstrong's philosophy. To reason about God is to define the infinite—but to define is not necessary in order that we should adore.

Mr. Armstrong's mastery of various metres and his stately diction will be found as finely illustrated in this volume as in any other that he has published. It shows, too, the philosophic learning and insight necessary for the adequate treatment of such a theme. I may observe, however, that the Buddhist conception of the true goal of mankind hardly receives full justice at the poet's hands. He thinks he has found a logical flaw, an inconsistency, in the system, and cries triumphantly:

"Look to it, Gautama! . . . Sakya-muni, sweet is the bulbul but hollow her egg.
How shall thy gospel suffice for the many If all men are beggars, from whom shall men beg?"

To which it may be answered that if the Buddhist ideal were reached by all men at once, the disease of desire would be wholly cured, and mankind would pass into Nirvana.

T. W. ROLLESTON.

The Bible, the Church, and the Reason. The Three Great Fountains of Divine Authority. By C. A. Briggs. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.)

THIS is emphatically a "tract for the times," and addresses itself to those who are too profoundly in earnest to care about the graces of style. When so much is, rightly enough, believed to be at stake, it is difficult, even for that excellent classical scholar, the Bishop of Colchester, to cultivate the amenities of literature. Dr. Briggs's mode of writing is not as well adapted as that of Herder or of Stanley to awaken a love for the Old Testament as a literature; but there is character in it. There is the spirit of a Luther in all his more recent writings, without any of that "snorting" in which the great reformer too often for our tastes indulged, and which, according to a prediction of Eichhorn (p. 277), is still characteristic of the ecclesiastical opponents of the newer criticism. He has no wish to drive his accusers in the General Assembly out of the Presbyterian Church; but he declines to be himself driven out, because he can show that he is, on some important points, much nearer to the mind of its founders than many of his accusers, and because, apart from this, he knows that he defends the cause of Biblical religion. To those, therefore, who pretend that Old Testament scholars are out of sympathy with the Church, we may reply by pointing to Dr. Briggs, who is not only a Biblical critic but a theologian, and not only a theologian but a practical Churchman. In this respect he is a representative man. For whatever Bishop Blomfield in the Contemporary Review may assert, the doctrinal and practical bearings of the results of Biblical criticism have long occupied the minds of the leading workers, who are not at all inclined to subside into special scholarship, or to disclaim an interest in matters outside the grammar and the lexicon. It is not often, however, that critics are so manifestly called upon to speak fully on these bearings as Dr. Briggs has been in America. In a former work called Whither? A Theological Question of the Times (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1889), he justified his contention that "the time had come for the reconstruction of theology, of polity, of worship, and of Christian life and work," and I venture to quote some words from that volume which will, perhaps, be suggestive to some of our own Church leaders.

"Christian churches should go right on in the lines drawn by their own history and their own symbols. This will in the end lead to greater heights, on which there will be concord. Imperfect statements will be corrected by progress. . . . Truth fears no light. Light chases error away. True orthodoxy seeks the full blaze of the noontide sun. In the light of such a day the unity of Christendom will be gained."

Dr. Briggs's former work is, of course, only a small contribution to a great subject, which needs a more public discussion on the lines of progressive thought than it has yet received. It is chiefly for its statement of principles that I commend it—principles which are equally just to the past and to the present, but which admit of a diversity of application according to the circumstances.

The present book will be more generally useful, because it is less intimately connected than its predecessor with the distinctive doctrinal statements of the Westminster Confession. It deals, as the author observes, with "matters which lie at the roots of our common Christianity," and largely, at any rate, "with questions of truth and fact," to be determined, not by hasty and superficial writers in periodicals, but "by patient, diligent, painstaking, exhaustive investigation of truth and fact" (Preface, p. ix.). It appeals, therefore, to men of all shades of churchmanship, provided that they recognise the duty of continually absorbing fresh elements of truth, which both may and must more or less modify the conceptions already adopted by the common consent of past ages. But, if I may say so, it appeals most of all to those who attach the highest value to the principles of the Reformation, and who, therefore, recognise a Bible within the Bible, of which the experience of the Christian life in the community and in the individual is the true test.

One of Dr. Briggs's most characteristic statements is, that the Bible, the Church, and the Reason are historically the three great fountains of divine authority. What he means is that God, or "God in Christ," makes known His presence and will through these three channels. "The Bible alone is the infallible rule of faith and practice; the conscience alone speaks the categorical imperative within the man; the Church alone administers sacramental grace." In the first part of this statement he comes into gentle collision with a recent Anglican teacher of the progressive High Church school.

"When Gore comes to define the Catholic faith, he includes in it doctrines which are now and ever have been rejected by the great mass of Protestant Christians, and which cannot be found in the consensus of the earlier Christians. . . . The rule of Vincent of Lerins . . . is a very weak and inferior rule when compared with the rule set before us in Holy Scripture . . . [It gives us] a meagre body of tradition to be derived by historical criticism from the teachings of the most ancient fathers, in which, so soon as he begins to state them, Gore stands out in his individuality as a Christian teacher of the nineteenth century, before the background of the ancient Catholic church" (pp. 78, 79).

And he adds this noble aphorism from the Christian Platonist Whichcote, whom Bishop Westcott years ago commended to our study. "The sense of the Church is not a rule, but a thing ruled. The Church is bound unto reason and scripture, and governed by them as much as any particular person." And he appends this comment of his own, which exactly expresses views put forward by myself in my Hampton Lectures (Introduction, pp. xxvi., xxvii.):

"Compare Holy Scripture with the creeds and confessions, the liturgies and the canons of the Christian Church. The best minds in the Christian centuries have constructed them. They are the best fruits of the experience of the Church in its progress during nineteen centuries. But the Bible surpasses them in every way. In each successive age a fresh study of the Bible proves their insufficiency, and then comes the ever-renewed struggle of the Bible with dogma and ecclesiasticism. . . . Compare the Bible with the best systems of doctrine. They are all inadequate. The dogma of the theologian is to the student of Biblical Theology a very small affair. The Bible stretches out in all directions and envelopes it as the heavens the earth. If you are troubled with any dogma taught you, go to the Bible yourself and you may not find it there; or if you do find it, it will be in such a form that its meaning will be transformed to you" (pp. 80, 81).

And so the author continues, comparing Scripture (he does not hesitate to use the singular) with systems of morals and with masterpieces of piety, and showing how much simpler and grander and more inspiring is the rule which it supplies "than any which man can frame." In all this he speaks with a sober enthusiasm, not attempting to forecast the era of prophetic revelation which God may conceivably yet have in store for us, and limiting himself to the enunciation of the plain fact that within the Bible there is a religion and a morality such as no other extant book can present. And generous enough, too, is his recognition of the divine voice speaking in the Church and even in the Reason. If Newman and Martineau claim to have found "divine certitude," the one through the Church, the other through the Reason, why, he asks, should we doubt it?

I do not know whether the logic of these interesting and inspiring chapters is altogether perfect. All eclectic theories are open to objection; but, for practical uses, an eclectic theory of this kind seems at the present day indispensable. Mr. Gore has given, or is giving us, one well thought-out compromise; Prof. Stanton has sketched the outlines of another; why should not Dr. Briggs give us a third? Till that new revelation in science, in philosophy, and in history, of which the author speaks (Whither? p. 8), is much more complete, provisional compromises like these deserve grateful acknowledgment. Dr. Briggs certainly does not err in the direction of audacity. He is hardly bold enough for most progressive thinkers in England; may experience prove that he is not too bold for America!

I now pass on from the three chapters on the "sources of authority" to chap. iv., which raises an important question as to the "inerrancy" of Scripture—an idea, he remarks, which has never been accepted by the Church. To members of the Anglican Church this chapter may be unimportant; but not all their neighbours have been born to this freedom. And few indeed of us can claim to meet with serene openness another theological difficulty referred to in chap. v.—the limitation of the knowledge of Christ. Dr. Briggs has already told us that he agrees with Dorner and A. B. Bruce rather than with some of the bolder German advocates of the so-called Kenosis doctrine (Whither? p. 114). In this he shows characteristic moderation, and I am unwilling to criticise a view which it would certainly be difficult to replace by a better one. Hard, indeed, will be the task for the theologians of the future to re-interpret the great theological doctrine of the Incarnation so as to adjust it to all the new facts. But Dr. Briggs' reference to this topic is a brief one; the greater part of chap. v. is occupied with less thorny subjects. To a scholar like Dr. Briggs it is easy to give a lucid answer to a question which evidently puzzles the Bishop of Colchester extremely, "What is Higher Criticism?" He then explains the character of its problems, and after noticing the obstacles opposed by reactionary divines shows once more (but not once too often) that criticism as now practised is in the largest sense constructive. Chap. vi. deals with Biblical history. The multiplicity of records is represented as an additional guarantee of historical facts; but though I would gladly see Dr. Briggs' attractive view of miracles and theophanies substituted for that of traditionalism, I should be sorry if it were constituted into a new test of orthodoxy. To say (as Bishop Blomfield does in the Contemporary Review) that a certain critic represents "almost the whole of the Old Testament narrative as purely fabulous and legendary," is of course a libellous misstatement; but it must be admitted that on critical grounds alone it is impossible to prove the strictly historical character of all the visions recorded in the Old Testament. Isaiah's vision is of course well attested, but there are critical doubts about the theophanies in general, to which Dr. Briggs himself has in one place adverted (p. 273). Perhaps it is merely want of space which produces a temporary failure of lucidity; Dr. Briggs may merely mean that the theophany-narratives show the current belief in objective visions of the divine Being, and that he personally sees no reason to doubt that visions analogous to those reported were actually experienced at the turning-points in the history of revelation. After all, the main point for Christian Theists is this—Did God make Himself known to certain privileged and prepared minds?—not, How and in what manner did the revelation come? The latter question cannot indeed be evaded; patient critical and psychological study cannot fail to throw some light upon it. But even Church-critics must not commit themselves as a body to the theory which appears to be put forward by Dr. Briggs, any more than Dr. Briggs or Dr. Driver can be expected to commit himself to every theory on questions of advanced criticism that may have been put forward, say, by Dr. Robertson Smith or myself.

It is, I think, to be regretted that the learned and accomplished author has not emphasised more the distinction between Biblical history and Biblical theology. The two are no doubt as intimately connected as the acts and the words of an individual. But as "disciplines" they are separate, and no one has done more to press the claims of Biblical theology than Dr. Briggs himself. There is no greater reforming agency than Biblical theology. It could not, indeed, live in a church such as many estimable persons affirm the Church of England to be, but its full recognition is a condition of life to all Protestant Churches. The Presbyterian Review some years back published a very able lecture upon this subject by the author, which I would gladly have seen reproduced. At any rate, we have in chap. vii. a specimen of Dr. Briggs' treatment of "The Messianic Ideal," which may be all the more useful because it is so elementary. An appendix follows, with many curious and significant details, including a list of "some of those who find errors in Holy Scripture"—the phrase is, perhaps, too repellent—and even of the chief recent scholars who hold more or less completely the modern critical views. "Some of these," he says, "are rationalists, but the majority of them are evangelical Christians." Critical students will also notice Sections 7—9, and 14—15, the former of which show by examples the utility of the critical analysis of the Hexateuch, and the latter expounds a theory of Dr. Briggs respecting the poetic character of the opening chapters of Genesis, which has not yet received sufficient attention.

T. K. CHEYNE.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS."—Sir Philip Sidney: Type of English Chivalry in the Elizabethan Age. By H. R. Fox Bourne. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

FORTUNATE in his parents, fortunate in the time of his birth and also in the manner of his death, Sidney was, above all, fortunate in his friendships; and it is to his friends, to Fulke Greville especially, that posterity owes the picture by which it loves best to remember him. Few lives, indeed, are better worth writing; few more difficult to write adequately than that of Sir Philip Sidney. For it was not without reason that his contemporaries accounted him "the president of noblesse and of chevalree"; and yet it is true, as has been said of him by a recent critic, that "neither his poetry nor his prose, nor what is known of his action, quite explains that singular celebrity which he enjoyed in his own life, and the fame which has attended his memory with almost undimmed lustre through three centuries."

Mr. Fox Bourne's estimate has long been before the public, and his work has long since found recognition as in every way the best and most complete account of Sidney's life and of the circle in which he moved. The present volume is admittedly based on the earlier and larger work. But Mr. Fox Bourne has taken the opportunity to correct some errors of fact and judgment that had crept into the former; while the illustrations, which in the present instance are both appropriate and excellent, go far to make it, if not indeed so useful to the student as its predecessor, at any rate more interesting and enjoyable to the general reader.

Naturally, in the case of a book belonging to a series of which the motto, "facta ducis vivent operosaque gloria rerum," sufficiently indicates the object, Mr. Fox Bourne lays special emphasis on Sidney as a man of action. And, in truth, this seems to be the proper view to take of his career, for poetry and literature were to him, after all, only the occupation of enforced idleness. His whole education and training, the advice of his father and his own inclination, had all gone in the direction of preparing him for an active life in the service of his queen and country. His embassy to the court of the Emperor Rudolf when he was only twenty-two years of age, his connexion with the Earl of Leicester, and the honourable position of his father, all gave promise of more serious employment at no distant date. That this employment so ardently desired by him never came at all, or came too late for him to profit by it, was partly Sidney's own fault. Elizabeth, when she warned Lord Mountjoy against imitating the conduct of "that inconsiderate fellow Sidney," laid her finger exactly on the radical defect in his character; for much as one admires the man for his noble qualities of heart and mind, one is compelled to acknowledge that his conduct was too often marred by culpable rashness. His letter to his father's secretary, Molyneux, his quarrel with the Earl of Oxford, his letter to the queen on the subject of her marriage with the Duke of Anjou, his foolhardiness at Zutphen, are all instances in point. Languet, his old tutor, had early noticed this defect in his character, and warned him against it.

"Do not," he wrote to him, "give the glorious name of courage to a fault resembling it. It is the folly of our age that most men of noble birth think it more honourable to do the work of soldiers than that of leaders, and would rather be praised for boldness than for judgment."

Compared with Elizabeth's vacillating policy and Cecil's prudent statesmanship, Sidney's dream of a Protestant league under the hegemony of England seems great and glorious. Standing apart from the bustle of political intrigue, and with the imagination of a poet, he could see the drift of events more clearly perhaps than either Cecil or Elizabeth; but he lacked that sense of personal responsibility which attaches to government, and which weighed so heavily on Cecil and Elizabeth. With his eye fixed on Europe, he failed to see that the first attempt to realise his dream would be attended with domestic troubles which would in all probability not only have frustrated its realisation, but, what was of more consequence, have seriously imperilled the safety of the State itself.

To touch now for a moment on Sidney's relations with Lady Rich, I am fain to admit that the ingenuity expended on Astrophel and Stella as a serious revelation of his feelings has always appeared to me slightly absurd. Whether the Lady Penelope's marriage took place in 1580 or in 1581 is surely of very little moment. That Sidney loved her after she became the wife of Lord Rich, that he pitied her fate and spoke of her husband as a devil who only wanted horns to make him perfect, is all that we know or need care to know of the matter. Lady Rich, the future mistress of Lord Mountjoy, may have felt for Sidney more than a sister's love, but in that case Sidney was hardly the man to compromise her by his verses. As Mr. Fox Bourne aptly puts it, "Sidney's friends evidently took the poems as works of fancy, with no greater basis of fact than served for the building thereon of an imaginative superstructure." In this respect, at any rate, Sidney's friends were wiser than some of his biographers have shown themselves.

In a biography of Sir Philip Sidney it is almost impossible perhaps not to glance at his father, Sir Henry. But Mr. Fox Bourne's knowledge of Irish history is evidently so imperfect, and his remarks so utterly infelicitous, that it is to be regretted that he did not confine himself strictly to the subject of his memoir, or at least that he did not add to his authorities the second volume of Mr. Bagwell's Ireland under the Tudors. Sir Henry Sidney was without question a very great man, and a faithful servant of the Crown; but he was not the deus ex machina in Irish affairs that Mr. Fox Bourne believes him to have been, nor were the Earl of Sussex, Lord Arthur Grey, and Sir William Fitzwilliam the bunglers he imagines them to have been. Finally, it seems necessary to remind Mr. Fox Bourne that the Lough Derg in which St. Patrick's Purgatory is situated is in County Donegal, and therefore not on the direct road from Dublin to Galway. R. DUNLOP.

The Forest Cantons of Switzerland. By J. Sowerby. (Percival.)

WE gather from the preface that this volume is intended for the instruction of the "superior" traveller, who wants to know something more about the inhabitants of the district than is to be found in the ordinary guide books, and yet does not want to take too much trouble over it. For his benefit Mr. Sowerby has got together a vast amount of information, throwing light on the history and character of Schwyz, Uri, Unterwalden, and Lucerne; and in something less than three hundred pages he resumes their history, their commerce, their language, their geology, their Flora and Fauna, their legends and social customs. His range is no less wide in point of time; for though he fairly starts from the twelfth century, he manages to devote a chapter to such modern achievements as the St. Gothard tunnel and the newly-opened railway up Pilatus. The book is in truth a most laborious compilation, and so packed with heterogeneous facts as to be calculated to satisfy the mental hunger, not to say try the mental digestion, of the stoutest-hearted tourist.

The historical narrative does not flow very smoothly, owing probably to the unequal steps of the authorities from which the compilation is made, and to a like cause we may refer the arbitrary fashion in which the proper names are dealt with. As the book is intended for popular use this is unfortunate; for though uniformity may not be essential in such a case, the least exigent reader may well ask why, if English Christian names are good enough for the Henrys and the Fredericks, the Alberts and Louises should claim to be called Albrecht and Ludwig. Still less excusable is Mr. Sowerby's practice to speak of Louis of Bavaria in one chapter, and then, without providing any ticket of identification, to bring him elsewhere on the scene as Ludwig IV., and the confusion of tongues fairly reaches its climax when St. Carlo is introduced as "Charles Berromous." The tale of the winning of Swiss liberty by the Wald-Stütte, their confederates and allies, is however, not inaccurately outlined; but the "spacing" of later events is very capricious, and the war with Charles le Téméraire is only dealt with in a passing allusion. Here and there too we come on passages which will rather puzzle than enlighten the casual reader. Thus (on page 15) we are told that "in 1231 Uri obtained from Henry VII. a charter declaring their immediate dependence on imperial authority." As the person known to historians as Henry VII. is the Emperor Henry of Luxemburg, who was not born at the date in question, this is most misleading, and insufficiently explained by a note fifteen pages later, to the effect that by Henry VII. is meant Henry, son of Frederick II. who was crowned King of the Romans at the age of ten and died in prison some twenty years afterwards. The statement that "the struggle with the Habsburgs was terminated in 1256 by the interregnum" is also far from intelligible; and equally so whether we interpret "the interregnum" as the interval between the death of Conrad IV. and the election of Richard of Cornwall, or, in its more usual sense, as the time from the death of the last Hohenstauffen Emperor to the election of the first Habsburg.

In dealing with matters of topography, architecture, local customs, and the like, the author's industry has had more satisfactory results, being backed up by much fuller knowledge, and an evident familiarity with people and places. The chapter on "Lucerne Canton and Town" is full of curious matter, and the sketch of the trade guilds, with their halls and their quarrels and their junketings, is excellent. The right of these close corporations to control trade was swept away when the first wave of the French Revolution broke on Switzerland. Since then (like guilds in more important cities) they have been chiefly ornamental bodies; but it is curious to note that, backward as they were, they anticipated the action of Lord Bramwell and the serjeants in the division of the corporate spoil. Before 1870, Mr. Sowerby tells us, they realised their property and divided it, each member of the baker and butcher guilds getting 3300 francs and each fisherman 2200.

The cantonal legends and fairy tales seem to be, as a rule, identical with those common to all Teutonic races, nor does the Swiss version of Jack the Giant Killer differ in any material respect from the English. Some, however, have a purely local colour; and the story of the strife between Uri and Glarus for the Urnerboden, and the death of the runner, takes us as far back as the republics of ancient Greece.

"To settle this question of boundary," says Mr. Sowerby, "it was arranged by the elders of either canton that on the day of the equinox a man should start at cockerow from either side [the starting-points, unfortunately, are not mentioned, but they were probably Altdorf and Linththal] and run towards the Klausen Pass, and that the point of their meeting should be the boundary. The runners were chosen, and both cantons endeavoured to ensure that the bird to give warning should be an early one. The men of Uri starved their bird, while the men of Glarus stuffed theirs. When the appointed day came the cock of Uri crowed when the dawn was scarcely visible in the heavens, and the runner started. But at Linththal the rosy light had filled the sky, the stars had paled, and still the cock slept. Half the parish with sad faces surrounded him, but it was a point of honour not to wake him. At last he spread his wings and crowed, and the man of Glarus started very much behind time. When he reached the top of the steep ascent above the fall of the Fatschbaeh, he perceived the Uri runner descending from the Pass and they soon met. 'Here,' shouted the man of Uri, 'is the boundary.' 'Nay,' said the Glarner, 'be just (?) and give me back a portion of the pastures you have won.' At last he consented to take the boundary back as far as the other could carry him up hill on his back. He struggled up a considerable way, but at last sank down and died under his load."

Not the least interesting chapter is one devoted to historic combats; though, as a matter of fact, it only describes two, the victory of Morgarten (the Swiss Marathon) in 1315 and the defeat of the Swiss under Reding on the same holy ground by the French in 1798. We own that we should like to have heard a little more about the fighting that crowned the edifice of liberty, the foundations of which were laid at Morgarten, and Sempach and Näfels. But as to this final struggle, in which Maximilian yielded to the Engadine peasants, Mr. Sowerby, not unreasonably, is silent; for it took place far away from Schwyz and Uri, Unterwalden and Lucerne, and the brunt of the battle fell on the Switzers of the Eastern highlands, not on the dwellers by the Western lakes.

REGINALD HUGHES.

NEW NOVELS.

- A Waking.* By Mrs. J. Kent Spender. 1 v. 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)
St. Michael's Eve. By W. H. de Winton. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)
Winter's Masterpiece. By Frederick Leal. In 2 vols. (Sonnenschein.)
The Daughters of Men. By Harriet Lynch. (Heinemann.)
In Fool's Paradise. By H. B. Finlay Knight. (Ward & Downey.)

The Sinner's Comedy. By John' Oliver Hobbes. (Fisher Unwin.)

Nada, the Lily. By H. Rider Haggard. (Longmans.)

The Bushranger's Sweetheart. By Hume Nisbet. (White.)

Mount Desolation. By W. Carlton Dawe. (Cassells.)

Elton Hazelwood. By Frederick George Scott. (Whittaker.)

A Waking is a study of one woman, and that a remarkable one, in three volumes. But the title is not quite accurate. For Zina Newbolt has not one awakening, but three. She first of all awakens to the knowledge that her father is a selfish humbug, who has ill-treated her mother, swindled the public, and spent his fortune regardless of his descendants. She awakens in the second place to the knowledge that her lover is a coward, who is not afraid, however, when occasion offers and in her hour of humiliation to offer her the consolations of the seducer. She awakens, finally, to the knowledge that her husband is a commonplace, and indeed coarsish, sensualist, who had a mistress when he marries her, and would not have greatly cared if his union with herself had also turned out to be an irregular one. A Waking is in reality the gradual discovery, by a woman of noble instincts and peculiar upbringing, of the evil that is in the world around her and of but little of the good. Mrs. Kent Spender manages this portion of her story with undoubted skill. Zina Newbolt—she never is, except in name, Zina Layton—is one of the most remarkable women that have appeared in recent fiction. Hardly inferior to her also, although in different “styles,” are the earnest Mary Carruthers, who consoles Zina, the frivolous Eva Capern, whose watchword is “compromise,” and George Layton, himself the good-natured and selfish, though not utterly bad, husband. Altogether A Waking is the best novel Mrs. Kent Spender has yet published.

A rather commonplace and too tragical tragedy, full of jealousy and “modern unrest”—this is St. Michael's Eve. Geoffrey Darell is a poor but aristocratic young man with a conscience and ambitions, who studies at Cambridge for the Church. But he learns to have “doubts”; the theological tripos proves too much for him; and he goes in for politics and private secretarieships. He is very much in love with Lilian Boscawen, who is “a lovely girl, with wondrous depths in her violet eyes, and her pale-gold hair twisted coronal-wise around her shapely head,” and is as simply orthodox as need be. But Mrs. Chaudos, a wealthy widow, is still more in love with Geoffrey, and—after he has saved her from drowning—says so in unmistakable language. She makes the most of Geoffrey's “doubts” to Lilian, who becomes a “Sister of Charity.” Finally she marries him, and makes him a politician in a considerable way. At last, “all comes out”; and after two terrible scenes, the first with the Sister, and the second with his wife, Geoffrey gets run over by a brewer's van, after saving a child, is nursed by the Sister, and dies. The writer shows a fair knowledge of politics—at least, politics in what is called Society—and of the religious movements of the day. He (or she) has written a tolerably readable book—tolerably readable, in spite of its conventionality.

Wynter is a novelist whose “master-piece” is a novel that makes “a boom” in the shortest time on record. He is engaged to be married to Gertrude Farningham, whose father is a fairly cautious man. But he has a rival, the aristocratic Darcy, who stoops at nothing to accomplish his ends, from unfair duelling to hiring a professional burglar to steal MSS., but who is really a very gentlemanly fellow, notwithstanding. But Wynter beats Darcy at his own weapons; and as he is discovered by Gertrude to have secretly befriended the woman who was really (though not in name) her brother Vivian's wife, and is (though not in name) that brother's widow, that young lady not only marries him, but adores him. Wynter's Masterpiece seems a juvenile performance, but has not a little of the freshness of juvenility. There is in it some really “good fun”—though thinnish—about Darcy's burglars.

The Daughters of Men is one of the cleverest, if not also the pleasantest, stories that have appeared for a long time. It is what it professes to be—a picture of modern Greek society—Parisianised (where it is not Anglicised), selfish, frivolous, sham—cynical. Realistic in a large measure, it recalls, however, the light touch of Daudet, not the large and repellent canvas of Zola. Inarime Selaka, of Tenos—simple, innocent, strong in her simplicity and innocence—who is allowed to attain the perfection of married happiness without being besmirched by the mud of the Athenian “world,” might well have been a member of the Joyeuse family in Le Nabab. Miss Lynch seems really more at home when she is with Inarime, and her father, and her Turkish lover, than with the voluptuaries, demagogues, butterflies, and fools of Athens. Yet some of these are very well sketched: in particular, the swaggering Bobadil, Captain Miltiades Karapoulos; his sister, Andromache; Stavros, the superbly impudent politician; Constantine Selaka (a Hellenic Bob Acres), and Agriopoulos, the rich merchant from Trieste—although there is too much of the moyen sensuel cockney about the last. But the best portrait in The Daughters of Men is Photini Natzelhuber, the pupil of Liszt and the rival of Rubinstein, a genius, a coarse sensualist, half mad and wholly kind-hearted. She ruins the life (at all events, the moral life) of Rudolph Ehrenstein, a simple, impressionable Austrian, and allows him to be entangled in a liaison with her, in which cognac plays a far more important part than passion. Still, it is impossible to do otherwise than pity her; she is the wreck of a good woman. Rudolph Ehrenstein is not so successful a portrait: he is too susceptible and disloyal; and his moral declension is a trifle too rapid, although this makes him all the better a foil to Inarime's husband, Reineke. It is difficult to say whether one admires the more in Miss Lynch's book the chatter and artificiality of modern Greek society, as they are to be found at Athens and Phalerum, or the repose and reality of life on an island in the Ægean.

There is a considerable amount of smartness, though a great deal also of rollicking satire, and surely an unnecessary amount of drinking, in In Fool's Paradise. But it is preposterously long and self-conscious. If the awfully funny passages, and the criticism, and the high jinks, and the whiskey debauches, and, above all, the appeals to Miss Smith of Kensington had been kept out at first, or could be taken out now, the tragic love affair of Belhouse and poor Alice would constitute a more than passable story. The author seems also to be familiar with the seamy side of the life led by law students and such like, and can describe it with a humour which is, however, too boisterous and exuberant. He has power, and when he has learned to discipline that power, will probably be able to write a really good novel.

Anything that Mr. Hobbes writes is sure to be clever, and The Sinner's Comedy is very clever. But the influence of Mr. Meredith and of some of the younger French novelists, if not also of the New Humourists, on style and thought, is too evident. It is not difficult to indicate the inspiration of “Mr. Digby Vallence was a gentleman of some fame who had translated Theocritus out of honesty into English, discovered a humourist in Jeremy Taylor, damned Rousseau, and in his leisure bred canaries”; or of “mingling sensuality”; or of “a gentleman with strong feelings and a limp backboae.” The story, too, is unnaturally and excessively cynical. Its title is a misnomer, for it is difficult to see where the “comedy” comes in—as we have nothing but tragedy—and quite impossible to say who the sinner is. She can hardly be Anna Christian, the artist saint, who is married to an unspeakable actor, although she is in the first instance quasi mistress to Sir Richard Kilcourse, and asks him to say “You don't care a damn,” when he leaves her, and in the second quasi mistress to Dean Sacheverell, and calls him “my very dearest” when she is on her deathbed. Some of the minor characters—in particular Anna Christian's landlady, and her uncle Legge, the melancholy professional humourist—are well and easily drawn. But on the whole The Sinner's Comedy is a rather unpleasant tour de force.

In Nada the Lily, we have the dregs of Mr. Rider Haggard's peculiar genius, and it is to be hoped the very last of his South African massacres. As an almost unrelieved story of killing, chiefly by Umslopogaas of the Axe, who is an old friend, it may delight schoolboys, although it would almost seem as if some even of these were wearying for the day when “the Rudyards shall cease from kipling, and the Haggards ride no more.” The sketch of Nada herself is the one redeeming feature of his story, the only thing that is worthy of the artist who drew Jess. Genuine, and not merely “bloody bones” power, too, is exhibited in the evolution of the remarkable Othello-Iago who tells the story, and who, dying in the guise of a witch-doctor, confesses that he accomplished the deaths of two kings and a prince.

Mr. Hume Nisbet is becoming too diffuse and possibly too ambitious. The Bushranger's Sweetheart covers more ground—at all events in the social sense—than any of his previous works, but it is not such a good literary performance as some of them, and it is not so interesting. Ostensibly it is based on actual facts in Australian history: the true hero, Captain Rainbow, is an idealised Ned Kelly. Very cleverly idealised he is, too: the closing scenes of his life, in which Trooper Thompson plays as important a part as himself, have all the power of true, as distinguished from forcibly feeble, realism. The larikin, impersonated by Stringy Bink, who is the perfection of the gamin, and who is fit for anything from running a newspaper to turning head over heels in the gutter, has never had so much justice done him as in this book. But the details of the seamy side of Australian life are too minute and too numerous. Mr. Nisbet has undoubtedly a good deal of Smollett's special power, but The Bushranger's Sweetheart—by the way, that sweetheart is a mere nonentity—is, in parts, too "Roderick Randomish."

The most that can be said of Mount Desolation is that it is a very cruel but also a very clever tragedy. That a young man, of reasonably good principles, and as much in love of the ennobling sort as was Richard Feverel with Lucy Desborough, should take to bank robbery and bushranging, if not murder, simply that he may extricate the father of his intended wife from the clutches of a rival, is too much of a trespass on conceivability. But Mr. Dawe might have been excused the extreme improbability of his story if it had ended well; if, in other words, Tom Stanford had escaped at the end, instead of being struck by the despicable Wingrove's bullet. But Mr. Dawe has a perfect right to write an unmixed tragedy if he chooses, and such Mount Desolation unquestionably is. It is distinctly a tragedy, too, of Australia—full of the natural horrors of that great continent, as well as of those which diversify the half-savage, half-civilised lives of its inhabitants. There is not one of the characters that is not well-drawn, although Wingrove, the member, is surely a trifle too brutal. Both Tom Stanford, the amateur bushranger, and Jack Devine, his professional chum, are excellent sketches. Mount Desolation is refreshingly well written.

Elton Hazlewood is less a novel than the portrait of an essentially noble nature, disciplined by misfortunes into self-sacrifice; and, as such, it is deserving of considerable praise, although the lesson that the book teaches is essentially commonplace. The purpose of the story is given in this sentence which deals with Hazlewood's moral life as a curate: "All his former intellectual powers were there, but they were brought into a healthy proportion and subordination to the sense of duty to God and the personal love of Jesus, which had become the mainspring of his life." There is a trifle too much "purpose" in Elton Hazlewood, and a note of Bulwer Lyttonian excess, alike in the contrasts of Elton's life, and in the sublimity of his final surrender of his own life to save his enemy from a miserable existence worse than death.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME CLASSICAL BOOKS.

Plutarch's Life of Themistocles. With Introduction, Critical, and Explanatory Notes by H. A. Holden. Third edition, revised and enlarged. (Macmillans.) Dr. Holden's edition of Plutarch's Themistocles has been so far rewritten and so considerably amplified that it is virtually a new book. The commentary is hardly perhaps yet as full as in some other of the works which the editor has published of late years. The notes are briefer, and the index (one object of which is, no doubt, to make future research easier to other students) is not quite complete. For instance, the word φθέρεσθαι, which occurs in a somewhat obscure phrase in c. 15, is passed over in the index. Not all the passages cited in a note on c. 3 for πρὸς αὐτὸν εἶναι (γίγνεσθαι) belong to the meaning "to be by oneself." On the other hand, the account of συμφορεῖν (c. 28) is a model of what a note on the senses and constructions of a verb should be. The introduction, which sets forth how the Lives are related to the Moralia of Plutarch, and shows at what points this particular Life ceases to be credible, is an excellent piece of brief and clear writing. The commentary of course has to touch on a great variety of matters, and Dr. Holden's wide reading enables him to throw light upon a surprisingly large number of points. We should have liked to hear his opinion on the passage of the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία, c. 22, in which the silver mines of Attica are said to have come to light (ἐφάνη) only after Marathon, in 484 B.C. This statement, which appears to contradict Xenophon (De Vect. 4. 2), also seems at variance with Plut. Them. 4, where Plutarch says that it was "customary" (in or about 494) for the Athenians to divide τὴν Λαυρεωτικὴν πρόσδοον; but it is defended by Mr. Kenyon in his third edition of "Aristotle" by drawing a distinction, which is not perhaps worth much, between the mines of Laurium and those of Maroneia. In the Life of Themistocles c. 4, l. 9, we are not sure that Dr. Holden is right in understanding οἱ κηρύτται to mean the Coreyreans especially. The statement of Plutarch is that κατεῖχον οἱ ν. πλήθει νεὺν τὴν θάλασσαν, when Athens was at war with Aegina, and therefore Athens must build ships. The Coreyreans have not been named, and why need we suppose them to have been in the mind of Plutarch—or of Themistocles? Athens did not build ships to face the Coreyreans, and we should think that Plutarch meant the only islanders whom Athens had to fear, namely, the Aeginetans. As to c. 18, l. 43, "a good neighbour" is surely an advantage, not a disadvantage. But, in spite of slips, from which no one ever was or will be free, the study of Plutarch in this country owes a great deal to the energy and the scholarship of Dr. Holden.

Plutarch's Lives of the Gracchi. Edited with Introduction, Notes, and Indices, by G. E. Underhill. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Mr. Underhill's edition of Plutarch's Gracchi will scarcely make so favourable an impression as his Hellenica of Xenophon. The introduction is the best part of it; for here we have a very careful comparison of what is told us about the Gracchi by Plutarch, by Appian, by Cicero, and by minor writers, and Mr. Underhill shows a most judicious caution in his conclusions. It appears, he says, that "All efforts to trace back any considerable portion of Plutarch's Lives of the Gracchi to their original sources are from the very nature of the case futile. In the absence of any direct evidence, one hypothesis is as good as another."

He follows, too, the excellent plan of quoting in full the authors whom he compares with Plutarch. But the commentary is somewhat thin and superficial, and not altogether free from mistakes. It may only show want of finish that p. 3 speaks of Ptolemy Euergetes and fails to point out that, while there was more than one king of that name, it is the less famous one who is meant. But we cannot find that there is any discussion of the disputed dates of the births of the Gracchi; and the notes on Tib. G. avoid all discussion of the question what sort of voting-urns are meant by ὄβριαι. On p. 28 the uses of ἐξόμνησθαι and εἰπύεσθαι are apparently confused. In G. G. i., ἡσυχῇ διαφραίνεσθαι, κ.τ.λ., is mistranslated "quickly allowed his real character to be seen." In c. 12 Gaius' colleagues did not "refuse" to declare him elected tribune for the third time. They cheated, ἀδίκως καὶ κακὰργῶς παρηλατάντων τὴν διαγόρευσιν (cf. κακαυρήσαντες in c. 17). In the same chapter also αὐτῶν does not signify "by means of the laws," but is dative after ἐπέβαν τὴν ψήφον, "to put them to the vote." An exactly similar phrase occurs in Tib. G. ii. Is it true, again, as a note on p. 74 implies, that Gaius had seen much military service in Italy? On p. 75 "little inferior" is probably a misprint, for the Greek is οὐκ ὀλίγῳ ὑστερον.

The Crito of Plato. With Introduction and Notes by St. George Stock. (Oxford: Clarendon Press Series.) A serviceable little book, in which Mr. Stock, not aiming at a very high class of scholars, has been content to take the text of the Zürich editors and explain it as he finds it. His notes are brief, plain, sufficient in number, and seldom misleading. It is not, however, as sure as Mr. Stock seems to think it, that Plato's final judgment was that γυμναστική has for its true end to wake up the spirited element in the soul. The Republic, p. 521e, may give him pause on that point. In the Crito again (p. 53b), the laws are made to address Socrates and say, "If you break prison, βιβαίωσεις τοῖς δικασταῖς τὴν δόξαν," where Mr. Stock translates, "You will be establishing the reputation of the jurors." No doubt the words, taken alone, would bear this rendering; but the connexion of thought in the passage is distinctly in favour of making them mean, "You will confirm your jury in their belief that you are a law-breaker"—in which way, we notice, Mr. Church takes them in his spirited translation. On the whole, the new edition may be recommended to the younger students at our universities.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co.—to whose enterprise as publishers of colonial books we have repeatedly borne witness—now have in the press a Life of the doyen of colonial statesmen, Sir George Grey, whose long career has been almost co-extensive with the growth of British rule in the Southern hemisphere. Not only was he governor successively of South Australia, of the Cape, and of New Zealand, at troublous times in the history of those colonies; but by making his home in New Zealand, he has identified himself with its politics of to-day. The natural history, the ethnology, and the languages of each of these colonies have also been the subject of his special study, the memory of which will ever be preserved by his valuable donations to the public libraries and museums at Cape Town and Auckland. The authors of the forthcoming book are Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Rees, who have had the advantage of access to Sir George's papers, including letters from Humboldt and Darwin, Sir John Franklin and Colenso, Livingstone and Speke, Carlyle, Huxley, and Frowde.

WE are informed that the old-established business of Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., publishers to the India Office, has passed into new hands, and will be continued under the same name at the same address (13, Waterloo-place). It is understood that the issue of Oriental works, for which the house has long been celebrated, will remain a special feature of the business.

THE new volume of the "Badminton Library," on Mountaineering, will be published before the end of the present month. The greater part of it is written by Mr. C. T. Dent; but Mr. Justice Wills contributes an introduction, and there are also special chapters on the early history of mountaineering by Sir Frederick Pollock, on maps and guide books by Mr. W. M. Conway (who is now mountaineering in a part of the world where there are neither), on mountaineering beyond the Alps by Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield, on climbing without guides and hill-climbing in the British Isles by Mr. Charles Pilkington, &c. The volume will be illustrated with thirteen plates and ninety-five woodcuts in the text, by Mr. H. G. Willink and others.

AN edition of the earliest English and the first printed translation of the De Imitatione Christi, by Dr. Ingram, of Trinity College, Dublin, will appear as one of the volumes for 1893 in the extra series of the Early English Text Society.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co. will publish shortly an authorised translation of a work that created some stir when it appeared two years ago at Vienna—Antagonismus der Englischen und Russischen Interessen in Asien, with a map embodying the latest information.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a volume of country sketches in the Cumberland Lake district, by Mr. Samuel Barber, under the title of Beneath Helvellyn's Shade.

MR. J. A. FROUDE's latest book, The Story of the Spanish Armada and other Essays, will be re-issued immediately in a cheaper edition.

THE next volume of the "Scott Library" will consist of a reprint of The Biglow Papers, with a prefatory note by Mr. Ernest Rhys.

MESSRS. HAZELL, WATSON & VINEY have in the press a new and enlarged edition of Mr. W. P. Treloar's Ludgate Hill, Past and Present, with numerous illustrations.

THE efforts of Mr. W. A. Copinger, of Manchester, to promote the recognition of bibliography as an exact science, by the foundation of a Bibliographical Society, have at last borne fruit. A public meeting will be held in support of the proposal on Friday next, July 15, at 4 p.m., in the rooms of the Library Association, Hanover-square. Among those who have issued the invitation to this meeting are—Dr. Richard Garnett, Chancellor Christie, Prof. John Fergusson, Prof. Henry Morley, Mr. Charles Welch, Mr. H. B. Wheatley, Mr. W. C. Hazlitt, Mr. Sidney Lee, and Mr. J. R. Dore.

THE Shelley centenary will be celebrated at Bedford Park on Thursday next, July 14, at 3 o'clock p.m., by a vocal recital, and also by a performance of some scenes from "The Cenci," in which Miss Florence Farr, Miss Ella Dresser, and Mr. Orlando Barnett will play Beatrice, Bernardo, and Camillo. As the performance is a private one, admission can only be gained by early application to Mr. Pitney, the Club House, Bedford-park.

THE committee which undertook the purchase and maintenance of Dove-cottage, Grasmere, in which the Wordsworths lived for so long, report that the experiment has been in every way a success. The number of visitors during the summer months averages about eighty a week, a figure which will be largely increased as soon as the facts about the cottage become better known. But already the money obtained from admissions is sufficient to make the scheme self-supporting. Various interesting gifts have been received by the committee, among others two portraits of Wordsworth and one of De Quincy, some chairs with wool-work seats bearing Dorothy Wordsworth's initials, a four-post bed said on good authority to have been used by Wordsworth.

WEDNESDAY last was the occasion of a numerous gathering of Muhammadans at the mosque of the Oriental University Institute, Woking, including representatives from India, Turkey, Arabia, and Persia, who assembled for the purpose of celebrating the 'Id uzzuhâ. The Ottoman embassy was represented by its Imam, who conducted the prayers.

THERE is at present in the library of St. Paul's school, on loan, a MS. volume consisting of Latin speeches delivered by the boys during the last years of the seventeenth century and the early years of the eighteenth, when Dr. Postlethwayte was high master. Those of the speeches that were delivered to the examiners throw light upon the curriculum of the time. In the highest class, special mention is made of Hebrew, and there is even an allusion to Arabic. The next class read Homer, Theocritus, Virgil, and Cicero. Lower down the authors studied appeared to have been Hesiod, Eutropius, Lucian, and Terence. But the most interesting passage of all is to be found in the speech delivered by the captain of the school at the Apposition of 1702. After the mention of other old members of the school, we read: "Hic Malburius denique ab ipso Caesare Gallos domare et Gallorum injuriis vicinas gentes fueri didicit." This is said to be the only contemporary evidence for the tradition that the great Duke of Marlborough was a Pauline.

THE new edition of the "Cambridge Shakspeare," edited by Mr. W. Aldis Wright (Macmillans), has now progressed as far as Volume VII., which contains the following plays: "Timon of Athens," "Julius Caesar," "Macbeth," and "Hamlet." In a note to the original preface, Mr. Aldis Wright re-affirms his opinion with regard to the 1603 quarto of "Hamlet," which he expressed in the Clarendon Press edition of that play (1871):—

"That there was an old play on the story of Hamlet, some portions of which are still preserved in the quarto of 1603; that, about the year 1603, Shakspeare took this and began to remodel it for the stage, as he had done with other plays; that the quarto of 1603 represents the play after it had been re-touched by him to a certain extent, but before his alterations were complete; and that in the quarto of 1604 we have for the first time the Hamlet of Shakspeare."

In the notes to this edition, use has been made of MS. annotations by Warburton in a copy of his edition (1747), and also of a scarce anonymous edition of Hamlet (12mo, 1718), which is now in the Shakspeare Memorial Library at Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

DR. JAMES SULLY has been appointed to the Grote chair of mind and logic at University College, London, vacant by the resignation of Prof. Croom Robertson.

PROF. T. H. HUXLEY has accepted the presidency of the Association for Promoting a Professorial University for London, and Sir Henry E. Roscoe has been requested to act as a vice-president. Subscriptions towards the necessary expenses of the executive committee may be sent to the treasurer, Prof. T. E. Thorpe, Royal College of Science. Among those who have joined the association, we may mention the following from Oxford: The Rev. Dr. Franck Bright, Prof. R. B. Clifton, Prof. A. H. Green, Prof. E. Ray Lankester, Mr. R. W. Macan, Prof. F. Max Müller, Prof. Henry Nettleship, Prof. H. F. Pelham, Mr. E. B. Poulton, Mr. York Powell, Prof. Sayce, Prof. Storey Maskelyne, and Prof. Joseph Wright; and among those from Cambridge: Mr. Arthur Berry, Mr. Oscar Browning, Dr. A. R. Forsyth, Dr. R. T. Glazebrook, Dr. S. J. Hickson, Dr. Alexander Hill, Mr. J. N. Langley, Mr. J. Larmor, Prof. J. H. Middleton, Mr. Adam Sedgwick, and Dr. James Ward. The Londoners and representatives of provincial colleges are too numerous to mention here; but the staff of King's College, London, is conspicuous by its absence.

THE recent tripos lists at Cambridge contain the names of no less than ten natives of India, of whom three are Muhammadans and one is a woman. It is still more noteworthy that one appears in the first class in classics, and another among the Wranglers.

AT Dublin the week has been given up to tercentenary festivities. Upon Tuesday morning the Provost received the guests at 10 a.m.; and as soon as the presentations were finished, the delegates marched in their robes to St. Patrick's Cathedral to attend the commemoration service. The anthem, "I beheld, and lo! a great multitude," was the same as that used nearly two hundred years ago at the centenary in 1694. In the afternoon the Provost entertained the guests at a garden party, when Miss Salmon planted a new mulberry tree near the old one, which is famed for its age and historic associations. The ode written by Prof. Armstrong, and set to music by Sir Robert Stewart, was performed at 9 p.m.; and many of the guests finished the evening at a ball and reception at the Mansion House.

AT noon upon Wednesday a special Commencement was held for the conferring of the honorary degrees, which were offered to more than eighty of the guests. The new degrees of Doctor of Letters and Doctor of Science, being intended solely as special marks of distinction and not obtainable by examination, were most largely distributed. The former was given to thirty-four, including Prof. Max Müller, Prof. Arminius Vambéry, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Dr. James Martineau, Mr. Henry Irving, and Sir Frederic Leighton. The latter to thirty, including the Rev. H. W. Dallinger, and Baron Nordenskjöld. Lord Armstrong and three others obtained the degree of Master of Engineering. The two other professional degrees in Law and Medicine granted amounted to fourteen, and there was one Doctor in Music. In the afternoon there was a garden party at the Viceregal Lodge, and the evening was devoted to the college and students' banquets.

UPON Thursday the delegates of other universities marched in procession to the Leinster Hall, and presented their addresses of congratulation to the Chancellor. A dramatic performance was given in the evening by a company of students, assisted by the ladies of Mr. Compton's Comedy Company. "The Rivals" was preceded by a farce written for the occasion, under the appropriate title of "Botany Bay" after a well-known college quadrangle.

UPON Friday the students were to be addressed by several of the guests. Prof.

Waldeyer, of Berlin; Prof. F. Blass, of Kiel; M. Léon Say, of the French Institute; Prof. A. Vambéry, of Buda-Pesth; Prof. Max Müller, of Oxford; Prof. L. Cremona, of Rome; Prof. B. Stockvis, of Amsterdam; and Gen. F. A. Walker have promised to speak.

MR. WILLIAM URWICK, a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, who has previously produced valuable contributions to the history of Non-conformity, has taken occasion of the tercentenary to put together some notes on the foundation and early years of his Alma Mater (Fisher Unwin). He bases himself largely upon original documents at the Public Record Office and elsewhere, which he affirms have not been consulted by the Rev. Dr. J. W. Stubbs; and his main object is to prove the Puritan character of the original foundation. The most interesting document that he prints is one of the Cromwellian MSS. in the possession of Mrs. Prescott, showing the intention of Henry Cromwell, when Lord Deputy, to found a New College, with endowments equal to those of Trinity, and also public professorships and a public library. It was for this proposed public library, as it would seem, and not directly for Trinity College, that Archbishop Usher's books were purchased by the English army of the parliament in Ireland. Mr. Urwick's attitude is controversial; but the facts that he brings forward cannot be ignored by any future historian of Dublin University.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

BY THE NORTUMBERLAND ARMS.

Tartarean blackness! Moon and starshine bright, Blurred by a thousand chimneys' murderous fumes;
There a great factory through the darkness looms—
A hideous, half-seen monster of the night.
Here a gaunt prison human souls entombs,
And down the dreary street, to left and right,
The flickering gas lamps throw a feeble light,
And every alley poisonous scents exhumes.
Noises there are of waggous lumbering on,
Of whips cracked over horses weak and lean,
Of children's voices—all their sweetness gone—
Laughter of hungry men at jests obscene
Hurled at a woman—drunken, pale and wan—
Striving to earn a kiss with smile unclean.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

OBITUARY.

DR. VILHJÁLMI FINSON.

THIS learned Icelandic jurist died at Copenhagen, on June 24, from the results of a street accident about a month earlier. Born at Reykjavík on April 1, 1823, he was educated in the Latin School at Bessastaðir and at the University of Copenhagen. After leaving the University in 1846, he entered the government service, and was appointed to judicial office in Iceland, sitting as judge extraordinary of the High Court (1854-59), and as royal member of the Icelandic Althing. In 1860 he left Iceland, and successively held the positions of judge of the Viborg High Court, judge in the Copenhagen High Court (1860), and finally judge in the Supreme Court from 1871 to 1888, when he retired to devote the rest of his life to the study of the old Icelandic law.

He was member of the Arna-Magnean Committee and of the Danish Academy of Sciences, gold medallist of the University of Copenhagen (1878), and Doctor Juris honoris causa at the fourth centenary of the same university (1879). It is much to be regretted that our English universities should have been oblivious of his claims to honour at their hands, as one of those who had done most to promote the scientific and historic study of Teutonic law.

His chief fame will probably rest upon his admirable and correct editions of the Grágas MSS.; Codex Regius (1850-70), Codex Stadholarensis (1879), Codex Skalholtensis (1883). These were supplemented by his clear and forcible dissertations on Family Law (1848), on the Icelandic Law of the Commonwealth (1873), on Certain Institutions of the Commonwealth (1888).

Finson was a man of singularly fine presence and serene address, tall and handsome, with a good voice and beautiful enunciation; and he was worthy in every way of the respect in which he was held, and of the noble family to which he belonged. He did his work with quiet simplicity and correctness, never wasting a word or neglecting any means that might secure the exactness he laboured to attain. He was well acquainted with English, and with much literature beside that relating to law. He was the friend of every distinguished Icander of his day, and engaged the confidence of his countrymen no less than that of the Danish Government, of whose Supreme Court he was so notable a member. He will be remembered with Unger and Vigfússon, as one of those who have placed the MS. treasures of their country's past beyond risk of accidental destruction and within reach of students; as an historical lawyer his place is beside Konrad von Maurer, Schlyter, and Sigurdsson, the veteran pioneers of the study of Scandinavian legal antiquities. His many friends will long deplore his loss, and regret his calm kindly presence.

TH. P.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

In the Antiquary for July the Rev. Samuel Barber, though, as he honestly tells the reader, he has been but three weeks in the neighbourhood, has written an interesting account of Shelton Church, Nottinghamshire. It would seem that there was once a Norman Church, which was "restored" in the Early English time. Mr. Barber thinks that the round columns are probably remains of the older structure. The church contains a noteworthy object in the shape of a grave slab which we will provisionally call Saxon. It is covered with interlaced work, seemingly of very bold character. Much doubt exists in the minds of experts as to the date of objects bearing this kind of ornament. They are common in Ireland, have been found in many parts of England, and Miss Stokes, in her recently-published work on the Apennines, draws attention to the existence of stones bearing almost identical ornamentation in Italy. By whom ever made, there cannot be a reasonable doubt that the Shelton stone represents the wattled work of willow wands by which the newly-made graves in the sculptor's day were protected. We wish Mr. Barber had not given the engraving of an inscription in the church wall, as we feel quite sure that it is not an accurate reproduction of the original. The marks given in the engraving do not represent characters used in any language living or dead. Mr. W. H. St. John Hope has a very short paper on the Romano-British church, which he believes to have been found at Silchester. His conclusion seems to us correct, and if it be so it is not easy to exaggerate the importance of the discovery. Mr. Ward continues his "Notes on Archaeology in Provincial Museums." He deals on this occasion with Shrewsbury, where are stored many Roman relics from the dead city of Uriconium. Viscount Dillon has contributed a gossiping paper on "Funeral Baked Meats," which does not much increase our stock of knowledge; and Mr. Peacock has a paper on "The Eagle," a local name on the Ouse and the Trent for the tidal wave which on the Severn goes by the name of the "bore," and on the Seine by the seemingly kindred word la barre.

THE HONORARY DEGREES AT DUBLIN.

THE following are the Latin Speeches that were delivered at the tercentenary on the occasion of the conferring of honorary degrees at Trinity College, Dublin, on Wednesday, July 6.

The speeches were delivered by Mr. R. Y. Tyrrell, the Regius Professor of Greek, in the much-regretted absence (through illness) of the Public Orator, Prof. A. Palmer:

GENERAL ADDRESS TO DELEGATES AND RECIPIENTS OF HONORARY DEGREES.

"Nolo occasione tam faustae rem lugubrem ingerere, sed facere non possum quin hic requiram facundiam ingenitam et sales natos Oratoris nostri Publici. Deus faxit emergit ex aegritudine salvis illis qui in medullis ac visceribus eius haerent. Utinam ille adesset dignus cui hoc opus tam snave mandaretur.

"Tam perlicundum nobis quam honorificum officium praestitistis, viri clarissimi, quos tot tantaeque Universitates legaverunt laetitiae nostrae acceptos socios et laudis benevolentissimos propagatores. Cum hunc concessum intueor a quo paene nihil eruditi abest nihil exquisiti nihil laudati et vere laudandi, sive contempler illos (qui in litteris et artibus excolendis grandia sibi monumenta exegerunt, sive quibus Natura ipsa tanquam sub iugum missa genibus minor arcana sua occultissima patefecit ac reddidit; sive philosophos qui veri vias indagant; sive pictores poetas histiones qui falsis fictisque rerum animos delectant; video in omni parte viros quos palmam meritis ferre uno ore omnes fatentur. Inexhaustam mebereule conditionandi materiam consideranti commodum mihi in mentem venit decantati illius apophthegmatis quo quis dicitur sylvam praepararibus ridere non posse.

"Adsunt salutatrices Oxonia et Cantabrigia, gemini Angliae oculi, duae litterarum arces, selenitiae faces. Adsunt Academiae Londini et Dunelmi et Walliae et illae quibus nomen indidit eadem Regina (quam Deus salvam faciat!) in Hibernia Reginae et Regale, in Anglia Victoriae. Adest Caledonia, altrix terra exsuperantum virum. Manus trans mare amicissimas porrigunt Germania Gallia Italia, fontes illi venerandi doctrinae artiumque. Porrigit trans Oceanum America. A Sarmatis, ab Herculis columnis, ab India mittunt Europa Africa Asia gratulatores; ab ultimis terrae partibus veniunt in communionem gaudii nostri Universitates toto orbe divisa, toto corde coniunctae.

"Hoc mihi solum scrupulum iniecit quod minutim ita quemque virum ornare ut singulas praestantiae partes persequar ventant angustis temporis limites. Ipsa materia ubertas hunc finem statuit. Viros singulares utinam singulos decorare licuisset, quod cum fieri non possit in uniuscuiusque generis laudatione mihi acquiescendum est."

MASTERS OF ENGINEERING.

"Prae-honorable Cancellarie totaque Universitas libenter sane ad vos duco viros summates arti machinali deditos et in hac provincia plume principes. Quis nescit fulmina tormentorum illorum quibus nomen dedit ille Armstrong? Quis aestuarium illud ingenti pontis mole iunctum? Quis artis ingeniariae tot domi militariae tropaea? Aemulos nunc habent illi

"Bronzesque Steropesque et nudus membra Pyramon."

Horum sub manibus Daedaleis vera evadunt

"Velicatus Aethos et quidquid Graecia mendax Audet in historia."

DOCTORS OF LETTERS.

1.

Classical Scholars.

"Antiquitatis Graecae et Romanae admiratio cognitio tractatio perpetua silvestrem animum exuere homines praecipue docent et ad summum usum cultumque vitae producunt. Haec res praecipue in omni libero populo maximeque in pacatis tranquillisque civitatibus semper floruit semperque iusto dominatu regnavit. Illorum qui hic adstant virorum in explicandis exemplaribus illis antiquis quanta vis sit et ubertas, quantum lumen et acumen in emendandis, in imitandis quanta ars et elegantia—haec omnia si perscui explicatus nunc aggrediar, vereor ne videar doctos edocere velle. Ante oculos habemus fontes ipsos e quibus redundavit in hanc Academiam doctrina—criticos, interpretes, Musarum omnium cultores, quorum libros legendo contrivimus, quorum dicta ut aurea arripimus, viros quos tota haec Academia suspicit, summisque laudibus efferendos censet."

II.

Theologians, Historians, Oriental Scholars, Metaphysicians, English Scholars, and Men of Letters.

"In hosce viros egregios, Praehonorabilis Cellularie totaque Universitatis, cadere arbitror paene omnia illa quae de litterarum antiquarum cultoribus iam praedicavi. Studiorum viam eandem affectant, sed studia alii alia ornant. Alii rebus divinis faciem praeferunt, alii vel litterarum nostratum origines indagant, vel ipsi illas litteras libris exquisitis ditant, alii papyris avaris abditos thesauros extorquent, alii linguas Orientales exponendas vel historiam conscribendam cum omnium laude suscipiunt. Aliis denique cordi est.

'rerum cognoscere causas,' et Favorini illius vestigiis insistere qui grande hoc praeconium de Mente fecit:

'Nil Hominem praeter magni tenet Orbis, et in se Nil magni Mentem praeter Homo ipse suam.'

III.

Artists.

"Salutavimus eos qui doctrinae ipsos foutes adierunt et qui mentis humanae penetrabilia rimati divinas rationes hominibus commendaverunt. Nunc eos accipiamus qui vitae hodiernae deliciis voluptatibusque inserviunt. Adstant alter Apelles alter Parrhasius Leighton et Alma Tadema; hic cuius arte reviviscit nobis orbis antiquus novisque se deliciis induit; ille

'coloribus'

Sollers nunc hominem ponere nunc deum.'

Sed quid dico? Non solum pictorem insignem Academiae Regali praepositum sed

'quemvis hominem attulit ad nos' oratorem, sculptorem, poetam, fidicinem.

'Paullum scerera Musa Tragoediae Desit theatris.'

Paullum requirat Lycaeam illud Londinense histrionum principem, dum nostra laurea dignus sane donetur. Quam singulari ingenio quam nova arte quam spectabili existimatione Hemius Irving ad tantum fastigium escenderit noster omnes. Hoc tamen libet in memoriam vobis revocare hanc Academiam primam, vel certe in primis, agnovisse eius inter Tragoedias principatum. Numquam, quod memini, magis fervebat Theatrum Regale quam cum ille Hamletum agens omnium animos et oculos rapuit. Nunc iterum cum eadem alacritate salutantium Roscium nostrum

'concurrat dextra sinistrae.'

DOCTOR OF MUSIC.

"Ad salutandum hominem modos musicos componendi tam peritum ipsius artem adeo, et Musicam virginem caelestem ut caelo descendat rogo atque oro."

DOCTORS OF SCIENCE.

I.

Anatomists, Physiologists, Botanists, Zoologists, Geologists.

"Ut fornix pulchra geminis pilis sic duabus scientiis subtilibus Anatomia et Physiologia tota Ars Medica innititur. Sed his duabus adiuvandis et ornandis praesto sunt quasi promptae ancillae vel sorores bene morigerae tres sollertes scientiae quae Crystallorum, Herbarum, Animantium cognitioni se dicant et dedunt. Harum artium et scientiarum ipsa decora, ipsa lumina, ipsos flores duco ad vos novi Doctoratus purpura decorandos, quam felicissime auspiciuntur."

II.

Chemists and Physicists.

"Artes Chemicæ et Physicæ paene in nostra memoria in auctus immensos progressae sunt vel potius prosiluerunt. In Astronomiæ fines irruptione facta arcanæ vel ipsis Astronomis abstrusa detexerunt. Paene moribundum Comptius ille questus est nihil nos ullo tempore de sole et stellis praeter motus scituros esse. Vix mortem obierat cum spectroscopium ipsa ignium caelestium elementa et ipsam concretionem nobis patefecit, quam cum explicasset—rem ad id temporis penitus absconditam et plane desperatam—etiam de motibus nonnihil addocuit."

III.

Mathematicians.

"Mathematicae cultores insignes ad vos duco. Mixta cum pavore mihi verecundia subest hanc vim excogitandi hanc notionis immensitatem contemplanti.

'Maris et terrae numeroque carentis harenæ Mensores'

qui stellas in trutinam iaciunt et solem ipsum ad aequum pondus examinant, quo modulo aequem, ego qui litteris antiquis deditus Mathematicae vix ad limen primum adii? Quid agam? Quo me vertam? Heia! Animum recipio. Ad Graecam linguam provo. O infinitas linguae Graecæ opes, per quas etiam vobis, Geometrae, spero me memet approbatum, cum commendem fontem unde fluxerit commentationibus vestris tam comoda notatiuncularum copia."

IV.

Astronomers.

"Astronomi eximii quos nunc ad vos duco alii siderum cursus et motus numeris persequendo et positus ac spatia dimetiendo, alii caelum ipsum spectando, considerando, observando omnes optima de scientia meriti sunt. Praeclaro sane studio se dederunt et splendidis poetæ verbis non indigno:

*'Felicis animae quibus haec cognoscere primis
Inque domos superas scandere cura fuit!
Credibile est illos pariter viliisque locisque
Altius humanis exersuisse caput.
Admoveat oculis distantia sidera nostris.
Aetheraque ingenio supponere suo.
Sic petitur caelum.'*

DOCTORS OF MEDICINE.

Physicians and Surgeons.

"Ad Doctoratum Medicinae accipiendum praesto sunt viri fama omnes super aethera noti. Utinam omnes laudibus idoneis efferre vacaret. Sed Hippocratem illum, huius artis saluberrimae et venerandissimae paene auctorem, videor mihi videre adstantem et admonentem iucundo hoc munere esse supersedendum, brevem enim esse vitam longam artem."

DOCTORS OF LAWS.

Jurists and Political Economists.

"Gradum doctoratus in legibus, qui olim apud nos longe latius patebat, nunc ad ornandos homines iuris peritos et scientiae illi gravi deditos quam nonnulli lugubrem temere dicunt repositum conservamus. In his studiis viros qui omnium consensu familiam ducunt libenter vobis in conspectum propono."

GENERAL ADDRESS.

"Nunc, viri illustres qui in Album nostrum nomina vestra honoratissima relaturi estis, hoc tantum mihi restat ut nostrae Academiae gratuler tantis opibus hodie ditatae, et vos hortor ut laetae rei laeti adsitis. Meministis sine dubio nomen quondam inditum esse huic Academiae Sorori Tacitae. Sit nunc tacita, sit loquax, sit qualiscunque: saltem hoc fausto die, cum tam electum gratulantium chorum sui honoris causa confluisse videt, ut Latoniae apud Virgilium sic nunc illius

'Tactum pertentant gaudia pectus.'

Gratum opus explicem poetæ verbis:

'Tantum est: calete, bene rem gerite, et vineite Virtute vera, quod fecistis antithæc.'

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

FÜRSTER, R. Eduard Lübbert. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 80 Pf.
KIPPENBERG, A. Robinson, in Deutschland bis zur Insel Felsenburg (1731-43). E. Beitrag zur Literaturgeschichte d. 18. Jahrh. Hannover: Goedel. 8 M. 60 Pf.
MILLER, René. Les grands écrivains français: Rabelais. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
WEHRMANN, die türkische, u. die Armeen der Balkanstaaten Bulgarien, Griechenland, Rumänien, Serbien u. Montenegro. Von H. A. Wien. 4 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

LIPSJUS, R. A. Luthers Lehre v. der Busse. Braunschweig: Schwetschke. 5 M.
RÜEGG, A. Die testamentliche Textkritik seit Lachmann. Ein Versuch zur Orientierung. Zürich: Orell Füssli. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SCHWABE, A. Untersuchungen üb. die äussere Entwicklung der afrikanischen Kirche m. besond. Verwertung der archäologischen Funde. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 7 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

CHABAVAY, E. Correspondance générale de Carnot. T. 1. Paris: Hachette. 12 fr.
DUFLESSIS, Ch. L'Équitation en France: ses écoles et ses maîtres depuis le 15^e siècle jusqu'à nos jours. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 10 fr.
KARLOWA, O. Römische Rechtsgeschichte. 2. Bd. 1. Abtlg. Leipzig: Veit. 13 M.
LETAINTURIER-FRADIN, G. Le Duel à travers les âges. Paris: Flammarion. 12 fr.
LUCRAIRE, A. Manuel des Institutions françaises: période des Capétiens directs. Paris: Hachette. 15 fr.
MARTENS, F. de. Recueil des traités et conventions conclus par la Russie avec les Puissances étrangères. T. IX. Traité avec l'Angleterre (1710-1801). St. Petersburg: Zinsserling. 15 fr.
MONCEAUX, P. La Grèce avant Alexandre: étude sur la société grecque du VI^e au IV^e siècle. Paris: May & Motteroz. 4 fr.
PEIRESC, Lettres de, aux frères Dupuy, p.p. Ph. Tamisey de Larroque. T. 3. 1631-1637. Paris: Hachette. 12 fr.
REINHARDT, G. Der Perserkrieg d. Kaisers Julian. Cöthen: Bihling. 1 M. 50 Pf.
SAY, Léon. Cobden: Ligne contre les lois céréales, et discours politiques. Paris: Guillaumin. 2 fr. 50 c.
SCHLIEFF, E. Der Friede in Europa. Eine völkerrechtlich-polit. Studie. Leipzig: Veit. 10 M.
VAHLEN, A. Der deutsche Reichstag unter König Wenzel. Leipzig: Hitzel. 4 M.
WASSERSCHLESEN, H. Deutsche Rechtsquellen d. Mittelalters. Leipzig: Veit. 8 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

DIEZ, M. Theorie d. Gefühls zur Begründung der Aesthetik. Stuttgart: Frommann. 2 M. 70 Pf.
UNTERWIEBER, J. Ueb. die Beziehungen der Kometen u. Meteorströme zu den Erscheinungen der Sonne. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 20 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

PHILIPPE, Frère, les merveilles de l'Irlande. Texte provençal, p.p. J. Ulrich. Leipzig: Reuger. 2 M.
ROEMER, A. Die Notation der alexandrinischen Philologen bei den griechischen Dramatikern. München: Franz. 1 M. 60 Pf.
RZACH, A. Metrische Studien zu den sibilinischen Orakeln. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 60 Pf.
WULFF, O. Zur Theseussage. Archäologische Untersuchungen u. mytholog. Beiträge. Dorpat: Karow. 5 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ON THE NEWTON STONE.

Kinnaird Castle, Brechin, N.B.: July 4, 1892.

In my last letter (ACADEMY, July 2, 1892, p. 14, col. 2), in Dr. Whitley Stokes's version of the Oghams, for "Vorrenni" read "Vor Renni"; and in my own 1882 and 1885 versions of the same, for "I^{ph}ua" and "Iphua," read "I^{ph} Ua" and "Iph Ua." I may here

note that the version I at present incline to is given in my second letter (ACADEMY, June 25, 1892, p. 616). In the same letter, in col. 1., p. 615, line 14 from foot, for "stem-line angles" read "stem-line angle."

Dr. Whitley Stokes trusts that I will not be offended at his dismissal of my queries as unworthy of reply. I am not offended—nor am I surprised. Allow me, in this my final letter, to comment very briefly, and in all good-humour, on some of his other remarks. The Bishop of Limerick's paper appeared in the Proceedings along with mine, and I could only suppose that Dr. Stokes had seen both. I need hardly say that I do not charge either of those eminent scholars with consciously borrowing from my humble stores. If I owed my decipherment of the penultimate word to luck,

I can only wish plenty of similar luck for Dr. Stokes—and that speedily. I am glad that in future Dr. Stokes intends to give me due credit for my "achievements"; may I venture to invite him to do so in Prof. Ramsay's genial style?

SOUTHESK.

"L'HISTOIRE DE GUILLAUME LE MARÉCHAL."

London: June 25, 1892.

There are several points in this interesting poem—for which we are indebted to the scholarly labours of M. Paul Meyer—that will arrest the attention of English antiquaries, genealogists, and historical students.

For the present, I will only call attention to one, which bears on the authority of the work. Dugdale assigns to John the Marshal two sons only, John, "his son and heir," and William, the famous "Earl Marshal." The poem, on the other hand, assigns to John two sons, Gilbert and Walter, by a first marriage, and four, John, William, Auselm, and Henry (afterwards Bishop of Exeter) by a second. Now, a careful examination of the Pipe Rolls reveals that John the Marshal (whom Eyton's Itinerary represents as still living in 1166) was dead before Michaelmas 1165, while we know from other sources that he was alive at Michaelmas, 1164. On his succession we have double evidence. The Pipe Roll of 1166 shows us his son Gilbert charged with £100 for relief on succeeding to his father in Devonshire, and his son John charged with £100 on succeeding to his father in Wiltshire. Gilbert, however, was already dead, having not long survived his father; and we accordingly find that next year (1167) his relief of £100 is charged to his brother John as his heir. This enables us to understand the entries in the Cartae of 1166, our other source of evidence. John the Marshal had held under the Abbot of Abingdon, the Bishop of Exeter, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Earl of Essex. In the two former holdings he was succeeded by his son Gilbert (as "Gilbertus Marescallus" and "Gilbertus filius Johannis" respectively); in the fourth by his son John; and in the third by his "son," whose name is not mentioned. It is thus clear, from both sources, that John's succession was divided between these two sons, of whom Gilbert was unknown to Dugdale, though mentioned in the poem. Now I would suggest that this division, which would otherwise be difficult to explain, may be accounted for by the statement in the poem that Gilbert and John were the eldest sons respectively of his two marriages. One must, perhaps, go further still, and suggest that Gilbert received the inherited and John the acquired portion of his father's lands. But though the evidence favours this view, it is not sufficient to prove it.

So far, the records we have seen harmonise with the statements in the poem. But in making Gilbert and Walter die, not only in their father's, but in their mother's lifetime, the poem is at variance with the evidence of our records. This is characteristic, I think, of its earlier portion, which combines in a very singular manner accurate and unique information with chronological impossibilities of a glaring kind, together with some error and exaggeration. As family tradition it has its value, but its evidence for this period requires to be carefully checked.

J. H. ROUND.

THE PEDIGREE OF "JACK" AND SOME ALLIED NAMES.

London: June 11, 1892.

Mr. Nicholson deserves much praise for the vast amount of information which he has collected concerning the pedigree, I will not say of "Jack," but of John, and his letters ought to be of great value to those wishing to study the history of this latter name. But I myself have to do with the name "Jack" only; and, so far as this name is concerned, every letter which Mr. Nicholson writes confirms me still more strongly in the belief that "Jack" has, etymologically, nothing whatever to do with John. Mr. Nicholson, however, expresses the hope that these two letters of his will put an end to the controversy in his favour; and yet he has not so far succeeded in finding in old times the intermediate forms, such as Jakkyn, and Jacky, which are indispensable to his case. In my case, not a single intermediate form is wanting; so how can he suppose that I shall abandon a view based upon such firm foundations, and such a general consensus of opinion, until, at the very least, he is able to show the existence of his, at present, merely hypothetical intermediate steps?

His quotation from Thomas of Elmham he looks upon as a perfect godsend. To me it appears to prove no more than that, in or about 1114, Jakke already was equivalent to Jankin, an undoubted derivative from Jan, another form of John. But I was always of opinion, though I had no documentary evidence to prove it—and so far Mr. Nicholson's quotation is of value—that Jack (supposing it to = Ja(c)que) perhaps never meant James in England, and even if it did, did not preserve that meaning long. I have already, in my other letters, quoted several instances to show that in former times Christian names frequently became confounded. I will now quote another. Isabel is the Spanish equivalent for Elizabeth, and so much so that our own Queen Elizabeth is always called Isabel by Spaniards; yet few etymologists, I should say, believe that they are the same name. Gesenius and Pott, at all events, consider Isabel to be the Jezebel of Scripture, and between this and Elizabeth no one who knows Hebrew believes that there is even the remotest etymological connexion.

The substitution of Jack (in Jack and Jill = Gill) for Jenken (in Jenken and Julian) by no means proves, as Mr. Nicholson seems to be of opinion that it does, that Jack is an abbreviated form of Jenken. It proves merely what we already knew from other sources (see last §)—viz., that Jack was looked upon as the equivalent of Jenken; though in those days of no etymology there may well have been many who believed that Jack was derived from Jenken. Yet, curiously enough, a true instinct presided over this substitution of Jack for Jenken. For Julian = Juliana was admittedly of French origin (see Skeat's Dict., s. v. Gill, and Bardsley, p. 61), and = Juliane and Julienne, and so it was right and fitting that a name also of French origin, such as Jack, should be associated with it.

In my last letter (ACADEMY, March 19) I gave Mr. Nicholson a long list of Christian names in kin in the hope that he might study it, and learn therefrom how these names in kin came to be formed. I endeavoured to show him also that the n of the kin never seemed to disappear unless the s of the genitive had been first added, and that this s once added never disappeared again. I pointed out also that it seemed to be in the same case only, that the n of the abbreviated Christian name, to which the kin had been added, ever disappeared. Jenkin, the cfore, with s added, might become Jenkiss, and ultimately Jenks, and this might possibly become Jeeks (Jex); but Jenkin could not become either Jenk or Jeek, the s being never again got rid of. Jankin, in the same way, might possibly have become Janks and Jaks (= Jacks), but it could not become Jank or Jak (= Jack). But Mr. Nicholson does not pay the slightest heed to what I have said, and proceeds in the most cool manner to cut off an n whenever it seems to him to be in the way. In this way he has not the slightest difficulty in producing two pedigrees, or filiations, for "Jack." One is Jankyn, Jakkyn (with the first n cut out or assimilated), Jakky, Jakke (with the e pronounced), Jak (= Jack). The other is, Janken, Jank (with the second n cut off), Jakke, Jak (= Jack).

Yet he might have seen from my list that the way in which names in kin are formed is this. The original Christian names are first abbreviated as much as possible, and then kin is added. Thus Robert first becomes Rob and Hob, and then Robkin and Hobkin (= Hopkin); and he might have learned also that from these names in kin no secondary Christian names are ever formed. If Mr. Nicholson's view is correct, and "Jack" really comes from Jankin, then there ought to be many other Christian names formed in the same way from names in kin; but I shall be very greatly surprised if he can show me one. The names in kin when s is added, may, as I have already shown, become contracted; but the result is always a surname, and not a Christian name.

The form Jakkyn, which Mr. Nicholson would like to find but cannot, might well have existed; but, in my opinion, it would not have been a corruption of Jankyn, but merely = Jak (= Jack) + kyn. And so I take the Jakyn which Mr. Nicholson really does seem to have found (Jakin he will find in Kelly's London Directory) to be either = Jak + kyn (one k having dropped, as possibly in Dickin, Luckin, Nickin = Dick + kin, Luke + kin, Dick + kin, see my list), or = Jak (or Jake) + in (cf. Robin), or = Jake + kin, one k again being dropped.

Another objection to Mr. Nicholson's view is that Jack (= Jakke or Jak) is a great deal too old. It would surely have taken some time, perhaps two or three centuries, for Jankyn to have passed through Jakkyn, Jakky, and Jakke to Jak (Jack); but, so far as I can see, Mr. Nicholson cannot find Janekin (which he considers to be older than Jankin) earlier than a little before 1250, whilst he finds Jakkas as a surname (and this pre-supposes an antecedent Jakke, unless, indeed, it is an English form of the French Ja(c)ques) in 1279, and Jake as early as 1270. In fact, Jak (or Jakke) seems to be at least as old as Jankin; and, according to my view that Christian names were first abbreviated as much as possible before the kin was added, it might well be older and rank with Jan, rather than with Jankin.

It is really amusing to see how inveterately attached Mr. Nicholson is to his own view. If he anywhere meets with forms which were undeniably used in France in the meaning of James, such as Jake, Jakes, Jaque, Ja(c)ques, he resolutely refuses to allow that they can possibly have come in from France, and derives them all from poor Jack, which must have been wonderfully corrupted in the Middle Ages, so that it is a real marvel that it should have triumphed over all of them, and should have come down to us in its pristine form. But Mr. Nicholson could not help himself, unfortunately. He was obliged to do what he has done. He finds these very inconvenient forms, with the meaning of John or John's; and if he once admitted them to be French, and to originally = James, his whole case would tumble to pieces at once like a house of cards. A more unbiassed person would find, in the Jaqueson quoted by him as the name of an Oxford graduate, whose name was also written Jakson, strong evidence that Jak (Jack) had been formed from the French Jaque, and that, in Jaqueson, the older spelling had been maintained; not so Mr. Nicholson. He sees in it a proof that Jak had degenerated into Jaque! Will anybody but himself be willing to accept this?

With regard to Jakke, a coat of mail, rather than admit that it is the English form of the French jaque, Mr. Nicholson maintains, in opposition to Scheler, Littié, Skeat, and all who have considered the question, that "the contrary is more probable," and that the Jakke originated in England, and having gone over to France, there acquired the form Jaque. It is, indeed, true that the earliest instance given by Ducange is spelled Jacke, and is borrowed from an English writer, Thomas Walsingham (1379), while in a note on Jakke in the Prompt. Parv. it is shown that the word was in use in England as early as 1375. But if Mr. Nicholson will refer to Ducange, s.v. Jacobus 2, he will find that this word (which presupposes an earlier Jaqu(e)s), as we cannot suppose that the word was first formed in Latin) was used in the same sense as early as 1374. Nor was there any special reason why just at that time such an article of military attire should have come into use in England. But in France there was such a special reason. In 1358, a rebellion arose in France among the peasants, and was called la jacquerie from the nickname Jacques Bonhomme, given to its leader. These peasants seem to have manufactured some cheap defensive article of dress, originally probably of leather, or some quilted material, which was also called ja(c)que(s). For the fact that, later on, these rebellious peasants obtained the name of Jaquiers (from wearing this jaque, says Ducange, s.v. Jaquei, cf. our Jakeman, or Jackman, Bardsley, p. 187), is certainly in favour of the view that the word originated in France with these peasants.

It is quite useless for me to say any more. It is evident from what I have said that I cannot accept any derivation of Jack from a Christian name ending in kin until, at any rate, Mr. Nicholson shall have shown me that it is possible, by pointing out to me undoubted instances in which a secondary Christian name has been formed from a name in kin.

F. CHANCE.

P.S.—Since writing my last note I have met with a few additional names in kin which may be added to my list. These names are: Aisken (Daily News, March 30, 1892, probably = Aikin, see Benskin); Baskin (Times, June 20, 1892, p. 3, from Basil? or is it connected with the surname Bass?); Benskin (Kelly, London Directory, probably = Ben+kin); Calkin (St. James's Gazette, June 17, 1892) can it come from Charles? cf. Swedish Kalle (Miss Yonge, ii. 357); Felkin (Times, June 20, 1892, p. 7, from Philip? cf. Span. Felipe); Gifkin (Dulwich Directory, no doubt = Jifkin); Hodgskin (Times, April 4, 1892, probably equals Hodgkin, cf. Aisken and Benskin); Jakin (Kelly, see what I have said above); Nutkin (seen, but I do not know where, perhaps = Natkin, unless derived from the fruit or tree); Sinkin (Kelly, perhaps = Simkin); Tilkin (Times, May 14, 1892, from Matilda, Lower would, no doubt, say from William); Tymkyn (Mätzner, English Grammar, p. 432); Whiskin (Daily Telegraph, June 17, 1892), origin unknown; Wynkyn (I forgot to note where I found it, I do not know the origin; was Winifred ever spelled with a y? it surely cannot come from William, cf. Sinkin).

A source of fallacy in these names in kin is that names in kin, in, and en seem to occur in Irish, and perhaps in Gaelic also. Compare Millikin, Milliken, McGuckin, Mullin, Mullen, Nevin, Niven. These names may not, indeed, all of them be Irish or Gaelic, and if they are, the native endings may be differently spelled. For I also find Milligan, which may well be the original form of Millikin and Milliken. Baskin, then, and Calkin (given above) may possibly be Irish, for I found the former in a list of Irish Nonconformist ministers given in the Times, and the latter had, as a Christian name, Patrick.

F. C.

SCIENCE.

THE KAPPADOKIAN CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS.

Vingt-quatre Tablettes cappadociennes de la Collection W. Golénischeff. (St. Petersburg.)

ABOUT three years ago I stated in the ACADEMY that Mr. Golénischeff, the well-known Russian Egyptologist, had been kind enough to allow me to examine his collection of Kappadokian cuneiform tablets, and that the problem of their decipherment was solved. The collection was sufficiently large to allow the peculiar forms of the Kappadokian characters to be compared with corresponding but well-known forms which occurred on one or two of the tablets, and in this way it became possible to determine the values of the former. The character, for instance, which Mr. Pinches and myself had supposed to be the determinative of "women," Mr. Golénischeff found to be really identical with the Assyrian ideograph which signifies "in the presence of." The discovery of the value of this character threw a flood of light on the texts, as it showed that the words which followed it were the names of witnesses to legal documents.

Mr. Golénischeff has prefixed to his book a very useful and instructive introduction, in which he gives the results of his researches into the language and writing of the tablets. To this he has added a list of the signs which occur in them, together with their values so far as he has been able to make them out. This list it will, of course, be necessary to correct and supplement as our knowledge of the Kappadokian inscriptions advances. Thus, he has grouped under one heading characters which should be distinguished as ti and din, and under another heading the two characters khi and akh, while the character gur is identified with si. The second character, again, in the list of those which he has left undetermined, is the ideograph of "month." The names of several months are, in fact, mentioned in the tablets; among them are "the month of sowing" (zaratim) and the month Kuzallu, which is also mentioned on the famous cylinder of Tiglath-pileser I.

With Mr. Golénischeff's conclusions I generally find myself in agreement. In one point, however, we are at variance. He regards the language of the tablets as Kappadokian mixed with Assyrian elements; while I consider it to be an Assyrian dialect, into which a number of foreign words (and perhaps also forms) have been introduced. The dialect is distinguished by the same phonetic peculiarities as those which mark the letters from Northern Syria in the Tel el-Amarna collection; and the number of proper names mentioned in the tablets which are compounded with the name of the god Assur—to say nothing of the formulae employed in them, as well as the custom of dating time by the name of a limmu—makes me believe that the dialect was that of one of those Assyrian colonies which we know to have been established in early times in the far North. I may add that the place in which the tablets are found is now known to be only a few hours distant from Kaisariyoh.

As I pointed out in the ACADEMY three years ago, it is probable that the Kappadokian tablets belong to the same early age as those of Tel el-Amarna. A letter of the King of Assyria found at Tel el-Amarna tells us that Khani-rabbat, the country which stretched eastward from Malatiah, was already within the circle of Babylonian influence and culture. I have noticed above that the phonetic peculiarities of the Kappadokian texts resemble those of the North Syrian letters in the Tel el-Amarna collection; I may add that the forms of the characters also are not dissimilar. The formulae are those which we find at Tel el-Amarna, and are, as Dr. Winckler has remarked, an indication of antiquity, while both groups of cuneiform records agree in adding the ideographic representative of a word to its phonetic expression. This may be an usage borrowed from Egypt. The use of a wedge to divide words from one another in the Kappadokian texts reminds us of the separation of the words in the Aramaic inscriptions of Samahla discovered at Sinjirli.

I will conclude with my translation of one of the tablets (No. 11) published by Mr. Golénischeff. It will serve to indicate the nature of their contents:

"(Twenty) manehs of silver Garia, A(sa)zu, and Mer-esu the prince have given to Iqib-il (Jacob-el). Supuna his brother asks for the 20 manehs of silver, and Rab-Adadinnim, who is chief of the Zikitim, has joined their hands (?), the month Napisti-Zuim (the life of the god Zu), the limmu being Suwa. He shall pay 10 manehs of silver at harvest-time; he shall pay 10 more manehs at the second harvest, and the whole amount, 20 manehs, Supuna his brother shall restore to the brothers Garia, Asazu, and Mer-esu; and as for the 20 manehs of silver, they shall weight it, even the silver, on the head of Garia, his brother. Witnessed by the man who binds their cities and their houses together, witnessed by the Rab-gimelti, witnessed by Kumri, of Din-kisa."

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GREEK ἵππος = LATIN "AQUA."

Oxford: July 2, 1892.

I am afraid that there are grave difficulties in the way of our accepting Mr. Sibree's very ingenious suggestion that a Greek ἵππος, supposed to be found in certain river-names, may possibly be equated with Latin aqua, just as Greek ἵππος is generally assumed to be the equivalent of Latin equus. It may be observed, by the way, that ἵππος and equus are not regular phonetic equivalents, both the spiritus asper and the initial vowel of the Greek word remaining up to this time obscure and unexplained. But, assuming that ἵππος = equus, this equation would not give the slightest support to the equation of a Gr. ἵππος with Lat. aqua, for the two words equus and aqua correspond neither in the original quality of the initial vowel nor in the character of the guttural. It is not easy to account for the i of ἵππος as compared with the e of equus (= Indo-European ekuos). It would be still more difficult to account for the initial of ἵππος as compared with aqua (from an Indo-European root aq-). But a still graver difficulty arises from the fact that the guttural in equus is proved by the cognates in Sanskrit, Zend, and Lithuanian, to have been originally a palatal explosive, and the ππ of Gr. ἵππος points to an original ku. On the other hand, the guttural of aqua was originally a velar explosive (see Brugmann, § 44; Feist, Gothic Etym., § 11; and my Synopsis of Old English Phonology, §§ 510, 514). Now this velar before an o-vowel became medially π in Greek, and not $\pi\pi$, and in Sanskrit and Zend was represented by k (c), not by ç. Consequently, there could at no time have been forms like Skr. acvā, Zend acpā, Gr. ἄκων, corresponding to Lat. aqua, as Skr. acva, Zend acpa (and irregularly Gr. ἄκως), correspond to Lat. equus.

I hope that Mr. Sibree may be able to show that, after all, my objections are not serious, as there appears to me to be much brought forward in his very interesting letter to make his explanation of ἄκων plausible.

One word more. Mr. Sibree seems to equate Gr. ἄδ with Skr. su. He may only intend to imply that the meanings of the two words are equivalent. Of course they are in form quite unconnected, ἄδ being probably equivalent to Skr. ayā.

A. L. MAYHEW.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE council of the Royal Geographical Society has passed a resolution to admit women as members henceforth on the same terms as men. The names of Lady Franklin and Mrs. Somerville are already on the list of medallists of the society.

DR. M. C. COOKE now retires from the editorship of Grevillea, the journal dedicated to cryptogamic botany, which he has conducted ever since its foundation twenty years ago. He will be succeeded by Mr. George Massee.

MESSRS. LONOMANS have issued a comprehensive index to the Alpine Journal, edited by Mr. F. A. Wallroth. The index covers not only the fifteen volumes from the foundation of the Journal in 1863 but also the three volumes of Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers, which preceded it. It is divided into four sections; (i) the names of authors of signed papers; (ii) a list of maps and illustrations; (iii) a special index for each mountain group in the Alps, twenty-four in number, as set out in an introductory map; and (iv) a general index, which alone fills seventy pages.

THE July number of Natural Science (Macmillans) seems to us less interesting than usual. Prof. Grenville A. J. Cole tells the story of the trilobite Olenellus; Mr. J. W. Gregory explains the physical features of the Norfolk Broads, with illustrations; Mr. T. Hick and Prof. W. C. Williamson discuss the question whether Stigmalaria is a root or a rhizome; and Mr. A. C. Seward writes about the fossil plants, &c., found in amber. The "Notes and Comments" at the beginning, and the "News of Museums," &c., at the end, are useful, but might easily be made still better.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE have received the first number of the Journal of the Polynesian Society (Wellington, New Zealand), which was founded in January last—

"to promote the study of the anthropology, ethnology, philology, history, and antiquities of the Polynesian races, by the publication of an official journal . . . and by the collection of books, MSS., photographs, relics, and other illustrations. The term 'Polynesia' is intended to include Australia, New Zealand, Melanesia, Micronesia, and Malaysia, as well as Polynesia."

The patron of the society is the Queen of Hawaii; the president is the chief judge of the native land court in New Zealand; and the joint hon. secretaries and editors of the journal are Mr. E. Tregear and Mr. S. Percy

Smith; the total number of members is already about 120. This first number contains several good papers. Mr. Elsdon Best describes the aboriginal races of the Philippines, mainly from Spanish authorities; Mr. S. Percy Smith summarises three French books upon Futuna or Horne Island; some genealogies and historical notes from Rarotonga are printed in the native dialect with translations; and Mr. Tregear writes upon causative prefixes in the Polynesian languages, and also upon the possible use of the bow and arrow by the ancient Maoris.

Harvard Studies in Classical Philology. Vol. III. (Boston: Ginn; London: Edward Arnold.) Two of the contents of this volume have already been noticed in the ACADEMY when they appeared in another form—"The Date of Cylon," by Mr. J. H. Wright, which is a valuable contribution to the constitutional history of Athens before the time of Peisistratus, in the light of the newly-discovered Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία; and Mr. C. L. Smith's ingenious, but not altogether successful, attempt to prove that the phaselus of Catullus was not the boat in which the poet himself had returned from Asia Minor, but the laid-up yacht of some older owner. Of the other papers, the most important is that of Prof. T. D. Seymour, of Yale, on "The Homeric Caesura and the Close of the Verse, as related to the Expression of Thought." He argues, with abundant illustrations, that—"In the Homeric poems much which at first sight seems tautological, and is often explained as such, is really in opposition to what has preceded, and is marked as an appositive by the verse. These appositive additions do much to make a picturesque scene and to mark emotion. We find also that the true construction is often indicated by the pause at the close of the verse, and by that in the third foot. The caesura is in many cases the most immediate clue that the verse affords to the construction. The beginner is repeatedly saved the comparison of different passages by noting the rhythm of the verse. We find, moreover, that the right contrast is marked clearly again and again by the caesura."

The other article is a Doctor's thesis at Leipzig, by Mr. W. A. Hammond, entitled "The Notion of Virtue in the Dialogues of Plato, with particular reference to those of the First Period and to the Third and Fourth Books of the Republic."

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, June 21.)

DR. E. B. TYLOR, president, in the chair.—Dr. R. Wallesche read a paper entitled "An Ethnological Inquiry into the Basis of our Musical System." In the course of the paper he pointed out that harmony is not a modern European invention, but known to many savage tribes, and even to the Hottentot and Bushmen. A regular bass accompaniment (to distinguish it from songs in harmonious intervals) is far more seldom to be met with, as the extreme simplicity of primitive songs does not admit of much variety in accompaniment. On the other hand, some savage tribes (Hottentots, Malays, Negroes) show an astonishingly great talent in accompanying European tunes by ear. Both keys, the major as well as the minor, occur in the songs of primitive races. Minor chords also occur occasionally. There is no internal connexion between a peculiar key and a peculiar mood or disposition of mind. The diatonic scale does not seem to be a more recent invention than the pentatonic. The most ancient diatonic division is to be met with in instruments (pipes, flutes) of the stone period. This early occurrence seems to be due to the fact that the diatonic scale is the most natural for the players' fingers, while it is at the same time the most effective. The diatonic system is neither an "artistic invention," nor a "scientific discovery," nor is it "natural" for the voice, or the ear, nor based upon the laws and conditions of sounds; but it is the most natural for the hand, and the most practical for playing instruments.—Prof. Basil Hall Chamberlain then read a paper on "Some Minor Japanese Religious Practices." After mentioning miscellaneous usages and superstitions, the author treated chiefly of Japanese pilgrims and their ways, illustrating his remarks by an exhibition of a large collection of charms, sacred pictures, pilgrims' dresses, &c., brought together partly by himself, partly by Mr. Lafendlo Hearn. The collection included articles from the Shinto shrines of Ise and Izumo, from the Thirty-three Holy Places of Central Japan, from the Eighty-eight Holy Places of the Island of Shikoku, from the temple to Asakusa in Tokyo, &c., &c. The most curious was a sacred fire-drill from the great Shinto shrine of Izumo. This, together with a few of the other articles, has been presented by Prof. Chamberlain to the Pitt Rivers Museum at Oxford. Another feature of the paper was the translation given of a Buddhist legend, explaining the origin of the pilgrimage to the Thirty-three Holy Places, and of some of the hymns intoned by the pilgrims.

ROYAL ASIATIC.—(Monday, June 21.)

LORD NORTHBROOK, president, in the chair.—A paper was read by Surgeon-Major Oldham on "The Saraswati and the Lost River of the Indian Desert." After remarking upon the discrepancy between Vedic descriptions of the Saraswati and those given in the Mahabharata, Surgeon-Major Oldham proceeded to show that each of these was probably an accurate account of the conditions existing at the time to which it referred, great changes having taken place in the rivers of this part of India. Thus, the Sutlej, instead of turning nearly due west on emerging from the hills, as it does at present, once took a much more southerly course, and was joined by the Saraswati between the ancient fortresses of Sarsuti (Saraswati) and Bhatnair. This was the state of things in the Vedic period. Then the waters of the Saraswati, mingled with those of the Sutlej, flowed on to the sea. When, however, the Sutlej changed its course to the westward, the Saraswati was left in possession of the deserted channel, in the sands of which its waters were swallowed up. This is the condition described in the Mahabharata, and it does not greatly differ from that existing at the present day. The subject has, however, been complicated by the name Gaggar having, in later times, been applied to the lower part of the course of the Saraswati. Surgeon-Major Oldham then pointed out that several other old channels are traceable from the immediate vicinity of the Sutlej at the point where that river enters the plains. These, with the old bed, which has just been referred to, unite to form what is now called the Hakra, or Wahind—the dry bed of a great river. This, which is in many places several miles in width, traverses the northern part of the desert, and enters Sind. Here it joins the Narra, which is considered to have been at some remote period the bed of the Indus. It is evident, however, from the descriptions given by early Mahomedan writers on Sind, that for centuries after this channel had been deserted by the Indus, and, indeed, after the Moslem occupation of the country, a navigable river continued to flow in the Narra, or Hakra, to the Rann of Kach. This river, tradition asserts, was the Sutlej.—In the discussion which followed, it was pointed out by Mr. A. Rogers, that the geological formation of the country bordering upon the Rann of Kach showed that the drainage of the Punjab once flowed into the Rann, and that this estuary communicated with the Gulf of Kambay.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, June 22.)

THE MASTER OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, Cambridge, vice-president, in the chair.—Dr. William Knighton read a paper on "Greek and Latin Wit." Having given a definition of wit, and described man as a laughing animal, who laughs at proper times and under reasonable conditions, Dr. Knighton proceeded to show that the αἰσος, or fable, was the earliest vehicle of wit and humour in Greece. Examples were given from Hesiod and Archilochus. The "Battle of the Frogs and Mice," attributed to Homer, and described by Samuel Wesley as "perhaps the best as well as the oldest burlesque in the world," was then referred to, and extracts given from Wesley's translation. Passing on to the dramas of Aristophanes, the author gave humorous extracts from the "Acharnians," the "Knights," the "Frogs," and from the "Ecclesiazusae" or Parliament of Women, pointing out that the Old Comedy in Athens supplied the place of the newspaper in London, the review, the pamphlet, the pantomime, and Punch particularly. There was also a high motive in the plays of Aristophanes, which were evidently written with the intention of reforming the government of Athens, and diminishing the influence of the demagogues and sophists. Passing on to anecdotes and apothegms from Plutarch and Stobaeus, from Athenaeus and Lucian, all illustrative of Greek wit, Latin literature was next put under contribution, and extracts read from Horace and Ovid, from the plays of Plautus and Terence, as well as the Noctes Atticae of Aulus Gellius. But it is in the Epigrams of Martial that we have, perhaps, the truest examples of Latin wit, properly so called; for the dramas of Plautus and Terence were all founded on Greek models, and full of Greek characteristics, "adapted," in fact, from the Greek, according to the modern signification of the term. In the thirty-second epigram of his first Book, addressing Sabidius, Martial exclaims:

"I love thee not, Sabidius; ask you why?
I do not love thee, let that satisfy."

In imitation of this epigram, an Oxford wit wrote relative to Dr. Fell, Bishop of Oxford, who died in 1686, the well-known lines, too familiar to quote; and thus has Dr. Fell been immortalised. It is useful to learn what people were amused at in various epochs in history; the knowledge gives us an idea of the standard of taste and the progress of civilisation. There is a cultivation of wit, as well as of all other human sentiments, and this cultivation goes on successfully from age to age. Nor will it do to affect to despise wit and humour as beneath the study of the philosopher or the learned man. The wit of ancient Greece was coarse, licentious, vindictive, and vituperative, although intermingled with the noblest aims. In the wit of ancient Rome we find more appreciation of the refinements of social life, a greater regard for progress and development, combined also with much that was objectionable. The correction of abuses and the ridiculing of vices and follies were aimed at in both. Comparing Punch and his brethren of modern London with the wits of the old classical ages, we have much reason to be proud. It is no longer considered necessary to be indecent in order to be witty, or profane in order to be pungent. Wit may be consistent with propriety and decorum.—A short discussion followed.

FINE ART.

THE SOCIETY OF PORTRAIT PAINTERS.

ALTHOUGH it is possible that the large public may not find in an exhibition of portraits that which will most completely satisfy it, there is little question that portraiture, to be judged fairly or favourably, must be judged by itself. Not so much a monotony as a certain restfulness belongs to walls devoted to the exposition of this single branch of painting. There is on them quite enough variety for the real student, and there is afforded the best occasion for fruitful and instructive comparisons.

The present exhibition of the Society of Portrait Painters is at least as good as last year's. M. Carolus Duran is indeed missing, and the Whistler portrait—the "Princesse des Pays de la Porcelaine," from the house of Mr. Leyland—is (unlike the "Carlyle" and the "Portrait of My Mother") far less notable as a record of character than as an arrangement of hues. It is a gay and well-ordered harmonious canvas, but, as a portrait, it is quite insignificant. The lady is hardly more than an excuse for the painting of a pretty robe, a screen, a carpet, and a Japanese fan. By M. Bonnat, on the other hand, there is that which is really notable as a portrait: the sturdy figure of Barye, the sculptor, as he appeared in robust old age some twenty years ago—a being whose attire qualifies him for assuming the part of Cousin Pons himself, a "glorieux débris de l'Empire." By M. Chartran, too, there is a good representation, on a very different scale, and in a very different method, of Mlle. Brandès, of the Français, though I fear that M. Jules Leroy would feel bound to classify it as among that "peinture porcelainense" in a production of which Poelemborg, two hundred years ago, was so chief an offender. M. Boldini, with his unquestioned talent and most obvious mannerisms, with his inexplicable fascination and his unrelaxed parti-pris, is represented by a single full-length standing figure, less desirable, I think, as a possession, than that portrait of a lounging, slender-legged child (her name escapes me, and it is of no importance) which was the best contribution of M. Boldini last season. Coming to accepted Englishman, there should be noted, while yet there is the chance, Sir Frederick Leighton's masculine and admirable portrait of one of the most original, if eccentric, personalities of our time—the late Sir Richard Burton: and Sir J. E. Millais's frank vision of Mrs. Bischoffsheim, equipped with all the resources of nature and art to face the world with cheerful countenance. Again, there is Mr. Watts's portrait of Mr. Calderon, and Mr. Orchardson's golden-brown canvas that depicts the amiable babyhood of his son.

The contributors of new work are mostly to be found in the ranks of our younger men, few of whom—if they deal with portraiture at all, and deal with it with talent—absent themselves from the show. Nor are women absent—Miss Maud Porter distinguishing herself to right hand and to left; Miss Sarah Harrison sending a well-painted portrait of Carlos Bovill; Mrs. Lea Merritt a portrait of Sir Colin Scott Moncrieff—a fine and forcible piece of colour, seen, I believe, under Egyptian skies; Mrs. Jopling a charming little vision of Miss Ridpath, and a manly portrait of Mr. George Rowe, and, in the black and white department (where the refined drawings of Mr. Henry Hudson are so noticeable) contributing a penetrating likeness of the Bishop of Limerick. Let me here make amends for an omission which some may have noticed in the few lines upon the foreign contributions. How is it that I can have omitted from its proper place all mention of the distinguished and delicate work of M. Boutet de Monvel? Some of it—in water colour—hangs near to that charming "portrait of a lady," by Mr. Greiffenhagen, which is almost as notable for the seizure of some subtleties of human expression as for its dainty and well-considered harmonies of silver grey; but elsewhere hangs the admirable, the considered, the studiously naïve vision of Miss Beatrice Rogers. Mr. Vos has an obviously strong portrait of the custodian of a town hall of an out-of-the-way place by the Zuyder Zee. Mr. Shannon paints Mr. George Hitchcock, the painter, busy copying nature; Mr. Percy Bigland has, among other things, a portrait of Lord Strafford. No one could be more graceful than Mr. Shannon in his figure of "Iris," or more direct than the same painter in his presentation of "Mr. Beach." Mr. James Guthrie and Mr. Lavery represent adequately the most recent manifestations of Franco-Scottish art. Where portrait painters are gathered together, Mr. W. Llewellyn and Mr. Mount Loudon cannot in fairness be forgotten; Mr. Fanlin-Latour is, as is customary, reticent and sober, sterling rather than immediately attractive; Mr. Kennington merits attention; Mr. Henry Hudson (showing here and there the influence of Mr. Shannon) is engaging when he works in colour, and I have already paid tribute to the refinement of his conception and handling when he works in black and white. Austerity is not the characteristic of Mr. Markham Skipworth, who paints prettiness rather than character. For the Cutlers' Hall at Sheffield, Mr. Stuart-Wortley—occupied in other portraits with a sympathetic presentation of the fair and of their accessories—has executed what is at once a sturdy and agreeable portrait of Archdeacon Blakeney, in the surroundings proper to him. Even in a day when exhibitions multiply so absurdly, and nearly every shop in Bond-street is a refuge for the incompetent who can order a picture frame—there is here at the "Portrait Painters" a show that does honestly merit to be seen.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

A CUNEIFORM TABLET FROM PALESTINE.

WE quote from the Times the following letter, written by Mr. James Glaisher, chairman of the executive committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund:—

"I ask permission to place on record a note on a discovery recently made in the course of excavations conducted at a mound in Palestine named Tell-el-Hesi. The excavations were commenced two years ago by Dr. Flinders Petrie, and have been continued during the last six months by Mr. F. J. Bliss, of Beirut. The Tell has been identified by Major Conder and Dr. Flinders Petrie with the ancient city of Lachish, an identification which is now amply confirmed.

"Mr. Bliss has found among the débris a cuneiform tablet, together with certain Babylonian cylinders and imitations or forgeries of those manufactured in Egypt. A translation of the tablet has been made by Prof. Sayce: it is as follows:—

"[To] the Governor. [I] O, my father, prostrate myself at thy feet. Verily thou knowest that Baya (?) and Zimrida have received thy orders (?) and Dan-Hadad says to Zimrida, 'O, my father, the city of Yarami sends to me, it has given me 3 masar and 3 . . . and 3 falcions.' Let the country of the King know that I stay, and it has acted against me, but till my death I remain. As for thy commands (?) which I have received, I cease hostilities, and have despatched Bel (?)-banin, and Rabi-ilu-yi has sent his brother to this country to [strengthen me (?)]."

"The letter was written about the year 1400 B.C. It is in the same handwriting as those in the Tell-el-Amarna collection, which were sent to Egypt from the South of Palestine about the same time. It will be remembered that of this remarkable collection about 80 tablets were acquired by the British Museum and double that number by the Berlin Museum. The forms of the characters are the same and the peculiarities of the grammar.

"Now, here is a very remarkable coincidence. In the Tell-el-Amarna collection we learn that one Zimrida was governor of Lachish, where he was murdered by some of his own people, and the very first cuneiform tablet discovered at Tell-el-Hesi is a letter written to this very Zimrida.

"The city Yarami may be the Jarmuth of the Old Testament.

"Even more interesting," writes Prof. Sayce, "are the Babylonian cylinders and their imitations. They testify to the long and deep influence and authority of Babylon in Western Asia, and throw light on the prehistoric art of Phœnicia and Cyprus. The cylinders of native Babylonian manufacture belong to the period B.C. 2000-1500;

the rest are copies made in the West. One of these is of Egyptian porcelain, and must have been manufactured in Egypt, in spite of its close imitation of a Babylonian original. Others are identical with the cylinders found in the prehistoric tombs of Cyprus and Syria, and so fix the date of the latter. On one of them are two centaurs arranged heraldically, the human faces being shaped like those of birds. European archaeologists will be interested in learning that among the minor objects are two amber beads.

"It must be remembered that the Babylonian language and the Babylonian characters were the common medium of communication between the natives of the East at this time. A cuneiform scribe was kept at Tell-el-Amarna, and probably there was one at every important place in Palestine. The find is one which throws light upon many points of interest, as, for instance, the influence of Babylon, the authority of Egypt, and, as Prof. Sayce points out, the prehistoric art of Phœnicia. I should like to add that it is now fifteen years and more since Prof. Sayce called our attention to the probability of finding the libraries and archives of the ancient cities in the Tells which he has unceasingly urged us to excavate."

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE GRAMMAR OF THE LOTUS."

In the ACADEMY of May 21, I find a very kind notice of my Grammar of the Lotus, by Dr. E. B. Tylor. His review, however, conveys the impression that I have confined my proofs, that the so-called ivy leaf of Greek art is a lotus leaf, to personal assertion. Allow me to point out that this is not the case. It is undoubtedly within Dr. Tylor's province to consider my evidence insufficient, but I do not like the impression to go abroad that no evidence has been offered.

The following points are undoubtedly pertinent; they are all presented in my work, and they are passed by him without mention:—(a) The so-called ivy leaf of Greek art has many exact counterparts in Egyptian patterns which join this leaf with the lotus plant. (b) There are two published examples of Greek vases where this leaf is attached to a lotus (plate xxii. 2, 10 of my work); (c) one example of a Celtic relief in Bologna where this leaf is attached to a lotus (fig. 103); (d) one example of a Cypriote coin where this leaf is connected with a lotus (plate xxxii. 5). (e) The stems of this leaf on a Celtic Bolognese relief are the long plant stems of the lotus (plate li. 7). (f) There are many examples in early Mediterranean art of a sphinx bearing a lotus on the head (plate xxxiv.). There is one known example (fig. 129) of a sphinx having attached to the head a long stem bearing a leaf which has many exact parallels in Egyptian pictures of the lotus leaf. It is the same leaf which is called ivy in Greek art. (g) We can quote at least two Egyptian amulets of the lion crowned with the lotus, and several examples of the lion and lotus in Egyptian pictures. We can quote one relief in Bologna of a lion surrounded by long, plant stems bearing the debated leaf. No one can suggest why a lion or a sphinx should be associated with the ivy leaf, whereas the associations of lion and sphinx with the lotus are solar. (h) Dr. Tylor cites the supposed ivy berries which are found with the pattern on Greek vases, but I have shown that the wave line ivy pattern is not original to Greek art. The earlier originals cited by me are Oriental, and on "Mycenæ" vases. The supposed berries never appear in these cases. (i) We know that the lotus bud of Egyptian necklaces was mistaken for an amphora by Italian art. We know that the infant Horus was mistaken by the Greeks for a god of silence. It is quite possible that this leaf pattern was mistaken by the Greeks for ivy when they copied it. There could be no more grotesque perversion than the egg-and-dart moulding, which Dr. Tylor concedes to have been a lotus border.

Dr. Tylor suggests that my imagination has carried me away regarding the association of the lotus with lions and birds. It appears to me that the oriental imagination and not mine is in question. I have published the monuments; many of them, like the reliefs from Denderah and the Cypriote vases in New York, were hitherto known. Let the monuments speak for themselves.

Dr. Tylor considers my imagination at fault regarding the art of ancient America; but Sir George Birdwood, whom he quotes with respect, concedes foreign influences on the art of ancient America, and they have been asserted to exist by many European scholars. If such influences be conceded, it requires no imagination to conceive that the commonest Mediterranean patterns may have made their way thither. It is not I who invented the Egyptian winged disk of Oococingo. It is not I who wrote on the Aztec Zodiac for the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica.

Finally, regarding the papyrus—I should be the last, here as in all other cases, to thrust new views down the throats of students. I neither expect nor desire sudden conviction on so grave a matter. I have pronounced the forms in question to be lotuses because they are found associated with lotus leaves (figs. 22, 30), and because they are found with tabs attached to the stems, plainly showing the original to have been an amulet lotus staff to which artificial lotus leaves and lotus buds were artificially attached (figs. 31, 32). There is nothing in the papyrus to explain the phenomenon of these tabs; and in the amulet lotus staves, as shown in pictures, we can trace every transition to the tabs. I consider the question regarding the amulet original of the hieroglyph called "papyrus" to be definitely settled by Papyrus No. 10 of the Turin Museum (figs. 22, 24 and the lotus leaf association here found). Moreover, this amulet, originally called papyrus by Brugsch, is called lotus by Maspero.

W. H. GOODYEAR.

We are also asked to print the following, which was addressed in the first instance to the Editor of the Saturday Review.

"I have just seen your critic's notice of my Grammar of the Lotus (March 26), complaining that my design of the Osiris at Philæ misrepresents the original. The fault, in so far as it exists, lies with Champollion, not with myself, and I have referred to his work in my citation for this picture. Since the drawing was printed, I have, however, seen the original at Philæ. It is not exactly like Champollion's drawing, but I shall distinctly take issue with Mr. Frazer in presuming that wheat is here represented, as I am perfectly familiar with the representations of wheat in Egyptian pictures. One would imagine from your critic's attitude that the associations of Osiris with the lotus had been hitherto unknown to Egyptology, whereas they are established by Egyptian texts, as noted by my work (p. 10, note 42).

"Your critic hurls Dr. Tylor's theory of the palm and the Sacred Tree at me as though I had not given this theory respectful mention in my work. In fact I have quoted it at full length (p. 178). I have probably the same privilege to differ respectfully with Dr. Tylor as your critic has to differ, less respectfully, with me.

"W. H. GOODYEAR."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆOLOGY.

SIR J. E. MILLAIS has been elected to the Prussian Order of Merit, a distinction already possessed by Mr. Ouseley. Among the other Englishmen that share it are Lord Kelvin, Sir Richard Owen, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and Sir G. G. Stokes.

In the course of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be selling two very interesting collections, each of a special character: on Tuesday, the unique series of typographical medals, &c., brought together by the late William Blades, to illustrate his Namianata Typographica; and on Thursday, the prints, drawings, &c., belonging to the late William Bell Scott. Among the latter are engravings on wood and copper of the early German school; etchings by modern Englishmen, including one by Sir J. E. Millais, intended for The Germ, but never published; original water-colour drawings by Blake and David Scott; paintings in tempera and in oil by Blake; and a picture by Walter Deverell, of the pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, containing a portrait of Rossetti.

THE Journal of the Ex Libris Society for July (A. & C. Black) contains nothing particularly notable; except we are glad to see that the number of members continues to increase, and that it is proposed to hold a second meeting in London in October, for the reading of papers and the exhibition of bibliographical curiosities. Apart from reprints (which we would not for a moment be supposed to object to), the most interesting paper is that by Mr. Walter Hamilton on "Some French Ecclesiastical Ex Libris," reviewing a pamphlet by Father Hugold, an Oratorian.

WE ought to have noticed before The Carlton Head Catalogue, issued by Mr. and Mrs. Tregaskis, of High Holborn. The paintings, drawings, prints, antiques, and curios, which are here described, are in themselves sufficiently interesting, especially as many of them come from well-known collections. But the work is made permanently valuable by the illustrations with which it is embellished. These include a frontispiece by Mr. Walter Crane, and several old engravings printed from the original plates or blocks. In these days of the revival of the interest in ex libris, we may mention that there are a few blank book-plates designed by Chippendale in the middle of the last century, with his characteristic scroll-work and grotesques.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Héron de Villefosse exhibited four painted plaster busts from El-Kargeh, in the Great Oasis, which have recently been sent to the Louvre by M. Bouriant, director of the French School at Cairo. They have been taken from the lids of sarcophagi; but the peculiarity about them is that the heads were not in the same plane with the body, but as it were erect. The features have been modelled with extraordinary verisimilitude; the eyes are of some glassy material, in black and white; the hair was modelled independently, and afterwards fitted to the plaster head; the painting is in simple colours—various shades of red for the skin, and black or brown for the hair. M. Héron de Villefosse maintained that they were certainly portraits. The physiognomy of one is Jewish; another recalls a bronze head from Cyrene in the British Museum, which Fr. Lenormant considered to be of Berber type; the third might be Syrian, and the fourth Roman. The date is probably about the time of Septimius Severus. M. Maspero declared that he had never seen anything of the kind in any museum.

PROF. F. BARNABEI has reprinted from the Monumenti Italiani (Rome: Accademia dei Lincei) his report to the Minister of Public Instruction upon the excavations on the site of Falerii and neighbouring Etruscan towns, which have produced the objects now to be seen in the new Museo di Villa Giulia. Prof. Barnabei claims that among these are to be found traces of the primitive Italic population which contributed to the founding of Rome.

Die antiken Cultusstätten auf Kypros. By Max Ohnefalsch-Richter. (Berlin: Hermann.) There is no one who has so extensive a knowledge of the ancient sites of Cyprus as Dr. Ohnefalsch-Richter, or who has done so much towards discovering and excavating them. The handsome volume before us, with its numerous plans and illustrations, contains a list of the numerous centres of ancient culture which once existed in Cyprus, and a brief account of the chief results which the excavator and explorer have obtained from each. In this account Dr. Ohnefalsch-Richter's own excavations naturally occupy the first place, his important discoveries at Idalion and Tamassus being more especially dwelt upon. His description of the sites upon which monuments have been found is accompanied by a short sketch of the general archaeology of the island, in which reference is made to its bearing upon the Old Testament, on Homer, on the Phœnicians, and on the Hittites. There is no other work in which the student can find an equally good or exhaustive resumé of the results of archaeological research in Cyprus during the last few years; and its value is much enhanced, not only by carefully drawn plans, but also by a map in which all the places where antiquities have been discovered are carefully marked. We should add that an English translation of the work has also been published under the title of "Ancient Places of Worship in Kypros."

MUSIC.

OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

A NEW opera always arouses curiosity: a new symphony or cantata attracts notice only within a limited circle, but an opera, if successful, becomes known far and wide. On Tuesday M. Bemberg's "Elaine" was produced at Covent Garden in presence of a large and well-disposed audience. The cast was a strong one, and the performance good, and at the close the composer was summoned to the footlights; but a first night is not always a true test. How is this new venture to be judged? It comes to us just at a moment when Wagner's powerful music-dramas have taken hold of the public, and the "Ring" dwarfs everything that comes near it. But in discussing "Elaine," Wagner impressions must be set aside; and this, after all, is not so difficult. M. Bemberg has, it is true, made some use of representative themes; but Gounod and Massenet, rather than Wagner, have been his models. His taste and style have, evidently, been formed in the French school; and for one who, like M. Bemberg, has, as yet, but little to say, the flowing melodies and striking mannerisms of a Gounod were easier to imitate than the bold declamation and strokes of genius of a Wagner. There are some passages in "Elaine" which seem to show that the composer possesses dramatic instinct, as, for example, the death-scene of Elaine, and the interview between the Queen and Lancelot in the closing act. Again, throughout the opera there is plenty of writing which shows a practised hand. But taken as a whole it is decidedly dull; for the composer evidently wrote the opera for the sake of writing, and not because the story of the unhappy maid of Astolat had so worked upon his feelings that he felt moved to utter the thoughts prompted by those feelings.

There is no power of characterisation in the music; and in itself, considered as abstract music, it has no true ring. There is one fine motive in it connected with Elaine, but M. Bemberg has not turned it to the best advantage. In the first and second acts there are some fairly pleasing numbers, but the third act (the Tournament scene) is so weak that, while looking at the brilliant scene on the stage, one almost forgets that music is going on; it is "theatre" music—just makes a certain noise and bustle to enliven the show. Afterwards, as mentioned above, there are one or two interesting moments, but the close of the opera is tame. Mme. Melba sang and acted well as Elaine, and Mme. Deschamps was an excellent Guinevere. Messrs. Jean and Edouard de Reszke (Lancelot and the Hermit) sang well, though the former was not in good voice. M. Jehin conducted with spirit. The piece was well mounted.

The performance of "Fidelio" on Saturday evening was of interest, for Frau Klafsky, who enjoys a great reputation in Germany, was the Leonore. She was admirable both in her singing and acting: sympathetic, yet dignified; earnest, yet not exaggerated. She was well supported by Dr. Siedel as Florestan, Herr Wiegand as Rocco, and Frä. Traubmann as Marcelline. Beethoven's great opera did not draw a full house. Was it an accident?—or have the impassioned strains of Wagner and his rich and glowing orchestration spoiled the public for the calm sublimity and, comparatively speaking, modest orchestra used by Beethoven? It were a pity for art's sake if musicians cannot serve both masters.

"Siegfried" was performed in its regular course on Wednesday evening with Frau Klafsky as the Brünnhilde. She gave a singularly fine rendering of the part, representing with wonderful skill and feeling the double nature of the fire-girt maiden. She seems to have the power of showing her whole strength without any trace of over-emphasis. Her voice is of fine quality. Herr Alvary and Herr Lieban (Siegfried and Mime) repeated their parts, and with marked success. The orchestra, with one or two exceptions, was exceedingly fine. Herr Mahler conducted.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

At the Portman Rooms, on June 30, the pupils of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch gave an interesting performance of seventeenth and eighteenth century music. The programme included pieces, for various combinations of strings, by John Jenkins, Corelli, J. S. Bach, and Handel, the overture and incidental music to "Bonduca" by Purcell, and Pergolesi's "Salve Regina," sung by Miss Florence Monk. The executants, some of whom were very young, numbered about twenty; their intonation was remarkably correct and the unanimity of their expression deserves great praise.

An interesting coincidence: on July 1 Sir Charles Hallé ended his present series of Schubert Recitals, and entered on the fiftieth year of his public career in London. The curious in such matters will find the programme of his first concert at the Hanover-square Rooms in the Musical World for July 6, 1843. On Friday, Sir Charles played the Sonatas in A and B flat (composed in 1828) and three Clavierstücke, and accompanied eight of the Lieder, sung with even more than customary charm and power by Miss Fillinger. He has never played better, and his audience showed very plainly that they thought so. Let us hope that their applause will induce a repetition of the series at no very distant date.

AN orchestral concert was given at St. James's Hall on the same evening by M. Emile Saurét, who played Max Bruch's G minor Concerto, Mackenzie's original and charming "Pibroch," and two smaller pieces, in his usual artistic and vigorous style. The orchestra—that of the Gorman Opera from Covent Garden—gave an admirable account of itself in the accompaniments, but was not heard alone—for what reason did not appear. The omission was all the more to be regretted on account of the conspicuous ability of the conductor, Herr Feld. M. Saurét also had the assistance of Miss Marguerite Hall, whose exquisitely refined singing was much appreciated; and of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, who conducted his own work and was recalled to the platform at its close.

MR. GEORGE GROSSMITH'S Recital drew the usual crowd to St. James's Hall on Saturday, and was accompanied by the usual symptoms of success. The lash so deftly handled by this clever satirist is still applied with unabated vigour; and still as effectually is the severity of its strokes mitigated by a balm of the richest humour. Mr. Grossmith's musical sketches included, besides the inimitable "Old Organ Man" and "The Dances of Years Ago," an amusing account of "The Trials of a Comic Singer," and a capital parody of the conventional love-duet of Italian opera.

THE last Richter Concert of the season opened with a fine performance of Beethoven's Overture (Op. 124), and closed with one scarcely less admirable of the "Symphonie Fantastique" by Berlioz. Between these came the opening scene from "Das Rheingold," well sung by Mme. Amy Sherwin, Mme. Minna Fischer, Miss Girtin Barnard, and Mr. Andrew Black; the Overture to "Tannhäuser," and the closing scene from "Götterdämmerung," in which Mme. Nordica revealed powers hitherto unsuspected even by her warmest admirers. Three recalls testified to the enormous success achieved—a success of which, in such a piece, and before such an audience, any artist might well feel proud. We are glad to hear that, financially, this has been one of the best of the Richter seasons.

ON Wednesday Sir Augustus Harris gave the last of his four operatic concerts. The hall was not well filled. That the loss was theirs who stayed away will be gathered when we say that among the artists who appeared were Mmes. Nordica, Eames, and Deschamps-Jehin, Milles G. and S. Ravogli, Macintyre, and Arnoldson, and Messrs. Maurel and Lasalle. Though not large, the audience was very appreciative, and encores were accordingly numerous. They were all thoroughly well-deserved. Messrs. Mancinelli, Beignani, Randegger, and Jehin accompanied.

E. F. J.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and éditions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

HOLIDAYS in NORMANDY.—M. BARBIER, French Master, Glasgow Athenæum, Examiner in French to Intermediate Education Board, receives at his country residence in Normandy, during June, July, and August, a few GENTLEMEN desirous of improving their knowledge of French by a stay in France. Backward Candidates coached for Examinations. Beautiful country. Tennis. Every comfort. Highest references.—For particulars and Prospectus apply to M. BARBIER, Ecosville, par Louviers, Eure, France.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

VOL. XLII. commenced July 2nd.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

- | | | | | |
|-----------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Acton, Lord | Douglas, Prof. R. K. | Hodgson, Shadworth H. | Murray, Dr. J. A. H. | Simpson, W. |
| Aitken, G. A. | Dowden, Prof. E. | Houghton, Rev. W. | Myers, Ernest | Skeat, Prof. W. W. |
| Alexander, S. | Doyle, J. A. | Howorth, Sir H. H. | Napier, Prof. A. S. | Smith, G. Barnett |
| Allen, Grant | Driver, Prof. S. R. | Hughes, Reginald | Nettleship, Prof. H. | Smith, Miss L. Toulmin |
| Allen, J. B. | Drummond, Rev. R. B. | Hunter, Sir W. W. | Nettleship, J. T. | Sommer, H. Oskar |
| Arnold, Arthur | Dryden, Sir Henry | Ingram, J. H. | Neubauer, Dr. A. | Sonnenschein, Prof. E. A. |
| Axén, W. E. A. | Duff, E. Gordon | Ingram, Prof. J. K. | Newton, Sir C. T. | Stephens, H. Morse |
| Bain, R. Nisbet | Dunlop, R. | Jacobs, Joseph | Nicholson, Cecil | Stephens, Prof. G. |
| Ball, Rev. C. J. | Earle, Prof. J. | Jevons, F. B. | Nicholson, Dr. E. | Stevenson, W. H. |
| Balzani, Count Ugo | Ebers, Prof. G. | Johnson, Lionel | Nicholson, E. B. | Stewart, J. A. |
| Barnett, P. A. | Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y. | Johnson, R. Brimley | Noble, J. A. | Stokes, Whitley |
| Bayne, Rev. Ronald | Edinburgh, The Bishop of | Jolly, Prof. J. | Noel, Hon. Roden | Strachey, G. |
| Beazeley, M. | Ellis, Robinson | Jones, Rev. W. H. | O'Grady, Standish H. | Strong, S. Arthur |
| Beeching, Rev. H. C. | Elton, C. I. | Keane, Prof. A. H. | Oman, C. W. C. | Sully, Prof. James |
| Bell, H. T. Mackenzie | Elton, Oliver | Keene, H. G. | Patterson, Arthur J. | Sweet, H. |
| Benn, A. W. | Ely, Talfourd | Kingsford, C. L. | Paul, C. Kegan | Symonds, J. A. |
| Bennett, A. W. | Evans, Arthur | Kirkup, T. | Peacock, E. | Symons, Arthur |
| Bensley, Prof. R. L. | Field, Michael | Lang, Andrew | Pearson, Prof. Karl | Taylor, Canon Isaac |
| Bezold, Prof. C. | Firth, C. H. | Laukester, Prof. E. Ray | Pellham, Prof. H. F. | Temple, Capt. R. C. |
| Blind, Karl | Fita, Padre F. | Leach, A. F. | Peterson, Prof. | Temple, G. T. [Prof.] |
| Boase, Rev. C. W. | Fitch, J. G. | Lee, Miss Jane | Phillips, Claude | Terrien de Lacouperie, |
| Bonar, J. | Fortnum, C. Drury E. | Lee, S. L. | Pinker, J. B. | Thompson, E. Maunde |
| Bradley, Henry | Fowler, Rev. T. | Lee, Vernon | Pollard, A. W. | Toynbee, Paget |
| Bradley, J. W. | Fowler, Rev. J. T. | Le Gallienne, R. | Poole, Prof. R. S. | Tozer, Rev. H. F. |
| Brown, Dr. Robert | Frazer, J. G. | Legge, Prof. J. | Postgate, Prof. J. P. | Tucker, R. |
| Brown, H. F. | Freshfield, Douglas W. | Lewin, Walter | Powell, F. York | Twiss, Sir Travers |
| Brown, R., Jun. | Friedländer, Dr. M. | Lewis, Prof. W. J. | Raine, Canon J. | Tyler, Thomas |
| Browne, E. G. | Furnivall, Dr. F. J. | Lindsay, W. M. | Ramsay, Prof. W. M. | Tyler, E. B. |
| Browne, J. W. | Gaidoz, H. | Lyall, C. J. | Rashdall, Rev. H. | Vambéry, Prof. A. |
| Browne, Prof. G. F. | Gairdner, J. | Lyster, T. W. | Reid, J. S. | Venables, Precentor |
| Bryce, Prof. J. | Galton, Arthur | Macdonell, Prof. A. A. | Rhys, Prof. John | Villari, Linda |
| Buchanan, Robert | Gardiner, S. R. | Macdonell, G. P. | Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W. | Vinson, Prof. Julien |
| Bühler, Prof. G. | Gardiner, Mrs. S. R. | Mackay, J. S. | Richards, F. T. | Wallace, Prof. W. |
| Bywater, I. | Garrod, H. B. | Mahaffy, Prof. J. P. | Richards, H. P. | Wallace, W. |
| Caine, Hall | Gonner, Prof. E. C. K. | Mann, J. S. | Richter, Dr. J.-P. | Warren, Rev. F. E. |
| Campbell, Prof. Lewis | Grant Duff, Sir Mount- | Margoliouth, Prof. D. S. | Robertson, Prof. Edmund | Waters, E. Chester |
| Canton, W. | stuart E. | Markham, Clements R. | Robertson, Eric | Watkins, Rev. M. G. |
| Capes, Rev. W. W. | Grant, Col. F. | Markheim, W. | Robinson, Rev. C. J. | Watson, Foster |
| Chambers, E. K. | Gray, J. M. | Martin, C. Trice | Roby, H. J. | Watson, W. |
| Cheetham, Archdeacon | Greenhill, Dr. W. A. | Marzials, F. T. | Rolleston, T. W. | Watts, Theodore |
| Cheyne, Prof. T. K. | Grey, William E. | Mayhew, Rev. A. L. | Rudler, F. W. | Wayte, Rev. W. W. |
| Church, Prof. A. H. | Groome, F. H. | Merk, Rev. C. | Rye, Walter | Weale, W. H. James |
| Clouston, W. A. | Hager, Dr. H. | Merry, G. R. | Ryland, F. | Webster, Rev. Wentworth |
| Collins, J. C. | Hamerton, P. G. | Minchin, J. G. C. | Saintsbury, G. | Wedmore, Frederick |
| Conway, W. Martin | Hamilton, J. A. | Minchin, James Innes | Sahuon, Prof. G. | West, Dr. E. W. |
| Cotterell, G. | Hardy, W. J. | Minto, Prof. W. | Salmoné, Prof. H. A. | Westlake, Prof. John |
| Cotton, H. J. S. | Haverfield, F. | Monkhouse, Cosmo | Sanday, Prof. W. | Westwood, Prof. J. O. |
| Courtney, W. P. | Hawkins, F. | Moore, Rev. Dr. E. | Sandys, Dr. J. E. | Wharton, E. R. |
| Crawford, O. | Herford, Prof. C. H. | Morfill, W. R. | Sargent, Rev. H. | Wharton, H. T. |
| Davidson, John | Hessels, J. H. | Morris, Rev. Dr. R. | Sayce, Prof. A. H. | Wheeler, Stephen |
| Dawkins, C. E. | Hewlett, H. G. | Morris, Judge O'Connor | Sayle, C. | Wickham, W. |
| De Vere, Aubrey | Hickey, Miss E. H. | Morshead, E. D. A. | Seeley, Prof. J. R. | Wicksteed, Rev. P. H. |
| Dickins, F. V. | Hicks, Rev. E. L. | Muir, Dr. Thomas | Sharp, William | Wilkins, Prof. A. S. |
| Doble, C. E. | Hill, S. McCalmont | Müller, Prof. F. Max | Shedlock, J. S. | Wilson, C. E. |
| Dobson, Austin | Hodgetts, E. A. Brayley | Murray, A. S. | Sincecox, G. A. | Wilson, H. F. |
| Dore, J. R. | Hodgkin, Dr. T. | Murray, George | Sincecox, Miss Edith | Wollaston, A. N. |

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all News-vendors in Town and Country.

THE NINTH and TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESSES of ORIENTALISTS. For full and authoritative information see July number of the "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," pages 208-220.

ORIENTAL INSTITUTE, Woking; or, SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., London, E.C.

GENERAL KIRÉEF'S "CREDO" on "RUSSIA and ENGLAND in CENTRAL ASIA." See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

INDIA and the SILVER QUESTION. By A. COTTERELL-TUPP, late Accountant-General, Indian Government. See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

TURKISH PROGRESS, by Dr. HYDE CLARKE; THE JAPAN CONSTITUTION, by ONE of its FRAMERS; THE LEGENDS of DARDISTAN; INDIAN MAGIC FORMULAE; "DWARFS in MOROCCO"; "UGANDA," by Dr. FELKIN; and other Articles of current or literary importance by Specialists. See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., OULLES, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums of deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THE IMPERIAL AND ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW

ORIENTAL and COLONIAL RECORD. JULY, 1892.
ASIA.—F. T. PIGGOTT (late Legal Adviser to the Japanese Cabinet): "JAPAN and her CONSTITUTION."
A. COTTERELL TUPP, B.C.S. (late Accountant-General to the Government of India, Bombay): "IS the DEPRECIATION of SILVER in any WAY a BENEFIT to INDIA?"
P. HORDERN (late Director of Public Instruction, Burma): "AN EPISODE in BURMESE HISTORY."
C. E. RIDDULPH: "GEOGRAPHY of PERSIA."
PUNDIT S. E. GOPALACHARU: "MAY HINDUS CROSS the OCEAN?"
R. MICHELL: "MY RUSSIAN RECORDS."
COL. ALEXANDER MAN: "FORMOSA: AN ISLAND with a ROMANTIC HISTORY."
AFRICA.—DR. R. W. FELKIN: "UGANDA."
R. G. HALIBURTON: "DWARF TRIBES SOUTH of MOUNT ATLAS."
C. H. E. CARMICHAEL: EUROPEAN INTERESTS in AFRICA.
COLONIES.—G. C. LEVEY, C.M.G.: "THE FINANCIAL POSITION of AUSTRALIA."
ORIENTALIA.—C. JOHNSTON, B.C.S.: "BENGALI PHILOLOGY and ETHNOGRAPHY."
W. G. ASTON, C.M.G. (late Japanese Secretary H.M.'s Legation, Tokio): "OBSERVATIONS on DR. TSUBOTA'S DISCOVERY of ARTIFICIAL CAVES in JAPAN."
GENERAL.—HYDE CLARKE: "IS TURKEY PROGRESSING?"
DR. G. W. LEITCHER: "LEGENDS, SONGS, and CUSTOMS of DARDISTAN."
"MISCELLANEOUS NOTES of the late SIR WALTER ELLIOT."
"THE PELLAGI and their MODERN DESCENDANTS."
DR. J. P. VAL D'EREMAO: "AN INDIAN RAJAH at HOME."
THE NINTH and the TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS.
GENERAL KIRÉEF'S "Credo" on English and Russian Relations in Central Asia.—Oriental Studies admitted into the Honours in Arts Course in the Scottish Universities, &c., &c.
SUMMARY of EVENTS in ASIA, AFRICA, and the COLONIES.
REVIEWS and NOTICES. 5s. per copy; £1 per annum.
ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WOKING.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

Vol. 155, No. 1.—JULY, 1892.—2s. 6d.
CONTENTS.

WHAT SHALL the RATIO BE? By Senators STEWART, HANSBROUGH, and Representatives SPRINGER, BLAND, and DALZELL.
LYNCH LAW in the SOUTH. By the Hon. FREDERICK DOUGLAS.
LADY JEUNE on LONDON SOCIETY. By W. H. MALLOCK.
THE NEEDS of the NEW NORTH-WEST. By the GOVERNOR of MINNESOTA.
POLITICS and the PULPIT—
I. Bishop W. CROSWELL DOANE.
II. Bishop W. F. MALLALIEU.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN as a STRATEGIST—I. ARCHIBALD FORBES.
PREHISTORIC TIMES in EGYPT and PALESTINE—II. By Sir J. W. DAWSON.
THE USE of CATHEDRALS. The DEAN of St. PAUL'S.
ORGANISED LABOUR in the CAMPAIGN. SAMUEL GOMPERS.
GAMBLING and CHEATING in ANCIENT ROME. By RONALDO LAMIANI.
THE SITUATION in ITALY. By Ex-Prime Minister CRISPI.
NOTES AND COMMENTS—
A TILT at a BLACK MONSTER. MARY ELIZABETH BLAKE.
THE ENGLISH REPORTER. EDWARD FOURITT.
RAILWAY SAFETY APPLIANCES. H. S. HAINES.
THE PEACEFUL CONQUEST of NEW ENGLAND. Rev. J. H. WARD.
ORIENTAL PILGRIMAGES and CHOLERA. WM. G. EGGELESTON, M.D.
BRENTANO'S, 5, Agar Street, Strand, W.C.

THE ARENA.

Vol. VI., No. 2.—JULY, 1892, 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE FIRST CIRCUMNAVIGATION of LAKE CHALA. By M. FRENCH-SHELDON. Illustrated.
JULIA MARLOWE. By MILDRED ALORICH. Illustrated.
WOMEN in the ALLIANCE MOVEMENT. By ANNIE L. DIGGS. Illustrated.
THE LAND of SOCIAL CONTRASTS; or, a Briton's Impressions of America. By J. F. MCHIRAD.
IN the TRIBUNAL of LITERARY CRITICISM—BACON v. SHAKESPEARE. Part I. A Brief for the Plaintiff. By EDWIN REED.
WHY the DEMOCRATS should ELECT the NEW PRESIDENT. By Hon. WM. M. SPRINGER, M.C.
WHY the PEOPLE'S PARTY should ELECT the NEW PRESIDENT. By Hon. THOS. E. WATSON, M.C.
WHY the REPUBLICANS should ELECT the NEW PRESIDENT. By Hon. J. C. BURROWS, M.C.
HYPNOTISM and MENTAL SUGGESTION. By E. O. FLOWER.
CONFESSIONS of a THEOLOGIAN. ANONYMOUS.
THE DESCENT from EDEN. By Rev. J. S. DAVID.
THE BASIS of MONEY. By H. A. HIGGINS.
THE WORLD'S RELIGIONS at the WORLD'S FAIR. By Rev. FRANK N. RIAL, Ph.D.
JESUS, the CHURCH, and the WORLD'S FAIR. EDITORIAL.
BRENTANO'S, 5, Agar Street, Strand, W.C.

THE NOVEL REVIEW, for JULY,

NOW READY, price Sixpence. Monthly, contains, amongst other things, an Article by Mr. GRANT ALLEN on "FICTION and Mrs. GRUNDY," and a Review of Mrs. W. K. Clifford's Works by Mr. DEBILLE, with Portrait.—Published by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., 25, Paternoster Row. Editorial and Advertising Offices: 18, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE

LINOTYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1054.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
TALLEYRANDE'S MEMOIRS, by H. MORSE STEPHENS . . .	43
THE NAUFRAGE, by PERCY ADDLESHAW . . .	41
PRATT'S TIBET AND CHINA, by STEPHEN WHEELER . . .	45
COURTNEY'S STUDIES AT LEISURE, by E. K. CHAMBERS . . .	46
THE SABBATH IN PURITAN NEW ENGLAND, by WALTER LEWIN . . .	47
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN . . .	47
RECENT VERSE . . .	49
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	50
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES . . .	50
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . .	50
ORIGINAL VERSE: "FRIENDS IN YOUTH," by K. B. . .	51
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	51
THE SHELLEY CENTENARY . . .	51
CIVIL LIST PENSIONS . . .	51
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . .	51
CORRESPONDENCE—
Aristotle as an Historian , T., by the Rev. Sir George W. Cox; Nimrod in the Assyrian Inscriptions , by Prof. Sayce; "Jack," by E. W. B. Nicholson; "Prince of To-day," by Miss M. Betham-Edwards . . .	52
MATHEMATICAL BOOKS . . .	53
CORRESPONDENCE—
Greek , "ἄνθρωπος" = Latin "aqua," by E. Sibree . . .	54
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	54
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .	55
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . .	55
WALLIS'S PERSIAN CERAMIC ART, by COSMO MONKHOUSE . . .	55
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Agyptan Pottery in Egypt , by W. M. Flinders Petrie . . .	56
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	56
THE THEATRES, by F. WEDMORE . . .	56
STAGE NOTES . . .	57
GERMAN OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN AND DRURY LANE, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .	57
MUSIC NOTES . . .	58

AS LITERARY ASSISTANT, SUB-LIBRARIAN, OR SECRETARY.—The daughter of a professional man, well connected, but poor, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. She is thoroughly educated, well read in English and French literature, with some knowledge of Latin and German; good arithmetician, accustomed to secretarial work, to make researches in public libraries, to correct for the press, and to index; she can read aloud intelligently, and writes a legible hand; would undertake copying or anything else for which the above qualifications would suffice; whole or part time; several years' reference; excellent testimonials.—Address D. H., 30, Theobald's Road, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS., Plays, Reviews, Lectures, Legal, or other Articles, COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Terms moderate. Duplicate copies.—Address E. TROAN, 23, Maitland Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

ARTIST'S STUDIO.—To be LET (central), excellent STUDIO and RESIDENTIAL CHAMBERS combined. Rent £45 per annum. Modern building situate midway between City and West-end. North-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light. Hall porter.—Apply to MANAGER, Collector's Office, 63, Chancery Lane, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.

DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

BERTRAM DOBELL, Bookseller, of 54, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C., has a large and well-assorted STOCK of HIGH-CLASS BOOKS, including First Editions of esteemed Authors—Old and Curious Books—French Literature—Works on the Occult Sciences—Poetry and the Drama.

Now ready, Parts I. and II. (price One Shilling each) of a CATALOGUE of a COLLECTION of PRIVATELY PRINTED BOOKS, Compiled and Annotated by BERTRAM DOBELL.

Also the following CATALOGUES (free on receipt of stamp):—No. XXIII. CURIOUS, OLD, and RARE BOOKS.
No. XXIV. MISCELLANEOUS LITERATURE.
No. XXV. MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including First Editions of Modern Authors, and other Choice Works.

THE PRINCIPALSHIP of ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LANPETER, will be VACANT at the end of September. APPLICATIONS, with not more than six testimonials, should be sent in not later than July 31st, to the Rector's Professor of Divinity, Cambridge. Information as to duties and stipend may be obtained from the present PRINCIPAL.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

A FRENCH AMBASSADOR at the COURT of CHARLES II.— LE COMTE DE COMINGES.

From his unpublished Correspondence. By J. J. JUSSERAND, Conseiller d'Ambassade, Author of "English Way-faring Life in the 14th Century," "The English Novel in the Time of Shakespeare," &c. With 10 Illustrations, 5 being Photographures. Demy 8vo. cloth gilt, 12s.

"M. Jusserand has chosen a topic peculiarly fitted to his genius, and treated it with all the advantage to be derived, on the one hand, from his wide knowledge of English literature and English social life, and, on the other, from his diplomatic experience and his freedom of access to the archives of the French Foreign Office. . . . It is needless to say that M. Jusserand makes admirable use of the materials thus furnished to his hand. . . . We get a new and vivid picture of life at the Court of Charles II. . . . There is not a dull page in the book."—Times

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of an ENGLISH GAMEKEEPER,

JOHN WILKINS, of Stanstead, Essex. Edited by ARTHUR H. BYNG and STEPHEN M. STEPHENS. Illustrated by Arthur H. Byng and Sidney Starr. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s.

"A very readable and pleasant book."—Times.
"His book deals with all manner of topics incidental to his calling, from tales of dishonest keepers to a story of how he was nearly shot to death by a gang of poachers at Ryeoort, and makes excellent reading for lovers of the country-side."—Daily Telegraph.

THE ADVENTURES of a BLOCKADE RUNNER;

Or, Trade in Time of War. By WILLIAM WATSON. Illustrated by Arthur H. Byng. R.N. (The New Volume of "The Adventure Series"). Large crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.
"Our author recounts his adventures with a plainness and a particularity which, besides having a very graphic effect, carry conviction with them. His book is, indeed, a contribution to the history of the war, as well as one in which the general reader will find much to attract and entertain him."—Globe.

TOIL and TRAVEL:

Being a True Story of Roaming and Ranging when on a Voyage Round the World. By JOHN MACGREGOR ("Ralph"). Author of "The Girdle of the World," &c. 6 Full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo. cloth, 16s.
"The book is full of good things and cannot fail to amuse."—Daily Telegraph.

THE INTERPRETER'S HOUSE: a Book of Parables.

By H. PAUL NEUMAN. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s.

THE TWO SPHERES of TRUTH.

With Relation to Present-Day Theories. By T. E. S. T. With Diagrams. Demy 8vo. cloth, 5s.

FURZE BLOSSOMS: Stories and Poems for all Seasons.

By ROSA MACKENZIE KETTLE, Author of "Smugglers and Foresters," &c. Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s.

THE ART OF SINGING.

By SINCLAIR DUNN, R.A.M. With Diagrams. Demy 16mo. cloth, 2s.

THE SPEAKER'S A B C.

By Colonel ARTHUR M. BROOKFIELD, M.P. Demy 16mo. cloth, 2s.

MAKAR'S DREAM,

And other Stories from the Russian.
24mo, paper, 1s. 6d. each; cloth, 2s. each.

A NEW ENGLAND CACTUS.

By FRANK POPE HUMPHREY.

IN THE TRACK of the RUSSIAN FAMINE.

The Personal Narrative of a Journey Through the Famine Districts of Russia. By E. A. BRAYLY HODGETTS. Frontispiece. Crown 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

UNIVERSITY of TORONTO.

DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE.

APPLICATIONS, with testimonials and references, will be received by the undersigned until the 1st August next, for the CHAIR of POLITICAL SCIENCE in the University of Toronto. Salary £500. Duties to commence 1st October, 1892.

GEO. W. ROSS, Minister of Education.

Toronto, 30th June, 1892.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

PROFESSORSHIP OF LAW.

The COUNCIL invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of LAW.

Applications, with references, should be sent on or before the 15th JULY to the REGISTRAR, from whom particulars may be obtained.

E. LONDINI, Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL

Congress of Orientalists, 1892.

HON. PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK.

PRESIDENT—PROF. MAX MÜLLER.

All Communications as to Papers and Membership to be addressed to the Secretaries, 22, Albemarle Street.

Tickets, £1; Ladies, 0s.

The CONGRESS will be held SEPTEMBER 5-12. Prof. MAX MÜLLER'S ADDRESS will be delivered on the Morning of MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, and Mr. GLADSTONE'S, at 5 P.M., on SEPTEMBER 7.

N.B.—Orientalists are informed that invitations have been received from Geneva, for holding the Tenth Congress there.

THE TENTH

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS.

LISBON (23rd SEPTEMBER to 1st OCTOBER, 1892).

President-Patron: HIS MAJESTY DOM CARLOS I.

Orientalists and friends of Oriental studies are specially invited to take part in the above Congress, which will be followed by literary excursions to Cintra and other places of interest in Portugal, and to Cordova, Seville, and Granada in Spain. The programme of work comprises all known branches of Oriental learning, as also recent explorations, and subjects bearing on "Portugal and the East." The subscription (£1), papers to be read at the Congress, books for presentation, or collections for exhibition, may be forwarded to "The Delegate General," at the Portuguese Legation, 12, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., from whom also particulars may be learnt regarding Prize-translations and the award by the Congress of Diplomas, Medals, and other honours. The dates of the Congress and of its excursions have been so fixed as to enable members to attend the Americanist and other Congresses, Exhibitions, and Columbian Festivities that will take place in Spain between September 12 and the end of October. Reductions in Railway fares, &c., are being arranged for Members.

FOR PUBLICATIONS of the NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS including SUMMARIES of ORIENTAL RESEARCH in Sixteen Specialities, apply to PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT, ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WORKING.

Small Advertisements continued on pages 58 and 59.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

ROD and RIVER. Fly-Fishing for Salmon, Trout, and Graveling. By Major ARTHUR T. FISHER, Author of "Through Stable and Saddle-room," &c. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION

NOW READY.

THE STORY OF A PENITENT SOUL.

Being the Private Papers of Mr. Stephen Dart, late Minister of Lynnbridge, in the County of Lincoln.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

COUSIN CINDERELLA.

By Mrs. PAUL KING.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

BY A NEW WRITER.

A HIGH LITTLE WORLD,
And What Happened There.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

WESTOVER'S WARD.

By ALGERNON RIDGEWAY.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

THAT WILD WHEEL.

By FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE,

Author of "Madame Leroux," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RE-ISSUE OF

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS.
NEW 3s. 6d. EDITION.

Sale over One Million and a quarter Copies.

EAST LYNNE. (Two Hundred and Fiftieth Thous.)
THE CHANNINGS. (One Hundredth Thousand.)
MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES. (Seventy-third Thousand.)

THE SHADOW OF ASHLIDYAT. (Fiftieth Thous.)
LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTERS. (Fiftieth Thous.)
VERNER'S PRIDE. (Thirty-ninth Thousand.)
ROLAND YORKE. (Sixtieth Thousand.)

JOHNNY LUDLOW. First Series. (Thirty-fifth Thousand.)

MILDRED ARKELL. (Forty-fifth Thousand.)

ST. MARTIN'S EVE. (Fortieth Thousand.)

TREVLIN HOLD. (Fortieth Thousand.)

GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL. (Forty-fifth Thousand.)

THE RED COURT FARM. (Thirty-seventh Thous.)

WITHIN THE MAZE. (Forty-fifth Thousand.)

ELSTER'S FOLLY. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

LADY ADELAIDE. (Twenty-ninth Thousand.)

OSWALD GRAY. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Second Series. (Twentieth Thousand.)

ANNE HEREFORD. (Twenty-ninth Thousand.)

DENE HOLLOW. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

EDINA. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

A LIFE'S SECRET. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

COURT NETHERLEIGH. (Eighteenth Thousand.)

LADY GRACE. (Now appears for the first time in cheap form.)

BESSY RANE. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

PARKWATER. (Twentieth Thousand.)

THE UNHOLY WISH, &c.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Third Series.

THE MASTER OF GREYLANDS. (Twenty-fifth Thousand.)

ORVILLE COLLEGE. (Thirtieth Thousand.)

POMEROY ABBEY. (Twenty-first Thousand.)

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Fourth Series.

ADAM GRAINGER, &c.

JOHNNY LUDLOW. Fifth Series.

The Volumes are in crown 8vo size, bound in scarlet cloth and lettered on the side; each one will be sold separately.

The published price is 3s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIBRARY EDITION

OF

POPULAR NOVELS

BY AUTHORS OF THE DAY.

In cloth, gilt tops, 2s. 6d. each.

The Guardian says:—"Messrs. Hutchinson's Popular Library is really a most promising and remarkable sign of the times. Here we have the old-established novel doctored of its superfluous spaces and margins, and offered to the reader neatly bound, nicely printed, comfortable to handle, with plenty of matter and interest, and all for the modest sum of 2s. 6d."

By MRS. RIDDELL.

Austin Friars.

Too Much Alone.

The Rich Husband.

Maxwell Drewitt.

Far above Rubies.

A Life's Assize.

The World in the Church.

Home, Sweet Home.

Phemie Keller.

Race for Wealth.

The Earl's Promise.

Mortomley's Estate.

Frank Sinclair's Wife.

The Ruling Passion.

My First and My Last Love.

City and Suburb.

Above Suspicion.

Joy after Sorrow.

By FLORENCE MARRYAT.

Mount Eden.

Gerald Estcourt.

Love's Conflict.

Too Good for Him.

Woman against Woman.

For Ever and Ever.

Nelly Brooke.

Veronique.

Her Lord and Master.

The Prey of the Gods.

The Girls of Fever-sham.

Mad Dumaresq.

No Intentions.

Petronel.

Miss Harrington's Husband.

By JOSEPH HATTON.

By Order of the Czar.

[Twelfth Edition.]

A Modern Ulysses.

[Just ready.]

Clytie.

The Tallants of Barton.

In the Lap of Fortune.

Valley of Poppies.

Not in Society.

Christopher Kenrick.

Cruel London.

The Queen of Bohemia.

Bitter Sweets.

By J. SHERIDAN LEFANU

Checkmate.

All in the Dark.

Guy Deverell.

The Rose and the Key.

Tenants of Mallory.

Willing to Die.

Wylder's Hand.

By F. W. ROBINSON.

Christie's Faith.

Carry's Confession.

Under the Spell.

House of Elmore.

Milly's Hero.

Mr. Stewart's Intentions.

No Man's Friend.

Wild Flowers.

Poor Humanity.

Owen, a Waif.

Woodleigh.

A Woman's Ransom.

Mattie, a Stray.

Slaves of the Ring.

One and Twenty.

By G. A. SALA.

Quite Alone.

By SIDNEY S. HARRIS.

The Sutherlands.

Rutledge.

Christine.

By ANNIE THOMAS.

On Guard.

Walter Goring.

By M. BETHAM EDWARDS

Love and Mirage.

By JOHN COLEMAN.

The White Lady of Rosemount.

By SIR JULIUS VOGEL,

K.C.M.G.

A.D. 2000; or

Woman's Destiny.

By HELEN MATHERS.

Sam's Sweetheart.

By IZA DUFFUS HARDY.

The Girl he did not Marry.

By COL. H. MULLINEUX

WALMSLEY.

Branksome Dene: a

Sea Tale. [Just ready.]

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

THE GENERAL ELECTION.

NEW EDITION, Twelfth Thousand.

RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

By G. W. E. RUSSELL, M.P.

(The "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.)

With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste.... A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius." Daily News.

SECOND EDITION, now ready.

MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G.

By H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L.

(The "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.)

With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Unquestionably the liveliest, not to say the most superciliously cynical and wickedly witty, of the series."—Daily Chronicle.

THE MEMBER

FOR

WROTTENBOROUGH.

Passages from his Life in Parliament. Edited by his "Alter ego," ARTHUR A'BECKETT, Author of "Papers from Pump-handle Court," &c. With fancy cover, design by E. J. Wheeler. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GEORG EBERS'S NEW NOVEL.

PER ASPERA (a Thorny Path). By

GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales.

By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

(First Issue in Book Form.)

A SON OF THE FENS. By Dr. P. H.

EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo,

cloth, 6s.

"A remarkable work."—World.

CONVERSATIONS WITH CARLYLE.

By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G., &c. With 2 Portraits of Mr. Carlyle and 1 of Mrs. Carlyle. Crown 8vo,

cloth, 6s.

"A book which is well entitled to a place of honour, for it is by far the most sane, the most kindly, and the most critical estimate of Carlyle as yet published."—Saturday Review.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and

LETTERS. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, B.A.

With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page and 44 smaller Illustrations, including 15 Photogravures. Royal 8vo, cloth

extra, 21s.

The LARGE-PAPER EDITION, 250 Copies, demy 4to, boards, with extra Illustrations, THREE GUINEAS

NET, is just ready.

"Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from first to last."—Saturday Review.

THE STORY OF KING EDWARD and

NEW WINCHELSEA: the Edification of a Medieval

Town. By F. A. INDERWICK, Q.C., Author of "Side-

lights on the Stuarts," "The Interregnum." Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN

WITHOUT A GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACEY. With

numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT.

With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada,

Japan, and China, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT,

C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo,

cloth extra, 7s. 6d. "Picturesque and practical."—Globe.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY. By

E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With

34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo,

cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

THREE FEATHERS

By WILLIAM BLACK. 2s. 6d.

Being the New Volume in the Uniform and Cheap Revised

Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S NOVELS.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.

St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,

Fleet Street, E.C.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO.,

25, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1892.

No. 1054, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoirs of the Prince de Talleyrand. Edited, with a Preface and Notes, by the Duc de Broglie. Vol. II. translated by Raphaël Lédos de Beaufort; Vols. III.-V. translated by Mrs. Angus Hall. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

IN the ACADEMY for April 18, 1891, in a notice of the translation of the first volume of Talleyrand's Memoirs, some remarks were made on their authenticity and general scope. The translation of the fifth and last volume has now been published, and it is possible to give an account of the Memoirs as a whole, and to point out their importance to historical students. The original sense of disappointment experienced when it was made manifest that the cynical diplomatist had left no autobiography, but only some detached memoranda on particular men and particular epochs, and some copies of official despatches and private letters loosely strung together, has been deepened. It may be possible to accept the Duc de Broglie's view that Talleyrand merely meant to leave behind him an "apologia pro vita sua," in which he laid weight only on the two periods of his political career, his conduct at the Congress of Vienna in 1814, and in London from 1830 to 1834, when he rendered undoubted services to France. But in that case it is difficult to understand why he should have made the stipulation in his will that his Memoirs should not be published until thirty years after his death, or why his literary executor, M. de Bacourt, should have prolonged the period for another twenty years. There is not a word in the Memoirs likely to offend any one, no state secrets are revealed, no political intrigues unravelled; and if they had been published at the time of Talleyrand's death, they would have created but little sensation. If the old statesman wished to play a joke on posterity, he has certainly accomplished his end: public expectation has been kept awake by the mysterious secrecy preserved; and when the vaunted Memoirs appear, they are found to be entirely devoid of anything requiring secrecy. Some reviewers, relying on Talleyrand's reputation as a malicious wit, have held the view that the whole affair was intended as a posthumous witticism, and that the old cynic delighted in the idea that historians, who would wait expectantly for his memoirs for the keys to many riddles, which he alone was known to hold, should be utterly foiled. But such an idea is too subtle for ordinary minds; and if Talleyrand might have been capable of such a design, it is not likely that M. de Bacourt, who was above all things un homme sérieux, should have lent himself to it.

Fierce has been the controversy over the authenticity of the five volumes, which have been published almost simultaneously in France and England during the last year under the title of "Talleyrand's Memoirs." No one has the slightest suspicion that the Duc de Broglie tampered with the text placed in his hands for publication: his high personal character and his conscientiousness as an historian forbade the faintest thought of such conduct on his part; and his offer to place his text at the disposition of inquirers is quite unnecessary. It may be added also that no better editor could have been found, and that his notes are models of brevity and accuracy. But the Duc de Broglie himself admits that he has printed only the copy made by M. de Bacourt, and that the original has disappeared. Where is this original? Until it has been found and examined, an opinion will continue to exist that M. de Bacourt expurgated the papers committed to his charge. It is not probable that M. de Bacourt made interpolations; but it is probable that he made considerable excisions for the purpose of defending the reputation, as he thought, of the illustrious statesman. This view is strongly held by M. Aulard and M. Jules Flammarion, both scholars of repute, the latter of whom has had special opportunities of judging the capacity and trustworthiness of M. de Bacourt as an editor. For it must be remembered that M. de Bacourt has up to the present time been mainly known as the editor of the Correspondance entre Mirabeau et la Marck, and M. Jules Flammarion is the editor of the valuable Correspondance secrète du Comte de Mercy-Argenteau, the Austrian ambassador at Paris, who was La Marck's friend and political adviser. The arguments of the two most distinguished opponents of the completeness of the Memoirs can be read in M. Aulard's article in the Révolution Française for April 14, 1891, and in that of M. Flammarion in the Revue Historique for January-February, 1892.

In reply, the Duc de Broglie has published a preface to vol. v. of the Memoirs, in which he defends the reputation of M. de Bacourt, and asserts the probability that Talleyrand purposely omitted to describe his motives and his conduct during the Revolution, the Directory, and the Empire.

"When he took up his pen after the Restoration to which he had so powerfully contributed" says the Duke, "the Prince de Talleyrand, representing as he did legitimate monarchy at Vienna, in the presence of assembled Europe, must have retained but few ideas and traits in common with the Abbé de Périgord, sitting on the left in the Constituent Assembly, and he could scarcely have recognised this almost effaced likeness of himself after so distant a past. He had learned much and perhaps also forgotten a little. Many resolutions which he had taken during times of hope, of disappointment and of anxiety, must have appeared to him, if not the result of influence against which he was not proof, at least necessities to which he must submit. Would he not then have hastened to turn over this page of his history, in order to arrive rapidly at that on which were inscribed the eminent services he had just rendered to his country? How could he linger to recapitulate with complacency for the benefit of posterity impressions which he perhaps no longer retained, which did not even affect him, or in any case revive their memory."

Still more striking is the defence of the completeness of the Memoirs given by M. Pierre Bertrand in the Revue Historique for March-April, 1892. He too defends the honesty of M. de Bacourt; and after an analysis of Talleyrand's manner of composition, which according to him consisted of dictating fragments when he felt in the humour, he declares that there never existed any regular MS. of the Memoirs. He states that M. de Bacourt came into possession of a number of loose sheets, written from dictation in this fashion, and of a mass of correspondence, and that he sorted, arranged, and copied all this material in its existing form, as handed over to the Duc de Broglie. But even if this were the case, and there is no reason to doubt M. Bertrand's statements, it would be, to put it moderately, more satisfactory if M. de Bacourt had also carefully preserved these fragments. Who knows but that they might include an interesting account of Talleyrand's relations with Mirabeau, whose posthumous speech he read at the tribune of the Constituent Assembly, or of his communications with Danton during the latter months of 1792, when he undoubtedly inspired that great statesman's foreign policy? With all due deference to the Duc de Broglie, it does not seem likely that Talleyrand purposely passed over the important part he played during the Revolution when writing his Recollections in however loose a manner. He speaks of "those liberal and wise principles, of which the Revolution of 1789 had shown the practical possibility" (vol. iii. p. 226); and it does appear far more probable that M. de Bacourt, possessed with the horror of his generation for the events of the Revolution, suppressed his patron's fragments concerning this period of his life, with the idea that they would throw discredit on the reputation of Talleyrand. And the greatest argument of all in favour of M. de Bacourt's having done this is the entire absence of any justification for the delay in publication, directed by Talleyrand's will. Talleyrand must have known that his conduct in 1814 and in 1830-34 was wholly honourable to him, and that it was not necessary to await the judgment of posterity on it. But his share in the history of the Revolution and the Directory stands on a different footing: it had been hotly blamed in his lifetime; the contemporaries of his later career could not hear of the Revolution without shuddering at the memory of the Reign of Terror; and he may well have desired to appeal to the impartiality of posterity in writing an apology for his behaviour during those years of his political life.

Whether complete or not, all historians should be thankful for what they have got. Half a loaf is better than no bread; and it is well to have Talleyrand's views of certain epochs in his career, even if the most interesting are left untouched. The division of the Memoirs into twelve parts makes it easy to give a rapid summary of their contents, and a mention of the number of pages devoted to each will give an idea of the proportion allotted to the different subjects.

Part i. of vol. i. is entitled "The Years Preceding the Revolution," and covers in 104 pages the first thirty-seven years of Talleyrand's life, until the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly in 1791. It is bright and sketchy, but contains nothing of historical importance. Part ii., on the "Duke of Orleans," in 56 pages, contains an attack on that unfortunate prince and an exposition of his character and policy from an unfavourable point of view. Part iii. treats, in 78 pages, "The Convention, the Directory, the Consulate, and the Early Years of the Empire," from 1791 to 1807. That is to say, it professes to describe Talleyrand's exile during the Convention, his tenure of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs under the Directory, his share in the coups d'état of 18 Fructidor and 18 Brumaire, the negotiations leading to the Treaty of Amiens, and the whole of his administration of foreign affairs during the early years of the Empire until he was replaced by the Duc de Bassano in 1807. As can be well imagined, these were the most important years of Talleyrand's life and those of his greatest political importance. Yet they are briefly dismissed with a few trifling anecdotes and remarks. Parts iv., v., and vi., on "Spanish Affairs, 1807," "The Erfurt Interview, 1808," and on "Napoleon's Marriage, his Brothers, and his Struggle with Pope Pius VII., 1809-1813," contain 49, 50, and 95 pages respectively. They treat of events which occurred while Talleyrand was out of office, and though interesting enough, and occasionally throwing new light on the causes of Napoleon's downfall, are quite inadequate to the subjects discussed. Perhaps the most useful pages are those devoted to the Emperor's quarrel with the Pope, which exhibits the weakness of the great man after he had become infected with the idea that he was a new Charlemagne. Part vii., on "The Fall of the Empire and the Restoration," in 101 pages, is far more valuable. It contains an elaborate account of the proceedings which led to the summoning of Louis XVIII. to the throne of France, and Talleyrand's defence of the Restoration, as the one means possible for saving France and giving her an intelligible attitude towards the victorious European powers. Part viii., on the "Congress of Vienna," occupies 322 pages, and fills the latter part of vol. ii. and the beginning of vol. iii. It consists mainly of Talleyrand's official despatches and private letters from Vienna to Louis XVIII., and its interest has been somewhat discounted by the publication of Pallain's Correspondance inédite de Louis XVIII. et M. de Talleyrand some years ago. The Duc de Broglie has carefully collated this publication from the archives with the copies retained by Talleyrand, and has marked all the variants, which, as he says, are sometimes very instructive. The Congress of Vienna was Talleyrand's great diplomatic campaign. In it he proved himself the Napoleon or rather the Wellington of diplomatists. Arriving in Vienna the representative of a defeated and discredited nation, and at first excluded from the private conferences of the ministers of the four great powers—Austria, Russia, Prussia, and England—he managed, by posing as the champion of the smaller powers, and then by skilfully taking advantage of internal dissensions, to become the arbiter of the Congress, and eventually, by a secret treaty, united England, Austria, and France against Prussia and Russia. The history of the great Congress cannot be too minutely studied, and a fresh perusal of Talleyrand's letters and despatches only confirms the high opinion generally held of his extraordinary skill in managing men. Part ix., in 78 pages, discusses the Second Restoration in 1815 after the final defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo. It is cleverly written, and ends with Talleyrand's final resignation of the ministry of foreign affairs.

Parts x., xi., and xii., which fill the latter half of vol. iii. and the whole of vols. iv. and v., treat in 762 pages of Talleyrand's embassy to London in 1830 to 1834. This is far the longest and far the most important portion of the whole. It is not too much to say that it can never be neglected by any student of the period of the Revolution of 1830. Both the official documents and the private letters it contains are of the greatest value, and they are most admirably edited by the Duc de Broglie. Europe was at the time in a state of commotion, which was far more widespread than during the days of the Revolution and the Empire. Civil war was raging in Spain and Portugal; Belgium had torn itself away from the hated union with Holland; and France had just replaced Charles X. by Louis Philippe. The attitude of the monarchs of the Holy Alliance was doubtful; and it was expected that the concert of 1814 and 1815 would be renewed, and that an effort would be made by the great powers which had overthrown Napoleon to restore order and the arrangements of the Congress of Vienna. At this juncture, Talleyrand was sent as ambassador to London, and shortly afterwards the Reform ministry was formed in England with Lord Palmerston as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The position of affairs was critical, and a great European war seemed imminent. But the diplomatic skill of Talleyrand, and the sound common sense of Palmerston, averted the danger, and when the former left in London in 1834 all fear of a general war was at an end. The monarchy of July in France was recognised everywhere; Leopold of Saxecoburg-Gotha was firmly seated on the throne of Belgium; Dom Miguel was driven from Portugal, and Spain was for a time at peace.

In addition to the twelve parts just summarised, Talleyrand's Memoirs contain a note in vol. iii. (pp. 206-223) defending himself from the charge of being responsible for the murder of the Duc d'Enghien, and an appendix in vol. v. (pp. 337-392) on the character and administration of the Duc de Choiseul. This appendix is in point of style the gem of the work. It is exquisitely written, and loses some of its charm in the process of translation. The cynical abbé of the ancien régime, the malicious wit of the last century, is to be seen in every line, and the political reflections suggested are wise and well considered. The account of the intrigues by which Choiseul rose to power and of those by which he was driven from the ministry through the influence of Mme. du Barry, is suggestive of the profligacy of the times of his youth; while the comparison of the two famous mistresses of Louis XV. is characteristic of the pungency of his style, and deserves quotation if only on account of its contrast with the usual descriptions of the two women.

"Mme. de Pompadour," he says, "had very little mind; her blue eyes, possessing neither brilliancy nor vivacity, betrayed the emptiness of her head. Although she had been brought up and had lived in the financial society of Paris, which at that time was rather distinguished, her style was bad, and her language was vulgar—faults which she was not able to correct even at Versailles. She differed in every way from Mme. du Barry, who, though less well educated, had succeeded in acquiring a sufficiently pure style of conversation. Mme. du Barry's eyes were not so large, but they were intelligent; her face was well formed, and her hair was extremely beautiful; she liked conversation, and had caught the art of telling a story brightly. They both possessed the art of lying to perfection" (vol. v., p. 388).

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

The Naulahka. A Story of West and East.
By Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier. (Heinemann.)

MR. KIPLING has fallen for the time a victim to a disease that has proved fatal to many modern novelists—namely, overproduction. It is not many years since he first became known to the Anglo-Indian public, and it seems but a few weeks ago that Mr. Andrew Lang was extolling in Longman's Magazine a little book called Departmental Ditties by the young writer. Yet during the last two or three years volumes of stories, collections of verse, and newspaper articles have succeeded each other with such startling rapidity that, even allowing for the fact that some of these were but republications of earlier work, Mr. Kipling's sincerest admirers have feared for the great reputation so suddenly acquired. Barrack Room Ballads and half-a-dozen stories in Life's Handicap in some measure restored the confidence that had been not a little shaken by The Light that Failed, a novel which, in spite of several striking passages, betrayed signs of hurry and what looked like carelessness.

But the rough-hewn journalistic style that gives Mr. Kipling's short stories their power and grip is not suited altogether to longer and more intricate narrative. The qualities that go to make a novel of 400 pages interesting and admirable are, in fact, different in many ways from those which enable a man to strike out a brave story in a few swift and telling paragraphs; and Mr. Kipling does not yet possess them. Even M. de Maupassant, king of the short story, is but a skilful amateur at the regular novel. Moreover, in The Naulahka Mr. Kipling has hampered himself by taking Mr. Balestier into partnership. Literary partnerships are seldom happy, and this last is no exception to the rule. Indeed, it is almost time that an authoritative edict were issued against these unfortunate combinations. Mr. Stevenson has suffered severely more than once by admitting another to share his labours. The delicate style and fantastic humour of the New Arabian Nights degenerated into careless English and farcical extravagance in In the Wrong Box and The Dynamiter. Collaborators in literary work should be something more than kin. They must think and speak and feel alike; they must be in all things as necessary to each other as were the brothers De Goncourt; then there is some chance of the partnership succeeding. But Mr. Balestier, though not destitute of a certain merit and distinction, is by no means the alter ego of Mr. Kipling; and a novel, in the composition of which each of them was to have his fair say, was necessarily doomed to be in part a failure.

Yet The Naulahka contains passages of great merit. There are descriptions scattered through its pages which no one but Mr. Kipling could have written, while the early chapters giving the history of Topaz City and the aspirations of its inhabitants are well done and have the touch of the novel rather than the tale. The main idea, too, "dealing with the dead East from the standpoint of the living West," that living West being Western America, is both clever and original. Possibly either Mr. Balestier (who would seem to be a more minute and painful workman than Mr. Kipling) or Mr. Kipling might have done full justice to it separately. But as their joint book comes to us, it is a succession of brilliant scenes interlarded with scenes that are far from brilliant.

Without betraying the writer's effects, one may give the outline of their story. Nicholas Tarvin is swayed by two great wishes, one to marry Kate Sheriff, the other to bring a line of railroad (known as the Three C's) to Topaz, his native city. Kate feels called upon to minister to the women of India; and while Tarvin debates with himself whether he shall follow her there, he discovers that if he can win the Naulahka, a necklace of fabulous beauty and value, for the wife of the president of the Three C's, she will persuade her husband to make Topaz its terminus, and so for ever destroy the claims to superiority put forth by the neighbouring city of Russler. As Kate's new home is also the home of the Naulahka, he determines to go to India and win them both; so that, on her arrival at Gokral Soetarun, she finds him already settled at the rest house. At last Kate, who has been managing the native hospital, consents to marry him and return to Topaz, for a wild fakir has cheated her of her patients, and the favourite wife of the Maharaja has several times tried to poison her and the little Maharaj Kunwar, who has been placed under her care. The climax of the story is reached when Tarvin who, after many perils has possessed himself of the string of jewels, has to choose between Kate and the Naulahka.

The most fascinating and not the least important person in the drama is the little Indian prince. Few authors understand children so well as Mr. Kipling, few enter further into their thoughts and whims, for even Mr. Stevenson's interest in childhood is mostly autobiographic and personal. The strange, almost pathetic, blending of pride and simplicity in the royal child is vividly suggested. Tarvin himself is not nearly so successful. He is living and forcible and commands attention, but scarcely respect or liking. Throughout the book it is difficult to tell whether he desires more to win Kate or the Naulahka, so that the scene in which he promptly decides between them is a little unconvincing. Kate is even more unsatisfactory than Tarvin, for after the opening chapter she dwindles into a tearful shadow, and one longs to get back to the railroad president's frivolous but charming wife, who "always threw her head back when she laughed; it showed her throat."

It is fair to add that whoever reads this novel will find much of it hard to forget. There is a wonderful meeting of Tarvin and Sitabhai at the tank, when the cunning woman, jealous of the plain queen, whose son's life she covets that her own may inherit the throne, is conquered by the quiet deliberation of the "strange Englishman who is not an Englishman." There are good scenes between Tarvin and the opium-sodden Maharaja; and the story of the exodus from the hospital will rank among the best passages in modern fiction.

That the novel is not wholly good is due in part to those excellences which are also Mr. Kipling's limitations; in part to the fact that the authors have stultified themselves by collaboration; but chiefly because it has lacked that careful and sustained labour without which no story of this length can ever be completely successful.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

To the Snows of Tibet through China. By A. E. Pratt. (Longmans.)

NEITHER by a noble rage for geographical research, nor by the hope of finding new markets and unbeaten tracts for trade, nor yet by the special inducement which according to Marco Polo makes the adjoining region a very pleasant place for young fellows to go to, was Mr. Pratt impelled to set forth on a long and difficult journey to the Tibetan frontier. He is a naturalist; and a country to be interesting to him must be a good collecting ground, must be what he says the neighbourhood of Wan-nien-ssu is—rich in species. As a collector he seems to have been extremely successful. The birds and fishes, reptiles and insects, he brought back with him will occupy the attention of naturalists for a long time to come. A list of them, all but the Lepidoptera which are still being classified, is printed as an appendix. This magnificent accumulation is the reward of more than three years' toil in the heart of China and on the borders of Tibet. The arduous conditions under which it was got together may be learnt from the traveller's narrative, wherein also will be found much interesting information about the Fauna and Flora of South-Western China. But while, on the one hand, the book does not profess to give a complete and properly digested summary of the author's scientific researches; its value from a geographical point of view is lessened by the fact that Mr. Pratt's predecessors have written better and more detailed accounts of the country he traversed. The Yang-tse Kiang to its highest navigable point has been minutely described by a long series of travellers, from Captain Blakiston down to Mr. Archibald Little. Of the country onwards to Ta-t'ien-lu or Darchendo, one may read in half a dozen other books of travel. Excepting for a few miles, all Mr. Pratt's routes had been trodden by either Mr. T. T. Cooper, Capt. Gill, Mr. Baber, or Mr. Alexander Hume. This of course is not Mr. Pratt's fault, but it may abate a reader's enthusiasm.

Mr. Pratt twice visited the now famous mountain not inappropriately called O-mi, the wonders of which were first described by Mr. Baber. A few slight divergencies in the accounts given by the two travellers may be noted. Near the "Temple of a Thousand Years," which Mr. Baber calls the "Myriad Year Monastery," Mr. Pratt took a photograph of a very large Buddha. The image, he says, was made of clay and gilt; but it was probably the same one seen by Mr. Baber, and believed by him to be pure copper. Mr. Pratt, who for a scientific man is singularly vague in his descriptions, merely says it was a very large statue. Mr. Baber estimated its height at 25 ft. or more, adding that it is in a rude and archaic style, and is reputed to be the oldest image on the mountain. Unfortunately Mr. Pratt's photograph has not been engraved. A full and particular account of the various colossal figures to be seen in different parts of China would be interesting. Opposite Kia-ting-fu Mr. Pratt saw a seated Buddha, at least 150 ft. high, cut out of the red sandstone. Mr. Baber, however, says that only the face of this figure shows traces of the sculptor's hand, being roughly rounded from a projecting rock, and furnished with a plaster nose six feet long. Mendez Pinto avers that, on the journey from Northern China to Tongking, he saw an iron statue upwards of thirty fathoms high. Not far from the gilt or copper Buddha mentioned above, Mr. Pratt saw the bronze elephant with six tusks also described by Mr. Baber. "Who the workmen were," Mr. Pratt writes, "it is, I believe, impossible to find out, and also why the elephant has been introduced." His predecessor quotes the Chinese Topography in which this remarkable monument is said to date from the third century of our era, and he concludes that the artificers were Indian Buddhists. As regards the figure seated in a huge lotus flower on the elephant's back, Mr. Baber was told by the monks that it was not a Buddha, as Mr. Pratt thinks, but an image of the patron saint of the mountain, the patriarch P'u, also called, according to Dr. Edkins, Samantabhadra. Like Mr. Baber, Mr. Pratt was regaled with the wonderful tea found on Mount O-mi, a tea which has a natural taste of sugar. He seems, however, to have overlooked the fact recorded by Mr. Hume, that it is not tea at all, but Viburnum phlebotrichum. Where Mr. Pratt has the advantage over Mr. Baber is in the sight he obtained of the "Glory of Buddha." Mr. Baber heard of this marvel: but although he ascended to the "Golden Summit," and standing on the edge of the "Cliff of Suicides"—a tremendous precipice a mile and more from brow to foot—gazed into the abyss below, he saw only floating clouds of mist. Mr. Pratt is more fortunate, for he has seen the Fo-kuang, the "Glory of Buddha." On his second visit to the Golden Summit, the Glory was revealed to him twice. He believes it to be a reflection of the sun thrown upon clouds half way down the precipice; and describes it as a golden disc surrounded by radiating prismatic bars, which scintillate and change colour as they revolve. All this, however, and a good deal more besides, may be found in Mr. Baber's pages; for though Mr. Baber did not see the Glory himself, he had an account of it from two missionaries. It is Mr. Baber, too, and not Mr. Pratt, who relates various local traditions about O-mi: how pilgrims lost in the forest come on a sudden to spacious halls wherein are golden images on jewelled thrones, and where they themselves are feasted by ministering priests; how others wander mile after mile through a measureless cave, lit up by no earthly light, and at length fall asleep to find themselves on awakening transported to the "Golden Summit."

Another remarkable mountain, in the "Province of the Four Waters," which was visited by Mr. Pratt, is Mount Wa, described by Mr. Baber as a flight of thirteen steps each 180 feet high by 30 feet broad. But Mr. Pratt does little else than quote his predecessor's description. Mr. Pratt, too, was told that the wild ox is found in the neighbourhood, and he supposes the animal to be the Budorcas of Père David. He might have noticed Mr. Baber's suggestion, accepted by Sir Henry Yule, that these wild oxen are the Beyamini, "the very wild and fierce animals" Marco Polo speaks of.

Further information would also be acceptable concerning the ancient cave dwellings on the banks of the Min river. Mr. Pratt, indeed, did go ashore and examine them. "These caves," he writes, "were made for dwellings by a race which inhabited the country before the Chinese drove them out, and are probably very ancient;" but this is hardly more satisfactory than Mr. Baber's tentative suggestion that they are of unknown date, and were made for an unexplained purpose by a people of doubtful antiquity. If, however, as some authorities hold, they were Buddhist monasteries, it would be worth while to compare them with the cave dwellings at Panjdeh on the Afghan frontier, said by Sir Henry Rawlinson to date from the first century A.D., and to be the work of Buddhist ascetics; and with other cave dwellings of a similar kind in Central Asia and Baluchistan.

Regarded merely as a story of adventure, to be told with the aid of a magic-lantern to some not over critical audience, to whom the names of Gill and Baber are scarcely known, Mr. Pratt's narrative is admirable. Doubtless, too, the general reader would rather be amused than instructed, and will derive more entertainment from the anecdote of the artful native who tried to palm off on the traveller some boars' tusks and porcupines' quills as the teeth and whiskers of a monstrous tiger, or from the account of the Tibetan race meeting at Ta'tsien-lu, than he would find in learned and abstruse dissertations. Mr. Pratt was not to be taken in with the tusks and quills, but the Chinese skipper of his boat got the better of him. This man persuaded his employer that it would be as well to fly a flag, and accordingly procured a "number one piece" flag, which, it turned out afterwards, bore the device of a British Ambassador. Under its protection the guileful Chinaman smuggled large quantities of salt, musk, and medicines past the Customs' posts.

The book is well illustrated; but, in addition to the map of the route from Kia-ting-fu to Ta'tsien-lu, there should have been a general map of the Yang-tse Valley. The absence of an index is an even more serious defect.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

Studies at Leisure. By W. L. Courtney. (Chapman & Hall.)

A REPRINT of scattered articles from the magazines always appears to need some apology for its existence. Unless they are held together in a unity of common subject, of new and fruitful critical method, of special and delightful style, such collections often fail to charm: they have an air of bookmaking; they irritate the reader more than they profit him. Mr. Courtney's new volume is exceptionally discursive: you have here a study of Ibsen or of Anatole France, there a series of philosophical essays, the fine flower of many Greats lectures; in this corner a sketch of "Old Oxford Revels," in that a contribution to the solving or perhaps the darkening of the perpetual problems of religion. And for prelude to them all comes a bit of drama, an attempt at a one-act play on the death of Christopher Marlowe. Amid this quaintly-assorted fellowship the unfortunate critic moves rather aimlessly: his shafts wing themselves against isolated points; he cannot, if he would, see the book steadily and see it whole.

And yet, after all, there is something in the character thereof, in this very heterogeneity, consonant to the mind of the author. Mr. Courtney, like some other critics, is for ever "wandering between two worlds," shifting on strange diagonals from one of two independent lines of culture to the other, from the mental attitude of the scientist to that of the man of letters. At one moment he breathes the proper academic spirit: amorous of method, of precise truth, of exact and subtle definition; at another there sounds suddenly a note of the literary temper, with its tendency to the picturesque, its love for the presentment rather than for the matter presented. The first mood, for instance, is dominant in the analysis of Locke, the second in the paper on the irony of Descartes. Or again, it is the philosophy tutor who writes the essay on "Personality," the student of literature who discusses Ibsen and modernity as reflected in the art of Ibsen.

With regard to this essay on "Personality," I should like to offer a few criticisms. It is a somewhat inconclusive handling of a well-worn theme. But it seems only fair to add that, as the problem of personality is obviously insoluble, it is perhaps the better course to state it rightly and to leave it there. Mr. Courtney's statement is eminently lucid and just. At times, however, there is a certain superficiality about it, which recurs elsewhere in his philosophic work, and recalls the famous definition of another writer as "a philosopher amongst journalists, and a journalist amongst philosophers." Thus, in dealing with the relations between brain and mind, Mr. Courtney writes:

"In a few years [i.e., during child-life] the mind has suddenly blossomed forth in a marvellous way, but there has been but little change in the so-called physical basis. No new organs have been formed within the cranium; there is an increase of the brain substance, but it is a gradually diminishing increase which by no means corresponds with the enormous mental growth."

Surely it is crude to suppose that brain development must needs mean increase of size.

"It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make men better be."

It is rather growth in complexity of organisation that is in question—the setting up of new and manifold paths of connexion between the cortical areas, in correspondence with that aspect of mental growth which the laws of association are an attempt to express. Mr. Courtney is more happy when he goes on to insist on the importance of attention—that is, will in a rudimentary form—as a psychical factor in personality.

I cannot profess to be greatly fascinated by the dramatic sketch included in this volume, "Kit Marlowe's Death." In poetry, in style, in imaginative intensity, it is as far inferior to Horne's play as it probably excels it in acting capabilities. And it was at least audacious to borrow for a "curtain" the same quotation—effective enough—from "Doctor Faustus," which Horne had already made use of for a similar purpose. The character of Marlowe is well sustained, and the dialogue, if a little stiff, is adequate for the stage. But by printing the piece, Mr. Courtney claims for it to be something more; he presents it as an experiment in the literary drama. The chief quality entitling it to this description is the flavour of reminiscence, of allusion, which hangs about it. The introduction, for example, into Marlowe's dying speech of quotations from his plays is fairly impressive. Unfortunately, such touches only appeal to Elizabethan scholars, and these cannot fail to take amiss the inaccuracy of many of them. The play is a revel of anachronisms. Let me lay a finger upon some. The date of Marlowe's death is rightly given as 1593; yet one may count four or five phrases manifestly suggested by passages in "Hamlet," of which even the first imperfect version cannot well be earlier than 1601. Mr. Courtney does not, I suppose, wish to hint that the primitive revenge-play, bought probably from Lord Pembroke's men, and vitalised by Shakspeare, is to be set to the credit of Marlowe. There are certainly no grounds for such a theory. Then, again, the "mighty line" of Marlowe, of which the poet is made to speak, is surely taken from Ben Jonson's lines to Shakspeare, published in 1623. Finally, there is no record of any "young school-boy essays of mistranslating Virgil" to be attributed to Marlowe. He translated or paraphrased Ovid, Lucan, the pseudo-Musæus, and probably Coluthus, but not Virgil. On the whole, Mr. Courtney's book must be dismissed as more suggestive than satisfactory.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

The Sabbath in Puritan New England. By Alice Morse Earle. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Social and Present Day Questions. By Frederic W. Farrar. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

AN HISTORICAL account of Puritan worship in New England comes to hand at the same time as a volume of Archdeacon Farrar's sermons. Those eminently practical Puritans spending the "Lord's day" in their meeting house under the most uncomfortable conditions can have little in common with the congregation which assembles for a brief service in Westminster Abbey or St. Margaret's Church and listens for half-an-hour to the Archdeacon's rounded periods. In the Puritans, with their hard heads and hard hearts, we have one extreme of Christian worship, while latitudinarian Episcopalians, with an overplus of sentimentality, are almost at the other.

The story of the Puritan Sabbath is told with much humour, notwithstanding that it is good history, well based on solid fact. Naturally enough, the Puritans themselves failed to perceive the humorous aspect of their situation and surroundings. Whatever Dr. Watts may say to the contrary, their form of religion was designed to make their pleasures less, or to annihilate them if it were possible. We are not to suppose enjoyment really was stamped out; but it existed in spite of religion, and not in concert with it, and was unauthorised and unofficial even when not actually unlawful. There could be no enjoyment during those long Sabbath hours spent in the uncushioned and unwarmed meeting house. Even the sweet oblivion of sleep was denied to the tired worshippers, for the tithingman was ever on the alert and ready to apply the hard end of his long wand to the heads of the men and the feathered end to the faces of the women to bring them back to consciousness. Yet the proposal to introduce a little comfort in the shape of a stove was regarded with as much horror as the Free-Kirk men felt about the "kist o' whistles." In one parish a good anti-stove lady fainted from the excessive heat on the first Sunday the new stove appeared; ignorant, until too late, of the fact that the stove had not been lighted. Out of the very endurance of these miseries of life, a certain grim enjoyment may have been drawn; but of intentional aids to enjoyment there was none, and for many generations efforts merely for the relief of misery were not entertained.

With a keener sense of humour the Puritans would probably have gained in moral uprightness as well as in bodily ease. The incongruity between the extravagant self-renunciation of their religious profession and the very worldly character of their actual lives would then have struck them as an absurdity. As things were, the desperate necessity for keeping up pious appearances led to a good deal of hypocrisy. Social and Church recognition being their measure of virtue, the unpardonable sin consisted not in sinning, but in being found out. Coercive and repressive measures do something to improve behaviour; but if virtue is to be served, men must be put on their honour, and imbued with a sense of their personal responsibility; and here the Puritan system failed.

The New England Puritans of two centuries ago made it unlawful for a woman to kiss her child "on the Sabbath or fasting day," fined lovers for "sitting together on the Lord's Day under an apple tree," and placed Captain Kemble in the stocks for the "lowd and unseemly behaviour" of kissing his wife "publicquely" on the Sabbath day—the occasion being that when, returning home after a three years' voyage, he met her on the doorstep of his house. Yet they were heavy drinkers of rum and "flip," and their hearts were not in their religion but in their business, so that even in the noon-house, between the services, they transacted it whenever minister, deacons, and tithing-men were out of hearing. Nevertheless, beneath the appearances, where the true nature of the men and women could assert itself, the rugged integrity and sturdy independence with which they are popularly credited, may assuredly be found. In non-Puritan religious circles to-day there may be less hypocrisy, but it is not certain there is more or as much earnestness. Hard benches, cold rooms, the denial of luxury in general, served in some cases, no doubt, as tests of sincerity. The Catholic Church, with its fasts and penances has always recognised a similar necessity. But from the modern Episcopal system discomfort and humiliation have been carefully eliminated. The sermons are made as comfortable as the cushioned pews. Even general allusions to modern sin—much more direct personal allusions to persons present—are in bad form. The judicious preacher contents himself with denouncing Jezebel and Jacob, or if he be exceptionally bold, in condemning such vague abstractions as "Unbelief" and "Atheism." The congregation do, indeed, at each service confess themselves "miserable sinners," but only collectively, in a musical way, which removes the sting; and the sin continues while the misery is shirked.

No divine of the present day is more popular than Archdeacon Farrar. He has a talent for saying popular things in a bold and fearless way. He has the courage of his opinions, which, however, are never very eccentric. It requires courage of a kind to grapple even with bogies of one's own creation. Did he not win himself a name by boldly attacking the doctrine of eternal damnation amid the plaudits of the multitude? In the present volume he makes an equally heroic attack on what he names "atheism," and it is safe to say nine out of every ten of his hearers and readers will admire him for it. He is the master of a flowing style which in pulpit discourses makes a little thought go a long way. The present volume will do nothing to injure his reputation; for, whatever he discusses, be it citizenship, social amelioration, national duties, General Grant, General Garfield, or Dean Stanley, if he does not enlighten much, he certainly does not shock. He belongs to the "liberal" religious school in the Church of England, to which Dean Stanley and Robertson of Brighton belonged; but his liberalism and theirs are not precisely the same thing, while his writings, unlike theirs, are not virile. Yet he has this advantage over them, that his books are more popular. As there is a demand for such work as his, it is as well it should be supplied. We do not think it can do any harm. It may do a little good: milk and water nourish babes where meat would kill. And to those who do not admire it, it is a significant sign of the times.

WALTER LEWIN.

NEW NOVELS.

That Wild Wheel. By Frances Eleanor Trollope. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

No Compromise. By Helen F. Hetherington and the Rev. Darwin Burton. In 3 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

Westover's Ward. By Algernon Ridgeway. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

For God and the Czar. By J. E. Muddock. (Newnes.)

The Poison of Asps. By R. Orton Prowse. (Methuen.)

My Stewardship. By E. McQueen Gray. (Methuen.)

A London Cobweb. By Christian Lys. (Trischler.)

IF the mantle of Jane Austen were awaiting a suitable recipient in the present generation, there would be a difficulty in finding anyone with a better claim to its reversion than Frances Trollope. Admitting what it is perhaps heresy to dispute, namely, that the author of Pride and Prejudice was as profound an exponent of human character, and altogether as exceptionally great a writer of fiction, as Macaulay has described her, we may yet allow that there is room for humble imitation, to say nothing of absolute rivalry. Frances Trollope has never yet written a weak or uninteresting novel. This of itself is something, in an age when every germ of incipient genius is pounced upon by the enterprising publisher and submitted to a hothouse régime, productive for the most part of quickly developed but flabby tropical growths, in place of the sturdy though slow products of unassisted nature. The author of That Wild Wheel, though her work has been conditioned by the exigencies of having to contribute portions of it piecemeal to a weekly periodical, does not seem to have suffered in the process. As usual, her tale is distinguished by the introduction of a remarkably large number of characters—too large a number, indeed, one would think for the readers of a serial story to hold conveniently in their heads; but this is not of much consequence. As usual, nearly every character introduced bears a distinct stamp of individuality, and irresistibly calls to mind someone or other we all have known in real life. The book before us has at least a score of prominent personages in it, every one of them representing some separate type of humanity. The title is borrowed from Tennyson's familiar song, "Turn, Fortune, turn thy Wheel"; and the story is chiefly concerned with episodes in the life of a family named Hughes, once in prosperous circumstances, but brought down to poverty by a series of mischances. As is invariably the case with this author's novels, the plot is quite an unimportant feature, but the art is apparent everywhere. With a style which may be described as perfectly quiet, and even homely, she is often delightfully epigrammatic; and in point of descriptive fidelity, though the middle classes of society are her favourite theme, she is equally at home when portraying either the higher or the lower grades. There is also another point to which the present reviewer is pledged to draw attention. Frances Trollope never abuses good taste, after the foolish manner so constantly adopted now by lady novelists, by introducing, as a leading feature, the superior woman, and, as a foil to her, the unintellectual man. She is so perfectly fair in her distribution of honours, that one is inclined, with a subdued feeling of amusement, to attribute the general effect to a designed effort of diplomacy on the part of the author. In That Wild Wheel, if Miss Judith Hughes is the sweetest and most lovable old spinster in the world, her nephew, William, is the most unselfish and amiable of men; if Barbara Copley is the most delightful of heroines, there is no doubt that Gilbert Hazel is perfectly worthy of her. And so throughout. Moreover, there is a sunny optimism pervading all Frances Trollope's fiction which is acceptable both to men and women, and a plentifulness of lovemaking which is specially attractive to the latter. That her descriptions are replete with quiet humour would scarcely need mention, if it were not for a tendency observable here and there to force a joke by scarcely worthy means. The omission of aspirates, for instance, in the conversation of wealthy and pretentious but uneducated people, may be taken for granted, and need not find a place in print. This is, however, a trivial fault: it is almost the only one which criticism can detect in Frances Trollope's handiwork.

The concluding paragraph of No Compromise will, better than anything else, give the keynote of the whole work.

"As we close these pages there is danger in the air, for the battle is raging, and the champions of Christianity are bound to show their colours. As one untruth is always the precursor of another, so one compromise ever requires a second to cover it. The Board School system is producing its natural effect, and free education is only a further betrayal of principle. The voluntary schools in large towns, especially those of the North, cannot stand against it; and, consequently, they will be brought under a Board, which will be another blow struck at the Church as our educator. Some may say it is too late to cry out, others that it is fortunate that the Bill comes to us from our friends and not from our foes; but it would be just as sensible to assert that it is better to be wounded by a friend than an enemy. On the other hand, it is never too late to mend. If we held our tongues in the past, that is no reason why we should be silent in the present crisis. Let every Christian, to whatever sect he may belong, lay this truth to his heart, that the Church of God can never make the smallest compromise with secularity in any form whatever."

It will easily be gathered from the above that the whole book is a piece of special pleading in favour of the Church of England and her teaching. Our business is, of course, merely to examine the work as a novel. Few stories of a didactic or polemical type have ever attained any great degree of popularity, and No Compromise is certainly not likely to add to their number. The book opens fairly well with an adventure in the Rocky Mountains; but the joint authors so quickly settle down to the controversial matter which they have principally at heart, that, although a cricket match and a fox-hunt—both rather amateurishly described—with some other incidental occurrences, are introduced as make-weights, the whole action of the story really turns upon the election tactics adopted by the Church party in a manufacturing town, as opposed to the endeavours made by another body of the inhabitants, led by a large local employer of labour, to introduce a Board School. The general tone of the book will, of course, commend itself to those who favour its point of view; whether the spirit which pervades its narratives and descriptions—as, for instance, in vol. iii., p. 102, where a sweep mounted on a donkey "painted a brilliant blue from the tip of its tail to the end of its nose" is quoted as a triumphant electioneering manoeuvre in the interests of the Church—is always in very good taste, may be open to question. And the narrative not only gives offence by its assumption of superiority, but it is dull into the bargain.

A careful perusal of Westover's Ward has not led to the conclusion that it possesses anything more than average merit. The scene is laid in the United States, and the story is American throughout. The person in whom we are specially invited to interest ourselves is a half-breed of particularly captivating beauty, who at the outset is introduced to us as a fugitive escaping from the Mexican, a man only one degree removed from a savage, who has made her his wife. Two Americans, travelling companions, named Harrison and Westover, fall in with this woman, Angela Prentiss, and befriend her. The woman takes to the stage, and secures at once a host of dangerous admirers; and Prentiss, her husband, perishing soon afterwards in a mine accident, Westover, in a quixotic fit of devotion, marries her, in order to obtain the right of keeping her out of harm. The author is evidently a man of culture, and his book is carefully written; but there is not much more to be said for it. Its great defect is that it is impossible to get up much enthusiasm on behalf of the prominent female character—it would be an abuse of terms to call her heroine—Angela Prentiss. She is a soulless, illiterate, intractable little creature, with all the frivolous instincts of a thoroughly weak and unprincipled woman strongly developed, and with nothing but her beauty to commend her. Soon after marrying her, Westover loses his life; and in the third volume we are told how she was received by the Westovers, an aristocratic old family, at Lady's Meade, their Virginian home, where she distinguishes herself by eloping with the local clergyman. Gay Westover, the best female character in the book, is not provided with a romance of any sort, much less with a husband.

That Mr. Muddock is thoroughly well-meaning in his attempt "under the guise of fiction to lay bare the rottenness of Russia," and, in particular, in his protest against the senseless cruelty exercised towards the Jews in that country, cannot for a moment be doubted. And in his novel, For God and the Czar, he draws a sufficiently gruesome picture of the miseries endured by the victims of Russian persecution and of the horrors of Siberia. The only serious fault to be found with his narrative is that, from the beginning to the end, he appears to be writing in utter ignorance of the facts upon which his indictment against Russia is based. His accounts of the internal arrangements of that country in regard to prisons, the criminal code, and cognate subjects, remind one of the marvellous reports of Russian atrocity that were in circulation some forty years ago. No one would uphold an aggressive or cruel policy, and the attitude of Russia towards the Jews has sufficiently aroused public indignation; but a trustworthy view of the facts is now easily obtainable, and more harm than good may be done by the wild inaccuracies of the volume under notice.

The Poison of Asps, though somewhat spun out, is a neatly and cleverly constructed story of life in a country town, with its jealousies and gossip and misrepresentation. Mr. Cunningham, the new rector of Tattlebridge; Mrs. Needham, wife of the previous rector, a woman whose opinions were allowed to rule the town; Colonel Winthorpe, a settler in the place; and Catherine, his young and talented wife, who "had a mind able to get interest from the commonest experiences of life," and who, "earnest-minded child of this exceedingly earnest-minded generation as she was, had escaped that source of ceaseless unrest to those who have it, the craving for a mission—social, religious, or artistic"—are all skilfully handled characters. The story will repay perusal.

Anybody who wishes to while away a spare hour or so over a couple of hundred pages of crisp and refreshing humour cannot do better than take in hand My Stewardship, by Mr. E. McQueen Gray. This author has already published a book, but it deals with Continental life, and can hardly bear comparison with the present work. My Stewardship is the autobiography of an elderly maiden lady with two wards upon her hands—one a penniless nephew, the other an heiress and the daughter of an old friend. How this conscientious but exceedingly disagreeable person utterly failed to keep the two young people from falling in love with each other, and how the unamiable qualities of the narrator are allowed to come to the surface with exquisite naïveté as she tells her tale, the reader must ascertain for himself. It is an excellent novelette.

A London Cobweb is an ordinary detective story, and will probably evoke the interest that always attaches to this class of fiction. In the present instance the mystery is fairly well maintained to the end, and there is no particular flaw to be noticed in the plot. It is a pity, however, that, in order to account for a successful attempt to kidnap a man in the middle of London, the author should have resorted to the stale device of describing him as reduced to instantaneous unconsciousness by means of a saturated handkerchief, when it has repeatedly been proved that there is no known anaesthetic which can produce such an effect.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

RECENT VERSE.

Love's Victory. Lyrical Poems. By John Arthur Blaikie. (Percival.) Love's Victory, by Mr. J. A. Blaikie, contains some very agreeable and refined work, and shows a marked improvement both in touch and technique upon his share in the little green volume of "Madrigals, Songs, and Sonnets," published some twenty-two years since, that held the productions of the respective muses of Mr. Blaikie and Mr. Edmund W. Gosse. Indeed, one of the weakest things in the present book is an ode on Chatterton, reprinted from that curious little collection. Mr. Blaikie has certainly a fair amount of facility and some genuine poetic insight. His note is far from strong, but it has occasionally a very tuneful trick of sweetness. Perhaps if he had taken more trouble his book might have assumed a higher rank. As it is, the verses are amazingly unequal in merit: now and then Mr. Blaikie will write almost like an angel; but, alas, far more frequently his style approaches unto that of poor Poll. Limping lines, doubtful rhymes, awkward cadences, and an occasional triteness of expression are scarcely excusable, now that perfection of detail has grown to be a mere matter of course, and the bones and vitals of a work of art are the only essentials to be taken seriously. Rhymes, like the wife of Caesar, should be above suspicion, yet Mr. Blaikie rhymes you "earth" with "path"; "sighs" with "cadences"; "numb" with "home" (an unfortunately American discord); while for rhythm such a line as "Ascendant did with joy my spirit o'erwhelm" would condemn a stronger sonnet than that which it terminates. There is, nevertheless, a good deal of imagination—and some melody to boot—in Mr. Blaikie's volume. "Sunrise upon Atlas" holds some very felicitous stanzas; "The Remonstrance" owns a closing verse that is really fine, both in conception and execution; "A Christmas Card" is graceful and charming; while "Absence" is so tender, so pretty, that we quote it at length.

"If not now soft airs may blow
From thy haven unto me,
If not now last autumn's glow
Thrill delight 'twixt me and thee;
Call up memory, oh! entreat her,
In the present there's none sweeter.

"One true thought and constant only
To that pleasurable time
Me sufficeth to make lonely
All the void and mocking prime
Of this summertime, whose story
Pales in that exceeding glory."

Amgiad and the Fair Lady, and other Poems. By John C. Kenworthy. (New Jersey: Englewood Press.) Though this tastefully-attired little volume comes to us from across the Atlantic, Mr. Kenworthy is an Englishman, and his first book of verse, The Judgment of the City, was published in this country. It contained some fine work, which was rendered striking and interesting by its singular freedom from the influence of those great contemporary poets whose cadences are more or less distinctly echoed by nearly every member of the crowd of young versifiers. Its main defect was an aggressive austerity, made manifest in a certain ruggedness which, by a very little care, might easily have been removed; and it appeared as if Mr. Kenworthy were unduly anxious to show his disdain for that mere "finish" which, though not the summum bonum in art, is far from being the despicable thing which he seemed to consider it. His new book proves that he has outgrown this mood of revolt, for in it the art is as fine and careful as the matter is winning—lovely things of thought and vision are commended by grace of form, melody of music, exquisiteness of phrase. The title-poem and "A Day of Wine" which precedes it deal with Oriental motives, and we discern very clearly the influence of Omar Khayyam and other Eastern singers, just as, in the lyrics which compose "A Love Passage," there are various suggestions of Heine, and at least one reminder of a very different man, Ralph Waldo Emerson. "Amgiad and the Fair Lady" is a miniature drama from the "Thousand and One Nights," having for its theme the adventure of the exiled Moslem prince, Amgiad, who, finding his way unawares into the city of the fire-worshippers and into the house of Bahder, master of the horse to the king, slays the beautiful woman who has beguiled him in order to save his host from her dagger, and is reproached by Bahder for destroying so much beauty in order to preserve the worthless life of an old man. It is a subject which would have appealed to Matthew Arnold, and its treatment in his hands would have been characterised by a dramatic subtlety and intensity which Mr. Kenworthy cannot achieve; but here, as elsewhere, he manifests that fine lyrical faculty which was not wholly disguised even by the wilful roughnesses of his early volume. Here is a charming fancy, imaginatively rendered, though in the third line of the second stanza there is a trace of the old impatient haste:

"The water to the willow said,
'Behold thine image in my heart,
Yet scarcely may my lingering waves
Thy low leaves kiss ere I depart;
From hence through sullen ways I flee
To die in ocean, wanting thee.'

"He dreamed not of the distant storm
That smote in strength upon the hills,
And poured him sudden, helping down
The gathering of a hundred rills;
He rose and sprang, and tore the tree
To his embrace,—now dead is she!"

It is, however, in "The Day of Wine" that Mr. Kenworthy is seen at his best; and to save space we forego comment and quote three stanzas, which will serve to show the quality of his work:

"There is a murmur in the leaves on high;
Love, hearest thou the south wind passing by?
It fleets through the whole south of Love, and goes
Into the north of Death. So you and I.
"O solemn moment of the sun's decline—
The death of day! The tracery of the vine
Embowering us shows black against the night;
Now the dew bless thee, mother of the wine!"

"See through the vine-stems the round moon and pale,
And see a quivering-throated nightingale
Stands in the moon—a shadow and a song!
With love and song and wine my senses fail."

It is not, we think, too much to say that these are stanzas which Kents would not have been ashamed to own.

Ethandune and other Poems. By James Williams. (A. & C. Black.) The poem to which Mr. Williams gives the place of honour tells, in six brief cantos, the varying metres of which are felicitously adapted to their respective motives, the story of Sigurd Olafson who invaded Britain, sacked the Abbey of Crowland, and sailed northward with his wife Hilda, of Wessex, to die with her a martyr to his newly-espoused Christian faith. The verse of Mr. Williams has the simplicity which befits the theme, but it is a simplicity which never degenerates into baldness. Though there is no gratuitous ornament, the author's imagination realises so distinctly and renders so vividly the stirring action of the story, that the poem has an inherent richness which stands in no need of decoration. Of course, all poets who now deal with such a theme have the disadvantage of following Mr. William Morris, and it is impossible to say that "Ethandune" is not somewhat overshadowed by "Sigurd the Volsung"; but Mr. Williams has a poetic individuality of his own, which he asserts without eccentricity or strain. The narrative poems which fill half the volume are all examples of good, manly, solid work, and the numerous sonnets have a singular equality of excellence both in substance and workmanship. Some of the "Miscellaneous Sonnets" are admirable; but we select as a characteristic specimen of Mr. Williams's the following, entitled "Malaga," from his fine series, "Sonnets of Places."

"No shadow veils the marble of the sea,
'Tis eventide at Malaga, the feet
Of such as walk her squares tread down the sweet
Of orange blossom blown from many a tree.
Moored in the haven's calm ride war-ships three,
Their gold and scarlet standards idly beat
Against the mast, the while a fishing fleet
With seamed brown sails sets landward tardily.
Oh for an hour of England with her turf,
Her woods and river meads where celandine
And iris close before the evening star!
Queen of the nations, here thy fame is mine,
To-morrow I shall hear Atlantic surf,
To-morrow I shall sail by Trafalgar.

This is fine pictorialism judiciously employed. A sonnet which is a mere picture loses the true sonnet character; but here the emotional climax of the sestet vindicates the purely pictorial octave, and gives the work a true and satisfying raison d'être.

Zalmoxis and other Poems. By James H. Wilson. (Elliot Stock.) There is sound scholarship, good rhetoric, and not a little genuine poetry of the derivative kind in Mr. Wilson's volume. Just because it is derivative his work is seldom arresting: we are not brought to those sudden pauses of pleasure which Mr. Kenworthy's verse provides for us; but the matter is always serenely satisfying, and the craftsmanship of such general excellence that if we are not stirred to enthusiasm we are never moved to complaint. The stories told in "Zalmoxis" and in "Two Figures at Delphi" are taken from Herodotus, and are told with a good deal of effectiveness in the swinging trochaic measure which has been popularised by "Locksley Hall." The same measure is employed in "Eloisa, Abbess," perhaps, on the whole, a less successful poem than the two last named, having hardly enough dignity of treatment and too much of a certain long-drawn elaboration of pathos which is to be found more appropriately in such a poem as Mrs. Browning's "Caterina to Camoens." Both the more important pieces and the briefer personal lyrics bear witness to Mr. Wilson's study of Lord Tennyson. "The First Wife" recalls the manner of "The Grandmother" just as distinctly as "Calypso" recalls the manner of "Oenone"; and here is a tiny lyric from the series entitled "Clods of the Valley," which, both by the tone of emotion and the turn of phrase, carries us back at once to In Memoriam. It is entitled "Listen."

"Oh, dear for ever, loved and sought,
And hoped and yearned for—since this air
Seems with your fragrant presence fraught,
Listen, oh! listen, to my prayer.

"Draw near me. Trust my heart to know
Your footstep from the rustling sheaves,
Your breath from all the winds that blow,
And all the voices of the leaves."

It will be seen that Mr. Wilson must be placed among Keble's "secondary poets"; but to say this is simply to classify, not to disparage.

NOTES AND NEWS.

JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS has written a sketch of Napoleon, which will be published shortly by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons in their series of "Heroes of the Nations."

MESSRS. LONOMANS, GREEN & Co. will issue to subscribers in the course of the autumn a record of twenty-two years' deer-stalking in the Highlands of Scotland, by the late Lieutenant-General H. H. Crealock, edited by his brother. The book will be royal quarto, illustrated with forty full-page plates reproduced in autotype, and over 200 woodcuts in the text. The edition for sale is limited to 250 copies.

THE Clarendon Press will publish this week, in two crown octavo volumes, a collection of the principal speeches delivered during the French Revolution, edited by Mr. H. Morse Stephens, the English historian of that period. The orators chosen are eleven in number, including Mirabeau, Barrère, Danton, Robespierre, and St.-Just. Prefixed to each is a short life and explanatory comment; while a general introduction deals with French oratory in general and the oratory of the Revolution. Many of the speeches have not before been reprinted, even in France; and special attention has been paid to securing an accurate text, and to the spelling of proper names.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication a History of Upton Court, of the parish of Upton in the county of Berkshire, and of the Perkyns family, compiled from ancient records by Miss Sharp. The work will cover the history of the house and of the family of Perkyns from the earliest times, and will contain many original documents and pedigrees never before printed. It will be issued by subscription, in crown quarto size, in antique style, and will be illustrated with numerous drawings by the author.

THE series of seven lectures that have been delivered during May and June in connexion with the Palestine Exploration Fund will be published in the autumn, both separately and in a volume. Among the lecturers were Sir Charles Wilson, Major Conder, Mr. W. M. Flinders Petrie, and Mr. Walter Besant.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will publish shortly, in their Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour, a book by Mr. A. D. Traill, entitled Number Twenty: Fables and Fantasies. The title story, which occupies the greater part of the volume, has been written specially for it.

Holidays in North Germany and Scandinavia, an unconventional illustrated handbook to the Old Hanseatic and Baltic Cities, and to Denmark and Southern Norway, edited by Mr. Percy Lindley, will be published next week.

THE curious disclosures of "a lost art" which appear in Commander Shore's Smuggling

Days and Smuggling Ways have proved of considerable interest to the public, and the first edition of the work has already been exhausted. A second edition is at press, and will be ready in a few days.

THE eighth edition of The Lazy Minstrel will be published immediately in a shilling form.

THE prize of one hundred pounds offered for guessing the author's title of a shilling story issued some months ago from the Leadenhall Press has not been gained. The title is suggested in the opening sentence in the book—"I have only one eye but I was born with two"—and again in the frontispiece which represents a human eye with the legend "I lost the other without knowing how." More than one-half the competitors thought that the word "eye" had something to do with it; and among the guesses were "An Eye for an Eye"—by far the most numerous—"Eye & Eye," "I and I," "I," "I and Eye," "Two Eyes," "A Black Eye," "Eyes Right," and "Eye Owe You." The author's title is An Eye and an I. The story itself is by Mr. Andrew Tuer, the director of the Leadenhall Press, who, now that the prize is withdrawn, seems to think that even sixpence is more than the little book is worth: at any rate, he has scored out "one shilling" on the cover and has substituted the lower price with satis superque printed underneath.

A COMMITTEE has been formed—which includes the names of the Earl of Dysart, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Dr. W. C. Coupland, Dr. Stanton Coit, Mr. Arthur W. Hutton, and Mrs. Ruth Homan—to found a West London Ethical Society, with the following aims:

"To assist in bringing our individual, family, and social life into conformity with our ideal of what is right.

"To free this ideal itself from all merely traditional notions, and from all self-contradictions, and thus to widen and perfect it; and—

"To assist in constructing the theory or science of right, which, starting with the reality and validity of moral distinctions, shall, for the sake of clearness, separate the facts of the moral life, as far as is possible, from theological and metaphysical presuppositions, shall explain their mental and social origin, and connect them in a logical system of thought."

The hon. secretary is Mr. H. Westbury Preston, 4, Elsworth-road, N.W.

ON Monday and Tuesday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be selling two interesting collections of autograph letters and historical documents. One, described as having been "formed by a deceased nobleman," is particularly rich in the correspondence of mediæval kings and queens, and of persons immortalised by Shakspeare, such as Talbot (called by the cataloguer a "distinguished Marshal of France"), Suffolk, and Wolsey. The other collection consists chiefly of letters written by foreign celebrities of more modern times. There is a series of fifty documents relating to Marie Antoinette's necklace, and another of letters by fourteen members of the Commune.

WE can do little more than acknowledge the receipt of Vol. X. of The Speeches of W. E. Gladstone, edited by A. W. Hutton and H. J. Cohen (Methuen). Though first in appearance, this volume is last in chronological order, covering the period from 1888 to 1891. It does not, therefore, comprise any of the great orations by which Mr. Gladstone's fame for eloquence will be preserved to future generations, though it does include several of his happier non-political efforts. In any case, it is pleasant to read his words in large, bold type, without the impertinent intrusion of "cheers" and "laughter."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE new number of the Quarterly Review, to be published at the end of this week, will contain articles on Cardinal Manning and Professor Freeman; on Trinity College, Dublin; on Pitt's war policy, and on "The Porson of Shaksperian Criticism"—whom we take to be none other than the undeservedly depreciated Theobald.

AN article, "The Apotheosis of Golf," by Mr. W. E. Norris, will appear in the August Century.

THE Rev. H. R. Haweis will contribute to The Young Man for August an article, entitled "When I was a Young Man: Recollections and Reflections."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Summer School of Theology at Mansfield College, Oxford—designed to meet the wants of ministers whose ordinary work has not allowed them to keep abreast of the later inquiries and discussions—will open on Monday next, July 18, and continue for ten days. More than three hundred ministers have expressed their intention of attending.

UPON July 6, representatives of the three universities interested in the foundation of the new magazine, met in Mr. Scott's rooms in Trinity College, Dublin, with Prof. Dowden in the chair. Up to the present no point of difficulty has arisen and a provisional prospectus is in preparation.

A MEETING was held during the tercentenary celebrations in aid of the Graduates Memorial of Trinity College, Dublin, which is intended to fulfil the same functions as the Unions of Oxford and Cambridge.

THE hon. degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon Sir George Baden-Powell by the University of Toronto, in recognition of services recently rendered to the Dominion in connexion with Behring Sea, and also to the University itself, in connexion with the restoration of the library destroyed by fire two years ago.

MISS HURLBATT, of Somerville Hall, Oxford, has been appointed principal of Aberdare Hall, Cardiff, the residence for women students of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire.

THIS year, for the first time, two women have been elected to post-graduate fellowships at the university of Yale. One took honours in political science; the other will work for the degree of doctor of philosophy.

THE Gaikwar of Baroda has subscribed £40 to the fund being raised to place a bust of Sir George Birdwood in the Senate-house of the Bombay University, and otherwise to perpetuate his services to the Western Presidency.

THE Indian Magazine and Review for July (Constable) devotes nine pages to the address delivered this year to the new graduates of the University of Madras by Mr. H. B. Grigg, director of public instruction.

IN this generation of editors, it seems strange to hear of a number of Greek MSS. of the New Testament, in the library of an Oxford college, which have never been properly examined. Yet this is what we are told in a pamphlet (Oxford: Horace Hart) by the Rev. Charles H. Hoole, student of Christ Church, who just a year ago published some interesting notes on the Codex Alexandrinus. It appears that Archbishop Wake (1716-1737) bequeathed to Christ Church, together with his library of books, a collection of 183 MSS. Most of these are ecclesiastical documents, relating to the business of the sees of Lincoln and Canterbury, or to Wake's project for uniting the Reformed Churches. But twenty-eight of them are Greek MSS. of portions of the New Testament, which Wake seems to have acquired from Athos and other places in the Levant, with a view to the preparation of a revised text in collaboration with the great Bentley. Two of them only were collated for Wetstein's edition (1751); but the rest have remained practically unexamined and unknown. From the summary account that Mr. Hoole gives of them, it is probable that their value for textual criticism may be inconsiderable; but they are certainly of historical interest, as showing the caligraphy of Greek copyists from the eleventh to the thirteenth century. Several bear handsome illuminations, and one perhaps belonged to the Emperor Manuel Palaeologus.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

FRIENDS IN YOUTH.

MEETING life's promise with an outstretched hand,
You were so eager at your dawn of day!
Now, on the western hills you seem to stand,
With face down-drooping to the sun's last ray.
And yet I meet you in the crowded street,
Fellow and friend to statesmen of the land;
And here of all men you are held discreet,
Speaking the things not hard to understand.
The woods and I knew more of you than they
Who judged your words as hasty and unmeet,
Nor clearer for the more you sought to say
To the great world which you had longed to greet.
Visions o'ertook you on the long sea-sand,
Storms rose within you that you might not stay;
You had no fellow in our youthful band
When love o'ertook them, turning March to May.
Some fruit of Hades and its bitter-sweet
Your soul had tasted on that lonely strand;
Some thought had seared you from the central heat,
And claimed you into bondage by its brand.
Idly we wandered on a trackless way,
While blue bells brought the heavens about our feet;
But still veiled Fortune beckoned you astray
Whence you returned not, for the years grow fleet.
Meeting death's promise with an outstretched hand,
Your face uplifted to the star-light ray,
Far on the western hills I see you stand,
Eager anew as at your dawn of day!

K. B.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for July opens with a lucid paper on the story of the Book of Jonah by Dr. Dale, in which an independent support is given to the prevalent critical view, that the Book has an allegorical intention. Dean Chadwick treats briefly of the narrative of "the first miraculous draught of fish," and Prof. Beet continues his study of the teaching of St. Paul on the Atonement. Principal Rainy concludes his able and not unsympathetic sketch of Newman, and a younger Free Church theologian (Prof. G. A. Smith) shows how full of interest is the geography of Samaria. Mr. Dawson treats in a somewhat rhetorical style of "The Doctrine of the Logos—its Genesis and Corruptions," and Dr. Davidson gives a brief and appreciative notice of Prof. Ryle on the Canon.

THE New World for June is too well written to be neglected by those who agree with its principles. That the social movement is bound to have important consequences for religion, must be clear; accordingly, the editor gives the precedence in this number to Prof. Andrews's very practical article on "The Social Plait." Minot J. Savage tells us much that we knew before on religious evolution, but the subject is almost too big for an essay. Prof. Cheyne deals with the story of Sodom and Gomorrah, on the principle that the unhistorical narratives of Genesis may yet be of much value for students of primitive culture and the genesis of spiritual religion. Prof. M. Bloomfield gives a valuable and authoritative sketch of the foundation of Buddhism, which should be read together with his recent contribution on Buddhism to the International Journal of Ethics. Francis Tiffany discourses with much enthusiasm on the indispensableness of the imaginative faculty in any religion which is to be really vital and influential. S. D. McConnell tells us what will, he thinks, be "the next step in Christianity." He is a Broad Churchman, and would retain the old creeds, and leave it to experience to determine how much in them is vital. But the "next step," according to this writer, will be to emphasise conduct as of paramount importance. A somewhat poor result: will not a reconstructed philosophy issue in a reconstructed theology? and has historical criticism no theological consequences? Prof. J. Royce discusses the implications of self-consciousness. N. Kishimoto, an educated Japanese, explains "how he came into Christianity," and what he thinks Christians ought to do to remove the appearance of many rival Christianities. And Mrs. Humphry Ward gives a deeply interesting essay on "New Forms of Christian Education." Among the reviews of books is one of Cheyne's "Origin of the Psalter," by Dr. Briggs. We may add that the New World can be obtained in this country at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for July contains a critical version of the Lamentations by J. Dysorinck, the translator of the Psalms; also a discussion of the Pirusia in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, by J. A. Bruins, and an essay on the contributions to our knowledge of Frisian heathenism made by Alfrid's Life of Lindger (of value for students of Anglo-Saxon times). W. C. van Manen reviews with freedom and courtesy Spitta's critical treatise on the Acts of the Apostles, and calls attention to the fact that it is just one hundred years since the birth of F. C. Baur.

THE SHELLEY CENTENARY.

THIS event will be celebrated at Horsham on August 4, by a public meeting and recital of some of the poet's most characteristic works.

It is also proposed to mark the event in a more permanent way. (1) By the erection in the parish church of a simple tablet, commemorating the name of Shelley with the dates of his birth and death; and (2) by the establishment of a library and museum to bear the poet's name for ever and to form a depository, not only for his own literary works and personal relics, but for collections of books drawn from other sources—public and private.

With a view to making this institution worthy of its name and purposes, an appeal is being issued, which already bears the signatures of Lord Tennyson, the Bishop of Ripon, Sir Noel Paton, the Rev. Stopford Brooke, Prof. Dowden, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Mr. Theodore Watts, Mr. Onslow Ford, Mr. W. M. Rossetti, Dr. R. Garnett, and Mr. William Morris. An account has been opened with the London and County Bank, Horsham, to which subscriptions may be paid; and the local committee includes the vicar of the parish (the Rev. C. J. Robinson) and the chairman of the Local Board (E. I. Bostock, Esq.).

Field place, the birthplace of Shelley, is about two miles west of Horsham; and in the parish church of that town are monuments to the poet's parents and grandparents.

CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.

THE following is a list of all pensions granted during the year ended June 20, 1892, and charged upon the Civil List:—

Lady Green, £120, in recognition of the long and valuable services of her late husband, Sir William Kirby Green, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Tangiers, and in consideration of her inadequate means of support.

Miss Amelia Blandford Edwards, £75, in recognition of her services to literature and archaeology, and in consideration of her inadequate means of support.

Mrs. Caroline Emma Carpenter, £100, in consideration of the services rendered by her late husband, Dr. Philip Herbert Carpenter, to science, and of the sad circumstances in which she has been left by his death.

Mr. Thomas Woodhouse Levin, £50, in consideration of the services he has rendered to education and philosophy and mental science, of his blindness, and of his inadequate means of support.

Dr. George Gore, £150, in consideration of his services to chemical and physical science.

Miss Frances Emily Scrivener, £25; Miss Edith Agnes Scrivener, £25; Miss Clara Anne Scrivener, £25, in consideration of the eminence of their father, the late Rev. Frederick Henry Ambrose Scrivener, as a Biblical scholar, and of their inadequate means of support.

Mrs. Mary Gray Garden, £40, in consideration of the literary merits of her father, the late James Hogg (known as the Ettrick Shepherd), and of her inadequate means of support.

Mrs. Eleanor Freeman, £100, in consideration of the eminence of her late husband, Prof. Edward Augustus Freeman, as an historian.

Mr. Edward Walford, £100, in consideration of his services to literature, and of his inadequate means of support.

Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod, £100, in consideration of his labours as a writer upon economical subjects.

Mr. Henry Bradley, £150, in consideration of his labours in connexion with the "New English Dictionary."

Miss Letitia Marian Cole, £30; Miss Henrietta Lindsay Cole, £30; Miss Rose Owen Cole, £30, in recognition of the services rendered by the late Sir Henry Cole to the cause of artistic and scientific education.

Mrs. Jeanie Gwynne Bettany, £50, in consideration of the services rendered to the spread of scientific knowledge by the numerous writings of her husband, the late Mr. G. T. Bettany, and of her destitute condition.

Total—£1,200.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DENK, V. M. O. Geschichte d. gallo-fränkischen Unterrichts- u. Bildungswesens. Von den ältesten Zeiten bis auf Karl den Grossen. Mainz: Kirchheim. 4 M. 50 Pf.
KRAUS, F. X. I. Signorelli's Illustrationen zu Dante's Divina Commedia. Zum ersten Male hrsg. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Mohr. 12 M.
REICKE, J. Zu Joh. Christ. Gottsched's Lehrjahren auf der Königsberger Universität. Königsberg: Beyer. 2 M.
STRECKNER, H. Beim Fellah u. Khedive. Halle: Mühlmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- HUCK, A. Synopse der drei ersten Evangelien. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Mohr. 2 M. 80 Pf.
ROSENTHAL, L. Ueb. den Zusammenhang der Mischna. 2 Thle. Vom Streite der Bet Schammai u. Bet Hillel bis zu Rabbi Akiba. Strassburg: Trübner. 2 M. 50 Pf.
SCHMIDT, P. V. Der Oskalarbief im Feuer der neuesten Kritik. Leipzig: Neumann. 6 M.
SRECHT, Th. Die Lehre v. der Kirche nach dem h. Augustin. Paderborn: Schöningh. 6 M.
TIEFENTHAL, F. S. Die Apokalypse d. hl. Johannes erklärt. Paderborn: Schöningh. 18 M.

HISTORY.

- ACTA BORUSSICA. Denkmäler der preussischen Staatsverwaltung im 19. Jahrh. Berlin: Parey. 41 M.
GROBE, L. Die Münzen d. Herzogt. Sachsen-Meiningen. Leipzig: Junghans. 8 M.

QUELLEN U. FORSCHUNGEN AUS DEM GEBIETE DER GESCHICHTE.
1. Bd. 1. Th. Nuntiaturbefichte G. Morone's vom deutschen Königshefe 1539—40. Bearb. v. F. Dittlich.
Paderborn: Schöningh. 7 M. 40 Pf.
TROOST, L., u. F. LEIST. Pfalzgraf Friederich Michael v.
Zweibrücken u. das Tagebuch seiner Reise nach Italien.
Bamberg: Buchner. 12 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

BERON, R. System der nudibranchiaten Gasteropoden.
Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 30 M.
KOEHLER, H. Die Pflanzenwelt u. das Klima Europas seit der geschichtlichen Zeit. 1. Thl. Berlin: Parey. 1 M.
60 Pf.
LEPSIUS, R. Geologie v. Deutschland u. den angrenzenden
Gebieten. 1. Thl. Das westl. u. südl. Deutschland.
3. Lfg. Stuttgart: Engelhorn. 14 M.
REISER, N. Die grossen Diagonalen. München: Callwey.
7 M. 50 Pf.
RETZIUS, G. Biologische Untersuchungen. Neue Folge.
III. Berlin: Friedländer. 36 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

CHRISTALLER, Th. Handbuch der Duala-Sprache. Basel.
4 M.
FAULMANN, K. Etymologisches Wörterbuch der deutschen
Sprache nach eigenen neuen Forschungen. 5. Hft.
Halle: Karras. 1 M. 20 Pf.
NYLANDER, K. U. Ueb. die Upsalaer Handschrift Dalā'il
al Nubuwwa d. Abu Bakr Ahmed al Baihaqi. Upsala:
Lundström. 7 M. 50 Pf.
OLTRAMARE, A. Etude sur l'épisode d'Aristée dans les Georgiques de Virgile. Basel: Georg. 2 M.
SAMMLUNG DER griechischen Dialekt-Inschriften. 2. Bd. 3.
Hft. Die delphischen Inschriften. 1. Thl. Bearb. v. J.
Baumbach. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 4 M. 80 Pf.
WIEDERMANN, A. Index der Götter u. Daemonymenamen zu Lepsius Denkmäler aus Aegypten u. Aethiopien. 3. Abth.
Leipzig: Koehler. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ARISTOTLE AS AN HISTORIAN.

I.

Seravingham Rectory, York.

It bodes ill for the work of the historian when he takes anything for granted on the mere authority of a name; and if young students are led to feel that it is practically a matter of duty to submit themselves to this authority, the interests of historical truth may be seriously endangered. Some such notions of duty have been lately, and seem to be still, encouraged in reference to the name of Aristotle. When the recently recovered treatise on the Athenian Constitution was put before the world, it was said that we should find ourselves driven to reconstruct much of Athenian history, and, perhaps, to rewrite the whole. It may be so; but this depends not at all on the genuineness of the treatise, but on its accuracy in the statement and interpretation of the historical facts with which it professes to deal. It matters not from whom it comes, so long as its contents show that work done in our time or in past generations needs correction, and that here we have the means for correcting it. The case is quite altered when such suggestions are made in large measure on the supposed authority of the writer whose name the treatise bears in the references of those who quoted it before it was lost. As to the treatise itself, it may be the genuine work of Aristotle, or, as is more likely, it may come from one of his pupils, but in the latter case there is no reason to doubt that the work was revised by himself; and it may, therefore, be more convenient to speak of it as the work of Aristotle.

But the authority of a writer and the authority of a book are very different things; and, unless it has first been shown that the weight attached to this treatise is not out of proportion to its merits, the recovery of the lost manuscript may do more harm than good. The authority of the book must be determined by an impartial testing of its contents; the authority of the writer as an historian must rest on the results which follow the scrutiny of this book. But if the words of Aristotle are taken as carrying with them an antecedent authority on the simple ground that they are his, we are brought face to face with the general question of the authority of Aristotle as an historian.

His authority as a thinker and observer is confessedly pre-eminent. If he examines the conditions and working of the human will, or the laws of human thought, his words come with all the force which his greatness as a thinker can give them; but the case is altered when he comes to deal with facts of history belonging to a period anterior to his own time. As to such facts, we may say with confidence that the information to which he had access was nothing more and nothing less than that of which his contemporaries generally might have availed themselves, while it is quite certain that for more remote periods he would have no sources of knowledge which had been beyond the reach of historians living a hundred and fifty or two hundred years before himself. The written records of their day would be the written records of his own; and the oral tradition which might have been to an indefinite extent useful and trustworthy for them would have lost much, if not all, of its value, before it came to himself. If, then, Aristotle differs from or contradicts earlier written accounts of historical incidents or of changes in the constitution of the city, what are we to say? Are we straightway to put aside the earlier writers and their statements as worthy of no consideration? If we do, what sanction or justification have we for such a course? Does Aristotle refer to other historians, or even mention where he got his information, giving the reason why it should be received, while the earlier narratives should be rejected? Does he say in any instance in which he so differs from them that he has read the writings with which we see that his own words cannot be reconciled? If it be so, there is little more to be said. But if these questions cannot be answered in the affirmative, we are, if we accept his statements as decisive, leaving all sure ground and trusting ourselves to a leader who will not even say that he has any title to be our guide. In this particular treatise on the Athenian Constitution Aristotle deals partly with the past, partly with the present. The earlier portion of the work is strictly a history; the latter gives the details of the working of that constitution in his own time. There is no need to impugn the general accuracy of the statements in this later section. But for the narratives of earlier times we have to see first how far his version differs from that of Herodotus, for example, or Thucydides; and when we have ascertained this, we have to determine what reason (if any) there may be for preferring his version to histories which had already been known for nigh a century. To say that Aristotle was scrupulously accurate in all his work, that he must have had definite sources of information, even though he does not name them, and that although he may have made use chiefly of oral tradition, we must assume that he was guided by written works also, is really to prejudge the whole question, and, indeed, to render all impartial research impossible.

But the history of the Athenian Constitution cannot be separated from other history, and must be examined precisely by the methods applied to all statements of alleged facts or incidents of the past; and it is thus plain at the outset that the words, whether of Aristotle or of any one else, can have no value or weight apart from the evidence on which they rest. Yet we have had lately the authority of Aristotle put forward as establishing statements unsupported by the words of other writers, or even contradicted by them. The habit to which this tendency leads is even more dangerous, because it is more insidious, than downright challenges to fall down and worship a golden image. Here we have a book which has been lost for ages. We may admit it to be the book possessed by Cicero Plutarch, Harpokration, and others, and that, for all practical purposes, it is the work of the great philosopher to whom they assigned it. What effect ought this book to have in an estimate of the work done during the present century in the wide domain of Greek history? Surely no effect whatever beyond the acceptance of those statements which may be shown to rest on better evidence than that which we have for the statements of other writers. This, of course, includes all that Aristotle says when speaking from his own personal observation and knowledge, as he does in the latter portion of this treatise. But the like authority is claimed for his statements when he is not, and cannot be, speaking from his own personal knowledge or observation; and we are told that the work of recent historians is marred by many assumptions made on the strength of the previously existing evidence, but now shown to be unfounded, for no other reason, it would seem, than that Aristotle says, or is supposed to say, something different.

These assumptions can scarcely concern the latter part of the treatise, for as to this it may be said that there is little controversy or none. They must relate, therefore, to the period preceding, we will say, the beginning of the Peloponnesian war. What, then, is the value of the opinion or judgment of Aristotle on the events or the political growth of that period, the end of which preceded his birth by nearly half a century? What, again, are the assumptions which he is supposed to upset? Great things have been said of the effects which are to be produced. Our conception of the course of Athenian history is to be changed in many respects to suit this treatise, which furnishes a "new standpoint" from which that history is to be surveyed. But what are the views which are to be thus modified? Are they those of the last and previous centuries or those of the present one? Are they, for example, those of Mitford, or Thirlwall, or Grote, or of all three, or are they those of Mitford only?

It may not be altogether unnecessary to say that there is a wide difference between altering a thing and making it more definite. The former is justifiable only on the production of fresh evidence; the latter may be the result merely of a keener discernment and wider comparison in fields already surveyed more or less carefully. Dr. Arnold, for instance, saw that in the old Greek and Latin states aliens or foreigners could no more be converted into citizens than domestic animals could be changed into men, and that any attempt so to convert them confused all existing notions of moral right and moral wrong. But why this should be so he does not tell us; and the matter remained, so far as his history was concerned, a perplexing puzzle. The question has been answered by a further comparison of facts, which, taken separately, were known, without doubt, to Arnold and others, but the relations of which escaped their notice.

When we come to look closer at the nature of the claims here made for the authority of Aristotle, we find ourselves in something like a sea of uncertainty. Sometimes the fundamental conceptions of Athenian history are to be changed; sometimes only the details are to be worked up afresh. Aristotle speaks of "cuttings-off of debts" during the legislation of Solon. But we are told now that all debts, of whatever kind, of all persons, were absolutely wiped out, so that at a given moment no one in Athens or Attica owed anyone anything. The possibility of such a state of things is a matter which we have to see to, and so are its results. Aristotle gives (ch. 41) a list of political changes at Athens down to those which followed the deposition of the Thirty. But we are told that in Aristotle's opinion, although he does not in terms say so, the constitutional history of Athens was closed with the last of these changes, some of which scarcely deserve to be regarded as changes at all. Some assurance, it has been said, is needed in those who venture to dispute the judgment of Aristotle on this point. Assuredly, none will care to do so if he deliberately expresses a judgment, and if adequate evidence be adduced in support of it. Aristotle has something to say on the political life of Athenian citizens; but on this subject Grote, we are curtly told, has reached one set of conclusions, while other critics have drawn others, the only point of concern for us being that in such a case the evidence of Aristotle is no unimportant addition to our knowledge. Unquestionably, if such evidence can be found, it must be of great importance. But have we not here a confusion between evidence and opinion or judgment? Personal or contemporary evidence coming from Aristotle would be worth a great deal. His judgment or opinion, apart from such evidence, is not necessarily worth more than the opinion of anyone else.

Still, on the whole, it would seem to follow, that after all that has been done by Thirlwall or Grote, or any others, Athenian history has yet to be "reconstructed." Reconstruction means the taking down of a fabric and rebuilding it again, or it means nothing. But again we are told, strange to say, that the main outlines of Athenian constitutional history will remain as they were, the details only being altered. How are these two statements to be reconciled? or rather, to speak seriously, to what is our faith to be given? Of what use is it to lay stress "on the merits of Aristotle as an authority," unless the nature and extent of this authority are plainly set before us? The truth seems to be that we are called upon to bow down to the authority of his name, there being no other authority for us to submit to. When we come to ask for the actual substantive evidence at his command, the answer is that of the authorities used in his task he tells us little, almost nothing; that he was acquainted with Herodotus and Thucydides, and made use of the writings or poems of Solon, from which he largely quotes; but that apart from this there seems to be nothing to show what his sources were. After such an admission as this, it is amazing to be told that Aristotle did not work from oral tradition alone, but made use of "written records of some kind or other." It is, or should be, enough to say that oral traditions in the time of Aristotle relating to events preceding the life of Solon, or even the battle of Marathon, would be absolutely worthless; that for this earlier period he could have no written records which were not accessible to Herodotus or Thucydides; and that we have no right to infer the existence of such records, unless Aristotle states distinctly that they existed, and that he had made use of them.

GEORGE W. COX.

NIMROD IN THE ASSYRIAN INSCRIPTIONS.

Queen's College, Oxford: July 10, 1892.

It has long been a matter of surprise to Assyrian students that no reference to Nimrod, the "mighty hunter before the Lord," has been discovered in the cuneiform texts. I believe, however, that I have at last found an allusion to what seems to have been the Babylonian version of his history. Dr. Bezold has just published the second volume of his valuable Catalogue of the Cuneiform Tablets in the Kouyunjik Collection of the British Museum, a work which it is impossible to praise too highly; and in this (p. 610) he mentions the fragment of a mythological legend which is numbered K 4511. The passage from it quoted by him appeared to me to be of great interest, and I accordingly took the opportunity of a visit to the British Museum the other day to copy what remains of the tablet in question. Here is my translation of the only connected portion of it which is left:—

"In the [centre?] of Babylon a . . . he built: this palace he founded. This prince beheld sorrow; his heart was sick. Until his reign battle and war were not hindered. In his age (or during his dynasty) brother devoured his brother, people sold their children for silver, the lands were all distressed together, the freeman deserted the handmaid and the handmaid deserted the freeman, the mother closed her door against the daughter, the property of Babylon entered into Aram-Naharaim ('Suri) and Assyria. The king of Babylon, in order to become prince of Asshur, transported himself, his palace, and his property to the midst of Asshur."

It is needless to point out the striking similarities between these statements and what we are told in Genesis about Nimrod. It is unfortunate that the name of the Babylonian hero is lost in the cuneiform text; but he was evidently the Babylonian king who "went forth" out of his ancestral dominions and founded the kingdom of Assyria.

A. II. SAYCE.

"JACK."

Bodleian Library, Oxford: July 9, 1892.

May I say that, if any reader of the ACADEMY would like to have a pamphlet now being printed, in which I have recast my late letters, and very greatly strengthened the position taken up in them, he has only to drop me a postcard? I shall venture to send a copy to Dr. Chance.

May I likewise say that "jack," a short coat, is found in 1374 on this side the Channel also (Cal. of Wills, Court of Husting, London, ii. 164, where it is printed Jacke), and that Dr. Chance has not touched my argument from Palsgrave's double spelling; but that I merely regard the common noun as of doubtful nationality, and must leave further discussions of it to anyone who wills.

And now I jack Jack up! Ille jac-et Jack!
EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

"FRANCE OF TO-DAY."

Hastings: July 5, 1892.

The reviewer of my book in the ACADEMY of July 2 accuses me of "one-sided exaggeration" in attributing the prosperity of rural France to the Revolution rather than to Napoleon III., and asserts, "It was the Second Empire that taught the French peasant to invest instead of hoard his savings."

The first caisse d'épargne, or savings bank, was opened in Paris in 1818, and within a few years the initiative was followed at Bordeaux, Metz, and other large cities. But it was the Post-Office Savings Banks, opened by the State in 1882, that gave the most tremendous impetus to thrift throughout France, one inhabitant out of every six being now an investor.

Further, my reviewer says:

"Miss Betham-Edwards hardly notices the obstinate conservatism of the French peasant. Nothing will persuade him to adopt an improved implement or to give a fair trial to an improved breed of cattle."

What do statistics tell us? In 1862 only 10,853 sowing machines were used in France, in 1882 their number had tripled. Within the same interval the number of reaping and threshing machines had doubled. In spite of the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine, the value of stock throughout France, which in 1840 was 1,985 millions, in 1882 had risen to 5,744 millions. My reviewer's remark may apply to the Pyrenean village in which he resides; it certainly has no application to large areas visited and revisited by myself.

My reviewer also writes:—

"We are sorry to see Miss Betham-Edwards join in the unworthy cry against the practice of medicine by nuns, whilst praising it in the case of Protestant Deaconesses."

But my strictures refer to the practice of medicine by unqualified women, and have nothing whatever to do with the garb they wear. The nuns in question were simply provided with a "lettre d'obédience," from a bishop. The deaconesses had undergone proper training and received a diploma.

Lastly, my reviewer puts the following query:—

"What is the interpretation of this? Village communism existed here [in the Morvan] in full force down to the Revolution, and the last commune was not broken up till 1848" (France of To-day, p. 345). "Village communism," adds my reviewer, "in various forms was at the base of half the communes of France; it is not wholly extinct yet. The commune is still the unit of French administration."

This query fails to distinguish the communal form of administration from the patriarchal system of land tenure to which I refer.

M. BETHAM-EDWARDS,
Officier de l'Instruction Publique de France.

SCIENCE.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. XIV. 2. (Baltimore: John Hopkins Press.) The contents of this number are: (1) "Some Theorems relating to Groups of Circles and Spheres," by W. Woolsey Johnson (pp. 97-114); (2) "Application of Quaternions to Projective Geometry," by Dr. C. H. Chapman (pp. 115-140); (3) "On the part of the Parallax Inequalities in the Moon's Motion which is a Function of the Mean Motions of the Sun and Moon," by E. W. Brown (pp. 141-160); (4) "On the Curves which are Self-Reciprocal in a Linear Heat System, and their Configurations in Space," by C. P. Steinmetz (pp. 161-186); (5) "A Classification of Logarithmic Systems," by J. Stringham (pp. 187-194). (1) This paper was in part communicated to the British Association meeting at Leeds (1890), and is closely connected with Mr. Lachlan's memoir "On Systems of Circles and Spheres" (Phil. Trans., vol. 177). (2) Free reference is made to Tait's Quaternions, and the applications are to the right line, the transformation of affixes, the projective geometry of conics, and plane cubics. (3) Is an adaptation of the method employed by Mr. G. W. Hill in vol. i. of the Journal, so as to include that "class of inequalities which depends on the ratio of the solar and lunar distances, and, in particular, the principal part of the parallax inequality." The importance of this latter is due, as the author points out, to the use made of it in determining the sun's parallax. (4) Was read before the New York Mathematical Society, and is furnished with an index to the contents of its twelve sections. (5) Was also read before the same society. The graphic representation of logarithms by means of the logarithmic spiral has been treated by more than one writer, but the author is not aware that this curve, defined as a geometrical locus, has been employed for defining the logarithm and demonstrating its properties. He considers that the problem has some importance for analysis in general, as it gives rise to what he calls "gonic" systems of logarithms, whose moduli contain an angular determining element, and leads, through their introduction, to a classification of logarithmic systems.

Mathematical Recreations and Problems of Past and Present Times. By W. W. Rouse Ball. (Macmillans.) Mr. Ball has already attained a position in the front rank of writers on subjects connected with the history of mathematics, and this brochure will add another to his successes in this field. In it he has collected a mass of information bearing upon matters of more general interest, written in a style which is eminently readable, and at the same time exact. He has done his work so thoroughly that he has left few ears for other gleaners, and has so carefully read his "proofs" that we have detected only two or three trivial slips. The nature of the work is completely indicated to the mathematical student by its title. Does he want to revive his acquaintance with the Problèmes Plaisans et Delectables of Bachet, or the Récréations Mathématiques et Physiques of Ozanam? Let him take Mr. Ball for his companion, and he will have the cream of these works put before him with a wealth of illustration quite delightful. Or, coming to more recent times, he will have full and accurate discussion of "the fifteen puzzle," "Chinese rings," "the fifteen schoolgirls problem," et id genus omne. Sufficient space is devoted to accounts of magic squares and unicursal problems (such as mazes, the knight's path, and geometrical trees). These, and many other problems of equal interest, come under the head of "Recreations." The problems and speculations include a further account (they were touched upon in his History) of the Three Classical Problems, omitting all but a very slight allusion to the Paradoxers; there is also a brief sketch of Astrology, and interesting outlines of the present state of our knowledge of hyperspace and of the constitution of matter. This enumeration baldly indicates the matter handled, but it sufficiently states what the reader may expect to find. Moreover, for the use of readers who may wish to pursue the several heads farther, Mr. Ball gives detailed references to the sources from whence he has derived his information. These Mathematical Recreations we can commend as suited for mathematicians and also for others who wish to while away an occasional hour.

The Higher Trigonometry. Superrationals of Second Order. By F. W. Newman. (Cambridge: Macmillan and Bowes.) The Higher Trigonometry of our author is that part of trigonometry which depends upon Demoivre's theorem and its applications to the factors of $\sin x$ and "Euler's H Series," the use of which is advocated in preference to the "hideous numbers of Bernoulli." Curiously enough the work on p. 5 is an answer in part to a question by Mr. Dodgson (in the Educational Times for May), suggesting a method for calculating limits to the value of π . A good deal of the rest of the book treats of the summation of series, connected with logarithmic integrals of the second order, which were discussed by Prof. Newman in the Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal so long ago as 1847. This subject was suggested to him by a cursory perusal of Spence's essay on his super-logarithm. The author's remark in his preface furnishes a fair criticism upon his whole work—

"As these Integrals seem not to have a place in the ordinary calculus, a treatise not too elaborate may be acceptable to some, though it cannot pretend to any real novelty or, I believe, necessity."

Still one is glad that these lucubrations have seen the light in their present form. Much of Prof. Newman's work goes back to the above-cited date, but the tables, of which several are given, have been in many cases carefully tested and corrected by the late Prof. Adams. There is a paper bearing on a principal series here, in the Quarterly Journal of Pure and Applied Mathematics (for Feb. 1892, pp. 33, &c.) by Dr. Glaisher, to which readers of this treatise should turn. We may note that a first perusal has brought a rather large number of clerical errors to light, most of which can be easily corrected by the student; we indicate a few of the more important ones. In the table on p. 63 under 13, 19, 31, 47, 73, 79 and 97 are numerical errors, and the last sentence on the page is somewhat akin to the statement "there are milestones on the Dover-road"; on p. 74, l. 8, is a curious slip; p. 89, l. 5, for "cot" read "cos." The origin of the numerous trivial errors is doubtless to be found in the fact of the work being re-copied after a long interval of years.

An Elementary Treatise of the Differential Calculus. With Applications and Numerous Examples. By J. Edwards. (Macmillans.) This second edition of a book we have already commended is a greatly enlarged one, and also a greatly improved one. To our mind this a text-book suited "down to the ground" for the generality of students; a higher class of students may safely use this before proceeding to more advanced works. In this they will find judicious references to original memoirs and to the classical treatises. We have read the whole book with much interest, and notice particularly an admirable chapter on "Some well-known Curves," and one entitled "Miscellaneous Theorems," in which are a number of isolated theorems and processes. The work has been practically rewritten, and a useful collection of exercises is incorporated.

The Elements of Plane Trigonometry. By R. Levett and C. Davison. (Macmillans.) Mr. Levett is already most favourably known in connexion with the work he did upon the proofs drawn up to the Syllabus of Geometry issued by the A.I.G.T. Here the authors do not play about their subject, but go direct to the heart of the matter, and, in clear and yet sufficiently full detail, lead the student from the lowest up to the highest strata of plane trigonometry. What can we say of a work, the whole of which we have read with the most lively interest and satisfaction, but that it is good? There are no doubt other text-books better suited to the generality of students; but this is no ordinary everyday text-book, but one which is the evident outcome of judicious and long-continued practice in the teaching of thoughtful students who are being prepared for a university career. De Morgan's is still a name to conjure with, and our authors have judiciously consulted his works and assimilated their results for the benefit of their readers. There is a store of theoretical work, but also, we are glad to note, no lack of practical applications. The subject is arranged under three heads: The first part is confined to arithmetical quantity, extending as far as the solution of right-angled triangles, including the dip of the horizon and the dip of a stratum; the second part considers real algebraical quantity; and the third part discusses complex quantity. Elegant use is made of properties of the rectangular hyperbola in giving geometrical proofs of hyperbolic function formulae. There is an ample store of exercises for solution, which are carefully grouped, and which, if properly used, will furnish admirable practice in revision, without doing precisely the same work more than once.

Graduated Mathematical Exercises for Home Work. Second Series. By A. T. Richardson. (Macmillans.) This second series carries on the work of the first series so as to embrace the higher parts of algebra, logarithms, trigonometry, easy mechanics, and analytical geometry. Where a master has not leisure to adapt his papers to the requirements of his own pupils, the use of such a collection as this may be of service. The answers are given at the end. We cannot understand the appositeness of the reference on p. 7, l. 4, unless, by an oversight, it be intended as a reference to the first series.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GREEK $\gamma\alpha\eta\eta$ = LATIN "AQUA."

Indian Institute, Oxford: July 12, 1892.

In reply to Mr. Mayhew's letter (ACADEMY, July 9) I would say that the question of the origin of γ of $\gamma\alpha\eta\eta$ and $\gamma\alpha\eta\eta$ is sub judice, and that it would be inexpedient to give any opinion upon it at present. But Mr. Mayhew has raised a far more serious objection when he says "the guttural of aqua was originally a velar explosive," because, if this really is the case, then my explanation of $\gamma\alpha\eta\eta$ falls to the ground. I would most willingly accept his statement if he would show from cognate forms in other languages that such is the case. Feist says in his note on the Gothic ahva, "Die Ansetzung des Gdf. $ah^2\tilde{a}$ - (which he gives) ist unsicher, da das germ. und lat. k^2 and k^v nicht durchgehend scheiden"; so that the h of the Gothic ahva might stand for either palatal or velar explosive, and furnishes no objection to my theory. To be quite fair, however, I admit that Feist adds "doch scheinen kelt. Ortsnamen auf obige Gdf. ($ah^2\tilde{a}$ -) hinzuweisen" (vgl. Müllenhoff, Deutsche Altertumskunde II. 227). Müllenhoff himself quotes the Celtic form apa, which stands to epo- (horse) (Brugmann § 390) in precisely the same relation as aqua does to equus; so that this again affords no argument against the theory. On the other hand, I think I have shown sufficiently conclusively in a former letter (ACADEMY, Nov. 7, 1891) that the corresponding forms, Skt. as'vā, Zend aspā, actually do exist.

Lastly, Mr. Mayhew is right in supposing that I intended to imply that there was merely an equivalence in meaning, not in form, in reference to Gk. $\epsilon\tilde{\zeta}$, Skt. su.

E. SIBREE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the Edinburgh meeting of the British Association, which begins on August 3, there will be a discussion in Section A on "A National Physical Laboratory," to be opened by Prof. Oliver Lodge.

THE Berlin Academy of Sciences has conferred one of the first four Helmholtz gold medals upon Lord Kelvin.

THE annual long excursion of the Geologists' Association will take place during the last week of July, from Monday to Saturday. The place is North-West Carnarvonshire and Anglesey; and the director is the president, the Rev. Prof. J. F. Blake, who read a paper upon the geology of the district at the last meeting of the association.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE first examination for an Ouseley scholarship in Arabic, in connexion with the Imperial Institute, will be held at University College, London, on Tuesday, July 26. The value is £50, tenable for a period not exceeding three years at the discretion of the trustees. These scholarships were founded by the Misses Ouseley, for proficiency in Oriental languages, in memory of their father, Col. Jasper W. J. Ouseley. The examiners are Dr. Wells and Prof. H. A. Salmoné.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS.—(Annual Meeting, Thursday, June 7.)

THE MARQUIS OF BUTE in the chair.—The proceedings opened with the reading of the report by the hon. secretary, Mr. George A. Macmillan. The report, after reviewing in detail the work done during the past year, stated that the financial position of the School was still very precarious, depending as it did upon a very limited number of grants and subscriptions, which might at any time be withdrawn.—Lord Bute, in moving the adoption of the report, said: "It has been the custom in moving this resolution to speak some words upon some subject bearing upon the work of the School. Partly owing to the mention in the report of the work of Mr. Schultz and Mr. Barnsley, partly from my own interest in it, having myself written upon it, and partly because I should be glad if I could do anything, however slight, which might cause an increased attention to it, I hope that you will allow me to speak of the continuity of Greek life. A vicious tendency to regard it otherwise has been fostered by a habit, probably dictated by literary convenience, of writing history in periods of almost artificial limits. Thus, the history of Greece has been treated as if it ended at the Roman conquest and began again, if it be allowed that it began again, in 1820. It is a view which has gained great practical popularity in Greece itself, where its evil influences have been intensified as regards historical monuments by a perversion of patriotic sentiment. The Hellen of the new morning too often looks with indifference, and not unfrequently with absolute dislike or hostility, upon objects which attest the twilight and the night of his race. But archaeology is really the handmaid of history, whose monuments she studies, records, and preserves; and from the purely historical point of view the mosques near the Stoa of Hadrian and the great water-clock are as much monuments of the history of Greece as is the Parthenon itself. Indeed, they are historical monuments of a most precious type, because their meanness as compared with the ancient and national structure is, for whosoever sees them, an instant and striking proof of the barbarism and degradation of the Turanian savages by whom they were created, as contrasted with the greatness of the noble Aryan race who created the other. Of course, I am not arguing that where one historical monument hopelessly interferes with another, as the mosque in the Parthenon, the inferior should not be removed; what I do say is, that such removal should only be effected after the greatest consideration, with the greatest care and caution, after making the most accurate records of what is to be destroyed, and with the careful preservation, and transference, if need be, to another site, of the historical monuments disturbed. Where such duties are neglected it more than ever behoves those who recognise them to supply, as far as in them may lie, that which is lacking; and I would entreat all whom it may concern not to allow the artistic splendour which marks, and the ideal halo of literary glory which surrounds, the earlier monuments of Greece so to dazzle them as to make them blind to the value of later works—a value which they possess as monuments of national history, of the history of art, especially of painting, and not unfrequently as works of art themselves. In this way I would plead on behalf of such things as mosaic floors of the Roman period, some of which I remember to have seen in what I may describe as the actual course of destruction in the neighbourhood of Athens. From this point of view also I advocate the study of the Byzantine monuments. And with regard to them I venture to remark, without for a moment deprecating the attention given to ecclesiastical art, that there are secular monuments also, such as the buildings of Mistra, crowned by the Gothic Imperial Palace, inhabited at the time of his accession by Constantine XIII. Of the buildings of the Latins there exist, as far as I know, very few. I remember the ruins of the white marble palace of the Dukes of Athens which used to rise above the Propylaea of the Acropolis; and I sincerely trust, although I am not sure, that when they were pulled down—an act on the desirability of which I do not wish to express any opinion—it was done only after the making of the most careful drawings and with the most careful preservation of the remains themselves. I would deprecate any unnecessary destruction of the monuments of the Venetian power. There was certainly, for instance, a scheme for destroying the singular fortified drawbridge which spanned the Euripos at Chalcis, and which was, indeed, one factor in creating the curious paranomasia of Negropont. It may have been carried out, for all I know. If it was absolutely necessary, I deplore the necessity, but in any case careful plans ought to have been made and the marble carvings carefully preserved. Lastly, as I have said, I regard even the monuments of the Turkish domination, however valueless artistically, as proper monuments of history, and, consequently, as proper objects for the care of archaeology. But they are also monuments of something higher. They may, as at Neocretion, or rather again, to use a barbarous word which history has immortalized, Navarino, afford one of those few pleasures in life which never pall—namely, that of seeing a mosque which has been turned into a church. But they are also often the witnesses and reminders of the War of Independence, that struggle which the Hellenes so justly call holy, and the records of which nothing in the history of their older forefathers can eclipse, and few things equal. Neither has literary power failed to answer to the call of the later any more than to that of the earlier heroism. To my mind the epigram of Solymos upon the massacre of Ipsara does not fall behind those which Simonides wrote, and which were engraved upon the monuments in Thermopylae. I have spoken of the continuity of Greek life, and I ought not to sit down without speaking of that which is the end of the existence of the different Schools at Athens—of which the British is one—and to which end the study of Greek archaeology in itself is but a means. One of the most striking features of Greek vitality is the way in which it has quickened the vitality of other peoples, by the way in which its history, its art, and its literature have been studied over so great a part of the globe, and its conceptions hailed by the universal consent of the Western races as the masterpieces of human genius. Nor, of course, when I call attention to the value of the monuments of its twilight and of its night, do I mean to impugn the fact that this influence has attached itself almost exclusively to the productions of its fullest day. Its greatest works are its classics, or, in other words, its power is in proportion to the purity of its Hellenism. The object of the existence of the archaeological schools of Athens is to take of the life of Greece wherewith to quicken and ennoble other life. The life from which they draw will probably continue to be mainly the life of her fullest day, but it ought not, in my judgment, to exclude the more languid life of her twilight, the woeful life of the night during which she tossed sleepless upon her bed of pain, or the bright new life of her second morning. I trust that the School may be successful in spreading and deepening a knowledge of Greece and of the things of Greece, and among other things I think it will probably react favourably upon the study of that unequalled organ for the expression of human thought, which is her language. There is a tendency in some quarters to depreciate the study of the Greek language. This tendency is so stupid that I think it must have something to do with that extraordinary delusion with which one not unfrequently meets, to the effect that Greek is a dead language—a delusion which would be comic if it were not baneful. I have something to do with the education of a young man for the diplomatic service, and I find that while Greek is not admitted, even as an optional subject, that honour is allowed to Portuguese—a Latin dialect, akin to Spanish, and confined to two countries and a few colonies. I hardly think that such a regulation could have been made by one who knew the facts: that a language, which is still as much that of Aeschylus as mine is that of Shakespeare, is the language not only of Greece, but of the parts of the Turkish Empire which are the most important politically, which is not only the language of Cyprus, but is becoming more and more exclusively that of the whole Levant, which is spoken in Egypt more than twice as much as any other than Arabic, and which is, indeed, the medium of communication most universally spread in the whole district of the earth which stretches from the Danube southward to Abyssinia. And here I will add that I trust it may be part of the work of this School, by putting us in touch with living Greece, to hasten the removal of what I cannot but regard as probably the greatest enemy of the Hellenic language in this country—that ridiculous pronunciation which was not improbably imagined by Erasmus merely as a jest, and which is anyhow conclusively damned by the fact that it renders the spoken language absolutely incomprehensible to the inhabitants of its own native land.—Mr. Edwin Pears, of Constantinople, expressed his hearty concurrence with the chairman's observations on Byzantine work, and said that that was a field which had been practically untilled.—Dr. Waldstein gave emphatic testimony to the value of the work of the British School.—The Greek Minister (M. Gennadius), in moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, said that Lord Bute had always shown the keenest interest in Greek literature, history, and art; and the British School was deeply indebted to him for his liberal support. The labours of the British and other Schools had done much to make modern Athens a centre of learning. The Greek Government would always be glad to encourage such efforts as were made by the School. Its future would mainly depend upon itself, and in a country where private munificence did so much for learning he hoped generous support would be given to a field of labour which in many points was still almost untouched. When they considered the enormous material difficulties with which Greece had been forced to contend, it was surprising that the Hellenic Government had been able to give so much attention as it had bestowed upon the preservation of its ancient monuments.—Prof. Jebb seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously, and acknowledged by Lord Bute.

FINE ART.

Persian Ceramic Art, in the Collection of Mr. F. Duane Godman, F.R.S. The Thirteenth Century Lustrated Vases. By Henry Wallis. With Illustrations by the Author. (Printed for private circulation.)

THIS very handsome volume, with its gorgeous chromolithographs by Mr. Samuel J. Hodson, deals with only one part of Mr. Godman's important collection, and that which is to follow on Tiles will probably be of equal if not more importance. It is a sumptuous example of a class of art book which is a feature of the present day—the illustrated catalogue; but, like many of these books, it is something more than a catalogue, for it contains what our grandfathers would have called "a learned excursus" on the history of the subject, and will be a valuable aid to its study. In this respect it may be regarded as a further contribution by Mr. Wallis to the consideration of a class of art with which he has been greatly interested for years, and as a continuation of, or annex to, his Examples of Early Persian Lustre Ware, of which the third part appeared in 1889.

As Mr. Wallis says, the history of Persian ceramic art is scarcely yet to be attempted, and the best he can do at present is to help in clearing the ground for future discovery. The necessary inconclusiveness of his efforts has no effect upon his zeal: the labour is quite plainly one of love, and he is doubtless encouraged by the knowledge that his artistic feeling and skill are valuable equipments for the task. Moreover, in these days it is something to find a field of study which is comparatively unworked, and an adventure which has something of the romance of a voyage of discovery.

The pieces from the Godman Collection which are represented by chromolithography include several vases of the albarello or drug-pot shape, bowls, tiles, jugs, and vases, decorated mainly with scrolls and conventional leaf patterns, animals, kufic characters, and those curious little round-headed, squat-bodied figures, which are something like Japanese dolls, and appear to represent the Persian ideal of female beauty in the thirteenth century. The pieces are all (with one exception) painted with lustre, and include many specimens of that ruby quality which is now regarded as a special sign of antiquity. They are all also decorated with that free and spontaneous touch, careless of exact limits, but certain of its effect, which gives a fascinating quality of life and ease to the simplest and roughest work by a master hand. Among the rarest and finest of these pieces are the star tile (plate ii.), with its extremely simple floral spray laid with a few blue lines on an elaborate lusted background of conventional leaves, flowers, and hares; a vase (plate iv.) with two bands of panelled ornament, the top panels filled with standing female figures; a fragment of a jug (plate viii.) very bold in form and decorated with a conventional leaf pattern of remarkable freedom; an albarello shaped vase (plate xii.), one of those which seems to have based on a metal original the deep blue body divided with bold spiral ribs in relief, the interstices filled with inscriptions, rich with gold and red lustre; a fragment of a lusted bowl (plate xiii.) decorated with horsemen and conventional cypresses; fragments of a bowl (plate xvii.) with elaborate seals on a scale like diaper, executed with unusual care, and gorgeous in colour. A restoration of this very remarkable bowl is given in plate xxiv.

To the main body of the volume is attached an appendix, with plates mostly covered with fragments of pottery from Susa and Ephesus, Cairo and the Fayoum, from Fostal and other places, but containing also designs from Coptic textiles, vases of glass and metal and other objects, like the famous Cup of Chosroes, all of which are brought together by Mr. Wallis to facilitate comparison of decorative motives. It is difficult to estimate the amount of labour which these few pages crowded with drawings have entailed on Mr. Wallis. Some and not the least interesting of the fragments are from his own collection, and nearly all have been drawn by his hand. The excavations of Mr. Flinders Petrie in Egypt, of M. Dieulafoy in Susa, of Mr. Pottier at Myrina, the museums of Europe, and many private collections, manuscripts and pictures, have all yielded material for the benefit of the student. When so much has been done for us, it is perhaps hard to complain; but the arbitrary colouring of these plates is not beautiful, and it is misleading. If the real colours could not have been given, it would have been better to have printed them in plain black and white, like the very useful illustrations in the text.

No one who reads Mr. Wallis's book can help echoing his wish for further excavations on sites likely to add links to the very broken chain of the history of Persian ceramics. Of Persian art from the time of Shah Abbas, or the sixteenth century, we have a fair knowledge. We have a few dated pieces which, if the dates can be trusted, enabled us to group certain other pieces as of the same character; we have the wonderful wall tiles of Susa, we have fragments showing connexion between Egypt and Persia, Ancient Greece and Byzantium; but we have little other solid ground to work on. Mr. Wallis seems to think that discoveries of what he calls Byzantine pottery may throw much light on the subject. Historically, this may be so; but we doubt whether such discoveries, if made, will be of great artistic interest. The great source of decorative art is the East. The grace, the sense of colour, the marvellous faculty of preserving the freedom and vigour of nature in purely decorative art, which were possessed in so marked a degree by the old Persians, are not likely to have received any stimulus from Byzantium. It was, indeed, the focus of civilisation; it took ideas from East and West, and combined them up into a style which dominated Europe with an art imposing and splendid, but rigid and lifeless. That Persia had a strong influence on the decorative art of Byzantium is not to be doubted; but that Byzantium did or could give anything very valuable in return is by no means so certain.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: July 7, 1892.

Neither space nor time permit of the unbounded discussion which Mr. Torr seems to desire. I will briefly say on the four points which have been raised:—

(1) I have always known that the dating of the XIIth Dynasty examples was debateable; but I have no reason to change the position which I took up at first, namely, that all the evidence of locality told in favour of their age.

(2) If Mr. Torr prefers to deny that Aquasha were Akhaians, he may stand in opposition to the Egyptologists' theories about the races (which, however they differ otherwise, agree in this point against him) without affecting my archaeological results.

(3) As to the Maket tomb, I have not begged any question. It is obvious that the date of any deposit must be taken to be as near the age of the latest object in it as may be possible. No archaeologist could reasonably date this tomb after the XXIIInd Dynasty.

(4) Two columns have now been spent by Mr. Torr in attacking the dating of the Gurob vases, aided with personalities which seem to show how much he values his own arguments. But the sole fact which he has added to the five dated examples which I published (and the great mass of examples since found at Tel el Amarna) is the instance of drawings in the tomb of Ramessu III. So far from there being any difficulty regarding these, I am sincerely obliged to him for introducing them into the discussion. I hesitated to use mere rough drawings, such as these are, as they showed nothing about the texture, colour, or glaze; but, so far as they go, they are perfectly in accord with the dating of the actual examples found. I had already stated that form to have lasted in Egypt from Amenhotep III. till after Ramessu III.; and the decoration of these examples is quite different from, and clearly later than, that of all the earlier examples which I have quoted, and accords happily with the rest of the series.

Nothing whatever has been said that affects the main facts which I have summarised in my last letter.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

AN exhibition of more than one hundred paintings by Japanese old masters was on view during two days of this week in the hall of the Society of Arts, to illustrate a paper read before the Japan Society by Mr. W. Gowland on "The Naturalistic Art of Japan." The paintings, which all come from Mr. Gowland's own collection, included some of the Buddhist school, dating from the fourteenth century. The leading artists of the Shijo or modern naturalistic school, including Okyo himself, Hoya, and Ippo, were also well represented.

THE publishing house of Martinius Nijhoff, of the Hague, propose to issue a series of volumes illustrating the work of the great Dutch jewellers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The series will be begun with a reproduction, in photo-zincography, of the forty-eight plates engraved by Theodore van Kessel about 1650, after the silver vases, &c., of Adam van Vianen, of Utrecht. Some pages of letterpress will accompany the plates; and the issue is limited to 200 copies.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Héron de Villefosse exhibited a small leaden plate, with inscriptions on both sides, which had been discovered in the course of excavations in the cemetery at Hadrumetum. It is a tabella devotivis, similar to others that have been found in Northern Africa and in Gaul. On one side, besides a number of magical incantations, is the figure of a genius with the head of a cock, standing in a boat and holding a torch. On the other side is an imprecation addressed to a certain deus pelagicus aerius, against the charioteers and horses of the green and white factions. In the discussion that followed, M. Heuzey referred to the deity or genius named Taraxippos, "the frightener of horses"; M. Le Blant recalled a Greek Life of St. Hilarion, in which the saint is recorded to have caused a chariot to win its race by the aid of his enchantments; and M. Bréal compared a Greek inscription from Tunis, on which is enumerated a catalogue of the risks to which competitors in the Circus are exposed. He also drew attention to the words ex anc ora in one of the inscriptions as being a curious anticipation of the French encore.

THE STAGE.

THE THEATRES.

Two things, and hardly more, have flourished in London this late summer season—the music-halls and Sarah Bernhardt. If that celebrity, Miss Lottie Collins, has gone abroad to recruit, Mr. Chevalier—who portrays for "the classes" the manners of "the masses"—is yet with us, filling the Tivoli and other places nightly, and, what is more, he has got a new song. The success of the Tivoli may be judged, to some extent, by its dividend. It has just declared twenty-eight per cent., while the professors of superior acting in the recognised theatres go about not without cheerfulness if they are able to say with any truth whatever that during the present season they have not been actual losers of money. And after the triumph of the music-hall comes the triumph of "Sarah." Her vogue has never been so great, and her art, it may be, though subject to singular inequalities, has never, on the whole, been quite so excellent. A repertory of singular variety, though avoiding for the most part the classic, has furnished continued interest; and even if, of late—within the last few days almost—this amazing mistress of her art has shown signs of fatigue, if not of indifference, her season, on the whole, has afforded peculiar proof of her energy and "staying power."

Among the commercial, if scarcely artistic, failures must be numbered, of course, that of "Shakspere," by Mr. Eden Greville, at the Globe. The piece ran but a single week. Yet it is possible that some of the critics sat upon it a little too hardly; since it departed from history it was not devoid of all literary quality, and real pains—and some intelligent pains too—had been taken with the production. The cast—rather unfortunately large—contained few known names, though to Mr. Thalberg, who enjoys deservedly a certain reputation, was entrusted the task of appearing as Shakspere. Another somewhat well-known performer—Miss Rose Norreys—was seen in the part of Anne Hathaway, and, as word is brought to us, she acquitted herself not discreditably. The success of the six short nights, however, was made by Miss Mary Keegan, who, it is considered, without question will be heard of again elsewhere. Some good music was furnished; and on one account and another the piece, whatever its deficiencies, was doubtless better worth seeing and praising than the average melodrama.

On Friday in last week we were at the Opera Comique to see Mr. Teixeira de Mattos's version of Van Nohuys' "Goldfish," as given by the Society of the Independent Theatre. The play, which was translated into very good English, had its strong points—its merits of directness and courage, and of a measure of true observation; and, if it was sometimes dull, it was scarcely ever actually imitative, though at moments in the second act it was feared that the sentiment of the piece might be found to recall that of a distinctly talented, but not always savoury, Scandinavian, whose view of life is partial, and the application of whose views to English society is ridiculous, and commends itself only to those who are not in touch with that society at all. When the curtain fell, however, it was plain that two things were wanting—wanting, at least, to the satisfaction of the advanced and unsexed female. It had not been quite continuously insisted upon that a man is inevitably a fool just because he is a man, and, if a husband, is necessarily a knave as well. It had not been urged upon us that fidelity is impossible except in a mistress—that it might be pardonable indeed in a husband, but must needs be discreditably in a wife. Women were kept in their proper places almost as much as when the Reverend Mr. Crawley, in Trollope's novel, uttered the immortal word, "Peace, woman," to the wife of his bishop. And though something in the play was indeed dull, and something necessarily unpleasant—though personally I held it to be powerful—great must have been the gnashing of teeth among certain of the "emancipated" when it was recognised that, on the whole, the visions of the Socialist had not been held up to us as a very obvious improvement upon the arrangements of God. Mr. Abingdon played well as a husband, who, in his meanness and weakness, is within measurable distance of the husband of Ibsen. Miss Jessie Millward was forcible and affectionate as the wife; and Miss Maud Milton, who can be at once strong and womanly—and, therefore, admirable—played with excellent skill, especially in the scene in which the woman who was Hermann Kooders's love before he thought of marriage opens her mind to the woman who, through fear, suspicion, and perhaps a touch of jealousy, has followed her lord into the abode in which his mistress breaks her heart at the loss of their child.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE St. James's Theatre Company goes on tour with "Lady Windermere's Fan" shortly after the end of the season. The tour, it is understood, will last about a couple of months.

MR. HENRY ARTHUR JONES has finished the play which Mr. Charles Wyndham will produce at the Criterion in the late autumn.

MR. EDWARD TERRY and his company have started on their tour with the revival of "The Magistrate," and are this week at the Brighton Theatre Royal, where they will be succeeded by the Gaiety Company, which is playing this week at the Grand at Islington.

ARRANGEMENTS have already been made by which the Independent Theatre will produce on October 14 Mr. William Poel's new stage version of Webster's tragedy of "The Duchess of Malfi." The cast will be specially selected; and though no announcement has been made upon the subject, we shall hazard the guess that the leading character will be played by Miss Mary Rorke. Our readers—many of whom will have a real interest in Mr. Poel's production—may like to be reminded that "The Duchess of Malfi" (printed in 1623) was first acted by the King's Servants at the Blackfriars and the Globe. First revised as an acting play, it was enacted by Betterton and his associates at the Lincoln's Inn Theatre four years after the accession of Charles the Second. It was revived at the Haymarket in the reign of Queen Anne, and performed at Sadler's Wells during the earlier years of the reign of the present sovereign. The existence of "The Duchess of Malfi" was probably the cause of the eulogium pronounced upon Webster by Charles Lamb, who, contrasting that author with those whose "terrors want dignity, and whose affrightments are without decorum," pronounces boldly that it is Webster's habit and capacity "to touch a soul to the quick, to lay upon fear as much as it can bear."

MUSIC.

GERMAN OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN AND DRURY LANE.

A VERY few words must suffice respecting two performances at Drury Lane last Friday and Saturday. Victor Neesler's "Der Trompeter von Sakkingen" is a startling change from Wagner, and perhaps suffered somewhat by juxtaposition. But in its way it is a clever work, and was admirably performed by the German company under the direction of Herr Feld. On Saturday, "Tristan" was repeated with Frau Klafsky as Isolde. Her singing was very fine, and her acting beyond praise. Herr Alvary was impressive as Tristan. It was one of the most striking performances of the season, and deserves a much longer notice. Herr Mahler was the conductor.

The best should come last, and yet in musical works this rarely happens. Take even those masterpieces of instrumental music, Beethoven's Symphonies, and of how many would one declare that the last movement was greater than the first? In the second section of the Ring des Nibelungen—i.e., in "Die Walkure,"—Wagner seemed to have reached the utmost limits of his art; but in "Götterdämmerung" the dramatic interest is more intense and the pathos deeper, while the music, in concentrated power, skill in structure, and colouring, surpasses the boldest flights of the earlier section. The opening scene of the three Norns, with its mournful melodies and sombre hues; the Siegfried March, with its marvellous complexity of structure, yet grand simplicity of outline; and the concluding scene, in which Brünnhilde "cleanses the Ring from its curse"—these, not to mention many other masterly passages, display Wagner's genius at its fullest. In writing about "Das Rheingold" we spoke of its latent power; and it is only after following the story of the noble maiden and fearless hero from its bright beginning to its sad close that one can understand the raison d'être of the stately exordium: so tremendous a climax needed preparation of an exceptional character. The Ring may be—in fact, from a practical point of view it is—too long, and might be improved by cuts. But to cut without sacrificing anything of essential importance to the dramatic structure, without disturbing the balance of parts, would require a genius almost equal to that of Wagner himself. On Wednesday, night at Covent Garden, the introductory Norn scene was omitted. One must regret to find the composer's dramatic meaning mutilated, and his colouring—those dusky harmonies which presage with such force the fate that overtakes men and gods—effaced; and yet, what is to be done with a work which, even with this and other cuts, lasts over four hours? The difficulty can only be solved by commencing, as in Germany, at six o'clock. Sir Augustus Harris has found the public willing to listen to Wagner, to anticipate the comfortable "Italian Opera" hour by an hour and a half; and in future seasons he will probably both satisfy artistic propriety and study the comfort of the audience by adopting this plan.

To describe in detail the final section of the Ring cannot be here attempted, for it would require many columns to do it justice. Indeed, the more one tries to explain anything great, the more impossible the task. In the "Götterdämmerung" the details may, indeed should be, examined at leisure, and as is the case of all master works the intellectual qualities strengthen the emotional. It is repulsive to hear the Ring described as a mosaic. It is so, but something more: it is the mosaic of a man full of emotion. If the mosaic structure is made too prominent, it gives as false an idea of Wagner as a mere analysis of the contrapuntal devices, or the development subtleties would do of a Fugue by Bach, or Symphony by Beethoven. Deny Wagner's emotional power and his Ring, like Wotan's spear, is broken. Amit it, and then the most searching analysis will prove profitable. For the moment it must suffice to record an earnest and impressive performance. Frau Klafsky was wonderfully fine as Brünnhilde; and if, towards the close, she showed signs of fatigue, this is not in any way surprising. Herr Alvary was again, especially in appearance and in acting, an effective Siegfried. Herr Wiegand deserves special praise for his powerful impersonation of Hagen, and Frl. Heink for her impersonation of Waltraute. The three Rhine Maidens (Frl. Traubmann, Frl. Ralph, and Frl. Froehlich) sang admirably. Herr Mahler conducted with his usual ability.

Sir A. Harris deserves the thanks of the musical public, and especially of the Wagner section, for his enterprise and energy. The production of the Ring des Nibelungen was an undertaking attended with many difficulties and not a few dangers. He has done wonderful things for the cause of Wagner in this country.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

M. ALFRED REISENHAEUSER gave his second Pianoforte Recital at St. James's Hall on Saturday last. He again displayed his wonderful technique, and played with unusual brilliancy, but the tone which he produced from the instrument in the loud passages was of a far more legitimate kind than on the former occasion. His reading of the Waldstein Sonata was interesting, although at times the virtuoso element predominated. He gave a characteristic rendering of Schumann's Carnival, and played two Liszt Rhapsodies with marked effect.

AN orchestral concert was given at St. James's Hall on Monday by the pupils of the Royal College of Music. A very finished performance of Dvorák's Symphony in D (Op. 60), under the direction of Dr. Stanford, was one of the principal features of the evening. Mr. W. G. Spencer played Beethoven's pianoforte Concerto in C minor with great intelligence. A Scena for baritone solo and orchestra, by E. W. Naylor, proved a promising, though somewhat ambitious, novelty.

A ONE-ACT romantic opera, entitled "Caedmar," words and music by Mr. Granville Bantock, a clever pupil of Mr. Corder, was performed at the Royal Academy of Music on Tuesday. The composer adopts the continuous method of Wagner, and very naturally reflects the spirit of that composer. But there are many good points about the work. The programme also included some charming songs, and a pleasing "Egyptian" ballet by Mr. Bantock. Miss Clara Jecks gave an effective rendering of his poem (with pianoforte accompaniment), "Thorvenda's Dream."

A memorial concert, consisting exclusively of works by Arthur Goring Thomas, was given at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon; and it was pleasing to find so many well-known artists, and among them many foreigners, taking part in the programme. Mr. Arthur Goring Thomas was a composer of much promise, and by his premature death English art has been a loser. Space compels us merely to mention that the concert was a great success, and that the principal artists were Mesdames Calvé, Deschamps-Jehin, Melba, Nordica, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Lassalle, Oudin, Plançon, and E. de Rezke. Messrs. Mackenzie, Parry, Stanford, Albanesi, Bevilacqua, Mancinelli, Randegger, and Tosti, also took part in the performances.

THE NINTH and TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESSES OF ORIENTALISTS. For full and authoritative information see JULY number of the "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," pages 208-220.

ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, Woking; or, SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., London, E.C.

GENERAL KIRÉEF'S "CREDO" on "RUSSIA and ENGLAND in CENTRAL ASIA," See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

INDIA and the SILVER QUESTION.

By A. COTTERELL-TUPP, late Accountant-General, Indian Government. See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

TURKISH PROGRESS, by Dr. HYDE CLARKE; The JAPAN CONSTITUTION, by ONE of its FRAMERS; The LEGENDS of DARDISTAN; INDIAN MAGIC FORMULAE: "DWARFS in MOROCCO"; "UGANDA," by Dr. FELKIN; and other Articles of current or literary importance by Specialists. See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

EDITORIAL ROOMS,

"ONCE A WEEK,"

New York, June 20, 1892.

BRITISH AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS having pure-toned FICTION of a high grade of literary excellence to DISPOSE OF, under the International Copyright Law in this country, will enjoy many advantages in dealing with the undersigned. One advantage in particular I would insist on is, that authors so desiring can have their stories copyrighted and published at once—in many cases within a week after the close of negotiations. Two hundred thousand copies of the story are then circulated in all the States and Territories of the Union, thus giving the author the benefit of a wide and appreciative reading. First class Fiction is always in demand for the "Once a Week" Library. Authors will be able to dispose of all of their high-class fiction on the most liberal terms, for I want the best—the three-volume British novel preferred.

Will the author of the "American Girl in London" kindly send present address to this office

P. F. COLLIER.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

Edward Stanford's List.

STANFORD'S TOURIST GUIDES.

NEW EDITIONS, CORRECTED to 1892. With Maps and Plans, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. each.

BERKSHIRE. Second Edition. Edited and Revised by the Rev. P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A.

CHANNEL ISLANDS. Third Edition. Edited and Revised by R. N. WORTH, F.R.S.

ENGLISH LAKES. Seventh Edition. By H. I. JENKINSON, F.R.S.

NORFOLK. Fifth Edition. By Walter RYE.

SUFFOLK. Second Edition. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., &c.

THE WYE and its NEIGHBOURHOOD. Second Edition. Edited and Revised by R. N. WORTH, F.R.S.

The Series embraces, in addition to the above:—

BEDFORDSHIRE.	LONDON (THROUGH).
CAMBRIDGESHIRE.	LONDON (ROUND ABOUT).
CORNWALL.	SOMERSETSHIRE.
DERBYSHIRE.	SURREY.
DEVON (NORTH).	SUSSEX.
DEVON (SOUTH).	WARWICKSHIRE.
DORSETSHIRE.	WILTSHIRE.
ESSEX.	WORCESTERSHIRE.
GLOUCESTERSHIRE.	YORKSHIRE (E. and N. RIDINGS).
HAMPSHIRE.	YORKSHIRE (W. RIDING).
HERTFORDSHIRE.
KENT.

"Nothing can be more convenient than the volumes of this little two-shilling county series; the type, though closely printed, is clear, and they are nearly as light and twice as portable as a fairly filled cigar-case."—Saturday Review.

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT. Fifth Edition. With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.

NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition. With 2 Maps, 6s. 6d.; Smaller Guide, 3s. 6d.

THE ISLE of MAN. Third Edition. With Map. 6s.

CARLISLE, GILSLAND, the ROMAN WALL, and NEIGHBOURHOOD. With Map. 5s.

STANFORD'S TOURIST MAPS.

EUROPE.—STANFORD'S PORTABLE

MAP, showing the Railways, &c. Scale, 105 miles to 1 in.; size, 33 in. by 30 in. Coloured and mounted in case, 10s.

CENTRAL EUROPE.—DAVIES'S MAP, containing all the Railways and Stations, Roads, Rivers, and chief Mountain Ranges are clearly delineated. Scale, 24 miles to 1 in.; size, 47 in. by 38 in. Mounted in case, 16s.

NORWAY.—WILLSON'S HANDY MAP of NORWAY, SOUTH of TRONDHEIM. Scale, 20 miles to 1 in.; size, 14 in. by 21 in. Coloured and folded for the pocket, 2s.

BRITISH ISLES.—DAVIES'S NEW RAILWAY MAP of the BRITISH ISLES and PART of FRANCE. Scale, 22 miles to 1 in.; size, 31 in. by 33 in. In case, 9s.

ENGLAND and WALES.—STANFORD'S PORTABLE MAP. With the Railways very clearly delineated. Scale, 15 miles to 1 in.; size, 32 in. by 28 in. Coloured and mounted in case, 7s. 6d.

ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT.—TOURIST'S MAP. With all the Roads and Paths marked and Heights given. Scale, 1 in. to 1 mile; size, 27 in. by 32 in. Price, with Roads and Lakea Coloured, folded in cover, 2s. 6d.; full Coloured, 4s. 6d.; mounted in case, 7s. 6d.

ISLE of WIGHT.—TOURIST'S MAP. Scale, 1 in. to 1 mile; size, 27 in. by 21 in.; and Descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; Coloured, 1s.; mounted, 3s. 6d.

NORTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP. Scale, 3 miles to 1 in.; size, 34 in. by 27 in.; and Descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; Coloured, 2s.; mounted, 5s.

SOUTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP. Scale, 3½ miles to 1 in.; size, 34 in. by 27 in.; and Descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; Coloured, 2s.; mounted, 5s.

LONDON.—COLLINS'S STANFORD MAP. Scale, 4 in. to 1 mile; size, 34½ in. by 27 in. With an Illustrated GUIDE. Coloured, in case, 1s.; extended size, 34½ in. by 34½ in., and Full Coloured, 1s. 6d.; mounted, 3s. 6d.

LONDON.—MAP of the ENVIRONS of LONDON, including Twenty-five miles from the metropolis. Scale, 1 in. to 1 mile; size, 36 in. by 35 in. Mounted in case, 10s. Other maps at 8s., 6s. 6d., 3s., 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., or 1s.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, S.W.

THE LINOTYPE Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,
30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THE IMPERIAL AND ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW

ORIENTAL and COLONIAL RECORD. JULY, 1892.
ASIA.—F. T. PIGGOTT (late Legal Adviser to the Japanese Cabinet): "JAPAN and her CONSTITUTION."

A. COTTERELL TUPP, B.C.S. (late Accountant-General to the Government of India, Bombay): "IS the DEPRECIATION of SILVER in any WAY a BENEFIT to INDIA?"

P. HORDERN (late Director of Public Instruction, Burma): "AN EPISODE in BURMESE HISTORY."

C. E. BIDDLEPH: "GEOGRAPHY of PERSIA."
PUNDIR S. E. GOPALACHARI: "MAY HINDUS CROSS the OCEAN?"

R. MICHELL: "MY RUSSIAN RECORDS."
COL. ALEXANDER MAN: "FORMOSA: AN ISLAND with a ROMANTIC HISTORY."

AFRICA.—DR. R. W. FELKIN: "UGANDA."
R. G. HALLIBURTON: "DWARF TRIBES SOUTH of MOUNT ATLAS."

C. H. E. CARMICHAEL: EUROPEAN INTERESTS in AFRICA
COLONIES.—G. U. LEYER, C.M.G.: "THE FINANCIAL POSITION of AUSTRALIA."

ORIENTALIA.—C. JOHNSTON, B.C.S.: "BENGALI PHILOLOGY and ETHNOGRAPHY."

W. G. ASTON, C.M.G. (late Japanese Secretary H.M.'s Legation, Tokio): "OBSERVATIONS on DR. TSUBOTA'S DISCOVERY of ARTIFICIAL CAVES in JAPAN."

GENERAL.—HYDE CLARKE: "IS TURKEY PROGRESSING?"
DR. G. W. LEITNER: "LEGENDS, SONGS, and CUSTOMS of BARBADOS."

"MISCELLANEOUS NOTES of the late SIR WALTER ELLIOT."
"THE PELASGI and their MODERN DESCENDANTS."

DR. J. P. VAL D'EREMBO: "AN INDIAN RAJAH at HOME."
THE NINTH and the TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS.

GENERAL KIREFF'S "Credo" on English and Russian Relations in Central Asia.—Oriental Studies admitted into the Honours' in Arts Course in the Scottish Universities, &c., &c.

SUMMARY of EVENTS in ASIA, AFRICA, and the COLONIES.
REVIEWS and NOTICES. 5s. per copy; £1 per annum.

ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WORKING.

CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. VI., No. 7.—JULY.—1s. 6d. net.
Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free.

F. G. KENYON.—HYPERIDES. The New French MS. Additional Fragments of the pro. Lyc. and adv. Dem.

W. L. NEWMAN.—ARISTOTLE CLASSIFICATION of FORMS of GOVERNMENT.

J. W. HEADLAM.—NOTES on EARLY ATHENIAN HISTORY.—H. The Council.

F. GRAINGER.—ARISTOTLE on the ACTIVE and PASSIVE REASON.

R. V. TYRRELL.—NOTES on GREEK TRAGEDIANS, &c.
E. C. MARCHANT.—TEXT of THUC. VII.

C. A. M. PENNELL.—NASAL SONANTS.
A. W. YOUNG.—NOTES on MARTIAL.

W. WYSE.—NOTES on F. PÉTRIE PAPYRI.
BLAYDES' KNIGHTS. W. W. MERRY.

ABBOTT'S ESSAYS on the BIBLE. A. PLUMMER.
THOMAS' NOTES on MANILIUS. R. ELLIS.

KENYON'S ARISTOTLE A.P. H. RICHARDS.
SHORTER NOTICES.

NOTES.
ARCHAEOLOGY.
SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.
BIBLIOGRAPHY.

DAVID NUTT, 270 and 271, Strand.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 261.—CONTENTS.

I.—CRIME and CRIMINAL LAW in the UNITED STATES.
II.—TRAVELS in EQUATORIAL AMERICA.

III.—WELLHAUSEN on the HISTORY of ISRAEL.
IV.—IRISH SPIES and INFORMERS.

V.—RECOLLECTIONS of MARSHAL MACDONALD.
VI.—THE DISCOVERY of AMERICA.

VII.—FORMAL and LANDSCAPE GARDENING.
VIII.—MEMOIRS of MADAME DE GONTAUT.

IX.—THE ISLE of WIGHT.
X.—THE PLATFORM. THE ELECTIONS.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 349, will be published on SATURDAY, JULY 16th.

I.—PROFESSOR FREEMAN
II.—HYMNS and HYMN-WRITERS.

III.—PITTS WAR POLICY.
IV.—THE PORSON of SHAKESPEARIAN CRITICISM.

V.—MR. RUDYARD KIPPLING'S TALES.
VI.—TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

VII.—CARDINAL MANNING.
VIII.—RAMSAY'S ASIA MINOR.

IX.—POLITICS and ETHICS.
X.—DISESTABLISHMENT.

JOHN MERRY, Albemarle Street.

Now Ready, price 1s. 6d. Vol. II., No. 2 (July).

THE CRITICAL REVIEW of THEO- LOGICAL and PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE.

Edited by Professor S. D. F. SALMON, D.D.
Includes "Reviews" by Professors G. A. Smith, Sayce, Knight, Plummer, Jones, Maccabister, Warfield, Chapman, Marshall, Davison, Kennedy, &c.

"For keeping English readers in touch with the latest productions of theological writers The Critical Review easily holds the first place." Church Times.

Annual Prepaid Subscription (post free), 6s.
EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 24, GEORGE STREET, and from all Booksellers.

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form, are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration. MSS. read within 14 days of receipt, and, if approved will be published in the early Autumn.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.,
Publishers of THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL, 6s. 5th Edition.
18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

"BLACK AND WHITE."
MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

THE COURSE of INSTRUCTION in DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.

PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

Now ready. At all Libraries.
NEW NOVEL by JOHN COLEMAN. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"WIFE—YET NO WIFE."
By JOHN COLEMAN.

Author of "Rival Queens," "White Lady of Rosemount," "Curly," "Players and Playwrights I have Met," &c., &c.

HENRY J. DRAKE, 15, Wine Office Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

ON the ORGANISATION of SCIENCE:
an Essay towards Systematisation. By A. FREE LANGE. Is net.
"A powerful plea." Academy. "A weighty protest. Suggestive and interesting... such vigour and incisiveness." Natl. Rev.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE

READY.
ALFRED STEVENS and HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 29 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH
Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1861.
BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

Two per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums of deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCOTT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE a HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS per MONTH, OR a PLOT of LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS per MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCOTT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

Essays, Recollections, and Causeries.

By the Hon. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.

1. SAFE STUDIES. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

CONTENTS:

HISTORICAL PREDICTION.—SIR G. C. LEWIS and LONGEVITY.—LITERARY EGOTISM.—CHARLES AUSTIN.—RECOLLECTIONS of Mr. GROTE and Mr. BABBAGE.—Mr. TENNYSON'S SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY.—PHYSICAL and MORAL COURAGE.—THE UPPER ENGADINE.—NOTES and RECOLLECTIONS of Sir CHARLES WHEATSTONE.—DEAN STANLEY and CANON KINGSLEY.—THE EPICURIST'S LAMENT.—TRANSLATIONS and POEMS.

2. STONES of STUMBLING. Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:

THE CURE for INCURABLES.—THE FEAR of DEATH.—FEARLESS DEATHS.—DIVINE ECONOMY of TRUTH.—APPENDICES: RECOLLECTIONS of PATTISON.*—Mr. ROMANES'S CATECHISM.—NEOCHRISTIANITY and NEOCATHOLICISM: a Sequel.

* This is also published separately, demy 8vo, cloth, 1s.

"The essays are mainly biographical, and are full of wit and humour. They abound in good stories of all kinds. Every page shows the classical humanist, the man of taste and scholarly refinement; but like the essays of Montaigne, of whom Mr. Tollemache is almost an English counterpart, there is a richer vein of thought and of philosophy running through all this lighter matter."—Anglican Church Magazine.

"Mr. Tollemache's essays seem to us to possess literary merit of a rare and high order. He is not only pleasantly anecdotic; he is eminently sympathetic, ingenious, thoughtful, and appreciative, and many of these qualities are also exhibited in his more speculative and less personal papers. His recollections of Grote, Charles Austin, and Pattison are full of interesting anecdote and suggestive comment, while those of Babbage, Sir Charles Wheatstone, Dean Stanley, and Canon Kingsley belong to the same order."—Times.

"Since the death of Hayward, we know no English littérateur who has, in the same degree as Mr. Tollemache, the happy knack of recollecting or collecting the characteristic sayings and doings of a distinguished man, and piecing them together in a finished mosaic."—Daily Chronicle.

"Both these volumes have been previously printed for private circulation, and in this form have found their way to the British Museum and other great libraries. They have now been reprinted and published 'at cost price,' and may almost be said to mark an epoch in the history of cheap books."—Guardian.

LONDON: WILLIAM RICE, 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, 238 pp., 10s. 6d.

ON THE PRINCIPLE OF WEALTH—CREATION, its NATURE, ORIGIN, EVOLUTION, and COROLLARIES;

Being a Critical Reconstruction of Scientific Political Economy.

BY F. W. BAIN, M.A.

PARKER & CO., OXFORD AND LONDON.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY.—New Volume.

Edited by the DUKE OF BEAUFORT, K.G., and A. E. T. WATSON.

MOUNTAINEERING.

By C. T. DENT.

With Contributions by W. M. CONWAY, D. W. FRESHFIELD, C. E. MATHEWS, C. PILKINGTON, Sir F. POLLOCK, H. G. WILLINK, and an Introduction by MR. JUSTICE WILLS.

With 13 Plates and 95 Woodcuts, &c., by H. G. WILLINK and others. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. On July 19.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

W. H. ALLEN & CO., LD.,

13, Waterloo Place, S.W.

This old established and valuable Publishing business was sold as a going concern as from 27th April, 1892.

The purchasers will carry on the business under the same name and at the same place.

THACKER, SPINK & CO.,

CALCUTTA;

W. THACKER & CO., LONDON.

Just published, Third Edition, Enlarged, £2 2s.

LARGE GAME SHOOTING in N. and C. INDIA, THIBET, and HIMALAYAS. By Brigadier-General ALEX. A. A. KINLOCH. 4vo, 36 Plates and Map.

Sixth Edition, 5s.

RUDYARD KIPLING'S DEPART-MENTAL DITTIES, and other Poems. Being Lays of Anglo-Indian Life and Character.

Eighth Edition, Illustrated, 10s. 6d.

LAYS of IND. By "Aleph Cheem." Being Comic, Satirical, and Descriptive Poems on Phases of Anglo-Indian Life.

Fourth Edition, Illustrated, 6s. 6d.

THE TRIBES on MY FRONTIER. By EHA. Being the Animal Surroundings of an Indian Bungalow described most amusingly and yet accurately.

Fourth Edition, Illustrated, 6s.

BEHIND the BUNGALOW. By Eha. The Tribes of Indian Servants cleverly sketched in their various Characters and Functions.

Handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

RIDING for LADIES. With Hints on the Stable. By Mrs. POWER O'DONOGHUE. 91 Illustrations by Corbould.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

INDIGO MANUFACTURE. A Practical and Theoretical Guide, with Experiments illustrative of the Principles involved. By J. BRIDGES-LEE, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE CULTURE and MANUFACTURE of INDIGO. Descriptions of Planters' Life and Resources. By W. M. REID. 19 Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

COW-KEEPING in INDIA. A Simple and Practical Book on their Care and Treatment, their various Breeds, and the means of rendering them profitable. By ISA TWEED. With 37 Illustrations of the various Breeds, &c.

Royal 8vo, 36s.

THACKER'S INDIAN DIRECTORY, 1892. Embraces every detail, Commercial, Official, Social, &c., of the Empire under Government of the Viceroy.

In book form, 8s. 6d.

THACKER'S MAP of INDIA, with Inset Physical Maps, Sketch Plans of Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras. Edited by J. G. BARTHOLOMEW. Corrected to present date, with Railways, Political Changes, and an Index of 10,000 Names, being every Place mentioned in Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer."

8vo, 6s. 6d.

INDIAN and CEYLON TEA-GARDENS. A List giving Areas, Factory Marks, Proprietors, Companies, Capital, Managers, Assistants, &c. Embracing also Coffee, Indigo, Silk, Sugar, Cinchona, Lac, Cardamom, and other concerns in India.

Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

A Guide for Intending Candidates for Commissions and for Junior Officers of the Service. By W. WILFRED WEBB, M.B., Surgeon, Bengal Army.

"We recommend the book to all who think of competing for admission to the service."—Lancet.

Third Edition, Enlarged, 10s. 6d.

RIDING: on the Flat and Across Country. By Capt. M. H. HAYES. 80 Illustrations. A Perfect Guide.

Fourth Edition, Enlarged, 12s. 6d.

VETERINARY NOTES for HORSE OWNERS. Written in Popular Language. By Capt. M. H. HAYES, F.R.C.V.S. Trustworthy and necessary to Owners, Grooms, and Attendants.

UNIFORM WITH "RIDING."—21s.

ILLUSTRATED HORSE-BREAKING. By Capt. HAYES. 51 Illustrations. A Humane and Effective System of Teaching Unruly Horses "Good Manners."

DOGS for HOT CLIMATES. By VERO SHAW and Capt. M. H. HAYES, F.R.C.V.S. Illustrated. [In the press.]

THE PLEASURE HORSE. By VERO SHAW, assisted by Leading Breeders. Illustrated. [In the press.]

W. THACKER & CO., 87, Newgate Street, London
Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & CO.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1055.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 23, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
FROUDE'S SPANISH STORY OF THE ARNADA, by ARTHUR GALTON	63
NORTON'S TRANSLATION OF THE PURGATORIO, by PAGET TOYNBEE	64
LANIN'S RUSSIAN CHARACTERISTICS, by W. R. MORFILL	64
MACFIE'S GRANITE DUST, by WILLIAM SHARP	66
FOUILLÉE'S EDUCATION, by FOSTER WATSON	66
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	67
CURRENT LITERATURE	69
NOTES AND NEWS	69
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	70
ORIGINAL VERSE: "NATURE'S LABORATORY," by T. GORDON HAKE	70
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	71
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	71
CORRESPONDENCE—
On a Mediceal Cryptogram, by Whitley Stokes; The Babylonian Legend of the Creation of Man, by Prof. Sayce; Notes on Herodotus, by F. D.; The French Peasant, by Dr. E. Nicholson; Stephen's Charter of Liberties, by J. H. Round	71
CLARK'S COLLATION OF THE HARLEIAN MS. OF CICERO, by ROBINSON ELLIS	73
THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY	73
CORRESPONDENCE—
Greek "ἄνθη" = Latin "aqua," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew	74
INDIAN JOTTINGS	74
SCIENCE NOTES	75
PHILOLOGY NOTES	75
BLANCHARD JERROLD'S LIFE OF GUSTAVE DORÉ, by F. T. MARZIALS	75
ART SALE	76
CORRESPONDENCE—
Ægean Pottery in Egypt, by Cecil Torr	77
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	77
GERMAN OPERA, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	78
OBITUARY	78

LESSONS.—English, Practical Mathematics, Military Topography, Geometrical Drawing, Hindustani, Sanskrit.—Mr. Wilson, 2, Gertrude Street, Fulham Road, S.W. Accountancy, Proof-reading, &c., done.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.—STUDENTS are successfully PREPARED at the Classes in connection with the North London Collegiate School, under the superintendence of Miss BUSS. They are also trained for Kindergarten work, and prepared for the Examinations of the Froebel Society. Arrangements made for ladies to board in the neighbourhood.—Apply to Miss TOPPIS, 145, Camden Road, London, N.W.

FOR SALE, very rare OLD OAK CORNER CUPBOARD, with shelves inside; richly carved all over front of door, 38s. Also, Grand old-oak small Table, with quaint shaped legs, beautifully carved, 37s. 6d.; and a massive old-oak Arm-chair, carved, 50s.—Apply "LADY," Crownwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND WORK of every description.—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASH-WORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' MSS., Plays, Reviews, Lectures, Legal, or other Articles, COPIED with accuracy and despatch. Terms moderate. Duplicate copies.—Address E. TIGER, 23, Maitland Park Villas, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

AS LITERARY ASSISTANT, SUB-LIBRARIAN, or SECRETARY.—The daughter of a Professional man, well connected, but poor, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. She is thoroughly educated, well read in English and French literature, with some knowledge of Latin and German; good arithmetician, accustomed to secretarial work, to make researches in public libraries, to correct for the press, and to index; she can read aloud intelligently, and writes a legible hand; would undertake Copying or anything else for which the above qualifications would suffice; whole or part time; several years' reference; excellent testimonials.—Address D. H., 39, Theobald's Road, W.C.

ARTIST'S STUDIO.—To be LET (central, excellent STUDIO and RESIDENTIAL CHAMBERS combined. Rent 245 per annum. Modern building situate midway between City and West-end. North-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeeper. Electric light. Hall porter.—Apply to MANAGER, Collector's Office, 63, Chancery Lane, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS. Now fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE CLARENDON PRESS.

Just published, Volume I., demy 8vo, half-bound, price 1s.

HISTORY of the NEW WORLD CALLED AMERICA. By EDWARD JOHN PAYNE, Fellow of University College, Oxford.

Just published, in 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

THE PRINCIPAL SPEECHES of the STATESMEN and ORATORS of the FRENCH REVOLUTION, 1789-1795. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indices, by H. MORSE STEPHENS, Balliol College, Oxford, Author of "A History of the French Revolution."

Just published, Volume I., demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

TWO of the SAXON CHRONICLES PARALLEL, with Supplementary Extracts from the others. A Revised Text. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Appendices, and Glossary, by CHARLES PLUMMER, M.A., Fellow and Chaplain of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; on the Plans of an Edition by JOHN EARLE, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford, and sometime Fellow and Tutor of Oriel College.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY PLANE TRIGONOMETRY, that is, Plane Trigonometry with Imaginaries. By R. C. J. NIXON, M.A., Author of "Euclid Revised," &c.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

THE SONG of DERMOT and the EARL. An Old French Poem, from the Carew Manuscript, No. 596, in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth Palace. Edited, with literal Translation and Notes, a Facsimile and a Map, by GODDARD HENRY ORPEN.

"At the moment when many politicians on both sides of the Channel are straining every nerve to end English rule in Ireland, an Irish scholar, Mr. Goddard Orpen, has given to the world the first translation of perhaps the very earliest account of the English conquest of that island."—North Star.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

Demy 8vo, paper covers, price 1s.

AN ACCOUNT of SOME MSS. of the NEW TESTAMENT, hitherto unedited, contained in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford. By C. H. HOOLE, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

ARCHÆOLOGIA OXONIENSIS. Part I. With Plan and several Photo-Etchings. Paper covers, 2s.; or to Subscribers, per Volume of Four Parts, 6s.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—EVENING EXHIBITION.

The Exhibition will be OPEN in the EVENING from MONDAY, JULY 25th, to MONDAY, AUGUST 1st (BANK HOLIDAY), from 7.30 to 10.30. Admission, 6d. Catalogue, 6d. on BANK HOLIDAY the Admission throughout the day will be 6d. On other days it will be as usual.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—LAST WEEK.—The Exhibition will CLOSE on the EVENING of MONDAY, AUGUST 1st.

BURLINGTON FINE-ART CLUB.—Illustrated CATALOGUE of PORTRAIT MINIATURES, 1889, FOR SALE.—Write J. P. J. Grosvenor Place.

THE PRINCIPALSHIP of ST. DAVID'S COLLEGE, LAMPETER, will be VACANT at the end of September. APPLICATIONS, with not more than six Testimonials, should be sent in not later than July 31st, to the RECTOR PRINCIPAL of DIVINITY, Cambridge. Information as to duties and stipend may be obtained from the present Principal.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL

Congress of Orientalists, 1892.

HON. PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK.

PRESIDENT—PROF. MAX MÜLLER.

All Communications as to Papers and Membership to be addressed to the Secretaries, 22, Albemarle Street.

Tickets, £1; Ladies, 10s.

The CONGRESS will be held SEPTEMBER 5-12. Prof. MAX MÜLLER'S ADDRESS will be delivered on the Morning of MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, and Mr. GLADSTONE'S, at 3 P.M. on SEPTEMBER 7.

N.B.—Orientalists are informed that invitations have been received from Geneva, for holding the Tenth Congress there.

Just published, price Sixpence.

IRELAND'S WOES from a FOREIGNER'S POINT OF VIEW. An Independent Opinion on Home Rule and on the Causes of Irish Misfortunes. "Excellent, earnest, and truthful production... The pamphlet will repay careful perusal twice over."—Belfast Evening Telegraph. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

THE TENTH

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS.

LISBON (23rd SEPTEMBER to 1st OCTOBER, 1892).

President-Patron: HIS MAJESTY DOM CARLOS I.

Orientalists and friends of Oriental studies are specially invited to take part in the above Congress, which will be followed by literary excursions to Cintra and other places of interest in Portugal, and to Cordova, Seville, and Granada in Spain. The programme of work comprises all known branches of Oriental learning, as also recent explorations and subjects bearing on "Portugal and the East." The subscription (£1), papers to be read at the Congress, books for presentation, or collections for exhibition, may be forwarded to "The Delegate General," at the Portuguese Legation, 12, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., from whom also particulars may be learnt regarding Prize-translations and the award by the Congress of Diplomas, Medals, and other honours. The dates of the Congress and of its excursions have been so fixed as to enable members to attend the Americanist and other Congresses, Exhibitions, and Columbian Festivities that will take place in Spain between September 12 and the end of October. Reductions in Railway fares, &c., are being arranged for Members.

FOR PUBLICATIONS of the NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS including SUMMARIES of ORIENTAL RESEARCH in Sixteen Specialities, apply to PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT, ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WORKING.

Small Advertisements continued on pages 78 and 79.

A SELECTION FROM Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s.,
of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY the GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX. | WEE WIFIE.
WOODED and MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE of TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA. | THELMA.
ARDATH. | WORMWOOD.

By W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL.
A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER.
MAJOR and MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO.
THE ROGUE.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
HEALEY.
KITH and KIN.
PROBATION.

By JANE AUSTEN.

(The only COMPLETE Editions of Miss Austen's Works are Messrs. Bentley's.)

EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, and the WATSONS.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.
PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS. [Reprinting.
UNDER a CHARM.
PICKLE FORTUNE.
NO SURRENDER.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE RYE.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN. | NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
ALAS!

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING OT.
HER DEAREST FOE.
LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
THE EXECUTOR.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

UNCLE SILAS.
IN a GLASS DARKLY.
THE HOUSE by the CHURCHYARD.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A GERTON GIRL.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS

SAMUEL LAING'S NEW WORK.

HUMAN ORIGINS:

Evidence from History and Science.
By SAMUEL LAING,
Author of "Modern Science and Modern Thought."
With Illustrations, demy 8vo, 3s. 6d. [This day.
[Second Edition in the Press.

AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE.

SHOOTING AND SALMON FISHING:

Hints and Recollections.
By AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE,
Author of "Deer-Stalking."
With Illustrations, demy 8vo, 16s. [Next week.

THIRD AND CONCLUDING VOLUME OF JUNKER'S "AFRICA."

TRAVELS IN AFRICA DURING THE YEARS 1882-1886.

By Dr. WILHELM JUNKER.
Translated from the German by A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S.
Illustrated, demy 8vo, 21s. [This day.

THE NATURALIST IN LA PLATA.

By W. H. HUDSON, C.M.Z.S.,
Joint-Author of "Argentine Ornithology."
With numerous Illustrations by J. Smit. Demy 8vo, 16s.
[Second Edition now ready.

AN ENGLISHMAN IN PARIS:

Notes and Recollections.
During the Reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.
[Second Edition next week.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

HENRY HARFORD.

FAN:

The Story of a Young Girl's Life.
By HENRY HARFORD.
3 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.

A HUMAN DOCUMENT.

By W. H. MALLOCK.
3 vols., crown 8vo.
[Second Edition now ready.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS

A NEW ISSUE OF

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS,

Printed from the Edition that was carefully corrected by the Author in 1867 and 1868, called

THE HALF-CROWN EDITION

Is now in course of publication.

The Edition will contain the whole of the Original Illustrations, and will be complete in about 18 crown 8vo volumes, 2s. 6d. each.

THE FOLLOWING ARE NOW READY:—

THE PICKWICK PAPERS. With 43 Illustrations by Seymour and Phiz.

BARNABY RUDGE: a Tale of the Riots of 'Eighty. With 76 Illustrations by George Cattermole and H. K. Browne.

OLIVER TWIST. With 24 Illustrations by Cruikshank.

TO BE FOLLOWED NEXT MONTH BY—

NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. With 40 Illustrations by Phiz.

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP. With 75 Illustrations by George Cattermole and H. K. Browne.

DAVID COPPERFIELD. With 40 Illustrations by Phiz.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

NEW EDITION, TWELFTH THOUSAND.

RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

By G. W. E. RUSSELL, M.P.
(The "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.)
With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Written in a manly and independent spirit, which we should expect in one of his lineage... An honest book."—World.
"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste.... A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius."—Daily News.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G.

By H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L.
(The "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.)
With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
A really valuable piece of contemporary history.
"Unquestionably the liveliest, not to say the most superciliously cynical and wickedly witty, of the series."—Daily Chronicle.

THE MEMBER

FOR

WROTTENBOROUGH.

Passages from his Life in Parliament. Edited by his "Alter ego," ARTHUR A'BECKETT, Author of "Papers from Pump-handle Court," &c. With fancy cover, design by E. J. Wheeler. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"A bright, clever, and readable brochure."—Daily Telegraph.
"Very clever and entertaining."—Scotsman.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GEORG EBERS'S NEW NOVEL.

PER ASPERA (a Thorny Path). By

GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.
"The action is set in Alexandria at the time of the Emperor Caracalla, and the story follows the romantic fortunes of an artist's daughter residing there.... All the civilisation of the time is brought into the book either by description or suggestion, and seems to live again before the reader's eye."—Scot man.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales.

By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
[First Issue in Book Form.]

A SON of the FENS. By Dr. P. H.

EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A remarkable work."—World.

THREE FEATHERS. By William

BLACK. 2s. 6d. Being the New Volume in the Uniform and Cheap Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S NOVELS.

CONVERSATIONS with CARLYLE.

By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G., &c. With 2 Portraits of Mr. Carlyle and 1 of Mrs. Carlyle. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A book which is well entitled to a place of honour, for it is by far the most sane, the most kindly, and the most critical estimate of Carlyle as yet published."—Saturday Review.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and

LETTERS. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, B.A. With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page and 41 smaller Illustrations, including 15 Photogravures. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

THE LARGE-PAPER EDITION, 250 Copies, each numbered and signed, demy 4to, boards, with extra illustrations, THREE GUINEAS NET, is just ready.

"Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from first to last."—Saturday Review.

THE STORY of KING EDWARD and

NEW WINCHELSEA: the Edification of a Medieval Town. By F. A. Inderwick, Q.C. Author of "Side-lights on the Stuarts," "The Interregnum." Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN

WITHOUT a GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACEY. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched, yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."—World.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada, Japan, and China, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. "Picturesque and practical."—Globe.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 23, 1892.

No. 1055, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Spanish Story of the Armada, and Other Essays. By James Anthony Froude. (Longmans.)

THE "other essays" are three in number: their subjects are "Antonio Perez: an Unsolved Historical Riddle"; "Saint Teresa," as Mr. Froude prefers to spell it; and "The Templars." To these are added a couple of rambling discourses, about the Norwegian Fjords, and about many other things which presented themselves to the eyes, or to the imagination, of Mr. Froude in his happier hours. On these occasions, he is almost as garrulous, though not quite so amusing, as the Walrus and the Carpenter, and some of his subjects are the same as theirs.

"Multa renascentur, quae jam cecidere; cadentque, Quae nunc sunt in honore."

Many a wearied reader would quote these lines, in this day of ours, if it were our habit to frequent the Ancients as industriously as we frequent the modern authors, and their periodicals; for the Moderns omit no device to make us frequent them, neither they nor their publishers ever miss an opportunity. The whole of these essays and discourses have been bestowed already upon the public, by Mr. Froude, or by the editors of several magazines: the reviewer, therefore, has nothing new to say of them, except that they are now bound in one cover, and printed in one type. Mr. Froude says of them himself, that he reproduces them because they are carefully written, and because he hopes they may have some interest to historical students. They will, undeniably; because this volume will always serve to commemorate the author's appointment to the chair of history at Oxford: an appointment that must be interesting to every student of history, and more than interesting to every professional historian. Mr. Froude's appointment deserves particular commemoration; and as he commemorates it by a volume, we may celebrate it by this line of Horace:

"In vitium ducit culpae fuga, si caret arte."

Or, since modern history is banishing the classics, we may convey the satire of Horace and of Lord Salisbury by the old proverb, "Out of the frying-pan, into the fire"; if, indeed, it were the intention of Lord Salisbury to temper the vices of Mr. Freeman by the virtue of Prof. Froude.

The essays themselves are not only carefully written, but exceedingly well written; and there are few blemishes to be found in them so bad as that, where Mr. Froude allows himself to say "As I was laying in my berth." He does not say what he was "laying"; but, like Mrs. Cluppins and other Pickwickians who talk in her manner, he overheard the sound of voices, and he has recorded what they said. This laxity of speech and of practice may be pardonable in an author's holiday, or natural in the loose pages of a magazine: it is unpardonable in a revised and finished volume, or upon the lips of a university professor. With better taste, Mr. Froude says "there is something artificial in the modern enthusiasm for landscapes"; and there is something much worse than "artificial" in our modern descriptions of them. Of these vices, Mr. Froude is entirely innocent; and after some books of travel, with their lascivious phrases, and their hysterical sentiment, it is no less wholesome than pleasing to turn to the quiet manner and to the masculine thought of Mr. Froude. Nothing could be better than Mr. Froude's choice of reading, when he travels: the Odyssey, Xenophon, a Greek play or two, are his companions; and to them we may fairly attribute something of his chastened style. Would that all those who travel and all those who stay at home, "busied with fiction," as their saying is, or "occupied with verse," producing "phenomenal publications," would cultivate the same good authors, or would learn to cultivate them; as we should then have a better literature, and we should be spared many "epoch-making books." But, perhaps, this is asking for too much in our busy age; and we should excuse each budding genius, as Victor Hugo has been excused, by saying "il n'avait pas le temps d'avoir du goût." For writers in a hurry, there is nothing I desire except their silence. In the writings of Mr. Froude, with all their undeniable power and clearness, there is always one other thing that I desire; and I use the word now in its delicate Latin sense: I desire more charm, more trace of a loving acquaintance with our own good authors, especially with those of the last age. Mr. Froude is too strenuous and stern, not only in his thought, but in his writing. An author can hardly have too much of these high qualities; but he can display too much of them, and then he will be monotonous; or, in spite of all his excellence, he will be wearisome. Such authors as these go near to forgetting that wise precept, "Be not righteous over much"; and Mr. Froude is terribly righteous, particularly when he discourses to monks and bishops. I have often thought, as I read his imaginative account of Mary Stuart's death, that it must have been a greater effort for him to write it than for the Queen to endure it. An historian may have other thoughts as he reads this dramatic scene; but I confine myself, at present, to the literature of Mr. Froude. Good as that is, it has too exclusively the note of what Mr. Pater calls "modernity"; we find in it too seldom the pondered phrase, or the happy word, that recalls the page of Addison and Goldsmith, to whom every historian and essayist should be compelled to "give his days and nights." We are reminded too often in Mr. Froude of Lord Macaulay, or of the leading article; though they are always much the same in their hardness, and sometimes in their brilliancy and their smartness. Perhaps this is why the critics of the daily papers are always exuberant in their praise of Mr. Froude; and, if he be judged by their standard, he cannot possibly be over praised. The accomplished negligence of Goldsmith, the dainty satire and the full sound of Gibbon, the light strokes of Addison, the music of Johnson when he talks of poetry, the persuasive moods of Newman, the educated insolence of Arnold: what gifts are these, to the essayist and to the historian; what models in the way of writing, when they are combined with perfect clearness and expressed in the happiest vocabulary. It is by these gifts that they compel us to read on and on in their enchanting pages, without ever growing weary.

In one of the early pages of Mr. Froude's History there is an enchanting paragraph, about the passing of the Middle Age and the dawn of the modern world. He talks of the sound of bells, and of the solemn figures of the old English who lie in effigy in our cathedrals. Some feeling of this kind has made him write of the Templars: their solemn figures in the Temple Church were before him as he wrote his essay, and the tragedy of their fate pervades it. It is a good essay, and a true; it records in very simple language one of the worst, and the most amazing, crimes in mediaeval history. But "our business with these things," says Mr. Froude, "is to understand them, not to sit in judgment on them. The black colours in which Philip the Beautiful and his bishops were pleased to paint the Templars will perhaps, if history cares to trouble itself about the matter, be found to attach rather to the extraordinary men calling themselves successors of the Apostles who racked and roasted them."

This is what Mr. Froude understands about the Templars, and about the niceties of the subjunctive mood. He does not seem to be very clear whether it were the Apostles themselves, or their successors, who racked and roasted Templars; but Mr. Froude has always been dubious about the apostolical succession: it is an old trouble of his, and it still perplexes him.

The three other essays are about Spanish history, and they are well worth reading. The first, to realise how carefully the Armada was prepared; how scandalously it was mismanaged when it went to sea; and how nobly King Philip behaved under his misfortune. Not the least admirable thing is the unconscious humour of his notice to the bishops, when he ordered a thanksgiving, and says of the Armada: "It might have experienced a worse fate; and that the misfortune has not been heavier is no doubt due to the prayers which have been offered in its behalf so devoutly and continuously." Philip was thankful for small mercies; and the account of Antonio Perez brings out his other good qualities: his industry, his desire to do right, and the mistakes he made in doing it sometimes.

Mr. Froude has found a scene after his own heart, when he describes the translation of Saint Theresa, and the partition of her relics. "The eye-witness who describes the scene was made happy by a single finger-joint. The General himself shocked the feelings or roused the envy of the bystanders by tearing out an entire rib." Some of the Saints, it would seem probable, are likely to be embarrassed with the number of their limbs and members, when they rise again; and some venerated relics are likely to be more embarrassed, by finding no Saints.

ARTHUR GALTON.

The Purgatory of Dante Alighieri. Translated by Charles Eliot Norton. (Macmillans.)

WE must confess to having read this second instalment of Mr. Norton's prose version of the Divina Commedia with a certain feeling of disappointment. Mr. Norton states that it has been his aim "to be as literal as is consistent with good English"; and he partially justifies his undertaking on the ground that the version of one at least of his predecessors—viz., Mr. A. J. Butler—is "somewhat crabbed through an occasional excess of literal fidelity." As we have already pointed out in a former article, Mr. Butler does not claim to have produced anything more than a "crib" pure and simple. But we are bound to say, since Mr. Norton challenges the comparison, that we find Mr. Butler's "crib," taken as a whole, at least as readable as Mr. Norton's present volume.

In his translation of the Inferno, which we noticed a short time ago, Mr. Norton undoubtedly at times reaches a high pitch of excellence. We are sorry to be unable to say the same of his version of the Purgatorio. It seems to us to be lacking in ease and rhythm, and to err, strangely enough, not unfrequently in being too literal, and, hence, awkward—precisely the faults which in the light of his Introduction we should have thought Mr. Norton would be most careful to avoid. A specimen—the rendering of the famous apostrophe to Italy in Canto vi., a passage where a translator may reasonably be supposed to be at his best—will illustrate our meaning:

"Abi serva Italia, di dolore ostello,
Nave senza nocchiero in gran tempesta,
Non donna di provincie, ma bordello;
Quell' anima gentil fu così presta
Sol per lo dolce suon della sua terra,
Di fare al cittadin suo quivi festa:
Ed ora in te non stanno senza guerra
Li vivi tuoi, e l'un l'altro si rode Di quei, che un muro ed una fossa serra.
Cerca, misera, intorno dalle prode
Le tue marine, e poi ti guarda in seno,
S' alcuna parte in te di pace gode.
Che val, perchè ti racconciasse il freno
Giustiniano, se la sella è vota?
Senz'esso fora la vergogna meno."

(vv. 76-90).

Mr. Norton translates:

"Ah, servile Italy, hostel of grief! ship without pilot in great tempest! not lady of provinces, but a brothel! that gentle soul was so ready, only at the sweet sound of his native land, to give glad welcome here unto his fellow-citizen; and now in thee thy living men exist not without war, and of those whom one wall and one moat shut in one doth gnaw the other. Search, wretched one, around the shores, thy seaboard, and then look within thy bosom, if any part of thee enjoyeth peace! What avails it that for thee Justinian should mend the bridle if the saddle is empty? Without this, the shame would be less."

We get here but a feeble echo of the saera indignatio of the Florentine poet; and the rendering is so literal as to be not only bald, but even obscure, for, however allowable Dante's phrase "lo dolce suon della sua terra" may be, it is, to say the least, neither good nor intelligible English to speak of "the sweet sound of his native land," when what is actually meant is "the sweet sound of the name of his own land."

For the purposes of comparison we may quote the version of this same passage given by the late W. S. Dugdale in his translation of the Purgatorio, which was undertaken as a continuation, on similar lines, of Dr. Carlyle's prose translation of the Inferno:

"Ah! slavish Italy, hostelry of woe, ship without a pilot, tempest-tost, no more a queen of nations, but a place of evil fame! That gentle spirit was thus prompt, at the mere name of his dear native land, to proffer here a welcome to his fellow-citizen. Yet now, they who live within thy borders wage ceaseless war, and one devours the other, even when encircled by the same walls and moat. Go, search, then, wretched one, around the shores of thy seas; and then turn thine eyes into thine own bosom, to see if any part of thee enjoys the blessings of peace. What boots it that Justinian renewed thy reins, if the saddle is empty? Had not that been done, thy shame would be less."

This, though blemished here and there by needless expansions, is quite sufficiently literal, and it gives at the same time a fair idea of the spirit of the original. We may take this occasion to remark that Dugdale's translation is not so well known as it deserves to be, for, as may be gathered from the above specimen, it is both spirited and rhythmical, and on the whole it is correct.

If we have dwelt at some length on our disappointment with the present volume it is because we had, owing to the acknowledged excellence of Mr. Norton's previous volume, formed high expectations of it beforehand. For it seemed natural that a translator who succeeded so admirably in his version of the Inferno, should, at least, not fall below his own standard in dealing with the Purgatorio, which is at once less "difficult," and more attractive, as being more human.

Apart, however, from its shortcomings in the matter of English style—and it is from this standpoint alone that our judgment is unfavourable—Mr. Norton's translation, besides being strictly accurate, has a special value of its own, which is not shared by that of either of his predecessors. Mr. Norton has been able to avail himself of the results of Dr. Moore's recent labours on the Italian text as embodied in his valuable Textual Criticism of the Divina Commedia. The translation is based for the most part on Witte's critical text, but in several instances readings have been preferred which Dr. Moore's researches have practically established as correct. The most important of these are (Canto ii. 13) sul presso del mattino for Witte's sorpreso dal mattino; (Canto vii. 51) o non sarria che non for Witte's over saria che non; and (Canto x. 30) dritta di salita for Witte's dritto di salita. We should have been glad to see added to these (Canto xxvii. 81) lor poggiate serve for Witte's lor di posa serve, which Mr. Norton retains. In another passage, again (Canto xxii. 40), which Dr. Moore has not included among his test passages, we think the wrong reading, and consequently the wrong interpretation, has been adopted. Mr. Butler reads:

"Perchè non reggi tu, o sacra fame Dell' ero, l'appetito de' mortali?"

and translates: "Why restrainest thou not, O holy hunger of gold, the desire of mortals?" This we believe to be correct. Mr. Norton evidently reads A che (which by the way is not Witte's reading—he has Per che) and renders: "O cursed hunger of gold, to what dost thou not impel the appetite of mortals?" Witte's nasuto (Canto vii. 103) is rightly rejected in favour of nasetto, as Philip III. of France, who is there alluded to, was indubitably "short-nosed." We observe that Mr. Norton follows his predecessors in what is almost certainly a mistaken rendering of Canto xxvi. 118:

"Versi d' amore e prose di romanzi Soverchiò tutti."

"In verses of love, and prose of romances, he [Arnaut Daniel] excelled all." This would make Dante imply that Arnaut wrote "prose romances." As a matter of fact, as we have already pointed out in the ACADEMY (April 13, 1889), there is no ground whatever (beyond this mistranslation and the erroneous inferences drawn from it) for supposing that Arnaut wrote "romances" of any kind, or that Dante thought so. There is little doubt that the correct rendering of the passage is that suggested by the comment of Buti: "He surpassed all (authors of) verses of love and prose of romance," that is to say, "he was superior to all who have written either in Provençal (versi d' amore) or French (prose di romanzi)," it being borne in mind that Dante expressly states in the De Vulgari Eloquentia that everything in the "vernacular prose," whether translated or original, was in the Langue d' Oil.

Mr. Norton's notes are careful and well selected, those on the Mystic Procession in Canto xxix. being especially helpful. There is a wrong reference (vi. 1, instead of v. 1 § 2) to Valerius Maximus on p. 97. The note on Pia (p. 31) is not up to date; the late Signor Banchi having shown some years ago (see ACADEMY, June 19, 1886) that "la Pia" of Purg. v. 133 could not be Pia de' Tolomei, since she was still living in 1318. The story of Tomyris and Cyrus was derived probably, not from Justin, as Mr. Norton suggests (p. 75), but from Orosius, to whom Dante was chiefly indebted for his knowledge of ancient history.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

Russian Characteristics. Reprinted, with Revisions, from the "Fortnightly Review," by E. B. Lanin. (Chapman & Hall.)

WHEN we had finished this book, so full of terrible indictments against Russia and her people, the two following difficulties presented themselves to us, as perhaps they will to some of our readers. If Russia be really a country in such a state of exhaustion and decay, so wanting in capable and honest citizens, how is it that she is to be regarded as so formidable an adversary to many of the European powers? How is it that she bids fair to be the heiress of England in India, according to the opinion of Mr. Lanin? How is it that, if we take the views of our author and many of the English Russophobes, she is such a source of danger in threatening to absorb Slavonic Austria and the Balkan States? There must be some mistake here: if she contains so many seeds of internal dissolution, she must be powerless, and her enemies have only got to march over her ruins. Surely it is a law with states, as with physical bodies, that they cannot long exist, still less spread and develop themselves, if their organism is corrupt and ready to fall to pieces. The other point that forces itself upon our attention is, that if any enemy of our own country were to take the trouble to make extracts from English newspapers detailing the crimes, the scandals, and disgraceful causes célèbres constantly occurring among us, what an indictment might be brought against the English people, as indeed against any other nation subjected to the same process!

But a kind of logical fallacy is suggested by these articles, when our author would fain have us believe that what has occurred in different parts of the Russian empire at different times occurs every day as an ordinary event. To this we might add that many nations—ourselves among the number—are fond of speaking of their own defects in an exaggerated way. A great many of these descriptions must be put down to that love of rhetorical writing which finds its true sphere in the newspapers. We are nothing if we are not smart nowadays. In England we have a good deal of this tendency to self-depreciation and pessimistic writing, and many foreigners, on reading the philippics contained in some of our Radical newspapers, have rushed to the conclusion that the country must be on the eve of revolution. Again, there is an inconsistency in speaking of the press as being so gagged in a country in which it is possible for such statements to be made publicly.

As far as we can judge from his book, Mr. Lanin, to use the nom de guerre under which the real author conceals himself, appears to have spent his time chiefly in a city—probably St. Petersburg—and to have got from the newspapers his accounts of what happened in the rural districts. We are hardly conscious of a passage in which he implies direct personal knowledge; and in this respect, in spite of his depreciation of Dr. Lansdell, we shrewdly surmise that the latter has seen a great deal more of the interior of the country than our author.

Everything is fish that comes to Mr. Lanin's net. On p. 164 he is eloquent over the tricks of trade in Russia, as if, forsooth, they were peculiarly Slavonic and unknown further West. How awkward it would be for us if all the best accredited pieces of cheating which our newspapers report were carefully collected! Mr. Lanin even adduces, among his instances of the universal corruption of Russia, stories about the plagiarism of authors, and tells us gravely how Prof. Morozoff was accused of having stolen some ideas from another author in his History of the Russian Drama. If ever a corresponding indictment is brought against the English people, are we to expect that Mr. Churton Collins' book on Lord Tennyson's supposed plagiarisms will be gravely quoted? We remember some years ago reading in the Istoricheski Vestnik the stories about the novelist Turgueniev which Mr. Lanin mentions. We looked upon them at the time as only some of the many instances of the eccentricity and absence of mind of the genus irritabile of authors. We are told, for example, how Turgueniev invited some friends to dinner and never turned up, as the phrase is, on the occasion. But from such mere social gossip an indictment is framed against the whole Russian people for meanness and mendacity. We are afraid that cases of such perfidy and dishonesty have occurred before this in the sacred city of Oxford itself. But surely a great deal of this is mere triviality. We certainly read with amazement on p. 500 about the brutal coarseness of the Great Russian literature. To what does our author refer? Surely a more unfounded assertion was never made. The popular literature of that part of the Russian Empire is as pure and simple as the Malo-Russian, of which Mr. Lanin speaks so favourably. A tolerable familiarity with Russian song-books for many years has not enabled us to discover these gross and disgusting productions.

This reckless statement does not seem to be of more value than the strange idea propounded by our author that the Russian word for week, niedielya, proves them to be an idle people. We are afraid that Mr. Lanin's Russian studies cannot have been very deep, or he would have learned that niedielya was the old Slavonic word for Sunday, and, indeed, is still the word in some of the Slavonic languages. It, no doubt, became changed in Russian to mean a week, because it was the first and most important day of the week; perhaps in the same way as among the Jews (in the language of the Greek Testament) σάββατα came to mean the week. Cf. εἰς μίαν σάββατον (Mark xvi. 2).

Nor can we follow our author in his fanciful remarks upon the Accadian language and its supposed resemblance to Finnish, upon which some strange opinions are based—e.g. (p. 457): "The old respect which inspired the laws of the Accadians of Babylon and characterised the Fins of Pagan times still manifests itself in the conceptions of modern Finland" (!) Here is surely some very amateurish philology.

On p. 290 we get exaggerated remarks on Russian immorality: their young people are not subjected to "those painful prunings and chippings of the early desires, branching luxuriantly forth in all directions, which give strength and elevation," &c. When we read our author's remarks on Russian immorality and his extracts from the newspapers, we cannot help rejoicing a little that no Russian has performed the same pious task for us.

We do not quite understand what has dictated the constant panegyrics of the Jews which Mr. Lanin has introduced. Without at all justifying the extreme measures which have been dealt out to them, we look upon much that our author says about this unfortunate people as very special pleading indeed. For example, his attempt to explain away the fondness of the Jews for keeping public-houses in Russia. Here and there we find a word for the Turk put in very dexterously. The programme of the book appears to be quite as much a panegyric of the Jews as elaborate abuse of the Russians. We are glad that our author says a few kind words for the Armenians. The great danger they run in Russia is that of assimilation: so many careers are open to them, and they are able, we have seen in many instances, to rise to the highest positions.

But our author, in his tedious diatribe, only gives us—if he really gives us—one side of the picture. He says little or nothing of many of the solid virtues of the Russian: of his real piety, to which M. Leroy Beaulieu, well acquainted with the country, bears cheerful witness; his tender-heartedness, shown in his kindness to the poor, his patriotism, and his hospitality. We do not think the less of a Spanish, nay, even of an Irish peasant, because his simple faith is mixed with what we call superstition—always a very indefinite word, into which each man will read what he pleases.

But to say a few words by way of conclusion. How undignified on the part of England all these petty attacks upon Russia seem, which are too often welcomed only in consequence of the political jealousies she has aroused. Let us be just to Russia. She has had a difficult part to play—her thinly-populated territories, her severe climate, her vast plains, so easy to be overrun by the invader, and the large Oriental population occupying her south-eastern provinces: all these have been factors in retarding her progress. She has also been greatly impoverished by the emancipation of the serfs. But that real elements of good are to be found in her people, even those who do not know her from travel, may gather from the works of Tolstoi and Turgueniev, to say nothing of others. They may see of what fine stuff her peasants are made when they turn over the delightful pages of the Zapiski Okhotnika. At the commencement of the century Russia saved the Georgians from being engulfed by Mohammedan barbarism. In our own time we have seen her engaged in one of the noblest wars ever undertaken by a nation—the rescue of the Bulgarians from the brutal yoke of the Turk. Our own countrymen, unfortunately, were occupied in the less worthy task of riveting their bonds tighter. Upon what a now period of terrible oppression did the Bulgarians enter after the Crimean War, as many leading men among them have assured us. Then some of the most civilised nations in the world—ourselves among the number—guaranteed to the Mohammedan oppressor that he should be undisturbed in the persecution of his slave! Whatever may have been his faults, the Russian has done a nobler thing in Bulgaria than that.

W. R. MORFILL.

Granite Dust. By Ronald Campbell Macfie.
(Kegan Paul & Co.)

WHY this little book should be called Granite Dust is by no means obvious, till one realises that the author is a resident in the Granite City. Aberdeen has not been fruitful of poets, compared with the rueful abundance of other more or less favoured places; though at present more than one singer to the manner born lives in the grey old town. The author of Granite Dust is probably a very young man: indeed, his lucubrations betray him beyond question. He has something of the crudeness of literary inexperience, but more of the crudeness of youth, that happy crudeness which is the salt of life, the spice that gives it its keenest flavour, and the forfeiture of which may be a gain to the artist, but is a loss to the man. Moreover, being young and having a sensitive ear for what is rare in metrical music, he tantalises us occasionally with echoes, all of them probably unconscious.

But as this little book has not been picked out from a score of others merely to have attention drawn to its almost inevitable drawbacks, let me hasten to say that its author is indubitably a poet in his degree. What that degree is has yet to be determined: it is much that he has a single clear note of his own, and one not without appeal. There is in the following lyric that haunting charm with which the Elizabethans knew so well how to animate their songs, but which few latter-day poets can convey:

"Alas, alas, ehéu!
That the sky is only blue
To gather from the grass
The rain and dew!
Alas! that eyes are fair:
That tears may gather there
Mist and the breath of sighs
From the marsh of care!
Alas, alas, ehéu!
That we meet but to bid adieu:
That the sands in Time's ancient glass
Are so swift and few!
Alas, alas, ehéu!
That the heart is only true
To gather, where false feet pass,
The thorn and rue!"

A double strain goes through Granite Dust. A serene and quiet mood finds frequent expression in such lines as these opening quatrains of "A Day in June"—

"The sun was zenith high. A lifeless cloud
Lay in the west
Like a dead angel lying in a shroud,
With lilies on her breast.
O'erladen was the shimmering air with balm
And pollen-gold.
There reigned a perfect silence and a calm O'er hill and wold."

—as, too, in "Triumph," and the beautiful love lyric "Depart." A feverish and occasionally somewhat spasmodic mood manifests itself not less often in such pieces as "Telemachus," "That Night," and the Prelude: in such lines as "the vortex of a loving kiss," "... the skeleton Despair, Whose fingers rattle in her hair." But even here—and we all know how much easier it is to be bitter and despairful in verse, than steadfast and serene—there is much to admire. The poet can be "spasmodic" and yet be a poet, and he has that delightful audacity which is another proof of the genuineness of his intellectual lineage. Lines like these from "That Night":—

"Thunder, with loosened limbs, lay huddled in a swoon.
Lightning had slunk away. There was never a stir in the air.
The trees stood statue-still as of motionless marble hewn,
Save one high branch that was bent before the moon,
By the corse of an Absalom wind hanging heavily by the hair":

or these, of "Destiny":

"By weight of many woes unbowed,
Imperious and full and proud,
She sitteth in a thunder-cloud.
"And, peering through the purple mist,
Our 'wildered eyes behold her twist
The jagged lightning round her wrist;"

or these, from a powerful and imaginative fantasy, "The Dying Day of Death," spoilt by a weak line here and there, as "Patient and calm amid the world's unrest, There shone a star or two."

"Weird voices wailed about the vexed sea:
Cold coresses lay upon the yellow sands,
Panting themselves to life and painfully
Moving their ashen hands.

I climbed a hill; and on the plain below
Beheld astonished the hollow face
Of man's relentless foe.

About his temples, sinuous serpent veins
Seemed writhing; and his lips were thin and starven;

While by the chisel of a myriad pains
His great brow-dome was carven."

But, as yet, Mr. Macfie is on surest ground when he is simplest both in emotion and expression. The already alluded to "Depart," the fine "Fate," beginning—

"Spinning, spinning, spinning,
She plied her ancient loom;
Here, a silver beginning,
There a sable doom.
The woof is shadow and sun;
The warp, glory and gloom.
Spinning, spinning, spinning—
Look how the shuttles run."

—the Heinesque "King Death," the delicately-wrought, finely-reserved lyric, "No Saint," to specify three or four only of the author's most successful pieces, prove that he is at least of those who tread Parnassus-grass, if not yet among the small company of the elect who fare across the thymy uplands.

WILLIAM SHARP.

Education from a National Standpoint. By Alfred Fouillée. Translated and edited by W. J. Greenstreet. (Edward Arnold.)

THIS is an unusually stirring educational work. It is the French reply to the more or less accepted manifesto of scientific education, written by Mr. Herbert Spencer thirty years ago. Mr. Spencer asked: "What knowledge is of most worth?" and answered: "The uniform reply is—Science." Again, he said:

"To science has been committed all the work; by her skill, intelligence, and devotion have all the conveniences and gratifications been obtained; and while carelessly ministering to the rest, she has been kept in the background that her haughty sisters might flaunt their fripperies in the eyes of the world."

County councils, technical institutes, chambers of commerce, et id genus omne, no doubt acquiesce in the "uniform reply," of which Mr. Spencer speaks with perhaps undue confidence. The passage I have quoted, however, shows that Mr. Spencer himself thinks that once in a way a little attention to rhetoric is not a bad thing.

Mr. Herbert Spencer is an intellectual giant, and, moreover, his fervid advocacy of science has been borne forward on the crest of the wave of English Utilitarianism. His book, therefore, entitled Education: Intellectual, Moral, Physical, has almost come to be regarded as the English utterance on the subject. It is radical pedagogy. It appeals to the democracy. It comes not from academic groves. It sniffs of common sense. It is English—to the core.

In view of the approaching organisation of secondary education in England, it is of vital importance not to be lame or halting in our choice of Spencer or Fouillée. It is easy to say with Mr. Spencer: "For that indirect self-preservation which we call gaining a livelihood, the knowledge of greatest value is—science." This point the people clearly—too clearly—appreciate, and the democracy may soon have in their hands the control of secondary education. We must, therefore, not only ask if "science" is the uniform reply to the question, What knowledge is of most worth? but also, Is science also the final, all-comprehensive, or even the most important knowledge to acquire?

Let us open once more our Aristotle. He declared the object of life to be not merely to live, but to live well. Let us distinguish between "earning livelihoods" and "living well." The former is a personal matter for each one of us to settle for himself. The idea of "living well" is very complex, involving social as well as personal factors. It depends upon a knowledge of our individual, national, racial, and human antecedents, and the social circumstances by which we are surrounded, by the views we take of the past, and the hopes and the ideals we cherish for the future. Now, as to the multitudinous details of ideas and facts which make up our knowledge of these conditions and circumstances, and the suggestions which enable us to act consciously and reasonably within them, the natural sciences give us absolutely no help.

I have seen no book which deals so admirably with this aspect of life and the necessity of educating the young to a recognition of its importance as this of M. Fouillée. He shows with great emphasis how indispensable is a due and constant appreciation throughout education of the principle of historic continuity of our present to our past, the knowledge of our present social environment, and the encouragement of distinctly human ideals of our future. All these, he contends, point to the humanities as the form and substance of education, not because they are of most practical worth, but because a knowledge of these is the essential prerequisite to living well as individuals and as nations. In the highest sense,

"We live by admiration, hope, and love."

These necessities of life involve the study of literature and of history.

M. Fouillée, then, maintains that the chief material of education must be human. The Humanities take with him the place assigned by Mr. Spencer to science. Instead of training children for their future occupations, M. Fouillée contends that the very meaning at any rate of a liberal education is that it should be "disinterested." "Our first aim," he says, "is to make men, and men endowed with great social virtues, not to turn out ready-made engineers, mechanics, doctors, or apothecaries." M. Fouillée admits, or rather maintains, that his ideal, while theoretically valid, is practically too vague for, say, school purposes. The school-master cannot build boys into cosmopolitan beings, men in the abstract. He insists, however, that the idea of organic solidarity on a scale smaller than that of humanity—viz., the solidarity of the nation, must permeate and transfigure any truly national system of education. He points out with overwhelming accumulation of eloquence and fact that each nation has its own instinct, genius, and mission to humanity. The educational problem, therefore, of each country is how best to infuse its national consciousness, as made clear in its previous experiences both of thought (in literature) and of action (in history), into the teaching of its secondary schools. We must study literature, conscious that the master-minds translate the aspiration of their age and country into ideas. When the poet "was not of an age, but for all time," well, study him the more! Thought and action must be studied throughout our national ancestry to take up present-day life and work in the line of continuity. "Education," to quote again, "is not an apprenticeship to a trade: it is the culture of moral and intellectual forces in the individual, and in the race."

This insistence on the "disinterestedness" of education should give English readers pause. M. Fouillée further suggests, what has been little considered in England, that in the raising of the standard and aims of the education of the masses, we should pay especial attention to those who are receiving the highest and best education. Accordingly, M. Fouillée gives chief thought to a consideration of the higher or "ruling" classes. Plato cared most for the education of the philosopher-kings; many writers have written on the education of princes and of gentlemen. M. Fouillée evidently inclines to follow these leaders. It is to be regretted that he does not develop this position at more length, but its evident underlying principle is that the best ideas in education filter downwards, but rarely or never mount upwards.

What, then, is the mental food best fitted to the digestion of the best youths of a country? M. Fouillée answers, with as much confidence as Mr. Spencer—but quite differently—the Humanities. They lead the pupil outside his own selfish interests to the wider interests of the race of which he is a member. They take him a distance away from his own age, to reveal the powers or qualities of the Alexanders, the Pericles, the Caesars, the Virgils, the Dantes, the Francis-of-Assisis, the Shaksperes, and the rest of the great souls. These stand before him for his judgment. The judgment framed, they become his leaders. The pupil finds standards and aims, which become independent of place and time, and which tend to establish themselves upon the essence of things rather than on accidents of locality. Above all, the Humanities, besides giving material for knowledge, exercise the soul in enthusiasm for the morally good, for the true, and for the beautiful. M. Fouillée, in short, urges, in his own way, that "it takes a soul to move a body," and that the soul is particularly worth training.

It must be understood that, so far from condemning science teaching, M. Fouillée emphatically advocates it. He especially wishes the connexion between the sciences and a general survey of their provinces to be taught. His greatest wish in the teaching of science is that the humanistic spirit should be infused into it.

"Scientific truths," said Descartes, "are battles won: describe to the young the principal and most heroic of these battles; you will thus interest them in the results of science, and you will develop in them a scientific spirit by means of the enthusiasm for the conquest of truth."

Fouillée's own enthusiasm is great at all times, but it is when he discusses the classical humanities that it reaches its climax. It is here, too, he comes full tilt against Mr. Spencer, who, readers will remember, relegates such studies as art, music, the classics to the "leisure part of life." M. Fouillée warmly replies:

"The object of literary culture is not to enable you to read Horace and Virgil in your idle moments, but to transform and beautify your inner nature; its object is to take you along the path which has been trodden by past generations, by your own country, and which other nations in their turn will tread. After that, whether you do or do not read Virgil is of little import; even in bridge-building there will still remain a sense of elegance and beauty, which should not be neglected from the utilitarian, the moral, or the national points of view."

M. Fouillée, of course, makes out a strong case for the retention of the classics (particularly Latin) in the higher schools of France. The classics are an inherited treasury, the heirlooms of thought, so to say, of the French boy; and he would be deprived, so M. Fouillée is concerned to show, of his birthright, if he had no share in them. Any proposal to dispense with Latin, he points out, would be revolution, not evolution. M. Fouillée is very clever in using the evolutionary hypothesis in developing his views. It is curious to find evolution brought into the controversy to support the teaching of the classics. This doctrine is usually supposed to be the special property of the scientists. M. Fouillée, however, with sly glee, rubs his hands and impels evolution into his service. His use of the doctrine is certainly interesting and suggestive.

M. Fouillée, like Mr. Herbert Spencer, is a controversialist, ready for fight. He is, however, carefully constructive with his materials. He is enthusiastically literary in style and spirit. He is more than a doctrinaire. Over and above its pedagogic and literary characteristics, this book has an added significance from the fact pointed out by the English editor, Mr. Greenstreet (to whom thanks are due for his clear though French-echoing translation), that the Italian Government, making changes in their secondary education have practically followed the principles of M. Fouillée.

I have said that Mr. Spencer's book is distinctly English. Just as pronouncedly is M. Fouillée's book French. In our technical manufactures we have been obliged to allow the superiority of the French in the delicacy of the finish of their work, in the taste of their designs, in their readiness to raise their standards of art, and to improve the training of those taking part in technical pursuits. There is a corresponding national superiority in M. Fouillée as a writer on education. Whatever view we may take of the relative importance of the classics and science (how can we differ as to the necessity of the Humanities as the basis of the education of human beings?), we have much to learn from the French artistic handling of the subject of education.

A last word: if the new French revival of humanism in education is apt occasionally to overflow to sentimentalism, yet its spirit is as life-giving for England as for France.

FOSTER WATSON.

NEW NOVELS.

Born in Exile. By George Gissing. In 3 vols. (A. & C. Black.)

A Queen of Curds and Cream. By Dorothea Gerard. In 3 vols. (Edon, Remington & Co.)

The Fate of Fenella. By Twenty-four Authors. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

A Tiger's Cub. By Edon Phillpotts. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Catmur's Caves. By Richard Dowling. (A. & C. Black.)

Rex, the Black Sheep. By M. E. Hall. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Legend and Romance. By George Motley. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Through Deep Waters. By B. Walsh. (Trischler.)

In and about Bohemia. By C. J. Wills. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

INTELLECTUAL scepticism has had a fairly good turn in the novels of the present generation, and, whether the effect be for good or harm, fiction has done its best to justify the attitude of doubt. Hitherto, however, the religious sceptic has been presented in a suitably heroic guise. We have seen him throw off one by one, with firmness if with reluctance, the fetters of his early training, and emancipate himself from fond errors to which he was too brave and true still to cling. His courage has involved him in many difficulties, and in painful personal separations, but in no modern novel until now—so far as my observation goes—has the doubter paltered with his doubts or compromised matters with his conscience. Yet it is certain that there are many sceptics who outwardly conform to the beliefs of the multitude, and it is this side of the problem of intellectual doubt that Mr. George Gissing gives us in Born in Exile. The case he describes is an extreme one. It is not that of a man who holds his doubts so lightly that he continues from force of habit to act as though he had none. Mr. Gissing's Godwin Peak is a student, whose scepticism is well-reasoned and aggressive. The ungenial conditions of his life fostered, to begin with, a temperament naturally unsympathetic, and his intellect avenged itself upon easy-going humanity by upsetting its beliefs. But ambition was a strong element in Peak's character, and this in its turn was fostered by the passion of love. Far above him in the social scale, far removed from him, as he supposed, in intellectual sympathy, was the girl he wished to marry. It seemed to him that the only way to win her was to join the Church, and take holy orders. The reader will wonder how this was to be done without an absolute recantation of his heterodoxy; but that would have been too commonplace an expedient for a man of Peak's mental resource. He preferred to try instead the more hazardous expedient of a double life, intellectual and moral; indeed, the casuistical attractions of such a choice made it almost welcome to him. One must not disclose the lines of the story; but it goes without saying that honest human nature will rebel against intellectual deceit as much as against any other. The story is almost necessarily a melancholy one, but it is singularly able; and those readers who do not at an early stage give it up as dull will gratefully admit that it is brilliant. The cleverness of the book is attested by the fact that Godwin Peak neither forfeits the reader's sympathy nor wins his admiration. We take him for what he is; and though the whole result is unsatisfactory, it includes much that is worth having. There are many passages in the novel that would bear quotation. Here is one, which will serve the double purpose of indicating the intellectual quality of Peak's mind—for he is the speaker—and of Mr. Gissing's style:

"I can't pretend to care for anything but individuals. The few whom I know and love are of more importance to me than all the blind multitude rushing to destruction. I hate the word majority; it is the few, the very few, that have always kept alive whatever of effectual good we see in the human race. There are individuals who outweigh, in every kind of value, generations of ordinary people."

One almost knows by this time what to expect in a novel by the brilliant author of Lady Baby. Not that she repeats herself in the least; but her knowledge of Continental and English life is so wide and intimate that it may be taken for granted of any book of hers that it will give us much that is cosmopolitan in interest, though intensely human, whatever its nationality. For charm of plot and vivid presentation of character, A Queen of Curds and Cream deserves to rank with the best of its predecessors. Its pictures of Austrian life, and especially of the small world of Austrian nobility, are so able that one does not doubt their absolute truth. Ulrica Eldringen's English connexions give an English side also to the story, and not the least interesting part of it is that which consists of a bold plunge into English society. To Ulrica, who by birth is a countess, and by choice takes to dairy-farming for a livelihood, must be allowed those potentialities which bridge the possible and the impossible. Everything turns out for her as it should do, notwithstanding that her decisions are sometimes extraordinary. If women of her type are rare, for great beauty and strong character do not often go together, a novelist who gives us so desirable a combination is the rather to be applauded. The other characters in the story are obviously true to life, and the developments of the plot are admirable; but Ulrica herself is the fascinating centre of interest.

A novel in four-and-twenty chapters by as many different writers, between whom there had been no common understanding as to the characters to be introduced or the plot to be developed, could not fail to be an amusing experiment, though nothing greater could be expected from it. The Fate of Fenella is an ingenious success. That young lady is started upon her career by Miss Helen Mathers, who suggests so much of her character as is to be gathered from one view of her, conveyed in a few pages of incidental description; and then each of the other three-and-twenty writers takes up the parable and continues it at his or her own sweet will. Perhaps one ought to be amazed as well as amused at the continuity of interest which is preserved under such conditions, but the effect is rather to show the ease of mere story-telling, than to suggest the skilful management of a difficulty. The several writers make the fullest use of their freedom, with the result that nearly every chapter has some startling incident of its own; but one suspects that none of them would like to stake a literary reputation upon any one of the contributions to this curious mosaic. Regarded, however, for what it is—a playful and ingenious experiment—it is entertaining and clever. The illustrations greatly add to the interest.

A story with the title of A Tiger's Cub would be disappointing if it were not sensational. In this particular story there is no lack of that quality. It comes out both in the characters and in the incidents, and the writer's style is also well suited to it. As for the characters, one of them is an old man who has amassed a fortune by means which it is hinted were not too scrupulous, and has also possessed himself of an immense collection of precious stones. Here of itself is a central incident around which a blood-curdling plot readily gathers. Old Simon Myrtlerig, in order of time at any rate, is the first villain of the piece; but he is in turn the victim of other villains, whose diabolical contrivances are as ingenious as they are base. All these things belong to the grim foreground of the story. Less prominent in it, but essential to the artistic completeness which it may perhaps be said to possess, are people of a milder sort, and events which it is pleasant to follow. It is not a story that will appeal to every taste, but of its kind it is a superior specimen.

Mr. Richard Dowling never writes badly, and his Catmur's Caves is brilliant after a fashion, but the gruesomeness in it is somewhat overdone. One feels, too, that nobody in the story gets that poetic justice which ought never to go awry in novels, though it occasionally does in actual life. Catmur is a showman, part of whose paraphernalia is a collection of wild beasts, while a beautiful girl, who passes for a clairvoyante, is another of the attractions of his show. The girl has a history, of course, and if Mr. Dowling had not perversely willed otherwise she would have been restored to her friends. But he marries her to a black lion-tamer, and Catmur and another rascal are allowed to go unpunished. One is bound to protest against such an arbitrary disregard of the claims of justice.

The familiar ne'er-do-well is the hero of Rex, the Black Sheep. Here, however, he possesses more redeeming qualities than are usually found in members of his unlucky class. His misfortunes are not crimes, and even his crimes have some fancied point of honour about them. But the story has hardly breadth enough. Its chief interest is supplied by some pictures of child-life. It is refreshing to hear of a boy whose highest ambition was to be a scissors-grinder; and not the least interesting of the characters is Muriel's doll.

A family legend re-enacted three hundred years after date forms the story of Legend and Romance. But whatever romance may have been associated with the origin of the legend, there is not much in the modern reproduction of it. Nevertheless, Mr. Motley contrives to tell an interesting story, into which he introduces sundry courtships, five marriages, a few convenient deaths, a broken leg, and a railway accident. No one is likely to complain of a want of incident, but somehow the aroma which one can imagine in the old legend does not come out very forcibly in the new form of it.

"Deep waters" in all conscience, one is inclined to exclaim after having read Mr. Walsh's book. A murder, a bigamous marriage, a suicide, a false imprisonment, a wife flying from her husband—these are the events which give fitness to the phrase, Through Deep Waters, by which he names it. But when these troubles are left behind, what remains of the story is like the sunshine that comes after a storm. The ultimate happiness of wife and husband was to themselves a boon worth much suffering in the winning, and to the reader is a consolation for the strain on his own sympathies.

"Bohemia" is a strange and sacred region whereof it is pleasant to hear, though some of its denizens are people whom it would be a little awkward to know. For those who are content to learn something about the people and the place without actually making acquaintance with them, we know no better guide than Mr. C. J. Wills's In and about Bohemia. Brighter stories than the forty and one bound together in this comely volume it would be difficult to find.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

MR. MALCOLM SALAMAN, in Woman through a Man's Eyeglass (Heinemann), shows himself in another than the familiar light of a genial critic of pictorial art, and an outspoken and instructed judge of theatrical things. In a series of analytical essays on women's character, he proves even to the "general reader" the presence of that imagination without which no good criticism exists, and he displays the old and admitted penetration which has long been recognised in his dramatic critiques. But, to boot, Mr. Salaman displays, in the present agreeable volume, a tenderness and sensibility with which the public may not heretofore have credited him; and able, as the latest essay in the volume shows him to be, to write upon the fin de siècle woman, he yet has what we can scarcely call a sneaking kindness—for it is indeed so plainly avowed—for the woman whom the manners of the end of the epoch have not visibly affected. Dedicated to a member of his own domestic circle, the book shows throughout much appreciation of domestic sentiment; and if tolerant of the realistic lady-novelist, or of the modern "smart person," he is kindest, really, to the "domestic" woman: it is evident that he respects the wife of his Doctor Icarthside more than his Lady Gladys Parchment, or even his charming Mrs. Mayfair Smartly. Still, let it be admitted, his sympathies are wide, his tastes comprehensive. The future of his fin de siècle woman is what he cannot quite cheerfully look forward to. Will she, he asks, always remain "emancipated"? Or, as years pass, "will the humanity that is in her cry out for something more tangible than the showy make-believe of her present life"? And, with regard to this problem, the "larger hope" is the one that he would fain trust. Though this is Mr. Salaman's sentiment, he is, throughout the bulk of the volume, amusing rather than grave, and observant rather than didactic. The value of Mr. Dudley Hardy's little illustrations, which accompany Mr. Salaman's imaginative essays, is very various. Some are merely blotchy and mannered; others, like the pretty suggestion of Mrs. Mayfair Smartly driving with her dog in the Park, have an elegance and charm that is better than mere ease of the inevitable modernité. Whatever may be thought of the illustrations, the book, it is quite certain, will be widely read and liked.

Devonshire Idylls. By H. C. O'Neill. (David Stott.) This little paper-covered quarto of some 130 pages happened to reach us on the very same day as two Devonshire Glossaries, and it must be confessed that some such help is occasionally required to interpret the conversations. But those who are familiar with the broad Dorset of the West Country (as the present writer was in his boyhood) will be the first to acknowledge the general faithfulness of our author to local language and to local custom. The scene of all these stories is laid some forty years in the past, when North Devon was still one of the most remote corners of England. They deserve their name of "idylls"—for so we prefer to spell the word, with Tennyson—as each presenting an episode of village life, told with a simplicity that is the highest art. We could ourselves have desired a little less moralising, and a little more description of scenery; but this apart, we have nothing but praise to give to Miss (?) H. C. O'Neill. She really knows the country folk—their daily toil, their anxieties, their contentment, their loyalty to one another, their respectful confidence in their superiors—the qualities which Wordsworth has expressed in verse and Thomas Hardy in prose. Like the latter, she excels in dialogue, though she does not overstrain the limits of rustic humour. Finally, in the last and best story of the series, "The True Love of Barnabas Butter and Betty Kick," she gives a vivid description of "the crying of the neck," which we commend to the notice of folklorists. Devonshire has no lack of native authors, but it has been left for an adopted daughter to do for the county what Miss Edgeworth did for the peasantry of Ireland.

An Old Parson's Anecdotes and Tales. By the Rev. W. E. Heygate. (Masters.) In spite of the author's assurance that "this is not a book of sermons," the little volume under review is nothing if not a collection of short and pleasantly written homilies. The Rector of Brightstone, in the Isle of Wight, has naturally a good deal to say about the lifeboat, and he is old enough to remember smuggling. Having known the smuggler intimately, he does not give him a good character. He lacks "the honesty and openness which are necessary not only in a Christian but in a man." Writing (apparently) of his present parish in the old days, Canon Heygate tells us—

"The whole coast was full of smuggling, time out of mind. Every break in the cliff, every bridge, copse, and ditch knew how to conceal contraband goods. There are two hollow trees close to my house, one of them in the hedge of my own garden, which concealed kegs of brandy. The children were taught to say 'I don't know,' when asked where their father was. There was a net-work of concealment and secret combination. Brandy was hidden in my own cow-shed, unknown to me until afterwards."

In spite of this roaring trade, only two of his parishioners were "known to have made money" out of it. Smuggling, like gambling, brought vices in its train, which soon made its profits disappear. One of these successful smugglers was an old man, who used to groom the mare of Dick Turpin. The famous highwayman was a liberal master, as he always gave him a guinea for his trouble. This old man made £1,500 by his share in the smuggling trade. With this he bought a butcher's business, lost all his money, and died almost as a pauper in a parish where the author was curate. We have said enough to show that the Canon's reminiscences are not devoid of point or interest.

An Enchanted Garden. By Mrs. Molesworth. (Fisher Unwin.) It is not everybody who is so fortunate as Rafe and Alix. Enchanted gardens are scarce nowadays, and we do not remember to have seen or heard of one quite like that of Ladywood Hall, with its little old fairy caretaker, who gave them strawberries and cream and told them stories. Very nice stories they were, and with such excellent morals that it would seem as if Christianity had spread among the fairies. The story of the three wishes is indeed quite different from that which delighted our childhood. But some of the stories are told by birds. We all know how, when we were children, a little bird used to tell our mothers and aunts and nurses things, and not always very pleasant things. In those days birds were "tell-tale-tits," but a change has come over them now, and you will be quite astonished to learn how many good thoughts are put into our heads by robins when we are asleep. More than this we dare not say, less we should be accused of being tell-tales ourselves. But the names of the other stories will do no harm to anyone. They are the Summer Princess, the Christmas Surprise, and the Magic Rose; and the last of these stories is perhaps the prettiest, which is saying a good deal.

The Fig and the Idler. By Alphonse Daudet. (Fisher Unwin.) Among the many shilling books of this or any other season, it would be difficult to find one better worth the money than the delightfully got-up English edition of "The Fig and the Idler," and three other well-translated little stories by M. Alphonse Daudet. They are printed on thick ivory paper, with wide margins, and have the delicate illustrations by Montégut. Naturally, these are from well-used plates, but it is wonderful how little they have suffered. However disappointed one may be with some of M. Daudet's recent work, there can be nothing but hearty praise for the Algerian legend which gives its name to this charming booklet, and for its three companion tales, "My First Dress Coat," "The Three Low Masses," and "The New Master."

In the Fire, and Other Fancies. By Effie Johnson. (Elkin Matthews.) The authoress was ill-advised to publish this little volume of stories. She had done better to take the very obvious hint suggested by her title. They are feeble echoes of Mrs. Gatty's Parables from Nature, without either her spiritual charm or her lightness of touch. The imagination is thin, the style crude with a tendency to bathos, the humour appalling, and the moralising trite. And they betray an ignorance of natural history of which Mrs. Gatty could never have been guilty. The male cuckoo, for instance, does not habitually sit on the nest and eggs of the thrush. The authoress is probably young, and will some day regret her first attempt. Meanwhile, Mr. Walter Crane has designed her a very graceful frontispiece.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WITH reference to the official statement concerning the pension of Miss Amelia B. Edwards—that it was granted "in recognition of her services to literature and archaeology, and in consideration of her inadequate means of support"—we have authority for saying that the plea of poverty was not made by Miss Edwards, and that she never knew of its having been made on her behalf by others. When she accepted the pension—which she did with much gratification—she had no reason to suppose that the distinction was conferred upon her on any other ground than for her studies in Egyptology. If she had heard of the other consideration, she would certainly have refused the pension altogether, both on principle and as a matter of personal feeling. It is true, she was not rich; but she had sufficient for her modest wants. The only pecuniary anxiety that ever troubled her was lest she should be unable to keep her capital intact for the foundation of the professorship of Egyptology, upon which she had set her heart. As a matter of fact, this capital was considerably augmented, from an extraneous source, only a month or two before her death.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a welcome reprint of the very scarce first edition of Bates's Naturalist on the Amazons. This will be prefaced with a memoir of the author by his friend, Mr. Edward Clodd, in which some hitherto unpublished letters from Darwin and Wallace will be included, and also a correspondence between Bates and Dr. (now Sir) Joseph Hooker on the influence of external conditions upon organisms, a subject to which Dr. Weismann's recent essays give special interest.

WE hear that Ferdinand Gregorovius has left a volume of "Römische Tagebücher," embracing the period from 1852-74, and giving, besides personal and biographical reminiscences, many interesting details of the events connected with the regeneration of Italy. These "Tagebücher" are being edited by Prof. Althaus, and will be published early in the autumn by the Cotta'sche Buchhandlung, the publishers of Gregorovius' Geschichte Roms im Mittelalter.

THE Scottish Library Club is about to issue to its members a new edition of The True History of Several Honourable Families of the Right Hon. name of Scot, by Captain Walter Scott, of Satchells, from the original Edinburgh quarto of 1688. This curious book, partly in prose, partly in doggerel verse, is now scarce, though it was reprinted at Edinburgh in 1776, and at Hawick in 1786.

A BOOK by Mr. Clement Scott, entitled Over the Hills and Far Away, will be published immediately by Messrs. Eglington & Co.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. will publish in a few days Mr. R. Menzies Fergusson's new book entitled Our Trip North, with full-page illustrations by Messrs. J. D. Adam and T. A. Brown.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly publish, in their one-volume novel series, a story by Miss J. C. Emslie, entitled His Life's Magnet, the plot of which is laid in a rustic village beneath the shadow of the South Downs.

THE August number of the Century magazine will contain an article entitled "Shelley's Work," illustrated with a full-page portrait of the poet; and also a profusely illustrated paper, by Mr. W. E. Norris, on "The Apotheosis of Golf."

MR. MACKENZIE BELL will contribute a poem entitled "The Lame Boy in the Woods" to an early number of the Author.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have arranged to issue a popular reprint in monthly parts of their illustrated quarto edition of Bunyan's Works. The first part will be published on July 26.

THE expediency of forming a bibliographical society in England was discussed on Friday last at a meeting held, by invitation of the Library Association, at 20, Hanover-square. Mr. R. C. Christie, chancellor of the diocese of Manchester, was voted to the chair. Among those present were Lord Charles Bruce, Mr. Henry B. Wheatley, Mr. J. W. Bone, Mr. Hyde Clarke, Mr. Isambard Brunel, Mr. W. A. Copinger, Mr. Reginald S. Faber, Mr. Talbot Baines Reed, Mr. Parkes, and Mr. John Leighton. Mr. Copinger moved the following resolution:—

"That this meeting is of opinion that a society should be established, to be called the Bibliographical Society; that the object of this society be (a) the acquisition of information on subjects connected with bibliography; (b) the promotion and encouragement of bibliographical researches; (c) the collection and publication of works connected with bibliography."

The project, he said, was one of no little importance and interest. Last year he read a paper on the subject before the Library Association at Nottingham, and since then had received many letters asking him to take measures for giving effect to his views. During the last few years no branch of literature had increased so rapidly in comparison with its increase in previous years as bibliography. The love of reading was gradually extending throughout the country, and a universal catalogue of English literature became more and more desirable. Such a work might well be based on the printed catalogue of the British Museum—an undertaking which, he believed, would be completed in seven or eight years—and might be carried out on the plan of Dr. Murray's Dictionary. No one person could accomplish so heavy a task, so that co-operation was absolutely necessary. Many workers covered the same ground, simply in consequence of not knowing what others were doing. It was remarkable how far this country had fallen behind other countries in reference to bibliography. The society should be established on a broad and inclusive foundation, and its several spheres of labour might be delegated to separate committees. Between seventy and eighty gentlemen had already expressed their willingness to join the society as soon as it came into existence. Mr. Wheatley seconded the resolution, remarking that he fully agreed with what Mr. Copinger had said. Several others spoke in support of the resolution, which was carried unanimously. On the motion of Mr. Faber, it was decided that the subscription should be one guinea a year, and a committee was appointed to consider the scheme on which the society should be based.

BESIDES the Variorum Apocrypha, edited by the Rev. C. J. Ball—which we hope to notice hereafter at length—Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode have now issued their Variorum Reference Bible, including the Apocrypha, bound up in one volume. Quite apart from the value of the readings and renderings here given, and the other expository matter, this edition deserves to meet with support, if only on the ground that it is continually becoming more difficult to find a Bible that contains the Apocrypha. It is printed in good type on thin paper, so as not to be too cumbersome, and is very handsomely bound.

IN the last Bulletin of the Société des Sciences et Arts de Bayonne (Deuxième Trimestre, 1892) M. E. Ducéré begins a "Histoire de la Marine Militaire de Bayonne." This was somewhat neglected in the Etudes Historiques sur la Ville de Bayonne, by MM. Balasque and Dulaurens. The work has been long in preparation, and will touch on many points of English history.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

LORD HANNEN and Prof. Rücker have been nominated by the Crown to the two vacant places on the senate of the London University.

WE observe that three ladies—two of whom were at one time mistresses at the Kensington High School—have passed the recent examination in classics for M.A. at the London University.

PROF. RAMSAY, in his report as dean of the faculty of science in University College, London, enumerates a list of eighty-four publications, containing researches by professors, assistants, students, and former students who are still at work in the college. This record, he contends, equals, if it does not surpass, that of any other university in the kingdom.

THE committee of the Aubrey Moore Memorial Fund report that the amount collected was £955. Of this sum 120 guineas has been paid to Mr. C. W. Furze for a portrait to hang in the hall of Keble College. The balance has been transferred to trustees in order to form a studentship, open to Oxford graduates who are members of the Church of England, "to continue the study of theology or to carry out some definite work in connexion with theology." The value of the studentship is £20 a term; and if this amount is continued, the money at present subscribed will last about twenty years. The Rev. L. Ragg, the first holder of the studentship, devoted himself to the study of Origen's De Principiis; and Mr. E. M. De La Hay, the present holder, is working at the writings of Gregory of Nyssa.

THE Therese Montefiore memorial prize, given yearly to a student of Girton College who, among other conditions, shall have obtained a first class in one of the triposes of the University of Cambridge, has been conferred on Miss Edith Emily Read. Miss Read took a place equal to that of 26th wrangler in Part I. of the Mathematical Tripos, 1891, and has this year been placed in the First Class of Part I. of the Moral Sciences Tripos. She is at present engaged in work connected with the Labour Commission. The prize was instituted in 1891 by Mr. Claude G. Montefiore in memory of his late wife, a former student of the College. It consists of the annual interest of £1700, amounting on this occasion to the sum of £64 13s.

THE University Court at Glasgow has accepted a proposal from the council of Queen Margaret College, by which the grounds and buildings of the college, together with an endowment of £15,260, will be transferred to the university, for the separate instruction of women students.

PACHAIYAPPA'S College at Madras will this year celebrate its jubilee. The name and great part of the endowments are derived from a native banker, who died towards the end of the last century. But the present institution dates from 1812, when an educational trust was constituted under a decree of the supreme court. Beginning with a free school for the teaching of the elementary branches of the English languages and science, it has grown into a college which prepares for the higher degrees of the Madras university, together with a very successful commercial department. Though it employs four English professors, it is managed entirely by Hindus, and claims to be the great national centre of Hindu culture in Southern India. To commemorate its jubilee, an appeal is made for funds to provide additional instruction in mathematics, physics, chemistry, and biology.

AT the Harvard Commencement, the hon. degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Mr. Richard M. Hunt, the architect of the World's Fair at Chicago; and the hon. degree of M.A. upon Mr. Silvester R. Koehler, the curator of prints and engravings at the Boston Art Museum, whose admirable catalogues of special collections have more than once been noticed in the ACADEMY.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

NATURE'S LABORATORY.

I.

DEEM not the sky a mist the sun surrounding,
Deem not the sun a servile orb ablaze,
Behold the soul the blue, the golden bounding,
Radiant among their heaven-sustaining rays.
Yet all are masks of adamant that hide
The undivulged of Nature and her fate,
Whose spring scarce dares she to herself confide,
Self-sworn to secrecy inviolate.
Black night as fuel fed her first-born fires,
Whence turns she not love's lowly source
abhorring;
Although the glow worm's passion still aspires,
She frames the angelic face for man's adoring.
No single part is hers, with smiling grace
She holds the universe in one embrace.

II.

The twilight orbs whose dream 'twas hers to render,
Like unheard thoughts are on the blue reclining.
Gaze on them once, or on her daily splendour,
The homely sun with love domestic shining!
But where those blessed constellations find
That can compare, in her divine intent,
With the beloved faces of mankind;
To our lone hearts a lower firmament!
So is reality's romance unshaken,
Even though it bear the semblance of a dream,
And she the uncontested prize has taken
Who bade the heavens with human beauty teem.
In the pale glowworm did her love begin:
The soul her idol now, her last of kin.

THOS. GORDON HAKE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE June number of Folklore (David Nutt) opens with an article on "The Sin-eater," by Mr. E. Sidney Hartland, who boldly contends that the partaking of food that has been placed near the coffin "can only be a relic of a savage feast where the meat consumed was the very body of the deceased kinsman." Dr. Alexander Tille shows how very modern is the cult of the Christmas-tree, even in Germany; the oldest record of it is at Strassburg, in 1604, though the legend about the blossoming of trees on Christmas-night can be traced back to the early part of the fifteenth century. The Rev. James Sibree contributes a learned account of divination among the Malagasy, together with native ideas as to fate and destiny, mainly based upon the inquiries of a Norwegian missionary in Madagascar, the Rev. Lars Dahle. Next follows a very entertaining paper on the Pied Piper of Hamelin, by Mrs. Eliza Gutch, who has not only visited the place, but seems to have exhausted the literature of the subject; she pleads hard in favour of some historical basis for the legend. Finally, we have the beginning of a discussion, which sounds promising, of "first-foot"; that is to say, the importance attached to the sex or complexion of the first person who enters the house on New Year's Day. The editor will be glad to receive further communications on the subject.

We are glad to find that the Library, which is now to be obtained only at the office of the Library Association, in Hanover-square, is steadily making up its arrears. The June number contains an article, which we should not have looked for in this place, by Mr. Herbert Vivian, criticising Mr. Froude's picture of Catherine of Aragon from contemporary documents in the archives at Venice. There is also here printed a paper by Mr. F. B. F. Campbell, pleading for annual lists of state papers and annual reviews of state-papers, as being essential preliminaries to state-paper catalogues.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUVRAY, L. Les manuscrits de Dante des bibliothèques de France. Paris: Thorin. 6 fr.
BOETIUS, Estienne de la. Œuvres complètes de, p.p. Paul Bonneton. Paris: Rouam. 15 fr.
CARTEAULT, AUG. Terres cuites antiques trouvées en Grèce et en Asie Mineure. Paris: Colin. 120 fr.
CHARRAND, E. De Barcelonnette au Mexique. Paris: Mon. 4 fr.
D'OSMOND, COMTE. Les hommes des bois: épisodes et souvenirs. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 10 fr.
DREYFUS, FERD. L'Arbitrage international. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
DU CAMP, MAXIME. Souvenirs littéraires. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr.
FERNANDEZ, M. L'Orient: les Osmanliya; Chrétiens des Balkans. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
GEFFROY, G. La Vie artistique. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
KRAUSSE, B. R. Studie zur altchristlichen Vokalmusik in der griechischen u. lateinischen Kirche u. ihr Zusammenhang m. der altgriechischen Musik. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
MENDÈS, CATULLE. Le Soleil de Paris. Paris: Marpon. 3 fr. 50 c.
MOIRREAU, AUG. La Banque de France. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
SERBANO, la Maréchale. Choses vraies. Paris: Nouvelle Revue. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- VOELTER, D. Die Ignatianischen Briefe, auf ihren Ursprung untersucht. Tübingen: Heckenhauser. 3 M.
WINKLER, H. Keilinschriftliches Textbuch zum Alten Testament. 2. Lfg. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 3 M.
ZAHN, TH. Geschichte d. neutestamentlichen Kanons. 2. Bd. Urkunden u. Belege zum 1. u. 3. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Deichert. 10 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BAFET, G. Souvenirs d'un Canonier de l'armée d'Espagne (1808-1814). Paris: Rouam. 30 fr.
BASSET, RENÉ. Fautes chronologiques de la ville d'Oran pendant la période arabe (290-915 hégire). Paris: Leroux. 2 fr.
BAYE, le Baron J. de. Le Cimetière wisigothique d'Herpes. Paris: Nilsson. 20 fr.
CARBON, G. La Fondation de l'université de Douai. Paris: Alcan. 10 fr.

- CARTAILHAC, EMILÉ. Monuments primitifs des Îles Baléares. Toulouse: Privat. 50 fr.
CHAUVIN, JEANNE. Étude historique sur les professions nécessaires aux femmes. Paris: Giard & Brière. 6 fr.
FABRE, P. Étude sur le Liber censuum de l'église romaine. Paris: Thorin. 7 fr.
FORSCHUNGEN zur bairischen Geschichte u. preussischen Geschichte. Hrg. v. R. Koser. 5. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M.
FOURNIER, MARCEL. Les Statuts et privilèges des universités françaises depuis leur fondation jusqu'en 1789. T. III. 1re Partie. Moyen Âge. Paris: Larose. 10 fr.
GENSLER, H. G. Beiträge zur Rechtsgeschichte Bayerns. 3. Hft. Die Quellen d. Stadtrechts v. Regensburg aus dem 13. u. 15. Jahrh. Leipzig: Deichert. 3 M. 80 Pf.
GOTTLIEB, A. Die rätischen Kreuzzugs-Steuer d. 13. Jahrh. Hegglingen: Cordier. 7 M.
HAMBERGER, J. Die französische Invasion in Kärnten im J. 1809. 3. Thl. 1. Folge. Klagenfurt: v. Kleinmayr. 1 M.
KOHLE, H. Fürst Bismarck-Regesten u. s. w. 2. Bd. 1871-1890. Leipzig: Renger. 22 M.
KRETSCHMAR, J. Die Invasionsprojekte der katholischen Mächte gegen England zur Zeit Elisabeths. Mit Akten aus dem Vatikan. Archiv. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 4 M. 20 Pf.
L'HUILLIER, A. Saint Thomas de Cantorbéry. Paris: Paillet. 10 fr.
LIBER POSTICALIS: texte, introduction et commentaire par L. Duchesne. 7e et dernière Fasc. Paris: Thorin. 7 fr. 50 c.
PINARD, ERNEST. Mon Journal. T. 2. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
PITON, C. Les Lombards en France et à Paris. Paris: Champion. 8 fr.
REY, A. Les Cahiers de Saint-Prix et de la Subdélégation d'Enghien en 1789. Paris: Champion. 10 fr.
SCHILLING, O. Das Reich Monomotapa, sein erstes Bekanntwerden u. s. w. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
THUANUS, L. Djem-Sultan, fils de Mohammed II, frère de Bayezid II. (1459-1485). Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
WITTE, L. Friedrich der Grosse u. die Jesuiten. Bremen: Müller. 2 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BASTIAN, A. Ideale Welten nach uranographischen Provinzen in Wort u. Bild. Ethnologische Zeit- u. Streitfragen, nach Gesichtspunkten der ind. Völkerkunde. Berlin: Felber. 45 M.
BOURDON, B. L'expression des émotions et des tendances dans le langage. Paris: Alcan. 7 fr. 50 c.
REYER, E. Ursachen der Deformationen u. der Gehirnbildung. Leipzig: Engelmann. 1 M. 80 Pf.
VORCHTIG, H. Ueb. Transplantation am Pflanzenkörper. Untersuchungen zur Physiologie u. Pathologie. Tübingen: Laupp. 20 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- GODEFROY, F. Dictionnaire de l'ancienne langue française. 69e Livr. (Tant-Tirel). Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
LEXICON sabbaiticum, nunc primum ed. et separatim critice instructum A. Papadepulos-Kerameus. St. Petersburg: Ricker. 3 M.
SCHLICHTER, A. W. Die Somali-Sprache. 1. Thl. Berlin: Friedlich. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ON A MEDIAEVAL CRYPTOGRAM.

London: July 18, 1892.

The following letter was lately brought to my notice by Mr. Ingram Bywater. It was found about three years ago by the Danish savant, J. L. Heiberg, in the library of Bamberg, which contains MSS. from St. Gallen, Stablo, Jumièges, and Reichenau, all places in which Irish influences were exercised. It stands on the verso of fo. 106 of a tenth-century codex, containing also Boetius's Arithmetic and fragments of St. Jerome's epistles. The codex is marked II J IV, 11. The letter has been printed, with a Danish commentary, in the Bulletin of the Royal Academy of Copenhagen for October-December, 1889, pp. 199-201. Hence I take it, merely dividing it into paragraphs, spelling the proper names with initial capitals, and making the three corrections indicated in the footnotes.

"Hec est inscriptio, quam Dubtach in arce Mermin Britannorum regis demisit ad probandos Scottorum sapientes, se ipsum excellentissimum omnium Scottorum Brittonumque opimam, scilicet putans nullum Scottigenarum quanto magis Brittonum doctorem in presentia Mermin regis istam scripturam perlegere atque intelligere potuisse. Sed nos Caunchobrach, Fergus et Dominnach et Suadbar, opitulante Deo, illa scriptura non latuit, per annum Gregorum libellum atque alphabeti eandem inscriptionem inuestigantes.

BEIGBOG. I. KEKa. F. A. FTH. F. HaiaKaOE.B.

Istius scripture talis est sensus: Mermin rex Conchen salutem.

"Si ergo uolueris istam scripturam dinoscere, perspicaci mente prescriptam Gregorum annalis compoti relice latinasque sequentes literas post ipsa Greca elementa ordinatas animadvertito atque cognovito, latinas literas subsequentes Greca elementa predicentibus convenire, sicut in prescripta linea designavimus. Cum ergo in Greca uideret litteras in prefata Dubthachi scriptura aspiciendo uideris, respice Gregorum literarum seriem ante scriptam atque in illa serie B Greca uideret elementa tuum uisum non latebunt; et quia X Num cedem littere optinent locum, necesse est ut X Num Latini alphabetum litteram designent. Item quia e in ipsa Greca calculi serie quintum possidet locum, recte scito quintam Latini alphabeti e litteram esse designantem, atque haec per cetera decurrens totum sensum ipsius uel similis descriptionis intelliges.

"Notum autem sit tunc prudentie, optime Colgu nosterque doctissime magister, quod non quasi tibi ignorantiam istam exposuimus transmittimus, sed suppliciter poscimus ut istam explanationem ignorantibus et simplicioribus nostris Scottigenis fratribus trans Britannicum mare nauigare uolentibus per tuam benignam caritatem inuenias, ne forte in presentia Mermin gloriosi Britonum regis illam inscriptionem non intelligentes erubescant.

"Nos autem coram Deo testamur quod nec causa elationis aut tumide inflationis, quod ablit, istam uobis transmittimus expositionem; sed istam latebram uestram sanctitatem latere fraterno amore non passi sumus.

"Omnes in Christo fratres gaudeat ualeto.

"ΗΚαΒαζ. ΗΓΓΟ.ΕΗΘ.Θ. Ηε erras, Dubthache, in tuis notulis scribens H pro e uel pro e uel pro aspirationis nota, que nec secundum Britannicam linguam in ipso termino bene sonat."

This letter is flanked by two columns: that on the right containing the Greek numerals from 1 to 900, that on the left the following key to twenty-three signs:

I a a	XIII r n
II B b	XIV Δ o
III r c	XV ε p
IV Δ d	XVI η q
V ε e	XVII ς r
VI ς f	XVIII θ s
VII ζ g	XVIII θ t
VIII h h	XX K u
VIII θ i	XXI Ka x
X i k	XXII KB y
XI α l	XXIII EF z
XII β m

These are followed by eight signs, which are unexplained:

ΚΔ, ΚΕ, ΚΓ, ΚΖ, ΚΘ, Λ and Δα.

For want of the proper type, the Baü is here represented by r.

Under the letter stand the following three lines:

ΓΑΓΓΑΗαζΘΚΗΗ ΗΟζΚα ΒΔΓΔ αΓΓΒΔ ΓΔΓ
ΗΓΓΟ.ΕΗΕΓα.Θ ΕΗΗΘαΒ αΓΓΟ.ΘΗΒΕ.ΘΓΓαΒ
Constat disiectum quicquid stat lege actutum.

According to the key, the first and second of these lines are:

Nandbarius sagax bono animo conscripserat istam arithmetiam, where Nandbarius is a latinisation of the Teutonic name "Nandhari," of which nine variants are given by Förstemann, Altdeutsches Namenbuch i., col. 951. The scribe being a tenth-century Teuton, some of the Celtic names are naturally corrupt. These names, arranged alphabetically, are Caunchobrach, the name of one of the four Irish monks who deciphered the cryptogram and wrote the letter from the court of King Mermin to their teacher, Colgu, in Ireland. "Caunchobrach" seems a corruption of Cain-

* MS. uirum.

† MS. omits.

‡ MS. aut tumide quod inflationis absit.

§ According to the key, this is: Suadbar scripsit.

chomrac, a common name, of which the gen. sg. Canicourlic (leg. Cāinchomric) occurs in a charter cited in the Grammatica Celtica xiv.

Colgu, the name of the addressee of the letter, was lector of Clonmacnois, and the greatest of the Irish scholars of the ninth century. A Latin letter to him from Alcuin (who spells the name Colchu) is printed by Archbishop Ussher in his Sylloge, No. xviii. The letter accompanied a gift of 200 silver sili from Charlemagne and Alcuin (see Mr. Olden's new and excellent work, The Church of Ireland, p. 155). Colgu died, according to the Four Masters, in the year 789. But Ussher dates Alcuin's letter A.D. 794, and it seems that the chronology of the Four Masters is here wrong by five years.

Conclien, the name of the person whom King Mernin greeted, seems an error for Concen = the Cunocenni of the Trallong stone (Hübner's Inscr. Christianae Britanniae, No. 48).

Dominnach, the name of another of the four monks, seems a corruption of Domnach, a name, however, which I have not met, though the diminutive Domnóc and the compound Ferdomnach occur.

Dublthach, the name of the inventor of the cryptogram, is a very common Irish name, which the Norsemen expressed by Dufþakr.

Fergus, the name of one of the four monks, is also a common Irish name. It is = the Old Welsh Gurgust, later Gurwest, Gwest, as in Llan-rwst (Rhŷs's Lectures on Welsh Philology, 394).

Mermin, the name of the Welsh king from whose court the letter was addressed to Colgu. This king is identified by Mr. Heiberg with the Mervyn Vrych who died, according to the Brut y Tywysogion, in the year 844.

Suadbar, the name of the monk who seems to have been the scribe of the letter, occurs in the Four Masters, A.D. 889. It is compounded of the laudatory prefix su- (= Skr. su-, Welsh hy-) and adbar "matter."

Mr. Heiberg publishes the letter as "a small contribution to the elucidation of the knowledge of Greek in the Middle Ages." (Et lille Bidrag til Belysning af Middelalderens Kendskab til Græsk.) As such it may take its place beside the note in the Würzburg codex, Mp. th. f. 61, which was published by Prof. Sanday in the ACADEMY for September 1, 1888, p. 138, col. 1, and has since been printed from a photograph in Kuhn's Zeitschrift xxxi. 245.

WHITLEY STOKES.

THE BABYLONIAN LEGEND OF THE CREATION OF MAN.

Queen's College, Oxford: July 18, 1892.

Many years ago I copied an unnumbered fragment of a cuneiform tablet in the Kouyunjik collection at the British Museum, the injured condition of which prevented me from discovering what it was about. All I could see was that it related to an otherwise unknown individual called Adapa.

Now among the cuneiform documents found at Tel el-Amarna is a portion of a mythological text, which records the adventures of a certain Adapa, the son of the sea-god Ea. Dr. Zimmern has published an interesting article on the text in the (American) Sunday-School Times for June 18 of this year, in which he points out that the story, so far as it has been preserved in the Tel el-Amarna text, is curiously parallel, not only to the Greek myth of Prometheus, but also to the Biblical account of the Fall. A comparison of the Tel el-Amarna text with that which I copied in the British Museum has shown me that the latter belongs to the earlier part of the same story, and that if the portion preserved at Tel el-Amarna in Egypt tells us how man became mortal, the portion which has come from the library of Nineveh at Kouyunjik tells us how he was created in the first instance.

The following is a translation of the fragment from Kouyunjik:

"['Why art thou sitting?'] said [Anu] to him, and he looked up. ['Why] art thou sitting?' he said to him, and he rose up; and Anu shouted aloud to the creation (ipsi) of Ea, and the gods of heaven and earth as many as exist and whoever (else there was) answered accordingly his command, which like the command of Anu whoever (was) an augur [repeated] from the lowest part of heaven to the height of heaven. He (i.e., Adapa the creation of Anu) looked and beheld the terriblest of him (i.e., Anu). Anu [took from?] him what Adapa had made to be a covering (?) over him, he [removed?] what Ea had made his nourishment (subaru), [and] his dominion he appointed for future days for a name . . . 'Adapa (is) the seed of mankind (zir amiliti) . . . man and woman (nisu sinnistu) with one voice shall regard (?) him (siti isbiru) . . . to the heaven he shall ascend; she accordingly . . . the obstacle (?) which they have established in hostility to men.'"

We already knew that Ea, the culture-god of Eridu on the Persian Gulf, was regarded by the Babylonians as the creator of mankind; the text I have just translated shows that the first man so created was named Adapa. But it would appear that Anu, the Sky-god of Nipur, subsequently interfered, and first raised Adapa into an upright position, changing the food and raiment which Ea had provided, and giving him dominion over the visible world. He further promised that the newly created man should ascend to heaven, and, as it would seem, be provided with a helpmeet. Comp. Gen. i. 26, iii. 9, 10, 21.

I may add that in Sumerian the character pa might also be read ma, so that the name of the hero of the legend would in this case be Adama, the Biblical Adam. We should then have to suppose that the legend is translated from a Sumerian original, which in its turn borrowed the name of the hero from the Semites.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON HERODAS.

Cambridge: July 14, 1892.

I. 82. δειξον οὖτω σ' εὐπιθῇ, i.e. εὐπειθῇ. The πεισουςα immediately following is no valid objection to the reading.

I. 83. Perhaps ἄλλ' ἄλλις λόγων τῶνδε. For the absence of the article with τῶνδε cf. I. 60.

II. 7. . . . ἡς δ' αὖ μαστὸς ἦις . . . ν' χόρη. I think that ἡρόσθη (or ἡρόσθη) is a certain restoration. Probably most people fancy that the line contained a proverbial expression; but I believe that ὑμαστος, "fellow-citizen," is probably right—e.g., ταύτης μὴς ὑμαστος ἡρόσθη χόρης (contrast 57 ff.); or, if not, that om represents a medial termination—e.g., ὡς τῆσδ', ὀνήσου', ἀστὸς ἡρόσθη χόρης· κοῦτος μέτοικος ἔστι τῆς πόλιος, κήγῳ· ζῆν δ' οὐκ ἐξ ὅκως βουλόμεθα κέλλως ἡμέας λυπέας προσέλκει, &c.

The word ἀστὸς, as opposed to πολιτής, includes metics.

II. 12. The first words are probably parenthetical, e.g. (πένης Ἀριστοφῶν δέ) κῆμ' ἵν' ἄγχει.

II. 15. I fancy that the Facsimile points to πεφόρημαι.

II. 16 ff.:

κῆγωγε μὲν προῖκ' ἐξ Ἄκης ἐμοίρασα πυρὸς ἄγων, κῆστησα τὴν κακὴν λιμόν· οὗτος δὲ περὶνὰς ἐκ Τύρου τί τῆ δῆμψ
ἔδωκε;

Line 16 represents what I take to be the general sense. I have used the Attic form ἐμοίρασα, as the MS. apparently has pa near the end of the line. In l. 17 πυρὸς ἄγων seems certain; γ with the first stroke of ω is exactly like π. ἔστησα, "I stayed the famine." In κῆ. τῆσταιν the second τ is cancelled, and there is room for s in the rent. The last syllable was, perhaps, τῆν, not τιν, in the MS. πυρὸς can easily be supplied with περὶνὰς.

V. 30. Kenyon and Bücheler read καὶ ἐμὸν. I cannot distinguish the last letter clearly in the Facsimile. If it is right, I would read—μεθ' ἧς ἀνιδεῖ καὶ ἐμ' ὄρη, ποδόψηστρον.

"With whom you wallow and scorn me, you footwiper." In ὄρη the i is omitted—cf. ἀδῶν IV. 93. The stroke after ὄρη is not ρ or s, but the first stroke of π. As for ὄρη by ἀνιδεῖ, the MS. shows both ε and η in the 2nd sing. ind. mid., viz., ὄρη I. 2; κείσῃ VIII. 1; ἐνέχῃ VI. 47. In IV. 51 κῆσῃ must probably be altered to the fut. act. 3rd sing. In V. 6 βούλει stands at the end of the line, and may possibly have been βούλη. In Homer we find the form δυσσαι; for the contraction cf. δύνη and ἐπίσση (Attic δύνα and ἐπίσση).

VII. 43. Diels reads πρὸς ὄρηον οὐ δοκίω δεῖον τὰ Μυκίανος θηρί' εὐπρεῖ κρηνῆς. But the letter after the i of θηρία, though apparently ε, is, I think, α, for the right-hand stroke is still visible. I propose οὐ δοκίω βάσσον τὰ Μ. θηρία ὕανος ἐκλέπει.

VII. 112. The last word is βινεῖς (βινέεις), a coarse description of the καταγλώττισμα, which is explained in detail by the scholiast on Arist. Nubes 51. F. D.

THE FRENCH PEASANT.

Seaforth, Liverpool: July 18, 1892.

In reading the Rev. Mr. Webster's review of Miss Betham-Edwards's France of To-day, I was reminded of a book but little known, in which some decisive judgments on agricultural life in France are given among the thoughts of a French country parson.

We know the character of the East-Anglian peasant from the writings of Dr. Jessop; I would draw attention to another shepherd in Arcady, in France of to-day, not only for the powerful sketches he draws of his flock, but for the whole work in which they form a chapter. The Abbé Joseph Roux, born in the Limousin nearly sixty years ago, has been all his life a parish priest in his native province; yet he is a man of culture, who not only preaches in the patois, but is a félibre and a scholar in the Provençal dialects. He has written La Chanson lemozina, a series of twenty-four epics, which has been called a Légende des Siècles in Limousin. And in his solitary life, the parish priest of Saint Hilaire le Peyrou has also written a collection of Pensées, which have deserved him the name of the La Bruyère of the peasantry. This collection of thoughts (published by Lemerre) attracted my attention when it appeared six years ago; it is excellent in style and in matter, and the chapter on "la campagne, les paysans" throws the light of feeling as well as truth on the subject.

I had written thus far when I read Miss Betham-Edwards's reply. I turn to the Pensées and find:—

"Mme. de Sevigné et La Bruyère ont, sur les paysans, une page sombre que nos économistes et politiciens, singulièrement émus, et pour cause, citent avec triomphe: 'Ah! que la condition de l'habitant des campagnes est bien meilleure, grâce à la Révolution! . . .'. A la vérité, le sort du paysan est toujours le même. Prenez une grande dame accoutumée aux splendeurs du faubourg, ou quelque prince de la finance, acoquiné au luxe et au confort de Paris; montrez leur tout à coup, sur place, et la demeure sordide d'un de nos bons paysans, et son lit affreux, et sa table immonde, et son pain grossier, et son linge lourd et dur, et ses habits ignobles, et sa nourriture écœurante, et sa boisson nauséabonde, et sa vie âpre, étroite, désolée, exploitée par tous, trompée par tous, aggravée par tous; montrez leur cela, tout cela et le reste, et s'ils ne jettent pas le cri d'horreur, de pitié peut-être, du grand moraliste et de la bonne épistolière, c'est qu'ils n'auront ni cœur ni esprit."

But sordidness of life is in nowise incompatible with saving. The French peasant was trained in both during the old régime, and had thus saved sufficient to buy, cheap, it is true, yet to buy à beaux deniers, the confiscated lands of nobles and church.

The peasant is not immovable, he is only slow to move. He has been induced to put his savings not only into the post-office, but also, I fear, into the coffers of the financiers who so kindly send him gratuitously the newspapers in which their attractive schemes are set forth.

"Vers la fin du second empire, le paysan se montrait impérialiste enragé; l'on votait chez nous comme un seul homme en faveur du 'César ramolli.' Et les politiciens de Paris de crier 'Brute de paysan,' &c. On désespérait de le gagner. C'était le méconnaître.

"Les préfets changés, les maires remplacés, les députés renouvelés, le paysan que l'on croyait attaché à la glèbe des Rouber et des Morny, passa bel et bien, avec armes et bagages, à la République.

"Et le voilà républicain jusqu'à nouvel ordre.

"Le paysan ne part jamais vite, mais il arrive toujours sûrement, le paysan."

In looking again through these Thoughts, full of horror at the sordid life, the superstition of the peasant, yet full of tenderness for his patience, his hard life, I scarcely know which to pick out, so concise, so admirable is the picture each one draws of the Limousin.

"Les gens de Tulle appellent nos paysans peccata. Ce sobriquet renferme un sens admirable. Le paysan, c'est bien le péché, le péché originel, encore persistant et visible, dans toute sa naïveté brute, dans tout son brutisme naïf."

"Grattez le Russe, disait Napoléon, le Tartare réparaitra." Et vous autres, gens de l'instruction obligatoire, frottez, vernissez le paysan tout qu'il vous plaira, toujours le peccata subsistera: et c'est bonheur que cela, puis qu'il vous faut manger du pain."

"Tout paysan n'aurait besoin pour devenir un grand saint que d'être par surnature ce qu'il est par nature, laborieux, sobre, patient, résigné."

I believe that the account given by the Abbé Roux of his parishioners is true of the great majority of the French peasantry. It may not be entirely applicable to those districts where wine-growing, horse-breeding, or other occupations more or less independent of actual agriculture have raised the standard of comfort. Yet there is no doubt that, throughout France generally, not only is the peasant's life a hard one, but life among them is almost impossible except to those who actually own and till the soil, and who therefore patiently support the life, cheered as it is by a general feeling that they could be comfortable if they liked. But, "Le paysan se prive moins de jouir qu'il ne jouit de se priver."

EDWARD NICHOLSON.

STEPHEN'S CHARTER OF LIBERTIES.

London: July 18, 1892.

I cannot find that anyone has noted the curious fact that the description of Stephen's position which Aethelred of Rievaulx places in the mouth of Walter Espee, at the Battle of the Standards seems to be taken direct from Stephen's (Oxford) Charter of Liberties. I subjoin the two for comparison:—

"Ego Stephanus Dei gratia (1) assensu cleri et populi in regem Anglorum electus (2) et a Wilhelmo Cantuariensi archiepiscopo et sanctae ecclesiae legato consecratus (3) et ab Innocentio sanctae Romanae sedis pontifice confirmatus."

So close a paraphrase can scarcely be accidental; and the inference would be that Aethelred had Stephen's charter before him, probably in the work of Richard of Hexham, with which Canon Raine believes him to have been familiar.

J. H. ROUND.

SCIENCE.

"ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA."—Collations from the Harleian MS. of Cicero, 2682. By Albert C. Clark. With a Facsimile. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS new volume of the "Anecdota Oxoniensia," a series at present too little known, is not likely, like many of its predecessors, to lurk in obscurity. For the MS., of which it gives thorough and exact collations of a considerable portion, is one of the most important, as it is also one of the most comprehensive, of the MSS. of Cicero. Its value was known as far back as the sixteenth century, when it was in possession of the Cathedral of Cologne, and was used by the eminent jurist and poet Modius, and by the ill-fated and prematurely extinguished scholar Gulielmus. One of the librarians of the Cathedral during the latter part of that century was Melchior Hittorp, in compliment to whom it was sometimes called Hittorpianus. This name alternates with Coloniensis and Basilicanus, and has been the source of infinite confusion. It is one part of Mr. Clark's services to have shown the identity of these three names, as referring all to the same MS.—Harl. 2682. For after long remaining in the library of the Cathedral of Cologne safely guarded as a MS. treasure of consequence, it was, in an evil hour for Cologne, lent to Graevius, who succeeded, it is impossible to say by what artifices, in lulling the vigilance of the brooding dragon that watched over it (I use his own metaphor), and kept it in his own possession from 1688 to his death in 1703. After Graevius's death, it was sold by his heirs, with the rest of his books and MSS. The library was bought by the Elector Johann Wilhelm, and the MSS. housed at Düsseldorf. Büchels, the librarian of Johann's successor, Karl Philipp, sold them to one Zamboni, Zamboni to Harley, Lord Oxford. It is now in the Harleian collection at the British Museum.

Mr. Maunde Thompson, whose description of the MS. occupies pp. i.-iii. of the Introduction, describes it as written in minuscules of German type of the latter part of the eleventh century. It contains the following works of Cicero: Epist. ad Fam. ix.-xvi. (of which Mr. Louis Purser has given an account and collated it for the use of Prof. Tyrrell's edition), de Pet. Consulatus, de Amicitia, de Senectute, Philippicae, in Catilinam, Paradoxa, pro Marcello, pro Ligurio, pro Deiotaro, followed by a duplicate copy, in the same order, of the last three pro Milone, de imperio Cn. Pompei, excerpts from the Ferrines, de Officiis I. and part of II. Of all these, except the Epist. ad Fam., de pet. Cons., Philippicae, Paradoxa, de Officiis, Mr. Clark gives in the present volume a complete and very careful collation. It must not be supposed that the MS. is equally valuable in every one of the above mentioned works. Its importance as an authority of the first class is found pre-eminently in the pro Milone and de imp. Cn. Pompei; then in the pro Marcello, Ligurio, Deiotaro, yet not equally in the duplicate copies of these three; for the first is inferior to the second (II), and is carefully distinguished from it by a different notation (h). Mr. Clark's own estimate of the value of the MS. in every one of the Ciceronian works above quoted will be found on p. xv. He adds a collation of the spurious Contrarsiae Ciceronis in Salustium and Salustii in Ciceronem, which the MS. also contains (fol. 113).

Besides the actual collations, which occupy 51 pages—each page in the triple-column form adopted by the Clarendon Press for the "Anecdota Oxoniensia" Series—the Introduction of lxxv. pages contains: 1) The description by Mr. M. Thompson of the Codex; (2) Its history by Mr. Clark; (3) A selection of the most important of its readings in each of the works of Cicero which he has collated. These are accompanied in each case by a comparison of the readings of other primary MSS. of Cicero, and by a more or less minute discussion and criticism of the passages for which the variants of the MS. are cited. This is that part of the volume which is most interesting to the general reader; it is executed with great care, and completely succeeds, in my opinion, in proving the chief point at issue—the importance of Harl. 2682 as one of the best sources for constituting the text of the orations in question. This, however, is a matter of minute study, and will require generations of critics to fully determine. Meanwhile, it is no small boon to the philological public to be in possession, in so compact and inexpensive a form, of the materials for forming an opinion. The value of the MS. has, it is true, for centuries been known, and it was seen by the greatest of Latin critics, Madvig; but its readings were only known imperfectly. We now possess in Mr. Clark's volume a perfect and reliable collation, supplemented by a commentary which evinces, to say the least that might be said, a knowledge of the subject thoroughly up to date, and illuminated by a sound, palaeographically and scientifically guided, criticism.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY.

THE second session of the above Congress will be held in London on Monday, August 1, and the three following days, under the presidency of Prof. H. Sidgwick. The Congress will assemble in the rooms of University College, Gower-street, from 10 to 1 and from 2 to 4.30.

The following papers have been arranged for:—Dr. Alexander Bain, "The Respective Spheres and the Mutual Aids of Introspection and Experiment in Psychology"; Prof. M. Baldwin, "Suggestion and Will"; Prof. Beaunis, "Psychological Questioning"; Dr. Bérillon, "The Applications of Hypnotic Suggestion to Education"; Prof. Bernheim, "The Psychological Character of Hysterical Amblyopia"; M. Binet, "The Psychology of Insects"; Prof. Delboeuf, "The Appreciation of Time by Somnambulists"; Dr. Donaldson, "Laura Bridgman"; Dr. Van Eeden, "Principles of Psycho-Therapeutics"; Prof. Ebbinghaus, "Theory of Colour-Perception"; Dr. Goldscheider, "Investigations into the Muscular Sense of the Blind"; Prof. Stanley-Hall, "Recent Researches in the Psychology of the Skin"; Prof. Henschen, "The Visual Centre in the Cortex of the Calcarine Fissure"; Prof. Heymans, "Inhibition of Presentations"; Prof.

Victor Horsley, "The Degree of Localisation of Movements and Correlative Sensations"; Prof. Pierre Janet, "Loss of Volitional Power"; Prof. N. Lange, "A Law of Perception"; Prof. Liégeois, "The Female Poisoner of Ain-Fezza"; Prof. Lehmann, "Experimental Inquiry into the Relation of Respiration to Attention"; Dr. Lightner-Witmer, "The Direct and Associative Factors in Judgments of Aesthetic Proportion"; Prof. Lombroso, "The Sensibility of Women, Normal, Insane, and Criminal"; Dr. Mendelssohn, "Investigations into the Parallel Law of Fechner"; Prof. Lloyd Morgan, "The Limits of Animal Intelligence"; Prof. G. E. Müller, "The Experimental Investigation of Memory"; Prof. Münsterberg, "The Psycho-Physical Basis of the Feelings"; Mr. F. W. H. Myers, "The Experimental Induction of Hallucinations"; Dr. W. R. Newbold, "The Characteristics and Conditions of the Simplest Forms of Belief"; Prof. Preyer, "The Origin of Numbers"; Prof. Ribot, "General Ideas"; Prof. Richet, "The Future of Psychology"; Prof. Schäfer, "The Anatomical and Physiological Relation of the Frontal Lobes"; Mrs. Sidgwick, "Experiments in Thought-Transference"; Dr. E. B. Titchener, "Binocular After-Images"; Prof. Tschisch, "Relation of Reaction-time to the Breadth of Perception"; Dr. Verriest, "The Physiological Basis of Rhythmic Speech"; Dr. Waller, "The Functional Attributes of the Cerebral Cortex."

The meetings of the Congress will be general and sectional. It is provisionally arranged that the general meetings shall be held on Monday or Thursday, and on the afternoons of Tuesday and Wednesday; and that the sectional meetings shall be held on Tuesday and Wednesday morning, and, if necessary, on Thursday morning. There will be two sections at least: (a) Neurology and Psychophysics; and (b) Hypnotism and Cognate Questions. Under Section (a) will fall, for example, the papers of M. Binet, Profs. Henschen, Horsley, Schäfer, Waller, &c.; under Section (b) will fall the papers of Dr. Bérillon, Profs. Bernheim, Delboeuf, Liégeois, Dr. Van Eeden, Mr. F. W. H. Myers, and Mrs. Sidgwick. Reports will be given in by Profs. Sidgwick and James and M. Marillier of the results of the census of hallucinations which it was decided to carry out at the first session of the Congress (Paris, 1889).

A committee of reception has been formed, which includes, among others, the following names:—Dr. A. Bain, Dr. D. Ferrier, Mr. F. Galton, Dr. Shadworth Hodgson, Prof. Victor Horsley, Dr. Hughlings Jackson, Dr. Charles Mercier, Prof. Croom Robertson, Dr. G. J. Romanes, Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. G. F. Stout, Dr. J. Ward, and Dr. de Watteville. The fee for attendance at the Congress is ten shillings, which will entitle to a printed report of the proceedings. Any intending members who have not yet paid the fee are requested to send it to Prof. Sully, East Heath-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GREEK *ἄνῃ = LATIN "AQUA."

Oxford: July 16, 1892.

I and Mr. Sibree agree that these two words cannot be equated, if the Latin qu represents an original velar explosive, as is generally assumed by comparative philologists. I also agree with Mr. Sibree that the qu of Latin aqua, if we look at the word by itself, may represent a velar explosive or a palatal explosive; that is to say, the original type may be aq̄ (ak̄ā) or ak̄uā (ak̄wā). The Gothic form ahwa does not help us to decide between these two, as the Gothic sound hw may represent q (k̄) or k̄u (k̄w). Compare, for instance, on the one hand, Goth. saihwān ("to see") with Lat. sequor ("I follow"), Gr. ἑκμαι from root seq (sek̄); and, on the other hand, Goth. hweits ("white") with Skr. çvētā-, Zend spacta- from root kueit (k̄weit: k̄ueid (k̄weid)). But, if we examine the cognate forms of Lat. aqua in Old High German and in Old Norse, and then contrast with these the cognate forms of Lat. equus in Old Saxon and in Old Norse, we shall see clearly traces of a -uo suffix in the latter group, while we shall find nothing but an -ā suffix in the aqua words, which would prove, of course, that the qu of Latin aqua is due to the labialisation of the original velar explosive q (k̄). The O.H.G. equivalent of Lat. aqua is aha; the O.N. equivalent is á (ó) = ā = a(h)a (see Noreen, Altisländische Grammatik, § 109, 234). Now, take the equivalents of Lat. equus; the -uo suffix may be traced in the Old Saxon form ehu (occurring in a compound), and in the Old Norse jör (jō-r). The base jō- of Old Norse jör is the equivalent of an older ehu-, io being the u- (w-) breaking of Germanic e (see Noreen, § 90), of which jō- is the compensatory lengthening after the disappearance of the h (see Noreen, § 234). To sum up, Lat. aqua (from aq̄) = O.H.G. aha, O.N. á, while Lat. equus (from type ek̄uos) O.S. ehu, O.N. jör.

Again, I think we may assume the existence of a velar explosive in the root of the aqua-words from the form-history of an Old-English derivative īeg ("island"). O.E. īeg means "the watery (land)," representing a Germanic type, a(g)wījā (with stress on suffix); this is a derivative (with shifting of stress) of Germanic axwā (ep. Goth. ahwa), "water." Now this Germanic xw: gw(w) presupposes an original velar explosive q (k̄) (see Wright's Gothic Primer, 1892, § 119).

For the above reasons, I am disposed to think that there was in the Indo-European īrsprache a distinction in the character of the guttural in the roots of Latin equus and aqua, and that the qu of aqua represents a velar explosive.

A. L. MAYHEW.

INDIAN JOTTINGS.

No. XLIII. of the "Bombay Sanskrit Series" consists of a second part of Prof. Peterson's Handbook to the Study of the Rig-Veda. The first part, published two years ago, contained Sayana's Preface to his Commentary on the Rig-Veda, and the Commentary itself on the first three hymns, together with a translation into English of the Preface. In the present part we have the text of the seventh Mandala of the Rig-Veda, with Sayana's Commentary, based upon a collation of the editio princeps with three MSS. to which Prof. Peterson has had access. In the Preface he points out the chief places in which he thinks that he may fairly claim to have improved the text, with special reference to the emendations introduced by Prof. Max Müller; and at the end are nearly forty pages of critical notes. In particular, he differs from Prof. Max Müller by regularly suspending the observance of the rules of Sandhi, in which he declares that he is only following the custom of his MSS. In a third part Prof. Peterson hopes to give notes to the whole work, a translation of the Hymns, and a full glossary, thus putting "into the hands of students, whether of the East or of the West, a convenient handbook for the intelligent study of this greatest of all relics of the Aryan past."

THE Indian Antiquary for May (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) contains two papers of importance. Prof. A. F. Rudolf Hoernle prints a further instalment of the old Sanskrit MSS. on birch bark, brought by Lieutenant Bower from Central Asia. It consists of fifty-nine verses, giving rules for divination by means of dice. There were apparently three dice, named "pitcher," "discus," and "elephant," which were thrown on a board divided into twelve fields. Prof. Hoernle remarks that he remembers to have seen fortunes told according to a similar method by a wandering Kashmiri or Afghan. The language of the MS. is the early extra-scholastic Sanskrit of North-Western India, with all the usual anomalies of orthography, grammar, prosody, and vocabulary. Of the strange words used for certain throws of dice, only one—dunlubhi—is to be found in the Petersburg Dictionary. Prof. Hoernle prints the whole in modern Nagari, with a Roman transliteration and a translation into English. The other paper is an elaborate examination, by Mr. J. F. Fleet, of the theory propounded by Mr. Rice, in his Inscriptions of Sravana Belgola, that Chandragupta, the Sandracottus of the Greeks, died in Southern India. Mr. Fleet has little difficulty in proving that this identification is due to a series of misunderstandings; and he also shows how far the inscriptions in question throw light upon the early history of the Jains.

THE July number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review prints the paper on "Bengali Philology and Ethnography" which Mr. Charles Johnston read before the International Congress of Orientalists last year. His remarks apply primarily to the central district of Murshidabad. As to the language, he distinguishes three forms: (1) That of the Brahmans, which consists of pure Sanskrit, modified by the weakening influence of "Prakritisog"; (2) the literary dialect of the educated Muhammadans, of which one half is pure Arabic or Persian; (3) Low Bengali, or the vernacular of the great mass of the population, with scarcely any written documents. It is with this last that Mr. Johnston mainly deals. Of the vocabulary, he thinks that about 70 per cent. is Prakritised Sanskrit; 25 per cent. desha-ja or aboriginal; and the rest Persian, &c. The following are examples of the change in pronunciation that Mr. Johnston calls Prakritisog: Krishna becomes Kishto; Padma = the Ganges becomes Poddo; Vaishnava becomes Boishtob. The grammar is agglutinative rather than inflectional. Substantives have only one declension; cases are formed by adjoined nouns of position; number is formed by adjoined nouns of multitude; gender is expressed, if at all, by adjoined nouns of sex; case terminations are identical in singular and plural. Nouns have only one conjugation; and all tend to lapse into a verbal noun with the infinitive "to do" for the active voice, "to be" for the middle, and "to go" for the passive. Finally, all words tend to become as short as possible, being mostly monosyllables or dissyllables. With regard to the ethnography, Mr. Johnston again distinguishes three types: (1) the Aryan, represented only by a few thousand Brahmans; (2) an Indo-Chinese type, to which the Kolarian Santhals belong; (3) a Dravidian type, somewhat more numerous than the preceding, which includes most of the Musalmans. He concludes that the agglutinative grammar of Low Bengali is due to the "inverse attraction" of the Dravidian and Indo-Chinese languages upon the Sanskrit which has displaced them. The question is certainly deserving of further study.

THE last number of the Journal of the Anthropological Society of Bombay that we have received (Vol. ii., No. 7) contains several articles of interest. Mr. Jivanji Jamshedji Modi gives a very elaborate account of the funeral ceremonies of the Parsis, with special reference to their origin and explanation; and his article is illustrated with the ground plan of a Temple of Silence. Prof. Peterson translates the duties of a Hindu wife from Vatsyayana, whom he dates at the very beginning of the Christian era; many of the details are curious, especially the recognition of widow-marriage. Dr. W. Dymock writes on the use of preparations of hemp, chiefly ganja and bhung, as narcotics in the East. It would seem that Madras is the only province where no revenue is derived from this source. Mr. E. J. Kitts, of Moradabad, in Northern India, prints a further series of tables of anthropometric measurements of adult males of different castes, taken primarily for police purposes. Finally, among "Anthropological Scraps," we have the report of a most interesting lecture on Marathi poetry, delivered at the Elphinstone College by Prof. Aeworth, who has written at length on the subject elsewhere. He distinguishes two periods in Marathi literature: (1) during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, under the Yadava dynasty of Deogiri; and (2) from the beginning of the seventeenth century to the British conquest. Of contemporary poetry, he speaks in doubtful language, though he recognises the merit of Purshotam Balkrishna Joshi.

WE quote from the Revue Critique the following eloquent appeal by M. Barth, on behalf of Dr. Rost, the librarian at the India office:

"On annonce de Londres la retraite prochaine de l'éminent bibliothécaire de l'India Office, le Dr Reinhold Rost, atteint, paraît-il, par la limite d'âge. Certes personne n'a mieux acquis le droit au repos que M. Rost, après vingt-trois années de laborieux et fructueux services. La mesure n'en sera pas moins accueillie partout avec d'innombrables regrets. M. Rost est en effet un de ces serviteurs auxquels il est plus facile de trouver un successeur qu'un remplaçant. Versé dans un grand nombre de langues asiatiques, parfaitement chez lui dans tout le domaine si étendu et si varié qui relève de l'empire anglo-indien on s'y rattache indirectement, très au contraire non seulement des résultats des études orientales, mais encore de leur personnel dans tous les pays de l'ancien et du nouveau monde où ces études se cultivent, M. Rost a porté un ensemble probablement unique de savoir et d'expérience dans l'administration du riche dépôt confié à ses soins. Ce dépôt qu'il connaissait mieux que personne, il n'a jamais voulu l'exploiter à son propre profit, en s'en réservant les prémices; mais il l'a dirigé avec une abnégation absolue, dans l'esprit le plus libéral, uniquement en vue du bien des études. C'est grâce à son initiative que les manuscrits, à l'India Office, se communiquent plus facilement que les imprimés ailleurs, sans formalités rebutantes et aussi sans risques, sous la seule garantie de son information toujours exacte et à la hauteur de sa responsabilité. Si je ne me trompe, c'est grâce aussi à son exemple que le même esprit a prévalu dans l'administration de plusieurs des grands dépôts officiels de l'Inde. Je ne dirai rien de la bienveillance et des qualités aimables de l'homme. Quel est l'indianiste qui, en s'adressant à M. Rost, n'ait obtenu en renseignements, en conseils, en bons offices, dix fois plus qu'il ne lui demandait? Il y a un an à peine, les orientalistes du monde entier, en lui présentant le témoignage public de leur estime et de leur reconnaissance (The Rost Testimonial Fund), ne faisaient qu'acquiescer une dette par cet hommage qui s'adressait autant aux qualités de l'homme qu'aux mérites du fonctionnaire et du savant. La mesure qui doit l'éloigner du poste où il a fait tant de bien, n'est pas encore officielle. Si elle devait être suivie d'un prompt effet, elle montrerait une fois de plus que l'Angleterre, à son tour, est en train de devenir un pays de règlement et à passer du régime de l'appréciation et de la responsabilité intelligentes à celui de l'aveugle niveau."

SCIENCE NOTES.

UNDER the title of "The Cambridge Natural History," Messrs. Macmillan have in preparation a series of volumes on the Natural History of Vertebrate and Invertebrate Animals, for the most part written by Cambridge men.

While intended in the first instance for those who have not had any special training, the volumes will, so far as possible, present the modern results of scientific research. Thus the anatomical structure of each group, its development, palaeontology, and geographical distribution, will be considered in conjunction with its external character. Care will, however, be taken to avoid technical language so far as possible, and to exclude abstruse details. The series will be under the general editorship of Mr. J. W. Clark, the University Registrar, and Mr. S. F. Harmer, superintendent of the Museum of Zoology. The following writers are engaged upon the groups which precede their names:—Mammals, Mr. J. J. Lister; Birds, Mr. A. H. Evans; Reptiles and Amphibia, Dr. Gadow; Fish, Mr. W. Bateson; Mollusca, Mr. A. H. Cooke; Polyzoa, Mr. S. F. Harmer; Brachiopoda, Mr. A. E. Shipley; Insects, Mr. David Sharp; Myriapoda, Mr. F. G. Sinclair; Arachnoida, Mr. C. Warburton; Crustacea, Prof. W. F. R. Weldon; Coelenterata, Mr. S. J. Hickson; and Sponges, Dr. W. J. Sollas. It is hoped that some of the volumes, which are already far advanced, may appear in the course of next year. The series will be fully illustrated.

MR. ROWLAND WARD, of Piccadilly, will very shortly publish a Book of Horn Measurements and Weights of the Great Game of the World, on the compilation of which he has been engaged for some time, utilising his peculiar position for the acquirement of original information on the subject. Alike to naturalists and to the circle of sportsmen among great game that has its headquarters in England and its fields all over the world, this work will be of interest. It will be amply illustrated.

WE have received the first number of the Medical Magazine: a monthly review of medicine, surgery, and allied sciences (Southwood, Smith & Co.). Most of the articles are only of professional interest, but we may call attention to one by Dr. Charles Creighton, entitled "From Mediaeval to Modern in the Health of an English City." The city is Chester, for which certain statistics are available in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. In 1603-5, and in 1647-8, there were severe outbreaks of plague, each of which carried off between a fourth and a fifth part of the population, which is estimated at 7000. In 1774, when the number of inhabitants had risen to 15,000, there were epidemics of typhus and smallpox, the former being most fatal among adults, the latter among children. Of 202 deaths from smallpox, no less than 180 were of children younger than five; and it was found that there were only 1060 persons in the city who had not had the disease. The proportion of deaths to those attacked was one in seven.

L'Anthropologie for May and June (Paris: Masson) contains two papers of interest. M. Salomon Reinach prints a recent communication to the Académie des Inscriptions upon "Celtic Tin." After first arguing that the word καασίτερος is neither of Sanskrit or Assyrian origin, but was derived by the Greeks from Western Europe, he then suggests that, like other names of metals, it comes from a place—the Cassiterides, that is to say, the British Isles. Looking for an etymology in Celtic, he finds it in the root of Cassi-vellaunus and many other Gaulish proper names (which possibly conveys the meaning of a superlative) and a termination -taros (to which he arbitrarily assigns the signification of "remote"). In other words, the Cassiterides are the Farthest Islands; and καασίτερος = tin, is that which is brought therefrom. The other paper is an elaborate examination by M. Paul Topinard—extending to thirty-four pages—of Mr. H. H. Risley's anthropometric study of the tribes and castes of Bengal. M. Topinard is disposed to accept Mr. Risley's conclusions, though he asks for further researches upon the hair of the several races.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE most important article in the Classical Review for July (David Nutt) is again contributed by Mr. F. G. Kenyon. He here gives the first account that has appeared in English of a new MS. of Hyperides, which was acquired two years ago by the Louvre. Unfortunately, the papyrus is in a very mutilated condition; but it contains portions of seventeen columns, each column having about twenty-eight lines of writing. The date is probably the end of the second century B.C.—an earlier date than can be assigned with certainty to any other classical MS. at present extant, except the Plato and Euripides fragments among the Petrie Papyri. The contents are the famous first oration of Hyperides against Athenogenes, which Longinus regarded as one of the supreme examples of the peculiar style of oratory in which Hyperides was unsurpassed, even by Demosthenes. The date of the speech is proved by internal evidence to fall within the years 329-323 B.C. A carefully revised text, together with a photographic facsimile of the whole, will shortly be published by M. Eugène Revillout, who has already written several papers on it in the Revue Egyptologique. Mr. Kenyon also describes two new fragments of two other speeches of Hyperides, now in private possession, which are evidently detached from the Harris Papyrus in the British Museum. Among the other articles in this number, we can only mention that Mr. W. L. Newman discusses Aristotle's classification of forms of government; Mr. J. W. Headlam continues his examination of the early council at Athens; and Prof. W. Wyse has a second instalment of notes on the text of the Petrie Papyri.

FINE ART.

Life of Gustave Doré. With One Hundred and Thirty-Eight Illustrations from Original Drawings by Doré. By the late Blanchard Jerrold. (W. H. Allen.)

"Je suis perdu; j'ai trop travaillé," said Doré, as he lay dying, stricken down at the age of fifty-one; and, in truth, he had crowded into his half-century of life a crushing amount of labour. Caricatures by the hundred, book-illustrations innumerable, water-colours not a few, paintings of immense size and ambitious aim, etchings, sculpture—the weight of achievement was one rather for the Atlantean shoulders of some great master of the Renaissance than for the punier shoulders of the men of our own time. "J'ai trop travaillé," said the dying man.

Had he worked too much, and especially too hastily, for his fame? That is a question to which criticism, even yet, scarcely gives a very definite reply. As a child, when his father, who was a civil engineer, wished him to be studying for the Ecole Polytechnique, he had already got his pencil in hand. At the age of fifteen he was earning his living as a caricaturist in Paris. "Learn to draw, study from the life," urged his friend Laeroix, the "Bibliophile Jacob." Doré would take no such advice. His brain was teeming with ideas. His hand possessed, as he considered, sufficient cunning to put those ideas into shape. Why should he go through the toilsome apprenticeship essential to mediocrity? So he pressed forward full of self-confidence, tossing off his rather grim caricatures, and, anon, throwing himself into book-illustration with an immense ardour and resource. Then, after the world, with sufficient unanimity, had accepted his work as an illustrator, he was fired by a new ambition. He would be a painter, great among the greatest; and when his countrymen refused to acknowledge him in that capacity, he was, indeed, saddened, depressed, somewhat soured, but yet bated no jot of heart or hope, and toiled on without intermission. If Paris disliked his pictures, questioned the drawing, objected to the colour—and it must be owned that he had greatly tried the artistic faith of Paris by such mere caricatures as the "Death of Rizzio," the "Tapis Vert," and some parts of the "Neophyte"—then London should do him justice. So he filled the gallery in Bond-street with huge canvasses, and labouring on at his book-illustration, executed also, among other works of sculpture, a great monument to Alexandre Dumas. Work, work, work, he was at it interminably, like the seamstress in Hood's immortal song. "I do not think," said one of his relations, "that during a whole year Gustave slept on an average more than three hours out of the twenty-four." He himself remarked, in one of his letters:

"I firmly believe that we workers have the best health, and for the simple reason that our lives are more uniform. Idlers always fancy that we must be tired, and are astonished to find that we do not wear out faster than themselves. Now I am one of those who believe that even excessive intellectual work, if it is pursued steadily and continuously, consumes one less rapidly than idleness, intemperance, or ennui."

Nor is evidence wanting that, with all his restlessness and rapidity, he had a measure of that capacity for taking pains which the good Sir Joshua, falsely no doubt, regarded as constituting genius. When he had nearly finished his large picture of Christ leaving the Praetorium, his friend, Canon Harford, came to see it, and objected to the key of colour as being far too bright for one of the gloomiest scenes in man's history. Doré, without hesitation, postponed the exhibition of the picture and repainted the whole.

"There was a sort of rough dogged honesty about him," says Miss Roosevelt, "no matter how unimportant in his eyes might be the job in hand, to execute it with the same care and perfection of design and material that he would have bestowed on a far more elaborate and remunerative piece of work."

But with all this, he never conquered the vice in his earlier art education, never sufficiently learned to base his art upon concrete fact. As poor bellicose, baffled Haydon had said that "Nature put him out," so Nature "put out" Doré. He had refused to study from the life at Lacroix's bidding. Miss Roosevelt tells an amusing story of his hiring a noted model to sit to him, and of her indignation on finding, after she had posed for several hours, that he had been working at something else, and quite forgotten her existence. When he was illustrating London, he would make no sketches, but trusted almost entirely to memory, and thus committed many mistakes. Now Nature is by no means the be-all and end-all of art, notwithstanding some of Mr. Ruskin's earlier teaching. But when an artist is "put out" by her, she has her own ways of taking vengeance.

And yet, when every possible deduction has been made, the man had great gifts, even apart from the "mock-heroic gigantesque" in which he was unrivalled. His fertility, his wealth of idea, were prodigious. It would be wrong indeed not to admire the noble ambition which led him to measure himself against such diverse literary masterpieces as the Divine Comedy, Paradise Lost, Don Quixote, Lafontaine's Fables, Rabelais' mighty book, Perrault's popular tales, Orlando Furioso, Lord Tennyson's Idyls, the Bible—to say nothing of Balzac's Contes Drolatiques; to all of which, had he lived, he would have added Shakspeare. Then, too, his power of what may be called scenic presentation was superb. He takes his subject, whatever it is, and puts it before you in a manner striking, easily intelligible, and with the lines of composition so arranged that the attention is at once centred upon the point of importance. This is so, to give salient instances, in the large pictures of Christ's entry into Jerusalem, and Christ leaving the Praetorium—where no one, notwithstanding the amount of episode, can for a moment hesitate as to what is the essential object of interest. And this gift of effective grouping he carries into his illustrations as well as his larger works. No doubt it is a gift that, in him, was accompanied by a certain theatricality. The two pictures just named, like the Moses and Aaron before Pharaoh, distinctly suggest the stage rather than life; and art, while really unlike fact, should give the impression of fact. But, after all, it is better to suggest a grandiose scene at a theatre than a tableau vivant, which is always the suggestion conveyed, to my mind at least, by Long's pictures, and the pictures of some other men who could be named.

On one point connected with Doré's art, the impression left by the late Blanchard Jerrold's volume is distinctly favourable. Seeing, as has just been said, how scenic his religious pictures mostly are, one could not help, to some extent, misdoubting their sincerity—was he merely playing with his themes, or was there a real conviction of any kind urging on his brush? The doubt did Doré wrong. It seems clear from the volume before me, as also from Miss Roosevelt's Reminiscences, that in his nature there was a vein of essential belief.

There were, of course, many other things besides. The portrait presented by his friend Blanchard Jerrold is of a man exuberant, industrious, energetic, full of self-confidence, as frolicsome as a school-boy in his hours of gaiety, generous almost to a fault, passionately devoted to his mother, greatly beloved by all who came into daily contact with him, quick of temper and irascible under contradiction—did not he and his friend Dalloz, in one of their art discussions, come to throwing stones at each other in right good earnest? Latterly the gamin de génie, as Gautier had called him, was greatly saddened by the refusal of his countrymen to recognise his merits as a painter. Albert Wolff, the distinguished journalist who has recently passed away, after listening to Doré one summer evening as they paced the Champs Elysées together, said

"no tragedy had ever stirred him so deeply as the story of Doré's sufferings under the cruel indifference of his countrymen towards him as a painter. He appeared to be the most miserable man in all Paris, smarting under the injustice of the world. The tears stood in his eyes while he recounted his sufferings. He who had worked so prodigiously, who was filled with the noblest ambitions, who loved art passionately for its own sake, was misunderstood, neglected, put aside."

"He believed every unfavourable criticism to have been inspired by personal enmity," says Miss Roosevelt. Blanchard Jerrold remarks: "Courbet once said of Doré, 'il n'y a que lui et moi.' There were times when Doré said to himself, 'il n'y a que moi.'" And with this exalted opinion of his own merits, all his success, all his world-wide reputation were poisoned. The last years of his life were full of disenchantment. "It is pleasant, however," says Blanchard Jerrold again, "to dwell on the extraordinary faculty of enjoyment which Doré possessed in his early manhood, before the harsh criticism of his fellow-countrymen had embittered his lofty and generous nature."

Blanchard Jerrold had many qualifications as Doré's biographer. He had known the artist well, and for many years had an enthusiastic admiration for his works; and though this volume lacks here and there the author's final touches—the hand that should have given them being stilled by death—yet it may be regarded as a successful and life-like presentation of an artist who in many ways was great. Miss Roosevelt's Life and Reminiscences of Gustave Doré, published some six years ago, has perhaps more particularity of detail—for Miss Roosevelt is clearly an intrepid interviewer—but Blanchard Jerrold's is the better book.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

ART SALE.

MR. WILLIAM BELL SCOTT, in his later years—when age was well upon him—had sold at Sotheby's the major portion of his collection of prints by the German Little Masters; but some few he had kept—some few he had perhaps even acquired after his well-known sale—and these and other engravings were disposed of under the hammer on Thursday in last week, together with certain drawings by William Blake, and a few modern prints, including two of the poorest impressions of etchings by Whistler which we have ever seen, and one of which (an unimportant subject even when seen in the most desirable of its states) was very curiously described in the Sale Catalogue as "Whistler's best etching." This was the plate entitled "Limehouse"—one of the least attractive of the early Thames set. Mr. Scott's long association with the works of the German Little Masters—on whom he once wrote a pleasant book—naturally made even the remnant of his former collection of these men's works the central point of interest in the present sale. Before mentioning any prices, however, it should be premised that hardly any print remaining in Mr. Scott's hands at his death was of really fine quality, and that most were in such very undesirable condition, either as to stains and defacements or as to paleness of impression, that the prices obtained by them can hardly be considered representative. But, such as they are, they shall be given; and there were, of course, a few exceptions to the general rule of unworthiness. There were a few desirable things.

By Heinrich Aldegrever, "The Procession at the Wedding"—a complete set, in fair condition—sold for £5 5s, and the print of "Bathsheba and her Maid seen by King David," for £6 10s., while the complete set of the "Parable of Dives and Lazarus" fetched £12 12s. By Albrecht Altdorfer, there was the "Virgin and Child in a Landscape," which sold for £10 10s. (Noseda). By Bartel Beham, the second state of the "Miser and the Abortive Birth" sold for £7 5s. (Noseda), and the rare and strangely fascinating little plate of the "Three Skulls and the Child"—a wonderful little piece of drawing and fore-shortening as well as of actual engraving—was knocked down to Messrs. Deprez and Gutekunst for £3 3s.; it was, however, a very brown impression, by no means in a condition to be envied. By Hans Sebald Beham, the "Virgin seated and holding a Pear in her left hand" (from the Dent collection) fetched £5 5s., and the "Coat of Arms with a Cook," an engaging and finely wrought little print which it is interesting to compare with Dürer's plate of the same name, sold for £3 5s. (Deprez and Gutekunst). By Jacob Binck—yet another of the "Little Masters"—there was no very interesting specimen. A good impression of Hans Brosamer's "Samson and Delilah" fell to Mr. Noseda's bid of £10 15s. After the rare print of the "Penitence of St. Chrysostom," by Lucas Cranach, had been sold for £17 to Deprez and Gutekunst, there came a small group of the works of Albert Dürer. The nice little subject of "The Madonna by the Wall," with its pretty landscape background, sold for £5; the "Virgin crowned by Two Angels" for £7 (Ellis); the "Knight of Death" for £21 (Deprez and Gutekunst); and a good impression of the "Melancholia" for £37 (Deprez and Gutekunst). Among a few printed books sold on the same occasion it may be mentioned that W. J. Linton's Masters of Wood Engraving—large-paper copy, issued three years ago at New Haven, Connecticut—fetched £5 17s. 6d. (Parsons), and that L'Œuvre de Martin Schongauer—being the Amand Durand renderings of this master's engraved work—fell to the bid of £6 15s. (Ellis).

We have chronicled Mr. Bell Scott's sale in some detail, as it possessed interesting features. It is likely to prove almost the final print sale of the present season.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: July 19, 1892.

In his last letter Mr. Petrie returns to the four points which he selected for defence in his original reply to my article in the Classical Review.

1. He says now that he has always known that the dating of the Kahun pottery was debatable. If he has always known that, why did he say in Illahun, p. 9, that "the evidence unmistakably shows" that this pottery must date from the time of Usersten II?

2. He says that Egyptologists are agreed that the Aquashas were Achæans. That is not so—see Wiedemann, Ägyptische Geschichte, vol. ii. pp. 474-476, and the authorities there cited.

The whole theory rests on the fact that the names Aquasha and Achæans both begin with A; and if Egyptologists as a body were to accept a theory on such evidence, no one would be bound by their opinion. He says also that his archaeological results would not be affected if the Aquasha were not Achæans. That, again, is not so. Egypt was once invaded by the joint forces of the Libu and the Aquasha. He took this for an invasion by Libyans and Achæans; from the invasion he inferred a lasting alliance between the Libyans and the Achæans; and from the alliance he inferred a Græco-Libyan civilisation, of which nobody had ever heard. Then he bought in Cairo a terra-cotta figure, resembling the earliest marble figures from the Greek islands in its general design, but with a mark on the forehead to indicate a Libyan curl of hair. And then he stated, for no reason at all, that this figure must be a product of that Græco-Libyan civilisation; and that all those figures from the Greek islands must consequently belong to that same period. See Illahun, p. 19, and Hellenic Journal, vol. xk, p. 275. So far as that result rests on anything, it rests on the identification of the Aquasha with the Achæans; and various other results of his rest mainly on this identification.

3. He denies that he has begged the question in dating the tomb of Maket. But just afterwards he says, "no archaeologist could reasonably date this tomb after the XXIInd Dynasty." That looks uncommonly like begging the question. I want to know the reason why this tomb should not be dated after the XXIInd Dynasty. He admitted in Illahun, p. 23, that there was only negative evidence for fixing the lower limit of date for this tomb. I pointed out that negative evidence was never worth much; and that in this case it would suit a date after the XXIInd Dynasty just as well as a date before. Now he says, "it is obvious that the date of any deposit must be taken to be as near the age of the latest object in it as may be possible." That proposition may be obvious, but it certainly is inapplicable here. Most of the objects in this deposit were of uncertain date; and it is mere waste of time to say that the date of a deposit is to be deduced from the date of the latest objects in it, if you cannot tell which of the objects are the latest, or to what period these belong.

4. He says that, in discussing the Gurob vases, I have tried to eke out my arguments with personalities. I have not indulged in any personalities. But in each of my former letters I have been obliged to point out that he had misrepresented my statements on this head; and unfortunately I am now obliged to point out that he has misrepresented them again. He found these vases at Gurob in surroundings which showed that they could not be earlier than a certain period; and then he made the purely arbitrary assumption that they could not be later than this period. He has never attempted to defend that assumption; but he has managed to obscure the issue by taking some remarks of mine upon another point as though they were directed to this point, and framing his replies accordingly.

This other point, of which I spoke, was the dating of the false-necked vases as a class. He deduced the date of the whole class from the dates which he had thus assigned to the examples from Gurob, and took no notice of the dates assigned on surer grounds to other examples of this class. I referred particularly to the false-necked vases represented in fresco in the tomb of Ramessu III., as there cannot be any question about their date; and these vases are very closely related, in ornamentation as well as form, to those vases from Gurob which he assigned to the reign of Tutankhamen some 250 years earlier. In his former letters he has tacitly admitted this, and has tried to get out of the difficulty by saying that "some patterns are known to have lasted for many centuries with scarcely any change"—an argument which would have been pointless if he did not admit that the decoration on these two sets of vases was practically the same. In my replies I showed that, if he was going to take up this position, he would have to abandon a whole series of generalisations which he had made before; and, curiously enough, he has now changed his mind about the decoration of the vases. Speaking of those in the tomb of Ramessu III., he says that "the decoration of these examples is quite different from, and clearly later than, that of all the earlier examples." As he was formerly of the opposite opinion, he will perhaps be good enough to specify his grounds for these assertions, that the decoration of these vases is (a) quite different from, and (b) clearly later than, that of the others.

Mr. Petrie's last letter will hardly inspire confidence in his methods. He states that he has always known that a date was doubtful, though he has previously made statements to the effect that this date was fixed beyond all doubt. He states that Egyptologists are agreed that the Aquasha were Achæans, though he must know that one group of Egyptologists holds that they were Africans, while another group holds that they were Asiatics. He states that his archaeological results do not depend on the identification of the Aquasha with the Achæans, though he cannot have forgotten that some of these results depend wholly or partly on this identification. And, finally, he states that the decoration on two sets of vases is quite different, though he has previously based an argument on the assumption that the decoration is practically the same.

Cecil Torr.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE building of the new galleries in Grafton-street are now so far advanced that the directors have resolved to open them in December next with an exhibition of modern pictures by English and foreign artists.

THE annual exhibition of the works of students in schools of art, submitted for national competition, will be opened next week at the South Kensington Museum.

A COLLECTION of pictures and sculpture by Belgian artists is now on view in the galleries of the International Horticultural Exhibition, Earl's-court.

WE may mention that the panorama of "Ancient Egypt," at the Niagara Hall, Westminster, will henceforth be opened free on Sunday afternoons.

FROM Tuesday to Friday of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling a miscellaneous collection of coins, medals, and tokens (mostly English) from a number of different cabinets. Among the lots, we may specially mention—a gold noble of Camper, in imitation of the nobles of Edward III.; Simon's Dunbar medal in gold, which is said to be unpublished in this metal; a gold medal struck by Napoleon I. on the birth of the King of Rome, of which only three are known to be in existence; a large number of the West Indies Tortola "cut money"; and a series of 148 Kentish tradesmen's tokens of the seventeenth century.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Tocilescu, curator of the Bucharest Museum, gave an account, illustrated with numerous photographs, of the results of the examination, recently been made under his superintendence, of a monument in the Dobrukscha which has long been known, but has never hitherto been explained. It is called Adam Klissi, and consists of a massive tower ornamented with bas-reliefs. M. Tocilescu has succeeded in proving that it was erected about A.D. 108, as a memorial of Trajan's victories over the Dacians. The sculptures that have been found almost all relate to the campaigns of Trajan, and consequently offer abundant points of comparison with the bas-reliefs on Trajan's Column at Rome. The ancient town on the site was called Tropaeus or Tropaeum Trajani, after the monument. M. Tocilescu stated that the excavations are to be continued, and that an illustrated description will hereafter be published.

MUSIC.

GERMAN OPERA.

THE performance of "Tannhäuser" last Saturday evening was an event of considerable interest. To pass from the "Ring," with its tragic story and powerful music, to the opera of Wagner's early days was indeed a striking, but by no means an unpleasant, contrast. In "Tannhäuser" the composer had not broken with the past: it has a real overture, songs which can be detached from the work, stirring choruses; and the orchestra is not, as in the "Ring," a perpetual interweaving and elaboration of themes. But there is, nevertheless, something very attractive about the opera; the old forms are there, and yet, throughout, there are signs of new life and real earnestness. To many indeed, and especially to those who believe that Wagner went somewhat to extremes in his later music-dramas, "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" still represent his highest achievement. The performance on Saturday was not altogether sans reproche: the singing was not always perfect as to intonation, and in this matter the chorus of pilgrims left much to desire. Then again there were one or two weak points in the stage management: Venus was somewhat loth to depart, and the lime-light effect when Elizabeth knelt before the shrine was in bad taste. But after the most is made of the faults and failings, it must be said that it was one of the most serious and soul-stirring performances of the work which has been given in London since the Richter season at Drury Lane. Frau Klafsky was the Elizabeth, and threw wonderful charm and pathos into her part. Herr Alvary gave an impressive rendering of the title-role; his acting was superb, but his voice at times—and no wonder after what he has been through—showed signs of fatigue. Fräulein Heink was excellent as the shepherd. Fräulein Bettaque looked well as Venus, but her singing was somewhat hard. Herr Wiegand was the Landgrave, and Herr Reichmann the Wolfram; the latter sang the "Evening Star" song in an expressive manner. The orchestral playing under Herr Mahler's direction was exceedingly good, but in the overture the brass overpowered the strings. The restoration of many passages usually omitted in the first act constituted a great improvement.

"Götterdämmerung" was given for the second time at Drury Lane on Monday evening, and the performance was again most impressive. Frau Klafsky (Brünnhilde) and Herr Alvary (Siegfried) were both in magnificent form. The Rhine Maidens sang delightfully, and the orchestral playing was up to the best Mahler standard. The performances of the various sections of the "Ring" have now come to a close, and the success of the work has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The Richter Concerts have educated a certain section of the musical public to better understand and appreciate Wagner, and it was fully to be expected that more interest in and sympathy with the magnum opus would be shown than was the case in 1882; yet no one was prepared for the rapt silence with which the work was listened to during the four evenings, nor for the enthusiastic applause which followed every act. Of course, the splendid impersonation of the chief rôles, and the admirable orchestral playing, had not a little to do with the splendid success. But after making liberal allowance for this, it must be acknowledged that the work itself produced a marked effect on the public. Sir A. Harris will, of course, give more German Opera next season. J. S. SIEDLOCK.

OBITUARY.

MR. CHARLES EDWARD STEPHENS, whose death was recorded last week, was an able and industrious musician. It is nearly half a century since he held his first public appointment as organist. In 1857 he became a member of the Philharmonic Society, of which he was repeatedly chosen a director. His part-song, "Come, fill ye right merrily," gained the prize given by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir in 1858. Only last season a Symphony of his was produced at the Philharmonic Society under his direction, and the event proved an honourable and successful close to the public career of one who was held in high esteem by all who were acquainted with him. He wrote much music, both secular and sacred.

THE NINTH AND TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESSES OF ORIENTALISTS.

For full and authoritative information see JULY number of the "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," pages 208-220.

ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, Woking; or, SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., London, E.C.

GENERAL KIRÉEF'S "CREDO" on "RUSSIA AND ENGLAND IN CENTRAL ASIA." See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

INDIA and the SILVER QUESTION.

By A. COTTEBELL-TUPP, late Accountant-General, Indian Government. See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

TURKISH PROGRESS, by Dr. HYDE

CLARKE; The JAPAN CONSTITUTION, by ONE of its FRAMERS; The LEGENDS of DARDISTAN; INDIAN MAGIC FORMULAE; "DWARFS in MOROCCO"; "UGANDA," by Dr. FELKIN; and other Articles of current or literary importance by Specialists. See "ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW," July, 1892.

CHISWICK PRESS EDITIONS.

JUST READY.

SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION [by SIMON WAGSTAFF, Esq.] Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With Engraved Portrait of Swift. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 6s. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 12s. net.

ONLY A FEW COPIES LEFT.

JOURNAL of a VOYAGE to LISBON.

By HENRY FIELDING, Esq. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Fielding. Limited Edition: 475 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 25 copies (all subscribed for) on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net. "A very beautiful edition...worthily edited."—Times. "In handsome type and convenient size."—Illustrated London News. "A book that is as pleasant to the hand as delightful to the eye."—Saturday Review. "Mr. Austin Dobson's critical and biographical preface is, of course, a perfect piece of work."—Review of Reviews. "Got up in a style of extreme excellence as regards paper, printing, and type."—Notes and Queries.

THE NEXT VOLUME IN THIS SERIES WILL BE—

THOMAS NASH'S LIFE of JACK WILTON

With an Essay on the Life and Writings of Nash by EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With an engraved Portrait of the Earl of Surrey. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper. (In the press.)

Other Volumes in preparation.

LONDON: CHISWICK PRESS, TOOK'S COURT, E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The SESSION 1892-93 will begin on 6th OCTOBER. The College supplies for persons of either sex, above the ordinary school age, the means of continuing their studies in Science, Languages, History, Literature, and Theory of Music. The Chemical, Physical, Electrical, Engineering, Geological, and Biological Laboratories are open daily. The Engineering Department includes Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering, Surveying and Architectural Work; and special arrangements for practical work have been made with various Engineers in and near Bristol. Several SCHOLARSHIPS are tenable at the College.

ENGINEERING EDUCATION.

Professor—J. RYAN, M.A., LL.M. (Camb.), D.Sc. (Lond.).

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.—Courses of Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering. Mineralogy and Applied Geology for Civil and Mining Engineers. Facilities are offered in the way of College Scholarships, Engineering Works' Scholarships, and special arrangements for entrance into professional life. CALENDAR, containing full information, price 1s. (by post, 1s. 3d.). There will be about 15 vacancies in October. Applications, with references, should be made as early as possible to the Secretary, from whom Prospectus and particulars of residence in Clifton may be obtained.

JAMES RAITER, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of TORONTO.

DEPARTMENT of POLITICAL SCIENCE.

APPLICATIONS, with testimonials and references, will be received by the undersigned until the 1st August next, for the CHAIR of POLITICAL SCIENCE in the University of Toronto. Salary £500. Duties to commence 1st October, 1892.

GEO. W. ROSS, Minister of Education.

Toronto, 30th June, 1892.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turin, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

LEEDS SEVENTH TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL, TOWN HALL.

WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, AND SATURDAY, Oct. 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, 1892.

Patron: THE QUEEN.

CONDUCTOR—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.

MME. ALEANI, MISS MACINTYRE, MISS ANNE WILSON, MISS MARIAN KENZIE, MR. EDWARD LLOYD, MR. H. PIERCE, MR. BEN DAVIES, MR. NORMAN SALMOND, MR. ANDREW BLACK, and MR. FLECKET GREENE.

BAND and CHORUS of 400.

Prices of Tickets.

SERIAL TICKET (transferable), admitting to all the Concerts except Saturday night..... £5 5 0

SERIAL TICKET (transferable), admitting to all the Concerts including Saturday night..... 6 0 0

FIRST SEATS (Morning)..... 1 1 0

FIRST SEATS (Evening)..... 0 15 0

SECOND SEATS (Morning)..... 0 10 0

SECOND SEATS (Evening)..... 0 8 0

All Seats are Numbered and Reserved.

Applications for Tickets cannot be attended to unless accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of the Tickets required.

Early applications will be entered and Seats marked off in the order received.

Programmes can now be had.

All communications to be made to

ALD. FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Offices, Municipal Buildings, Leeds.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions of luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

THE COURSE of INSTRUCTION in DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the new Processes.

PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

THE HIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE LINO TYPE Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED, 30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

DAVID NUTT, 270 & 271, Strand.

JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY L. ABRAHAM and C. G. MONTEPIORE.
Vol. IV. JULY 1892. No. 16.—CONTENTS.
SHECHEM and BETHEL. By RABBI H. VIGALSTEIN.
THE BURGE of COHELETH. By the Rev. C. TAYLOR, D.D.
THE RITUAL of the SEDER and the AGADA of the ENGLISH JEWS BEFORE the EXPULSION. By Prof. D. KAUFMAN.
THE CRITICAL ANALYSIS of the FIRST PART of ISAAH. By the Rev. Prof. T. K. COOPER, D.D.
ABRAHAM KUEHN. By the Rev. Philip H. WILKINSON.
THE EARLY SETTLEMENT of the JEWS in SOUTHERN ITALY. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER.
NOTES on HEBREW MSS. in the UNIVERSITY LIBRARY of CAMBRIDGE. III. By R. SCHUCHTER.
NOTES on the JEWS of ENGLAND under the ANGEVIN KINGS. By Joseph JACOB.
CRITICAL NOTICES: Two recent Introductions to the Old Testament. By the Rev. EDWIN ISSERLIEP—A. Buehler's Untersuchungen zur Entstehung und Entwicklung der Hebräischen Sprache. By Dr. M. FRIEDMAN—S. Mendelssohn on The Original Jurisprudence of the Ancient Hebrews. By the Rev. Dr. A. KÖNIG—Hebräischer Bericht über die Judenverfolgungen während der Kreuzzüge, Dr. Harkavy's Neulatinische Version Romanica von Alexandria. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER.
NOTES and DISCUSSION.—Talmudical Miscellanies, IV, Lakes of the Holy Land. By the Rev. Dr. A. KÖNIG.
LITERARY GLEANINGS: War between Burgundy and Felling in 1475—A Plague in Italy in 1530—Genealogy of a Family at Augsburg, according to the MS. at Parma—The Last Letter of Menahem Mendel—The Convert Paulus Christianus—Edition of the Babylonian Talmud, Salonic, 1521—Commentary on the Pentateuch Composed in Russia before 1555 A.D. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER. Price 3s.; Annual Subscription, post free 10s.

FOR THE TOURIST SEASON. SWAN'S COLLOQUIAL SERIES.

Thoroughly Practical Conversation Books for Tourists, with the Pronunciation figured on a simple Plan.
COLLOQUIAL. FRENCH. Third Edition. 1s.
" GERMAN. 1s. 6d.
" ITALIAN. 1s. 6d.

The FLORA of SWITZERLAND.

By A. GREMLI. Translated by L. W. PAITSON from the Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, 480 pp., 7s. 6d. net.
* Indispensable to all Field Botanists in Switzerland.

IEWS and REVIEWS. By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY. A Second Edition, printed on hand-made paper, rough edges, top gilt, is now ready, at 5s. net.

MR. HENLEY'S BOOK of VERSES. Third Edition. 5s. net.

MR. HENLEY'S SONG of the SWORD. First Edition nearly out of print. 5s. net.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holt, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, which not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT Manager.

THE IMPERIAL AND ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW

ORIENTAL and COLONIAL RECORD. JULY, 1892.
ASIA.—P. T. PIGGOTT (late Legal Adviser to the Japanese Cabinet): "JAPAN and her INSTITUTIONS."
A. COTTERELL TIPP, B.A. (late Assistant General to the Government of India, Bombay): "In the DEPRECIATION of SILVER in any WAY a BENEFIT to INDIA?"
P. HORDERN (late Director of Public Instruction, Burma): "AN EPISODE in BURMESE HISTORY."
C. E. RIDDLIPH: "GEOGRAPHY of PERSIA."
PENNIE & E. GOPALACHARI: "MAY HINDUS CROSS the OCEAN?"
R. MICHELL: "MY RUSSIAN RECORDS."
COL. ALEXANDER MAN: "FORMOSA: AN ISLAND with ROMANTIC HISTORY."
AFRICA.—DR. R. W. FELKIN: "UGANDA."
R. G. HALBURTON: "DWARF TRIBES SOUTH of MOUNT ATLAS."
C. H. E. CARMICHAEL: "EUROPEAN INTERESTS in AFRICA."
COLONIES.—G. C. LEBRY, C.M.G.: "THE FINANCIAL POSITION of AUSTRALIA."
ORIENTAL.—G. JOHNSTON, B.C.S.: "BENGALI PHILOLOGY and ETYMOLOGY."
W. G. ASTON, C.M.G. (late Japanese Secretary H.M.'s Legation, Tokio): "OBSERVATIONS on DR. TACHIBANA'S DISCOVERY of ARTIFICIAL CAVES in JAPAN."
GENERAL.—HYDE CLARKE: "IS TURKEY PROGRESSING?"
DR. G. W. LEITNER: "LEGENDS, SONGS, and CUSTOMS of DARDANIAN."
"MISCELLANEOUS NOTES of the late SIR WALTER ELLIOT."
"THE PELAGI and their MODERN DESCENDANTS."
DR. J. P. VAL PEREMAO: "AN INDIAN RAJAH at HOME."
THE NINTH and the TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS.
GENERAL KHEREFFS "Credo" on English and Russian Relations in Central Asia.—Oriental Studies admitted into the Honours in Arts Course in the Scottish Universities, &c., &c.
SUMMARY of EVENTS in ASIA, AFRICA, and the COLONIES, REVIEWS and NOTES. 5s. per copy; £1 per annum.
ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WORKING.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 261.—CONTENTS.

- I.—CRIME and CRIMINAL LAW in the UNITED STATES
- II.—TRAVELS in EQUATORIAL AMERICA
- III.—WELLSHAUSEN on the HISTORY of ISRAEL
- IV.—IRISH SPIES and INFORMERS
- V.—RECOLLECTIONS of MARSHAL MACDONALD
- VI.—THE DISCOVERY of AMERICA
- VII.—FORMAL and LANDSCAPE GARDENING
- VIII.—MEMOIRS of MADAME DE GONTAUT
- IX.—THE ISLE of WIGHT
- X.—THE PLATFORM. THE ELECTIONS.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D.,

Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.

No. 27, JULY, 1892. Price 5s.

- Articles.
- THE CHURCH of the RESURRECTION, or of the HOLY SEPULCHRE. By the Rev. J. R. MURPHY. Part I.
 - THE CONVERSION of WESSEX. By the Rev. T. S. HOLMES.
 - VILLAINAGE in ENGLAND. By F. SKEEL.
 - A LEGAL VIEW of CRANMER'S EXECUTION. By ALFRED BAILEY.
 - THE ROYAL NAVY UNDER JAMES I. By M. OPPENHEIM.
 - EDWARD AUGUSTUS FREEMAN. By JAMES BRYCE, D.C.L., M.P.

Notes and Documents.—Reviews of Books.—List of Historical Books recently published.—Contents of Periodical Publications.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS,
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 1	0 8 8	0 4 4

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BEST.

NO CHEMICALS USED.

CADBURY'S COCOA.—“We do not know any preparation of Cocoa superior to that of CADBURY BROS. It is absolutely pure and contains no sugar, starch, or other foreign ingredient, and its purity and aromatic flavour are its chief recommendations.”—Hygiene.

The late Editor of the Sanitary Review, writing on “The Consumption of Cocoa,” warns the public against the use of foreign Cocoas containing alkali, and makes the following allusion to the firm of CADBURY BROTHERS:—“It is the aim and practice of this famous firm to send out Cocoa absolutely pure, of the highest quality which art will permit.”

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BEST.

NO CHEMICALS USED.

The Editor of the Medical Annual speaks in the highest terms of CADBURY'S COCOA as a beverage and a food for invalids on account of its absolute purity, high quality, and great solubility; and counsels the Medical Profession to remember, in recommending Cocoa, that the name CADBURY on any packet is a guarantee of purity.

“The typical Cocoa of English manufacture. Absolutely pure.”—The Analyst.

CADBURY'S COCOA.—“A Food alike suitable for building up the growing body, and for repairing the waste which is incidental to all the processes of life.”—Health.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1056.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
TWO RECENT BOOKS ON THEOLOGY, by A. W. BENN	83
FLEAY'S BIOGRAPHICAL CHRONICLE OF THE ENGLISH DRAMA, by F. HAWKINS	84
DEAN HOLE'S BOOK ABOUT THE GARDEN, by the Rev. G. J. ROBINSON	85
A HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND, by R. F. CHARLES	85
A. G. BUTLER'S HAROLD AND OTHER POEMS, by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON	87
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	87
SOME TOPOGRAPHICAL BOOKS	89
NOTES AND NEWS	90
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	90
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A DYING NORSEMAN," by Miss F. PEACOCK	91
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	91
"WHERE WARREN HASTINGS RESTS," by J. S. C.	91
THE NEW TEACHING UNIVERSITY FOR LONDON	91
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	92
CORRESPONDENCE— The "Edinburgh Review" and Semitic Scholarship, by A. A. BEVAN; Notes on Herodas, by F. D.; The Origin of "Father" Christmas, by Paget Toynbee	92
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	93
GOMME'S ETHNOLOGY IN FOLKLORE, by Canon ISAAC TAYLOR	93
CORRESPONDENCE— Notes on some Prâkrit and Pâli Words, by the Rev. Dr. R. MORRIS; Greek ἄνῃ = Latin "aqua," by E. SIBREE	91
SCIENCE NOTES	95
PHILOLOGY NOTES	95
BRITISH MUSEUM CATALOGUE OF GREEK COINS, by G. OMAN	96
MR. RASSAM AND THE BRITISH MUSEUM	97
CORRESPONDENCE— Aegyptian Pottery in Egypt, by W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE	97
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	97
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. B. SHEDLOCK	97
MUSIC NOTES	98

LESSONS.—English, Practical Mathematics, Military Topography, Geometrical Drawing, Hindustani, Sanskrit, Mr. Wilson, 2, Gower Street, Fulham Road, S.W. Accountancy, Proof-reading, &c., done.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

AS LITERARY ASSISTANT, SUB-LIBRARIAN, or SECRETARY.—The daughter of a Professional man, well connected, but poor, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. She is thoroughly educated, well read in English and French literature, with some knowledge of Latin and German; good arithmetician, accustomed to secretarial work, to make researches in public libraries, to correct for the press, and to index; she can read aloud intelligently, and writes a legible hand; would undertake Copying or anything else for which the above qualifications would suffice; whole or part time; several years' reference; excellent testimonials.—Address D. H., 39, Theobald's Road, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

A SYNONYMIC CATALOGUE of LEPIDOPTERA HETEROCERA. By W. F. KIRBY, F.L.S., F.E.S., &c., Assistant in the Zoological Department, British Museum (Natural History). Author of "A Synonymic Catalogue of Lepidoptera Rhopalocera," &c., &c. Part I. SPHINGES and BOMBYCES, containing the full Synonymy of every species described up to May, 1892, and a complete Alphabetical Index of Genera.
GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster Row.
(MR. VAN VOUREN'S SUCCESSIONS.)

NINTH INTERNATIONAL Congress of Orientalists, 1892.

HON. PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK.
PRESIDENT—PROF. MAX MÜLLER.
All Communications as to Papers and Membership to be addressed to the Secretaries, 22, Albemarle Street.
Tickets, £1: Ladies, 10s.
THE CONGRESS will be held SEPTEMBER 5–12. Prof. MAX MÜLLER'S ADDRESS will be delivered on the Morning of MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, and Mr. GLADSTONE'S, at 3 P.M., on SEPTEMBER 7.
A.B.—Orientalists are informed that invitations have been received from Göttingen, for holding the Tenth Congress thence.

READY THIS DAY.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF SIR GEORGE GREY, K.C.B.

By W. L. REES.

In 2 vols., buckram gilt, with Photogravure Portraits, 32s.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

READY THIS DAY.

At all Booksellers, price 7s. 6d.

THE SPEECH OF MONKEYS.

By R. L. GARNER.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, Burlington House, London, W.

EDINBURGH MEETING, AUGUST 3RD TO 10TH.

PRESIDENT-ELECT—

Sir ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, LL.D., D.Sc., For. Sec. R.S., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom.

The JOURNAL, PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS, and other Printed Papers issued by the Association during the Annual Meeting will be forwarded daily, by post, to Members and others unable to attend, on application and prepayment of 2s. 6d. to the Clerk of the Association, Mr. H. C. STEWARDSON, Reception Room, Edinburgh, on or before the first day of the Meeting.

G. GRIFFITH, Asst. General Secretary.

BRITISH INSTITUTION SCHOLARSHIP FUND.—At a Meeting of the Trustees, held on July 22, SCHOLARSHIPS of £50 a year, tenable for two years, were AWARDED in Payment to HAROLD EDWARD SPEED, in Black and White to FREDERICK VARGO BURRIDGE.

By order of the Trustees.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

EVENING OPENING (8 to 10 P.M.).

The British Museum, Bloomsbury, will again be OPEN to the Public in the EVENING, from 8 to 10 o'clock, on and after MONDAY, AUGUST 1st.

EASTERN GALLERIES on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.
WESTERN GALLERIES on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

E. MAUSON THOMSON, Principal Librarian and Secretary.

British Museum, 26th July, 1892.

CHELTEMHAM LADIES' COLLEGE.

APPLICATIONS for the PEARCE SCHOLARSHIP, value about £28 per annum, should be sent to the SECRETARY, by September 1st. It is tenable by the Daughter of an Officer in the Army who is in need of pecuniary assistance.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREW'S

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turin, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.—STUDENTS are successfully PREPARED at the Classes in connection with the North London Collegiate School, under the superintendence of Miss BUSS. They are also trained for Kindergarten work, and prepared for the Examinations of the Froebel Society. Arrangements made for ladies to board in the neighbourhood.—Apply to Miss TOLSON, 145, Camden Road, London, N.W.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

THE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES 5s. 5d.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Maps, Manuscripts, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR AUGUST, 1892.

- I. GOD'S FOOL. By the Author of "An Old Maid's Love." Chaps. XXXIV.—XXXVII.
- II. MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT SHELLEY.
- III. "BONJOUR, PIERROT." By F. E. WEATHERLEY.
- IV. WAYFARING in the ROUERGUE. By E. H. BARKER.
- V. THE SADNESS OF SUMMER. By A. T. MUNTZ.
- VI. THE BLACK BUTTERFLY.
- VII. SKETCHES in WHARFEDALE.
- VIII. TO A. H. By H. L. BULVER (Lord Dalling).
- IX. MEPHISTO. By RITA, Author of "Dame Durdan," &c.
- X. A POET PRINCE. By ALLAN WATERS, M.A.
- XI. ODE to a MODERN SHIP. By E. H. LACON WATSON.
- XII. FROM CYPRUS.
- XIII. AUNT ANNE. By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD. Chaps. XIX.—XX.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION

READY THIS DAY.

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS KEITH'S CRIME."

AUNT ANNE.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

THE STORY OF A PENITENT SOUL.

Being the Private Papers of Mr. Stephen Dart, late Minister of Lynnbridge, in the County of Lincoln.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

"Is it impossible in the brief sketch we have been able to give of this human tragedy, to convey any adequate idea of the air of intense realism in which the whole story is suffused. It is less an autobiography than a cry de profundis—as difficult to criticise as the wail of a lost soul—a human document indeed."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

COUSIN CINDERELLA.

By Mrs. PAUL KING.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mrs. King is a distinct gain to the ranks of the novelists. She is incisive and original, she does not ride a subject to death, she can laugh at herself and her characters, and, above all, she lets them develop themselves, and never attempts to dissect them for the benefit of her readers."—Saturday Review.

BY A NEW WRITER.

A HIGH LITTLE WORLD,

And What Happened There.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A thoroughgoing Yorkshire story, evidently written by a Yorkshireman, with absolutely correct characteristics and local setting. The author certainly understands his own people, and has the art of reproducing them in strong and natural situations, true of type, broad and intense, stiff in the back, and obdurate of will.... This moorland drama is full of interest and illusion.... There is a chapter on 'heredity,' after the recently set models, which is as ghastly and strenuous as the Norse dramatist's 'Ghosts.'"—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE."

THAT WILD WHEEL.

By FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE.

Author of "Madame Leroux," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BAEDEKER'S TOURIST GUIDE-BOOKS.

Illustrated with numerous Maps, Plans, Panoramas, and Views, 12mo, cloth.

GREECE. 10s.
GREAT BRITAIN. 10s.
LONDON and its ENVIRONS. 6s.
BELGIUM and HOLLAND. 6s.
THE RHINE. 7s.
NORTHERN GERMANY. 8s.
SOUTHERN GERMANY, AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, and TRANSYLVANIA. 8s.
THE EASTERN ALPS. 8s.
NORTHERN ITALY. 8s.
CENTRAL ITALY and ROME. 6s.
SOUTHERN ITALY and SICILY. 6s.
NORWAY and SWEDEN. 10s.
NORTHERN FRANCE. 7s.
SOUTHERN FRANCE. 9s.
PARIS and its ENVIRONS. 6s.
SWITZERLAND. 8s.
LOWER EGYPT. 16s.
PALESTINE and SYRIA. 20s.
THE TRAVELLER'S MANUAL OF CONVERSATION in ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, and ITALIAN. 3s.
CONVERSATION DICTIONARY in FOUR LANGUAGES: English, French, German, and Italian. 3s.

THE THOROUGH GUIDE SERIES.

Illustrated with numerous Maps and Plans.

Edited by M. J. B. BADDELEY, B.A., and C. S. WARD, M.A.

THE ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. 5s.
SCOTLAND. Part I. The Highlands. 7s.
SCOTLAND. Part II. Northern Highlands. 3s. 6d.
SCOTLAND. Part III. The Lowlands. 4s.
NORTH DEVON and NORTH CORNWALL. 3s. 6d.
SOUTH DEVON and SOUTH CORNWALL. 4s.
THE PEAK DISTRICT. 2s. 6d.
THE EASTERN COUNTIES. 3s.
NORTH WALES. 5s., Part I., 3s.; Part II., 2s. 6d.
SOUTH WALES. 3s. 6d.
IRELAND. Part I. Northern Counties. 4s.
IRELAND. Part II. Southern Counties. 5s.
SURREY and SUSSEX, including Tunbridge Wells. 3s. 6d.
YORKSHIRE. Part I. (East). 3s.
YORKSHIRE. Part II. (West). 3s. 6d.
ORKNEY and SHETLAND. 1s.

MADEIRA: its Climate and Scenery. A Handbook for Invalids and others Visitors, with Chapter on the Fauna, Flora, Geology, and Meteorology. By JAMES YATES JOHNSON. With Plan and Maps. Third Edition. 7s. 6d.

BRITISH PETROGRAPHY; with special Reference to the Igneous Rocks. By J. J. HARRIS TEALL, M.A., F.G.S. 1 vol., royal 8vo, 458 pages of Text, with 47 Plates, some Coloured, bound in cloth extra, gilt top, £3 3s.

A MONOGRAPH OF THE GENUS CROCUS. With a Scientific Review of its Life-History, Culture, Geographical Distribution, &c. By GEORGE MAW, F.L.S., F.S.A., F.G.S., &c. Containing 41 Hand-Coloured Quarto Plates from Drawings by the Author. Maps, Tables of Geographical Distribution, and numerous Vignettes and other Engravings by Messrs. Whymper, Messrs. Hainzel, and other Eminent Engravers, from Original Sketches by C. G. Danford, Esq., and Sir J. D. Hooker. Royal 4to, cloth gilt, £7 7s. 6d.

A CHAPTER in the HISTORY OF METEORITES. By the late WALTER FLIGHT, D.Sc. Lond., F.R.S. With 7 Plates and 6 Woodcuts. (200 copies only.) 12s. 6d.

ARMOUR and its ATTACK by ARTILLERY. By CHAS. ORDE BROWNE, Captain late Royal Artillery. With numerous Plates and Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

BIOLOGIA-CENTRALIA-AMERICANA; or, Contributions to the Knowledge of the Fauna and Flora of Mexico and Central America. With numerous Plates, mostly Coloured. Edited by F. D. GOODMAN and O. SALVIN.

BOTANY. 5 vols., complete, bound, £17 17s.

ZOOLOGY. Parts 1 to 102, each £1 1s.

ARCHAEOLOGIA. Parts, 1, 2, 3, with folio Atlases, each £2 2s.

BIRDS: the Elements of Ornithology. By ST. GEORGE MIVART, F.R.S. [With 174 Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.]

DOGS, JACKALS, WOLVES, and FOXES: a Monograph of the Canidae. By ST. GEORGE MIVART, F.R.S. With Woodcuts and 44 Coloured Plates, drawn from Nature and Hand-Coloured by J. G. Kenelmans. Price to Subscribers, £3 3s.

ANATOMY. Descriptive and Topographical, in 625 Illustrations. By CARL HERTZMANN, M.D., BONES, ARTICULATIONS, LIGAMENTS—MUSCLES, FASCIAE, TOPOGRAPHY—ORGANS OF SENSE, VISCERA, TOPOGRAPHY—NERVOUS SYSTEM—VASCULAR SYSTEM—TOPOGRAPHY. Royal 8vo, cloth, £1 8s.

A BIBLIOGRAPHY of the FORAMINIFERA, RECENT and FOSSIL, from 1365-1888. With Notes Explatory of some of the rare and little-known Publications. By CHAS. DAVIES SHERBORN, F.G.S. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

HOOKE'S ICONES PLANTARUM. Third Series, Complete. London, 1867-1891. 10 vols., 8vo, containing 1,000 Plates, 23. Fourth Series. Vol. I. Parts I.-IV., each 4s.; or 4s. 3d. by post.

A CATALOGUE of BRITISH FOSSIL VERTEBRATA. By ARTHUR SMITH WOODWARD, F.G.S., and CHARLES DAVIES SHERBORN, F.G.S. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

A SYNONYMIC CATALOGUE of the RECENT MARINE BRYOZOA, including FOSSIL SYNONYMS. By E. C. JELLY. 8vo, cloth, 15s.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN

WITHOUT A GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Albert Tracy is an enviable traveller and a charming writer. His 'Rambles through Japan without a Guide' is so good a book that it makes one feel that one does not want to go there (this means praise, although it looks like paradox) and need not read any more books about Japan. It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched; yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."—World, July 20.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"Picturesque and practical, and should attract both the serious-minded and those who read only for entertainment."—Globe.
"An exceptional treat.... keen in its appreciation of men and names."—Glasgow Herald.
"A bright account of a second journey round the world."—Times.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY.

By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

CONVERSATIONS with CARLYLE.

By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G., &c. With 2 Portraits of Mr. Carlyle and 1 of Mrs. Carlyle. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A book which is well entitled to a place of honour, for it is by far the most sane, the most kindly, and the most critical estimate of Carlyle as yet published."—Saturday Review.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and

LETTERS. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, B.A. With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page and 41 smaller Illustrations, including 15 Photogravures. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 24s.

The LARGE-PAPER EDITION, 250 Copies, demy 4to, boards, with extra Illustrations, THREE GUINEAS NET, is just ready.

"Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from first to last."—Saturday Review.
"One of the most beautiful illustrated books that has appeared for many years."—Spectator.

THE MEMBER for WROTTEN-

BOROUGH. Passages from his Life in Parliament. Edited by ARTHUR A'BECKETT. With fancy cover, Design by E. J. Wheeler. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Bright, clever, and readable."—Daily Telegraph.
"There is not a dull passage in these entertaining pages."—Globe.
"A most interesting book—far more interesting than the tale of the real election, of which we have had enough and to spare within the last few weeks."—World.

SCRIBNERS' MAGAZINE. New

Volume. January to June. Splendidly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, 8s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE TERRIBLE CZAR. By Count

A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Captain FILLMORE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Just ready.]

PER ASPERA. By Georg Ebers,

Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

"The action is set in Alexandria at the time of the Emperor Camarilla, and the story follows the romantic fortunes of an artist's daughter residing there.... All the civilisation of the time is brought into the book either by description or suggestion, and seems to live again before the reader's eye."—Scotsman.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales.

By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. (First Issue in Book Form.)

A SON of the FENS. By Dr. P. H.

EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A remarkable work."—World.

THE MAID of KILLEENA. By

WILLIAM BLACK. 2s. 6d. Being the New Volume in the Uniform and Cheap Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. Black's Novels. [Ready August 2.]

LOW'S ONE SHILLING STORIES.

UNIFORM WITH KIPLING'S STORIES.

1. THE VISITOR'S BOOK; or, Sketches in a Swiss Hotel. By "Ignotus." "Admirable in every way, full of quiet, trenchant humour and observation."—World.

2. MARRIED by PROXY. By a "New Humourist." "Extremely diverting and well arranged to entertain the tedious of a railway journey."—Northern Echo.

3. HIS GOLF MADNESS, and other "Queer Stories." By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD. "Piquant and humorous without being long."—Liverpool Mercury.

4. THE EFFACEMENT of ORIEL PEN-

HALIGON. By E. M. HEWITT. "This is a powerful story.... The supernatural and mysterious machinery are so cleverly handled that the interest of the book is soon started and maintained to the close."—Scotsman.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1892.

No. 1056, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the Editor.

LITERATURE.

TWO RECENT BOOKS ON THEOLOGY.

Essays upon some Controverted Questions. By Thomas H. Huxley. (Macmillans.)

The Old Testament in the Jewish Church. By W. Robertson Smith. Second Edition, revised and much enlarged. (A. & C. Black.)

NONE of Prof. Huxley's writings are marked by more incisive reasoning, and none, perhaps, show such brilliancy of style, as those theological essays which, during six years, were the joy of the readers of the Nineteenth Century. They are now offered to the public in a collected form, with the addition of another paper from the Fortnightly Review, written in reply to an attack from Mr. Lilly, an old address on palaeontology, and a prologue of some fifty pages in length. However admirably adapted to the time and place of their original appearance, such publications necessarily lose when read in rapid succession, and apart from the adverse statements against which they were directed; and it may be doubted whether, for the purpose of reproduction in permanent book form, the professor might not with advantage have compressed his contributions to controversial theology into half or a quarter of their present bulk. It may also be asked whether for one of such high rank both in literature and science he does not sometimes fly at too small game, and whether his razor is not too often used for cutting blocks of wood, his Nasmyth hammer for driving in a tack.

The permanent value of the book lies in the light that it throws on Agnosticism as a philosophical method. Prof. Huxley invented the word Agnostic as a name for his own opinions and for the school to which he belongs—the school, above all, of Humo and, to a great extent, of Kant. Now everyone has, of course, a right to define as he pleases a term that he has invented himself; but if the mass of educated people take up the term and consistently use it in a somewhat different sense, their practice is also entitled to great respect, and it will be worth while carefully to indicate the divergence between its original and its generally accepted connotation.

"Agnosticism," Prof. Huxley tells us, "is not a creed, but a method, the essence of which lies in the rigorous application of a single principle. . . . Positively the principle may be expressed: In matters of the intellect follow your reason as far as it will take you without regard to any other consideration. And negatively: In matters of the intellect do not pretend that conclusions are certain which are not demonstrated nor demonstrable" (p. 362).

The question at once suggests itself—Are there then other matters, not of the intellect, in which we may or must follow reason only a certain way, and with due regard to "other considerations"? The writers of Lux Mundi would probably say that there were such matters, and that religion was one of them. Thus, under shelter of the saving clause kindly provided for them they might, if so minded, describe themselves as Huxleyan Agnostics. At any rate, there can be little doubt that the two principles offered as discriminating tests would be accepted by a number of persons whom nobody has ever dreamed of calling Agnostics, notably by the great systematic thinkers in ancient and modern times—Plato and Aristotle, Spinoza and Hegel. Indeed, Prof. Huxley himself, in one place, very candidly declares that "with scientific theology, Agnosticism has no quarrel. . . . The scientific theologian admits the agnostic principle, however widely his results may differ from those reached by the majority of Agnostics" (pp. 452-3). Coupling this with the statement made elsewhere (p. 366), that if by religion is meant theology, "then in my judgment Agnosticism can be said to be a stage in its evolution, only as death may be said to be the final stage in the evolution of life," the inference seems unavoidable that Agnosticism has the rather mischievous habit of denying and destroying a system of belief with which it has no quarrel.

Now, as popularly understood, the word Agnosticism is susceptible of no such conflicting applications, and in practice has proved exceedingly useful. It is neither a wolf in sheep's clothing nor a lamb in wolf's clothing, but a good shepherd's dog. It implies first of all the absolute negation of supernatural interference with the sequences of natural phenomena. The Agnostic disbelieves in miracles, in revelation, in the efficacy of prayer, in what theologians call "the ordinary operations of Providence," and, I think I may add, in human free-will. Furthermore, if the person who has thus divested himself of the traditional religious opinions should be asked does he not then believe in God, in the sense of a personal First Cause of the universe, he will answer: I cannot disprove the existence of such a Being as you describe, but I see no evidence of His existence. My only experience of consciousness is as an accompaniment of certain nervous processes which are themselves a part of what you call the creation. Asked whether he is then a Materialist, our unassuming friend answers that he is not, nor a Spiritualist either. He observes a connexion between molecular movements and feelings, but does not undertake to explain it. As to the immortality of the soul, there are two possible answers for him to make. He may, like Mr. John Morley, flatly deny it, and yet continue to be called an Agnostic. Or he may, like Prof. Huxley, profess complete ignorance about the subject. It will be observed that throughout this series of negations there is no assumption of exclusive reasonableness or of using one's reason better than other people. The theologian interprets experience one way, the Agnostic another way; their methods may be the same, but their conclusions are totally different, and it is with reference to their conclusions only that they are named. Taking this ground, I think we can dispose more satisfactorily than Prof. Huxley has done of Dr. Wace's demand, that the persons now known as Agnostics should be called Infidels in future. To begin with, Dr. Wace's implied explanation of "infidel," as one who does not believe Jesus Christ, conflicts with the ancient and established usages of language, since no orthodox Jew has ever been called an infidel in reference to his rejection of Christianity. Moreover, the word Infidel has become associated with a criminal breach of engagement, as when we talk of infidelity in a cashier or in a married person. Above all, it is desirable to possess a term designating the standpoint of that relatively numerous class who neither profess the dogmatic atheism of Charles Bradlaugh nor the dogmatic theism of Theodore Parker, especially a term to which neither those persons nor their opponents object. Now both conditions are satisfied by the term Agnostic, and by it alone. But although the mass of Agnostics may have felt rather annoyed when Prof. Huxley took up and fought out on purely personal grounds the broad issue raised with their whole body by Dr. Wace, they must have forgiven him in consideration of the skill with which he diverted the controversy into a discussion of what the lay public hears too little about—the origin and historical value of the Synoptic Gospels. And whatever may be thought of Mr. Gladstone's contribution to the subject, his appearance in the fray as a champion of the extreme Conservative side certainly added immensely to its interest.

The relation between morality and belief, a topic placed by Cotter Morison in the fore-front of his attack on Christianity, is frequently touched on in these essays, but rather in the way of assumption than of argument. Not only does Prof. Huxley hold that there is no necessary connection between ethics and theology, but he thinks that they are frequently opposed to one another. "Scientific ethics," he tells us, "can and does declare that the profession of belief in the miracles of the possessed swine and the barren fig-tree, 'on the evidence of documents of unknown date and of unknown authorship, is immoral'" (p. 312). It would even seem that, in Prof. Huxley's opinion, to hold any theological doctrine with full and firm belief is immoral.

"It is wrong for a man to say that he is certain of the objective truth of any proposition unless he can produce evidence which logically justifies that certainty. This is what Agnosticism asserts; and in my opinion, it is all that is essential to Agnosticism" (p. 450).

Here again the common usage of educated people would, in my opinion, refuse to sanction either the extension or the limitation claimed for Agnosticism by the originator of the term. To say that one is certain of a thing without being subjectively certain of it is, of course, a falsehood, and as such is wrong. Many persons who would strongly object to being called Agnostics would admit so much. But it is rather hard to be called immoral for believing, on what seems to oneself sufficient evidence, what Prof. Huxley or anyone else considers not proven; and it is to be hoped that there are few Agnostics so intolerant as to cast such a slur on the character of their opponents, whatever they may think of their logic. It would be truly debasing the moral currency were the word "immoral" to be habitually used as a strong way of calling other people's inferences invalid.

Had Mr. Gladstone possessed an elementary acquaintance with the results of modern Pentateuchal criticism, as set forth by Prof. Robertson Smith in the work named at the head of this article, he would probably not have provoked an unequal contest with Prof. Huxley by standing up for the inspired accuracy of the so-called Mosaic Cosmogony. To one who has learned to read the first chapter of Genesis as the opening section of a Priestly Code written after the Captivity, the question of its inspiration must appear somewhat futile. Much that seemed not only heterodox but chimerical in Biblical criticism when Prof. Robertson Smith first published his lectures on the Old Testament in the Jewish Church eleven years ago, is now making its way to general acceptance as at any rate not less well authenticated than the theories of geology. The result is due, no doubt, in great measure to Canon Driver's Introduction, but partly also to the bolder initiative of his Scottish predecessor. Still further help will be given by this new edition of the lectures, which has been enriched by so much fresh matter that, in spite of omissions, it exceeds the first edition by one-third. So far as Hexateuchal criticism goes it will be found more attractive than Canon Driver's book, as well as argumentatively fuller. I would draw particular attention to the last lecture headed "The Narrative of the Hexateuch," which consists entirely of new matter, as furnishing a complete answer to the elaborate misunderstandings and misstatements recently put forward as a confutation of the critical theory by Prof. Robertson, Principal Cave, and the Bishop of Colchester. The prelate last named and his brother of Gloucester might also very profitably give their attention to the following passage, which is reprinted as it stood in the first edition:—

"We have no objection, say the opponents of Biblical criticism, to any amount of historical study, but it is not legitimate historical study that has produced the current results of Biblical criticism. These results, say they, are based on the rationalistic assumption that the supernatural is impossible. . . . My answer to this objection is very simple. . . . We are agreed, it appears, that the method is a true one. Let us go forward and apply it; and if in the application you find me calling in a rationalistic principle, if you can show at any step in my argument that I assume the impossibility of the supernatural, or reject plain facts in the interest of rationalistic theories, I will frankly confess that I am in the wrong" (pp. 18 and 19).

ALFRED W. BENN.

A Biographical Chronicle of the English Drama, 1559-1642. By Frederick Gard Fleay. In 2 vols. (Reeves & Turner.)

ENGLISH literature is not so rich in dictionaries of dramatic biography as the interest and importance of the subject might suggest. The first step towards the preparation of such a work was taken about two centuries ago by Gerard Langbaine, a son of the provost of Queen's College, Oxford. According to Warton, he had been "a constant and critical attendant of the playhouses for many years," and had collected "more than a thousand printed plays, masques, and interludes." His Account of the English Dramatic Poets, as the work was called, may be deemed a remarkable achievement for its date, though he had but a limited acquaintance with early editions of memorable plays. Gildon, Jacob, and Whincop successively followed in his wake, each doing a little to repair his shortcomings, but assuredly failing to outstrip him in any other respect. Next came David Erskine Baker's Companion to the Playhouse, in which some critical discernment was united to a good deal of independent research, and which immediately drove all its predecessors out of the field. First brought out in 1764, it was continued by Isaac Reid to 1782, and by Stephen Jones to 1812. Meanwhile it had been renamed the "Biographia Dramatica." As may be supposed, its accounts of pre-Restoration plays were not free from errors and oversights. In noticing "All is True," for example, the compilers, even with Sir Henry Wotton's letter about it under their noses, failed to see that in all probability it was the "famous historie of King Henry VIII." Generally, however, the book was one of exceptional value, and up to the present no attempt has been made to supersede it. Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's Dictionary of Old English Plays, brought out some thirty years ago, is little more than what its title would imply.

Mr. Fleay's new work, which may be taken as the complement of his Chronicle History of the London Stage, is intended to supply the deficiency we have indicated. It relates to the lives and labours of the many dramatists who flourished in England between the production of "Gorboduc" and the suppression of the theatres by the Puritans. As the author points out, it bears a close resemblance to the Biographia Dramatica in arrangement, but differs from it altogether in import. Let this difference be stated in his own words:

"The Biographia professed to give lives of the playwrights similar to those in any other dictionary or cyclopaedia, and, alongside of these, lists of their plays in order of publication, with such brief notices of the plays themselves as could be gathered from their title-pages, and with such additions as could be gathered from the imperfectly understood stage history of the early theatres and acting companies. My object has been to arrange the plays in order of original production, with such notices of their authors, and such only, as bear upon the history of the drama itself. The ideal of my work would be reached if I could give for every play, from the opening of the theatres in 1576 to their closure before the Civil Wars in 1642, the authorship in each instance, the date of original production, the theatre at which it was acted, the company by whom it was played, the relation it bore to other plays, and to dramatic history generally. This is a vastly more extended scope than anything hitherto attempted, and satisfactory results are not always attainable; but I trust that my readers will find that in most cases of importance I have hit, if not the bull's eye, at any rate an inner ring."

It is almost needless to say that Mr. Fleay has fulfilled his heavy task as thoroughly as existing conditions will permit. He has all the qualities it demands—a genuine love of the old English drama, an infinite capacity for taking pains, a ready perception of the bearing one fact may have upon another, and a well-nigh exhaustive knowledge of the literature and the occurrences of the period with which he deals. He has still a keen appetite for circumstances which, trivial enough in themselves, may help him, directly or indirectly, to solve a problem as to date or authorship; and his conjectures, if not always convincing, are seldom unworthy of more or less consideration. He certainly shows some reason for believing that Shakspeare satirised Jonson in "Troilus and Cressida." Under the head of the "Poetaster" we read:

"The 'armed prologue' is very important. He appears in 'confidence,' and is unquestionably alluded to in the 'armed prologue' to 'Troilus and Cressida,' who does not 'come in confidence.' It is, then, in this play of Shakspeare's that we must expect to find the purge that he gave to Jonson in return for the pill Jonson administered to Marston, c.f. 'Return from Parnassus,' iv. 3; and whoever will take the trouble to compare the description of Crites in 'Cynthia's Revels,' ii. 1, with that of Ajax in 'Troilus and Cressida,' i. 2, will see that Ajax is Jonson: slow as the elephant crowded by nature with 'humors,' valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, melancholy without cause (compare Malicente). Hardly a word is spoken of or by Ajax in ii. 3, iii. 3, which does not apply literally to Jonson."

Other controversial matter will be found scattered over the two volumes. Here and there, however, Mr. Fleay seems to curb his love of theorising, as may be gathered from the fact that he allows "Romeo and Juliet" to pass without a repetition in effect of the article he wrote about it fifteen years ago. One point upon which he lays stress is the pre-eminence in many respects of "royal Ben." Although, he says, Shakspeare is the central figure in our dramatic literature, Jonson is the central figure in our dramatic history. In support of this view, we are reminded of what is described as the variety of his work, his origination of new dramatic forms, his connexion with the court, his multiple relations with "great ones," his large acquaintance with other authors, his personal experience as an actor on many stages, his adoption of author "sons," and his knowledge, unique among the dramatists of his time, of the only other dramatic literature of anything like equal importance with our own. From the favour extended to Lodowick Carlell's plays at Whitehall Mr. Fleay draws an inference which may be thought a little too wide. They show, he thinks, "what rubbish was palatable" to Charles I. and Henrietta. No doubt they are poor stuff; but it should not be forgotten that the court entertainments of the time included pieces which, like Jonson's "Golden Age Restored," come up to a high standard of poetry, and that Carlell was a rather prominent member of the royal household. After continued efforts to find another author for it, the "Yorkshire Tragedy" is assumed to have been written by Shakspeare, the external evidence on this head being "too strong." Of serious omissions, Mr. Fleay may be deemed wholly guiltless, though he would have done well to note that some passages in "A Warning for Faire Women" are of peculiar excellence, and have, indeed, been attributed to the greatest of all dramatists himself.

For more than one reason it is to be regretted that so careful and scholarly a performance as this Biographical Chronicle should be marked by irritating faults of taste and temper. Mr. Fleay is too prone to obtrude himself upon the notice of his readers. He does not appear to understand that any expression of personal feeling is misplaced in a work of the kind, or that, eminent in one way as he unquestionably is, his relations with other writers are scarcely worthy of being recorded. For instance, after mentioning a conversation he had with Lord Tennyson fourteen years ago, he says: "He has since forgotten me, for what reason I know not." Why this heavy sigh should be inflicted upon us it is difficult to say. Nor has Mr. Fleay too many kind words for fellow gleaners in the same field. Of Halliwell-Phillips, he is unable to speak with anything like composure. He contemptuously miswrites the name, and will not even be consistent in his inaccuracy. In one case the amiable and lettered enthusiast of Hollingsbury Copse is referred to as "Halliwell," in another as "J. O. H. Phillips." His Dictionary of Old English Plays is rather unnecessarily condemned as "a mere scissors and paste compilation, with a few additions, but inaccurate and void of all historical grasp of the subject." Lastly, apropos of his reprint of "Monsieur Thomas," he is accused of "impudence or ignorance." Living authors, too, fare somewhat badly at Mr. Fleay's hands. On Mr. A. H. Bullen, who seems to have roused him to fury by describing one of his magazine articles as "a titanic absurdity, gross as a mountain, open, palpable," Mr. Fleay is particularly severe. He tells us that this painstaking student has "an effeminately facile pen," is superior to Mrs. Malaprop in derangement of epitaphs, and speaks with "the magisterial authority of youth and inexperience." Again, "his special delight is to set up ninepin hypotheses and bowl them down again; but no doubt it pays him and his publisher." Such passages may make the unskilful laugh, but they also make the judicious grieve. In one of his closing pages Mr. Fleay says that "personalities are out of place in books addressed to serious students, and ultimately come home to roost as surely as curses." It is a pity that he cannot be induced to practice what he preaches.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

A Book about the Garden and the Gardener.
By S. Reynolds Holo, Dean of Rochester.
(Edward Arnold.)

DWELLERS in the country are just now somewhat exercised in their minds upon the subject of technical instruction. The County Councils have at their disposal considerable sums of money to expend upon it, but it is no easy matter to settle what shall be taught and how. Suggestions without number have been made: some practical, many chimerical. Butter-making and wood-carving, nursing and hygiene, mechanics and modern languages, book-keeping and bee-keeping, agricultural chemistry and elementary geology, drawing and draining: each and all have their advocates; and before the eyes of the philanthropist—and who is not one nowadays?—there rises the picture of Hodge, as a master of arts and sciences, dwelling in the midst of his three acres, fed by their produce (artistically prepared), and employing the leisure which an Eight Hours Bill shall have procured him in cultivating his tastes and predilections. Dean Holo thinks he might do better by cultivating his allotment, and says, "if politicians would send teachers of horticulture into our villages, and would show the men how to grow fruit and vegetables, and the women how to preserve and cook them, 'he would have some faith in their reforms.'"

It is, we suppose, with a view to helping others to adopt the course which he advocates that the Dean has published the collection of papers comprised in the present pretty volume. It is certainly not hard reading; and, though one may get a little tired of his terribly funny way of putting things, there is no doubt the author is quite in earnest in his desire to make us all gardeners. In so doing he would, he thinks, be diffusing happiness

"in its duration sure; in its peculiar essence of a very sweet and gracious quality. It ministers health to the body and health to the mind. It brings pure air to the lungs, and pure, reverent thoughts to the heart. It makes us love our home, content and satisfied with those pleasures which neither sting nor pall; and yet, when we leave that home, it follows us wheresoever we go."

But the Dean's book is not a mere praise of gardening. It contains a budget of stories, more or less humorous, but, without any exception, pertinent to his subject, and conveys, in all sorts of ways, all sorts of information on the art of which the author is an acknowledged master. It will be satisfactory to a good many possessors of gardens to know that so high an authority as the Dean does not condemn what is known as "bedding out." In some quarters it has certainly fallen into disrepute of late years, and we have been told that the older fashion which secured some amount of floral display throughout the year is preferable to a brilliant show which lasts only three or four months. But the Dean very rightly says that the success or failure of the system depends upon the character of the garden and the resources at the gardener's command. If there be plenty of room for a variety of treatment and suitable surroundings, and if the gardener be an artist with means and men to realise his art, then from March to October your eye may be gratified with a succession of bright flowers, and all goes well; but if space and supply be restricted, the "summer system" brings with it miserable nakedness and dreary desolation for which a brief period of brilliance is no compensation, and the sentiment and teachings, the associations, the memories, and the hopes, of which a garden should be the haunt and home, will have no place in it.

It is scarcely necessary to add that, for hints on roses and how to grow them, the amateur and, indeed, the professional gardener can go to no better authority than the Dean, who, we are glad to learn, is able in his new home to keep around him his old friends.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

History of the Free Churches of England, 1688-1891. By H. S. Skeats and C. S. Miall. (Alexander & Shephard.)

THE well-known work of the late Mr. Herbert S. Skeats was published in 1868, and is now re-issued with slight modifications and brought up to date by Mr. Charles S. Miall. The book could hardly have found a more competent or more sympathetic editor. Neither writer conceals his personal agreement with the principles of the Free Churches. "Time is on the side of the Free Churches," says Mr. Miall, and the clash of the Ironsides' armour echoes through Mr. Skeats's pages. There is no uncertain note of war, for instance, in this:

"Mr. Noel went on to indicate that, in his view, political action was always dangerous to Christians, peculiarly so to pastors, and that eminent piety in pastors and churches would, in a few years, do more to free the Church of England than thirty years of political warfare. Surely a very illogical and unsound conclusion."

It is not certain, however, that a hearty belief in one side is a disqualification for writing history. We should be sorry to lose Clarendon or Macaulay; probably we get a more accurate notion of the state of the Church in the time of Charles II. from the various writings of Bunyan than we should from a document drawn up by a more impartial witness. Men cannot exist in a vacuum in the past any more than in the present. The book, however, is not merely controversial, it is a true apologia. Without any parade or affectation of impartiality, the writers are scrupulously just. We may say of them as Tillotson said of the Socinians: "They are a pattern," said he, "of the fair way of disputing; they argue without passion, with decency, dignity, clearness, and gravity."

The history of the Free Churches might be written from several points of view. It might be, as Mr. Fronde has recently told us the history of Henry VIII. ought to be, a history of the statute book: it might be a history of opinion; it might be mainly biographical. Our book is a skilfully arranged chronicle, in which all three points of view are taken. There is no lack of interesting, indeed of picturesque material for such a history. It is a record of religious wars and persecutions—the gibbet, the prison, and the pillory—

That “hieroglyphic State Machine, Contrived to punish Fancy in”— double taxes, and civil disabilities. It was not alone the Government or the Church that had the persecuting spirit: one of the meanest surely of all persecutions was the action of the Corporation of London in appointing to the office of sheriff Dissenters who could not conscientiously qualify for the office by taking the Sacrament according to the rites of the Church of England, and then fining them. This led to the famous judgment, in which the House of Lords affirmed the principles of toleration in 1767, when Lord Mansfield said—

“it is now no crime for a man to say he is a dissenter, nor is it any crime for him not to take the sacrament according to the rites of the Church of England . . . there is nothing certainly more unreasonable, more inconsistent with the rights of human nature, more contrary to the spirit and precepts of the Christian religion, more iniquitous and unjust, more impolitic, than persecution.”

This is fine language: but one has to remember that at the time Unitarians were shut out from the benefits, such as they were, of the Toleration Act, that dissenting ministers and schoolmasters had to sign 35½ out of the 39 articles, that the civil disabilities of Dissenters under the Test and Corporation Acts, whereby a man could not obtain any civil, military, or corporate office without undergoing the sacramental test, were not removed till 1828.

In his chronicles of the last forty years Mr. Miall has described at some length the parliamentary struggles that led to the abolition of compulsory church rates and of university tests, to the opening of burial grounds, the rise and progress of the Liberation Society, the disestablishment of the Irish Church, and the Elementary Education Act. “I know the Dissenters,” said Lord John Russell in the course of the anti-church rate agitation, “they carried the Reform Bill; they carried the abolition of slavery; they carried Free Trade; and they’ll carry the abolition of church rates.” Mr. Miall is of opinion that they will ultimately carry the disestablishment of the Church of England. Whether this be so or not, it seems clear that no comprehension scheme that shall unite the Free and State Churches is possible. The time when such action was most possible was in 1689. William III. was anxious to unite the Protestant sects. The Independents and Presbyterians were willing: the Commission, which included Stillington, Burnet, Tillotson, and Tenison, revised the Prayer-book in a most complete manner, made kneeling at the Communion and using the cross in baptism optional, and offered to acknowledge the validity of Presbyterian ordination. Unfortunately the matter was left to Convocation, and the Lower House of Convocation displayed a spirit that rendered reconciliation impossible. Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall regard this failure as due mainly to theological differences and ecclesiastical intolerance. There seems, no doubt, however, that purely political feeling had a good deal to do with it.

“An apprehension is said to have been felt,” says Von Ranke, “that the king would gain too much influence by a union of the Dissenters and Episcopalians brought to pass under his authority. But a powerful king was just what was not desired.”

It was jealousy of William, “your new hodge-podge of a Dutch government,” as Defoe makes them say in his Shortest Way with the Dissenters that caused the High Churchmen to break the scheme down.

The question was revived some thirty years ago in an interesting controversy between Mr. Binney and Dr. Short, Bishop of Adelaide, who had refused to accede to a memorial presented by a large number of colonists requesting that Mr. Binney might be asked to preach in the cathedral, on the ground that “his orders are irregular, his mission the offspring of division, and his Church system—he would not say schism—but dichostasy.” But, though no comprehension scheme seems within the scope of practical politics, the prospect of some kind of federation of Free Churches is growing brighter.

“The tendency to sub-division is less marked than the tendency to co-operation. . . . The latest sign of this pervading Christian sympathy is the recent Congregational Council, at which Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists were present to offer the right hand of fellowship to their Congregational brethren.”

The political history of Nonconformity is, however, by no means the sole or the most important part of this book. Those who have a taste for controversy may find here succinct and interesting accounts of the chief theological disputes that have exercised the Free Churches. Mr. Skeats himself apparently had little sympathy with the characteristic doctrine of the Unitarians: he more than once allows himself to speak of it as “a taint”; but nothing can be fairer than his account of the Deistical controversies of the eighteenth century, and more especially of the Salters’ Hall disputes of 1719, which had much to do with the changes by which English Presbyterian churches become Unitarian, and “the denomination vanished as suddenly as it had risen.”

Equally interesting is Mr. Miall’s careful account of the Leicester Conference of 1878, and the subsequent action of the Congregational Union. It is a favourite argument in support of a State Church that it controls extravagance of opinion and expression. This is a curious argument to use in favour of an establishment that has borrowed a “Church Army” from General Booth, and whose differing sections cannot be said to have ever dwelt together in harmony. A perusal of this book will show all candid minds that on the whole the Free Churches have managed their affairs discreetly if not with dignity; that considering they were for long not allowed to have schools, and only for the last twenty years have been allowed to have degrees, they have produced a respectable number of writers of merit, and that in times of danger they have ever proved loyal.

Even in 1745, when the High Churchmen wavered, supporting neither King nor Pretender with any zeal,

“the Committee of the Deputies passed a resolution recommending the whole body of Dissenters throughout the kingdom to join in support of the Government. . . . Armed associations of Dissenters were formed in all parts of the kingdom; chapels were converted into parade-grounds, and ministers became voluntary recruiting officers.”

Even the Quakers could not refrain from helping. They could not on principle incite men to shed blood, but they contributed flannel. And probably no more eloquently patriotic appeal has ever been made to a nation than came from the little Baptist chapel in Cambridge, when Robert Hall implored Englishmen to fight for their liberties against Napoleon.

Mr. Miall’s part of the book—the last five chapters dealing with the last forty years—will probably be found the most immediately interesting. The Census of 1851, which for the first time gave authentic information respecting the relative numbers of worshippers in different religious bodies, startled the public by three pieces of information—firstly, that out of every hundred churchgoing people forty-eight were not members of the Church of England; secondly, that there were over five millions of people in England who did not attend a place of worship at all; thirdly, that the existing accommodation was quite insufficient. The deficiency of Church extension was an evil that could be remedied: we all know the efforts that have been made by the Church of England and by the Free Churches in this direction. Mr. Miall estimates that by 1865 £800,000 had been spent in this way by the Free Churches. But the masses have not been reached by any of the Churches. We have yet to see how far the work of the Salvation Army will prove lasting and beneficial.

In an interesting passage Mr. Skeats points out that the temporary decay of Dissent in the reign of Queen Anne was partly attributable to a narrow view of the scope of education.

“It was apparently the opinion of the generality of ministers now rising that it was most undesirable for religious persons to read any but technically religious books. The strictness of Puritanism without its strength or its piety was coming into vogue. . . . Shakspeare’s plays were forbidden writings, and Bacon was a “profane” and unknown author. Addison’s Spectator was probably unknown to nine-tenths of the members of the Free Churches.”

At a later period in the century a good many important private schools were conducted by Dissenters, and during the present century the Free Churches have specially devoted care to the improvement of education. The London University was to a considerable extent due to the efforts of Nonconformists: the Wesleyans and Quakers have important schools of their own. In 1871 ecclesiastical tests in Oxford and Cambridge Universities were abolished, and it is noteworthy that during the last thirty years a Dissenter has won the position of Senior Wrangler at Cambridge nineteen times. Two years ago Spring Hill Theological College was transferred to Oxford, under the name of Mansfield College, to provide a theological education for graduates intending to enter the Congregational ministry; its classes are, however, open to members of other religious bodies. In the same year the Unitarians removed their Manchester New College to Oxford.

The book is not primarily biographical, yet much of its value and interest lies in the lists of worthies that it enumerates. The subjects it treats are so large and are treated so fully that it was probably necessary to avoid anything like those complete sketches of character that render the pages of Burke and Macaulay so fascinating. But brief as the sketches are, they are extremely well done. There are touches of restrained humour in the references to Baxter, "that old Goliath of Presbyterianism," and to "the great Mr. Howe," who never could be brought to excommunicate the Church of England; and in Mr. Miall's account of Dr. Campbell, the editor of the Banner, who was "a Boanerges under the delusion that he was specially 'a witness for the truth' . . . with an eye like Mars to threaten and command, and a 'men, brethren, and fathers' style of address which was the particular aversion of Mr. Binney." But for the most part the general character of the influence of the leaders alone is given. If anyone will take the trouble to turn over the 700 pages of this book, and note how numerous these leaders and teachers were and how carefully considered and condensed the information given on each is, he will be able to form some conception of the labour that must have been given to this excellent work.

R. F. CHARLES.

Harold: a Drama in Four Acts, and other Poems. By Arthur Gray Butler. (Frowde.)

THE story of the good Earl Harold, "in whose breast beat the heart of England," contains that combination of national and personal interests which is most attractive to the romance-writer, be he poet or novelist. The present poem is professedly founded on Lord Lytton's Harold, and challenges comparison with Lord Tennyson's. The two dramas have the advantage of poetic form as compared with the novel, but lose in being slighter. The complexities of such subtle characters as Haco and De Graville appear harsh and unnatural when we see them only in a few scenes.

There is, however, a singular harmony between the three authors in their conceptions of the main characters. Harold is ever the brave and gentle, the perfection of that pre-chivalrous nobility which already worshipped honour,

"As men have made it, Distorted, false, and jangled dialect," though with the glorious inconsistency of genius he consented to forego honour for the love of country. Beside him lowers the great Duke William with "that friendly-smile of his," the sign of the "dissimulation which debased his character but achieved his fortunes." Around them are grouped the frank, fierce Saxons and the debonnaire but grasping Normans. And on these, or at least on the Saxons, the influence of women is strong. We have Githa, the Norse mother, prompting to greatness; Aldyth, the scheming wife, with Edith the beautiful, whose great love conquers self and wounds that it may inspire. It is curious that both the poets have ignored the weird Hilda, to whom Lord Lytton gives much prominence.

But in spite of its attractive dramatic personae, it must be confessed that Mr. Butler's "Harold," like Lord Tennyson's, is somewhat dull; being only redeemed by passages of beautiful poetry and noble thought. Such is the fable of the maid who "bade us write only, she died of nothing, on her tomb"; the resolution of Edith to crush her own heart for the sake of England

"Better far
To break at once! break now! than hang for ever
A mill-stone round the neck of him I love,
A canker at the core of England's weal,
And, with them slowly dying, slowly die."

and her perplexity at Harold's attempt to weaken her resolution:—

"What shall I do? He taught me; strung me up
To this high pitch, and now himself unstrung,
He quarrels with the music he hath made,
And breaks the strings of his own instrument."

The play contains also some charming lyrics, and the following soldier's song:—

"Come drink to my bonny brown maid!
Come drink to my bonny brown maid!
For vicar or priest
She cares not the least,
But she'll wed me, my bonny brown maid.

So here's to my bonny brown maid,
And here's to my bonny brown maid!
Tho' I lie where I fall
Without blessing or pall,
She'll lament me, my bonny brown maid."

Mr. Butler's blank verse as a whole is flowing and correct; his prose is at times forcible. He has apparently devoted most care to the language of Edith and the development of her character; and, like Lord Tennyson, he will not have her forgotten by Harold in those later anxieties for the state which Lord Lytton had represented as entirely engrossing him.

We can discover but little poetry in the rest of Mr. Butler's book. The three poems, "Hodge on Churchgoing" and on "Voting by Ballot," and "In the Beginning," are clever and amusing, though the hexameters of the last are slightly shaky. As a rule, he has been content to give petulant expression to his conviction of the degeneracy of the age in an unpleasing string of rhymes, to which the arguments in the verses "To an Optimist" and the apt phrase "sad as the strain of saddest symphonies" do not reconcile us. This is the more irritating because Mr. Butler has shown us here, as in his "Harold," that he can write lyrical poetry of no mean order. "Live and let live," "Meliora Priore," "A Sprig of Holly," and "April and May," are in their way delightful.

REGINALD BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

NEW NOVELS.

The Island of Fantasy. By Fergus Hume. In 3 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

The Man who was Good. By Leonard Merrick. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Of the World, Worldly. By Mrs. Forrester. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Story of a Penitent Soul. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

A Daughter of Mystery. By Jessie Krikkorian. In 2 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

The Jolly Pushas. By John A. Steuart. (Henry.)

Rachel Reno: a Romance of Wales. By William Earley. (Digby, Long & Co.)

A Girl Diplomatist. By Mabel E. Wotton. (Chapman & Hall.)

Clement Barnold's Invention. By Lionel Hawke. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

A Dream of Millions, and other Tales. By M. Betham-Edwards. (Samson Low.)

A Story of Guy Fawkes Day, &c. By F. S. Hollings. (Samson Low.)

A Debt of Honour. By Mabel Collins. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

MR. FERGUS HUME makes an attempt in The Island of Fantasy to reconstruct the classic life of Ancient Hellas; and in dedicating his romance to Mr. J. A. Symonds, he sees "no reason why some of our over-wealthy millionaires should not carry out the Utopian project here suggested to a successful conclusion." The Island of Fantasy is really Melnos, in the Cretan Sea. It is little known, and is the property of an Englishman, who expatriated himself from his native land forty years before the narrative opens. He governed it under the name of King Justinian, and, by the principle of natural selection, raised a small colony of almost perfect men and women. Of these none was more beautiful than his own daughter Helena. She was as lovely as the Helen who captivated Paris, but without her frailty. To this colony, at the invitation of its sovereign, goes out Maurice Roylands, a wealthy young Englishman of ancient family, who has lost all zest and relish for life until he encounters Helena. Then all his susceptible nature awakes within him in passionate force. Life becomes entirely transformed, and for the first time he realises the joy of existence. Melnos he finds to be an abode worthy of its goddess. But this Eden has its serpent, in the shape of a Greek youth, who styles himself Count Caliphronas. He was a perfect type of physical beauty though his soul was dark, cowardly, and revengeful. He loved Helena with a sensual passion; but as she rejected his advances with scorn, he endeavoured to vent all his malice upon his successful rival, Roylands. Caliphronas resolved to capture the island, and to wreak his vengeance upon its inhabitants. Collecting a band of three hundred cut-throats from the various islands in the Aegean, he again and again assaulted Melnos, only to be beaten back by the gallant defenders. There is something Homeric in the description of the sanguinary encounters. The scene closes with a vivid description of the destruction of the island by a volcanic eruption. All the characters the reader will care about are saved in a miraculous manner, but Justinian afterwards dies. Before passing away he reveals some strange secrets—his near relationship to Maurice Roylands among the number. This novel is a long way in advance of anything Mr. Fergus Hume has hitherto attempted. His style has greatly improved; his conceptions are really noble, if not great; and he has helped us to realise something of what Greece and Greek life were in the Golden Age.

Mr. Leonard Merrick writes with power, but he must modify his pessimistic moods. A sadder story than The Man who was Good we have not met with for a long time. Fate, with its hard, cruel buffetings, is relentless towards Mary Brennan. She has been cast off by Seaton Carew, a sordid creature who plays leading man in a provincial theatrical troupe. She has given him affection and devotion under the promise of marriage upon the death of his degraded wife; but when that event happens he coolly transfers himself to Miss Olive Westland, because that theatrical star has engaged to find the money for a house in London where he can make his début. One is glad to find that his play is damned, and himself with it. Meanwhile, Mary the outcast goes through a series of painful adventures, which are described with much pathos and realistic skill. Being rescued from starvation, she is offered the love of Dr. Kincaid, "the man who was good"; but her heart is dead, and she refuses his offer. Finally, she sacrifices her life to save the child of the wretch who has betrayed her. No doubt there have been histories in real life as touching and hopeless as that of Mary Brennan, but somehow we feel that Mr. Merrick wants more lightness and brightness in his story: human nature has its lights as well as its shadows. The author gets a strong grip of the reader, and he certainly shows a capacity for fiction of a high order.

The life of a society beauty, with all its folly, heartlessness, splendour, and ultimate disillusion, is what Mrs. Forrester portrays for us in Of the World, Worldly. When Mrs. Vernon began her career she loved Vivian Lloyd with such affection as she was capable of, but after he lost his fortune she threw him over. Society and its pleasures came first with her. Then, after some years, when these hollow pleasures began to pall, she longed for her old lover with a passion to which she had hitherto been a stranger. She spread her toils for him, deceived him as to her other lovers under his very nose, and was bringing him to the actual verge of ruin when he was saved, partly through the intervention of faithful friends and partly through the love of a pure English maiden. Mrs. Forrester vividly depicts the wiles of the society siren—that worthless creature who finds no happiness in her home, who reads French novels by day and haunts heated ballrooms by night.

The anonymous author to whom we owe The Story of a Penitent Soul may be congratulated upon a distinct success. From the literary point of view these "Private Papers of Mr. Stephen Dart, late Minister at Lynnbridge, in the County of Lincoln," deserve to take high rank. As a whole, the story itself is one of the most distinctly original published during the present season. It now and again reminds us of The Silence of Dean Maitland, and occasionally of Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter. It is impossible to follow the fortunes of the sensitive young minister—from his hard and loveless youth upwards to the time when he falls, in consequence of an overmastering passion for a lovely woman—without feeling that fate has been extremely hard upon him. Mary Fleming, who appeared to Dart like a Madonna by an early German master, was united to an unsympathetic husband twice her own age. Her soul, like that of Dart himself, was ready to awake under the magnetic touch of love, and she was unable to resist the spells of the young minister. Their subsequent expiation forms one of the saddest pages in modern fiction, while the revenge exacted by the betrayed husband is Italian-like in its diabolical cruelty. This remarkable story can never be laid aside when once it has been begun, but the feelings which remain after its perusal are poignant in the last degree.

We do not remember any of Miss Krikorian's previous stories, but A Daughter of Mystery is by no means devoid of ability. It is somewhat too sensational, and in these latter days the incantations and love philtres of the old witch, Granny Gunn, are calculated to excite a smile. For more scientific readers, who yet like a little touch of the weird, the author considerably provides a heroine gifted with hypnotic force. Cleopatra Gunn is the grandchild of the witch, and out of the wretched surroundings of a degraded and miserable youth she develops into a woman of striking beauty, who fascinates the vicar of the parish. She herself, however, is enamoured of the squire, but he makes no return of her affection, and to secure him for herself she casts his wife into a mesmeric sleep, and makes her throw herself beneath the engine of an express train. Even that fails to effect her purpose, for Talbot Byng remains true to the memory of his dead wife. Foiled in her plans, and consumed by despair and remorse, she expiates her crime by voluntarily dying the same death as her victim. Her grandmother has already been murdered by the infuriated villagers for possessing the "evil eye." There is a good deal about heredity in the story, but much of the narrative seems permeated by an air of unreality. It is only just, however, to say that several of the characters are drawn with considerable skill.

The Jolly Poshas, by J. A. Steuart, is certainly one of the most entertaining volumes yet issued in "The Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour." The story of an unphilanthropic society, it relates the intellectual recreations of a band of men of English, Irish, and Scotch nationality. Enjoyment was the motto of the club, and it seems to have taken the concrete form of Scotch whisky and tobacco. Whether it is due to the large consumption of the former we cannot say, but some of the stories told by the members are extremely "tail." Many a genuine, hearty laugh is to be got out of this volume; and with all its fun a good many hits at social shams are to be read between the lines.

Two men committing involuntary forgery with each other's cheque books is a novel idea in fiction; but besides this, Mr. Earley gives us a graphic description of an abduction in Rachel Reno, as well as a lurid picture of the Rebecca rioters. Let us say at once that the story in itself is very interesting. The author has quite a style of his own, which may be called, perhaps, Earley English in contradistinction to the "English as she is now wrote." Thus, we get such phrases as "Men of Cymry," "Son of Cymry," &c. Cymry is not Wales, but the Welsh people; Cymru is Wales. The reader is probably responsible for such new readings of proper names as Maxamiilian, Schilermacher, Vittoria Alfieri; and possibly also for robbing the composer of "Ever of Thee" of an "e," as his name is spelt Linly. The author remarks that "time and tide waits for no man"; but somebody ought to have waited for these proof sheets to correct the defective grammar of the proverb, and rectify many other mistakes we have not pointed out.

Miss Wotton writes pleasantly in A Girl Diplomatist, and her hero and heroine are much more like real flesh and blood than the puppets trotted out in many more pretentious works. Barbara Thorpe earns her title by securing promotion in the Foreign Office for the friend of her childhood, Archie Wilmot. But her action is misconstrued, and it nearly costs her her lover as well as her own life. However, "all's well that ends well"; things being satisfactorily explained, Barbara is saved from an untimely death, by consumption, to be the happy bride of Niel Buchanan.

There is talent in Clement Barnold's Invention, but the wheat and the tares have been allowed to grow up together. The character-drawing is good, though there is a discursiveness in the style that should be avoided in future. The vicissitudes of fortune attending young Barnold evoke a real interest. Mr. Hawke also shows no slight appreciation of humour, and there is so much promise in his work that he may, and ought, to be heard from again.

Miss Betham-Edwards's stories are very good, especially those entitled "A Dream of Millions," "A Romance of the Cloister," and "The Message." The author has generally something to say, and says it well, while her style is far superior to that of the average writer of fiction.

A Story of Guy Fawkes Day Forty Years Ago is a very touching account of the career of two maiden ladies who bravely bore contumely and obloquy for more than forty years, on account of a brother who had been condemned for treason. A second story in the same volume "Half an Uncle all a Kinsman," is not without its human lessons, especially for the young.

Miss Mabel Collins recites a touching story of a girl's love and devotion in A Debt of Honour; but we are rather impatient over the cold selfishness which could allow such a sweet creature as Lily Barton to go to her death hopeless and broken-hearted, for the sake of saving her lover Jack Falconer by a wealthy marriage.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME TOPOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

The Literary Shrines of Yorkshire: The Literary Pilgrim in the Dales. By J. A. Erskine Stuart. (Longmans.) This is one of the most audacious examples of the handicraft of book-making which has seen the light for many a long day. In his opening chapter, Mr. Erskine Stuart has occasion to refer to a volume dealing with the topography of Malham in Craven, and he makes the depreciatory remark, "This work is, like most topographical books, spun out to a degree, even giving directions for fishing in Malham Tarn, the best flies to use, &c." Mr. Andrew Lang and other not incompetent critics might probably consider these interpolated directions the most valuable portion of the work, and, at any rate, they are calculated to be useful to the harmless and respectable class of anglers; but Mr. Stuart's own topographical book is spun out by fatuous irrelevances of statement, quotation, and criticism which cannot possibly be found either useful or entertaining by any human being. When, for example, the writer has to speak of Sedburgh, a town of which he seems to have no personal knowledge, he is compelled to find a literary association in the fact that a second master in the Grammar School was an acquaintance of Hartley Coleridge. Bradford, we are told, "has produced few great literary men," but as a set-off we have the information that Branwell Brontë once lodged there and attempted portrait-painting. When, in the course of his literary pilgrimage, he arrives at Headingley, Mr. Stuart remembers that it was the birthplace of a well-known living man of letters whom he refers to as "Alfred Austin, poet and novelist," and adds the interesting information that "he is B.A. of London, and has contested several Parliamentary seats unsuccessfully." If the author, in his search for material, can find nothing in the way of useless fact, he is quite satisfied to fill his pages with morsels of twaddling criticism. Sterne wrote the latter part of Tristram Shandy at Coxwold, in Lower Swaledale; and Mr. Stuart, in his usual childlike and bland manner, declares that the creator of Uncle Toby "often overdoes pathos till his words appear ridiculous." Congreve was born at Bardsley; and the literary pilgrim gravely informs us that "his works are now rather reprobated for their coarseness and indecency." G. P. R. James wrote a novel about Hull, which encourages Mr. Stuart to break out into the daring paradox of the sentence, "He was but a feeble imitator of the great 'Wizard,' yet some of his characters are good imitations of Sir Walter's." As all the world knows, Charles Reade's Put Yourself in his Place is a story of life in Sheffield; and as Sheffield is in Yorkshire, Mr. Stuart must have his say about the book which, he gravely declares, "is never for a moment dull or tedious."

"Coventry the villain of the piece is a thorough paced scoundrel, and Grace Cardew (sic) the heroine is a modest sweet girl of a kindly disposition who is faithful to Little through all, and is only coerced into marriage with the traitor Coventry, where she is fully persuaded that Henry Little is dead."

Mr. Stuart treats us to crude juvenilities of this kind whenever an opportunity occurs, and very often where the opportunity has to be created. Sometimes he buttresses a criticism of his own by "a second opinion," but he seems perfectly indifferent as to the rank of his authority. Thus, he regards it as quite certain that "in happier circumstances" Branwell Brontë "would have stood far above the female members of the family in literary ability"; and that this obiter dictum may gain all needful conclusiveness, he quotes the authoritative words of no less a person than the landlord of the Black Bull at Haworth, who declared that "Charlotte and her sisters didn't noa our way o' talking, and niver could hev written as they did if Branwell hadn't hae told 'em how to do it." Whenever other quotations fail him, Mr. Stuart falls back upon fiction, and any novel which either refers to a Yorkshire locality or is written by a Yorkshire author serves to provide good filling material. We have extracts from Jane Eyre, Swirley, Tancred, No Name, Sylvia's Lovers, Mary Anerley, Eugene Aram, Wendeholme, and Kith and Kin, some running to a few lines, others covering a few pages; and not more than two or three of them are anything but the most shameless padding. Nor is Mr. Stuart content with quoting from other people; his own previous volume The Brontë Country is laid largely under contribution, and in the chapter on Yoredale no fewer than five consecutive pages are reprinted without the slightest intimation of their lack of novelty. For anything in the new and original matter that is of any interest or value we have sought diligently and sought in vain. The best thing in the book is an account of the actual facts commemorated in the well-known ballad "The Dragon of Wantley," and this is taken bodily from the supplement of the Leeds Mercury. The ballad seems to be an interesting specimen of the modern myth, the dragon being Sir Francis Wortley, who, in the reign of James I., enforced payment of tithes in kind with such disregard of the suffering inflicted upon the poor that they were driven to seek a champion who would espouse their cause. Their choice fell upon one More of More (or Moor) Hall, near Bradford; and the lawsuit which relieved the people of Penistone and its vicinity from further exactions is the event which is allegorically celebrated in the story of the great encounter between the knight and the dragon. The motive of the ballad was probably suggested by the fact that a dragon is the crest of the More family. It is not necessary to extend our comments upon this slovenly compilation. Its substance is generally trivial, and its style—if style it can be called—is deplorably slipshod. A poorer book on a good subject it has never been our misfortune to read.

Rambles round Rugby. By Alfred Rimmer. With an Introductory Chapter by the Rev. W. H. Payne Smith. (Percival.) Mr. Rimmer does not propose to give "an exhaustive account of any particular place or scenes, but rather to intimate or point out the interesting parts which may most easily be reached" from Rugby. He claims, and claims rightly, that the country round is rich in historical associations, and, "as far as we know," this was one of the most important Roman centres of England. Certainly Edgehill, and Naseby, and Bosworth Field are in the neighbourhood—for Mr. Rimmer flies as far—and Warwick, Kenilworth, Coventry, Stamford, and Holmby House, are also impressed, without which English history would be in a sorry plight. Nor need we have omitted the Gunpowder Plot; the details of which the writer gives with some evident pleasure. Add to this that he is a keen student of natural history, though he dismisses geology somewhat summarily, and gives us several passages worthy of an imitator of Michelet in his lighter moods, or Richard Jefferies. All this should have given us a fascinating book. We have instead a book of many shortcomings, remediable, no doubt, in a second edition. But what shall we say of a volume which, constructed on our author's lines, including Leicester, excludes Stratford-on-Avon? or, including Ullesthorpe, could leave out Upper and Lower Shuckburgh; or ignores Brandon Castle, and Daventry, and Newnham Paddocks? Here, at least, we thought, we shall find some allusion made, some tribute paid, to Dunchurch Avenue and its history. But no such thing; the reader is left ignorant both of its beauties, which every (Rugby) schoolboy knows, and of the very existence of John the Planter. Turning to the biographical side—for what are Rambles without rambles?—the omissions are equally to be regretted. We search in vain for any mention of Thomas Carte, or Edward Cave, or Landor, or Cary, or Mary Fletcher. We might never know that the rollicking Braithwaite had been in the neighbourhood, or racy Bishop Corbet set foot in Lutterworth, or Dr. James gone to call on Thomas Twining at Bitteswell. In the pseudo-records of Wyllif at Lutterworth, we may notice, Mr. Rimmer seems implicitly to believe. We are not surprised to learn after this (p. 108) that the book was written at Chester. The most satisfactory piece of work in the book is the introductory chapter, though in one particular we must take Mr. Payne Smith to task. The writer of the present article yields to no one in his loyalty to Rugby; but we must protest that it is no more fair to praise the doings of Arnold at Rugby without any allusion to Winchester, than it would be just to leave out the name of Athens in a history of Miletus. No Rugbyean can regard the institution of William of Wykeham otherwise than as a Greek colonist would regard his mother city. To conclude, Mr. Rimmer has produced a sumptuous book which is a cross between a small county history and a tourist guide. He could have extracted much with advantage from Bloxam's Rugby, to whom he justly pays homage, and also from Mr. Timmins' Warwickshire. In one respect, indeed, he surpasses the first of these, for he has, at least, attempted an index, though it is a very bad one. (Amy Robsart we had hardly expected to find under the first letter of the alphabet.) We are constrained to add that Rambles round Rugby is written by an amateur of letters, with some ignorance of grammatical composition.

THE two new volumes of the "Gentleman's Magazine Library," which have recently been published by Mr. Elliot Stock, deal with English topography and relate to the counties from Bedfordshire to Cumberland. The writers of the articles which are now reprinted were deficient in some of the qualities deemed at this time to be essential in topography, but they possessed observant eyes and described the objects around them with patient accuracy. There are, as Mr. Gomme points out, some notable omissions of interesting places: but these were inevitable when the labour was not systematically undertaken by practised experts in a complete form, but only performed by voluntary workers moving as fancy prompted them. Many of the articles in Bedfordshire were written by Mr. J. D. Parry, and they are admirable specimens of the topographical literature of the day. An antiquary whose name is unknown to us (it is concealed under the title of "Richmondensis") is the author of many excellent papers on Cambridgeshire parishes contained in the second volume. Mrs. Bray describes with somewhat more discursiveness than is customary the secluded mansion of Cotele, on the borders of Cornwall; but her account is supplemented by some detailed particulars from E. J. C., probably Mr. Carlos, the architect. Mr. Hawker describes, with all the poetry at his command, the Church of Morwenstow, which he loved so well and served faithfully for many years. Another admirable paper deals with Crosthwaite, in Cumberland, and Southey's connexion with that parish. This section of Mr. Gomme's task is perhaps the most useful of all his divisions. No antiquary dealing with either of these counties must neglect to consult these pages, and his labours will be facilitated by the ample indexes with which each volume is concluded.

A Mendip Valley: Its Inhabitants and Surroundings. By Theodore Compton. With Illustrations by E. T. Compton. (Stanford.) Though described only as an "enlarged and illustrated edition of Winscombe Sketches" (which we read with pleasure on its appearance in 1882) this elegant volume deserves more space than we have room to spare. The author is an admirable example of those old-fashioned people who not only love but know their own nook in the country. If he is occasionally too discursive, readers will pardon a literary fault, in consideration of being brought into contact with such a genuine and simple mind. The treatment of fauna and flora shows a naturalist of no mean accomplishment; while a chapter on geology has been contributed by Prof. Lloyd Morgan. But what we remember to have found most interesting is the history of the old Quaker School at Sidcot. The illustrations, especially the head and tail pieces, are touched with the same unpretending grace as the letterpress. It is gratifying to know that such an honest book has passed through three editions.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will issue on September 1 The Diplomatic Reminiscences of Lord Augustus Loftus, extending from 1837 to 1862. Lord Augustus has been connected with the diplomatic service for upwards of half a century, and has visited in an official capacity in nearly every country in Europe; while of the political life of the three great empires of Germany, Austria, and Russia he knows perhaps as much as any man living. The volumes will throw light on many subjects which have been, and still are, of world-wide interest.

MR. CHARLES SANTLEY, the famous singer, has also been writing his Reminiscences, which will be published in the autumn by Mr. Edward Arnold. For many years Mr. Santley was as prominent on the operatic stage as he is to-day in oratorio or concert room; and his book is full of anecdotes of the Dii Majores, whose names are a household word in "the profession." His account of his own training, his early difficulties and mature triumphs, will be no less welcome to the general than to the musical public.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a new work by the Duke of Argyll, entitled The Unseen Foundations of Society: an examination of the fallacies and failures of economic science due to neglected elements.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce for publication in the autumn a selection from the Letters of Geraldine Jewsbury to Jane Welsh Carlyle, edited by Mrs. Alexander Ireland, together with a brief biography of Miss Jewsbury.

MR. DAVID NUTT will publish shortly, as a volume in the series of "English History from Contemporary Writers," The Jews in Mediaeval England, by Mr. Joseph Jacobs, who has here brought together, largely from unprinted sources, all the most important documents illustrative of the social condition of the Jews in this country during the twelfth century. A portion of his researches, confined to the Angovian period, may be read in the July number of the Jewish Quarterly Review.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will publish in September A Method of English chiefly for Secondary Schools, by Dr. James Gow, master of the high school at Nottingham, who is perhaps best known for his excellent "Companion to School Classics."

THE first large edition of The Art of Teaching and Studying Languages (George Philip & Son) is already exhausted, and a second edition will be ready shortly.

THE second part of the Hon. Roden Noel's paper on "Some Recent English Poets" will appear in the August number of Atalanta, which will also contain an article on Lady Waterford's drawings, illustrated with reproductions.

THE annual meeting of the Victoria Institute will be held at 8, Adelphi-terrace, on Monday next, August 1, at 4 p.m., when Lord Halsbury, the lord chancellor, has promised to deliver an address.

MR. EDMUND GOSSE will deliver the address at the Shelley centenary meeting on August 4, at Horsham. Mr. George Meredith, Prof. Max Müller, Mr. Alfred Austin, Miss Mathilde Blind, and Prof. J. Nichol have added their names to the letter which is now being circulated in the interests of the Shelley Centenary Library and Museum.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER has accepted the honorary presidency of the New Association, which has lately been founded in the City of London by clerks and others, for mutual improvement and especially for the study of modern languages. Daily lessons are already exchanged between the members in French, German, Swedish, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese; and it is hoped soon to add Russian and several Oriental languages. Professional advice is also given upon foreign law, customs, &c. The New Association has a learned side, meetings being held from time to time for the reading of papers. Thus, this week attention was called to the Gothic of Ulfilas and to the Danish MS. of a Life of Thomas Becket; while a communication was received from M. de Charancey on the languages of Old Mexico. Next Monday, the subjects for discussion will be the antiquities of London and recent discoveries in Normandy. The manager of the New Association is Prof. G. Rossler; and the address, 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.

SHAKSPEARE circles are about to be organised by the National Home Reading Union, which has been encouraged to undertake the work by the great success of the Dante circles formed last year. The numerous Shakspeare Reading Societies scattered about the British Isles should put themselves into communication with the general secretary of the Union, Mr. T. F. Hobson, Surrey-house, Victoria Embankment, and learn the details of the contemplated scheme.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued, in a square little volume of more than 300 pages, well printed, a handbook to the new House of Commons. It consists, in the main, of the brief biographical notices of candidates that originally appeared in the Times, together with the polling figures since the general election of 1885. At the end are some statistical tables and analyses of results, also reprinted from the Times. Among the Errata we notice a correction of the blunder by which T. Curran and T. B. Curran (father and son) were treated as the same person. The only double return is that of Mr. William Brien.

"A quelque chose malheur est bon." The municipality of Bayonne, following the example of that of Bordeaux after a like disaster, resolved on September 8, 1890, to publish, so far as possible, all the Archives which were saved from the conflagration of December 31, 1889. The first fruits of this resolution have just appeared in the form of a magnificent quarto entitled Livre des Etablissements, pp. li., 542 (Bayonne: A. Lamoignon). The preface, giving a history and description of the Archives, and of the MSS. of the Livre des Etablissements, is due to MM. H. Poydenot and Ch. Bernadon; the transcription of the MSS. was done by MM. E. Ducéré and P. Iturbide; a glossary and full indices are added. The earliest document is a Confirmation of Franchises, by Richard, Duke of Aquitaine, in 1170, in Latin and Gascon. It is followed by Richard's Charter of Wrecks (1190), and by several other Charters and Ordinances of English kings. After 1451 the connexion with England ceases, the documents become fewer, but are continued during the seventeenth century. The various earlier Etablissements proper give an almost complete picture of the administration and life of the town in the middle ages.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE fifth summer meeting of university extension students at Oxford, to be held during the month of August, will be largely devoted to lectures on the history, literature, and art of the Renaissance and the Reformation. On Friday of this week, July 29, the inaugural lecture on the Renaissance generally was to be delivered by Mr. J. A. Symonds. The artistic side of the movement is to be treated by Mr. Walter Pater, and the architectural side by Mr. Jackson; while Prof. Edward Dowden, Mr. Churton Collins, Mr. Sidney Lee, and Mr. R. G. Moulton will lecture on the literature of the sixteenth century. During the second fortnight of the meeting, regular courses of instruction will be given in botany, geology, chemistry, and biology; and we may further mention a special course of twelve lectures by Mr. Burd on "The Prince of Machiavelli."

THE sixth summer meeting of vacation studies at Edinburgh, promoted by Prof. Geddes, will also open next week, and will be continued, in two parts, throughout the month of August. A new feature of this year is a section of education, which will comprise: (1) a geographical and technical survey of Edinburgh and the surrounding district; (2) afternoon excursions, alternating with (3) lectures on the teaching of hygiene and physiology; and (4) evening lectures by specialists on the problems of technical education. Prof. Haddon, of Dublin, will conduct a course on anthropology, with an anthropometric laboratory; and Mr. R. G. Moulton will deliver a series of lectures on literature. It is also hoped that, as last year, some eminent foreigners may be able to be present—such as Prof. Haeckel, Dr. Grosse (of Freiburg), Prof. Yung (of Geneva), and Dr. De Varigny (of Paris).

THE council of University College, London, has appointed Mr. Henry Higgs to be New-march lecturer in statistics for the ensuing year, in succession to Prof. F. Y. Edgeworth.

MR. A. H. LEAHY, of Pembroke College, Cambridge, has been elected to the vacant chair of mathematics at Firth College, Sheffield.

THE lectures for the Michaelmas term, 1892, at University Hall, Gordon-square, are now arranged. Mr. Wicksted, the warden, will lecture on Dante's "Purgatory" on Monday afternoons and evenings. The Rev. Brook Herford will give a popular account of the different schools of liberal religious thought in America on Tuesday evenings; and Mr. Graham Wallas will re-deliver his lectures on the British citizen, which have already excited interest at the various London centres of the Society for the Extension of University Teaching, on Thursday evenings. Mr. Wicksteed will also continue his Sunday afternoon lectures on the religious literature of the Old Testament.

THE late Dr. G. Y. Heath has by his will bequeathed £5000 to endow a chair of comparative pathology in the University College for Medicine at Newcastle-on-Tyne, which is affiliated to Durham University; £6000 to provide residences for students; and £4000 to found a Heath scholarship, to be awarded each alternate year for an essay on some surgical subject.

WE quote the following from the New York Critic:

"At Columbia College, in the department of literature, Prof. George E. Woodberry will offer next year a new course on the 'History and Methods of Literary Criticism; Aristotle, Horace, Quintilian, Sidney, Boileau, Lessing, Coleridge'; and Prof. Prander Matthews will accompany it with a course on the 'Development of Prose Fiction,' in which he will discuss the beginnings of the story-teller's art, and take up in turn all the masterpieces of the novel in Spain, France, England, and Germany. The trustees have purchased from M. Struve, former director of the National Observatory at Pulkowa, Russia, his fine library of astronomical and physical works, containing 4361 bound and unbound books and 3056 pamphlets. M. Struve has offered to give to the collection all the works he may receive up to the time of his death."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A DYING NORSEMAN.

A.D. 1037.

What can these new gods give me?
I have Odin and Thor,
Odin, the wise old father;
Great Thor, the mighty in war.
There are gods enough in Valhalla,
And to me they ever gave ear,
Speak no more of your white Christ,
We want no strange gods here.
This new god, he cannot give me
Once more the arm of the strong,
Strong arm that hath failed me never,
Though the fight were stubborn and long.
Can he give me again the glory of youth?
Go down with me to the sea,
And harry the shore of Britain;
Ah! never more shall I see
The white sails spreading their wings,
Each spring, as we left our home,
And day by day drew southward,
I can almost feel the foam.

* * * * *
But now all is past and over,
I know that naught can avail.
The gods in Valhalla have spoken.
I go; and your white Christ pale
He cannot bring back for one instant
The glorious days that are past.
Then why should I turn from Odin and Thor,
And be false as a woman at last?

FLORENCE PEACOCK.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE first (July) number of the second volume of L'Art et l'Idée has a striking frontispiece by M. Vallotton after Giovanni Bellini's "Blind Fortune," and opens with an article illustrated both in and out of text with some hitherto unpublished examples of Victor Hugo's remarkable and already to some extent known skill at pen and pencil drawing. There are some "Paradoxes Esthétiques," by M. de Saint Hilaire; and an extremely amusing defence of symbolism in "Symbolisme," by M. Remy de Gourmont. If this is a parody, it is delightful; if it is serious, it is more delightful still. The derangement of epitaphs about the "théories d'art qui furent en ces pénultièmes jours vagies" would charm the heart of the Limousin scholar, and attract admiration from Sir Thomas Urquhart.

THE Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for June opens with a catalogue of much historical value, by J. Hervás and F. Galiano, of the MSS. of the Convent of Calatrava, now in the Archives of Ciudad-Real. They date from 1158 to 1462, and treat chiefly of the possessions and of donations made to the Order. Among the former are the quicksilver mines of Almadén. Goods from the Jews are first mentioned in 1338; one of the last entries refers to the seizure of "unas mozas esclavas" belonging to a knight of Santiago. Father Fita continues his illustrations from unpublished sources of the early ecclesiastical history of Spanish America, correcting the errors of previous writers, and establishing the succession of bishops in St. Domingo. He has also an instructive review of Campaner's "Indicador Manuel de la Numismática Española," which covers the whole ground of Spanish numismatics. A new and rich find of prehistoric remains at Valdegeña (Soria) is described by F. B. Delgado and J. Villanova. They are partly palæolithic and partly neolithic; the skeletons crumbled so that no perfect skull was preserved, but good engravings of the jaws and of the instruments found are given. In the "Noticias," Fernandez Duro accepts and confirms the discovery lately made by Señor Uhagon in the Archives of the Military Orders that Saona (Savona?), near Genoa, is the birthplace of Columbus.

"WHERE WARREN HASTINGS RESTS."

THIS is the rather fanciful title of the July number of the Journal of Indian Art and Industry (Bernard Quaritch), which, like other extra issues of the series, we owe to the suggestion of Sir George Birdwood. It appears that Sir Charles Lawson contributed an article to the Madras Mail upon the church and house of Daylesford. Being encouraged to continue his researches, he has now reissued them in the present form, which is somewhat inconvenient for consultation, together with thirteen plates of Mr. Griggs's marvellously cheap photographic reproductions.

No other name in Anglo-Indian history—not even that of Clive—exercises such a fascination as Warren Hastings. Within the last ten years as many books have appeared either wholly or mainly devoted to the elucidation of his career. Among the latter class we place not lowest in value Dr. Busted's Echoes from Old Calcutta, which, by the way, was not published (as here stated in a footnote) by Messrs. Macmillan, but by Messrs. Thacker & Co. Sir Charles Lawson has to some extent followed Dr. Busted's plan, of collecting contemporary documents about his hero, and describing the places with which his name is associated. In this case, however, the scene is not laid in India, but in the secluded village near which Hastings first saw the light, and to which he retired to end his days.

The house still stands at Churchill, in Oxfordshire, just within the county boundary, where Hastings was born in 1732. Daylesford House in Worcestershire, which he built on his return from India, remains very much as it was when he died there in 1818. Some of his oriental pictures are to this day to be seen on the walls, though the property long since passed away from his family. The modest church of Daylesford—which, in his eighty-third year, he restored with careful consideration for its "Saxon architecture"—has unfortunately been superseded by a modern Gothic edifice, on the plea that the village population of one hundred and odd souls required more ample accommodation. But Hastings was himself buried in the churchyard, just as Lord Beaconsfield lies outside the church at Hughenden. Of all these buildings Sir Charles Lawson has given illustrations.

Hastings left no issue, and the line of his wife's children has also become extinct. But the family traditions and some shreds of the family property are still preserved in two separate quarters, from both of which Sir Charles Lawson has been able to glean information. The only sister of Hastings married a Woodman, whose son married a niece of Mrs. Hastings; and the grandson yet survives, bearing the names of Warren Hastings Woodman-Hastings. A grand-niece of Mrs. Hastings is also living, to whom have descended not only family portraits and other interesting relics, but the small estate of Stubbill, in Gloucestershire, which belonged to the Warrens. Our author (on p. 12) tells the true story about Penyston, the father of Warren Hastings, which was first made known by the present writer in the ACADEMY (February 23 and April 27, 1889); and he may claim to have discovered the maiden name of Mrs. Hastings. Of this lady, better known as the Baroness Imhoff, all that Macaulay could say was "a native, we have somewhere read, of Archangel." Sir Charles describes her, apparently on authority, as "Marie Anne von Chapuset, whose family (ennobled in Germany) is believed to have emigrated from France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes." These Christian names, however, can hardly be correct. Hastings, in his will (here printed in full) calls her "Anna Maria Apollonia"; and it is so on her son's tombstone. His name for her in his love-letters is always "My Marian." She signs herself simply "M. A. Hastings."

Sir Charles Lawson has perhaps printed too much of Hastings's poetry, in disregard of the anticipatory warning given by Macaulay; and his description of the contents of Daylesford House savours of the auctioneer's catalogue, from which it is confessedly taken. His recital, too, of public events is not always quite satisfactory. But all students of biography will feel grateful to him for the pains he has taken in recovering forgotten personal details about the most eminent figure in our Indian annals.

With regard to the illustrations, Mr. Griggs's process is unrivalled for reproducing the brilliant colours and gold of oriental illuminations, as in the last double-page plate. The facsimiles of documents are also admirably done. The photograph of Flaxman's fine statue in the India Office is a failure.

J. S. C.

THE NEW TEACHING UNIVERSITY FOR LONDON.

WE are asked to publish the following Memorandum, which has been drawn up by the Committee formed last January to oppose the Gresham scheme, and has been laid before the Royal Commissioners:—

"(1) The Council.—This should include, in addition to nominees of the crown, a representation of (a) the teaching staff of the university; (b) institutions in London giving teaching of university rank, including the women's colleges; (c) learned institutions, such as the Medical Colleges, the Royal Society, the British Museum, and the Inns of Court; (d) the municipal authorities of London—viz., the City Corporation, the County Council (from both of which a considerable endowment ought to be obtained), and the School Board; (c) the graduates, including those of the existing University of London.

"(2) The Faculties.—The professors and other teachers of the University should be grouped into faculties, with such consultative and administrative powers as shall be determined by the Council: the examiners of the University to be members of the faculties ex officio.

"(3) The Teaching Staff.—For a teaching university which is to be worthy of the name, it is clear that a strong professoriate, with a sufficient staff of lecturers and demonstrators, is indispensable; and the absence of any such provision was a fatal weakness in the late Gresham charter. (a) The appointment of university teachers should be vested in all cases not in the colleges, but in the crown or in the University itself, either directly through the council or through electing boards appointed for the purpose. Some members of the university staff might, however, be attached to existing teaching institutions, certain members of the teaching staffs of these institutions being selected by the University to be given the status of university professors, provided always that the appointment to such chairs should pass to the University. (b) With reference to the suggestion put forward by the Association for Promoting a Professorial University, that the University should 'absorb' institutions of academic rank in London: while we recognise the advantage to the University of obtaining possession of existing college buildings, plant, &c., it is necessary to insist that for the University to depend wholly or chiefly (if this is what is intended) on the college staffs and on the college endowments cannot be accepted as a satisfactory settlement. For the necessity of an independent university professoriate, which involves an independent endowment, is paramount, and nothing less will meet with public approval or public support. (c) Admitting the necessity of centralising the University for certain purposes, with its own lecture rooms, laboratories, and library, nevertheless the teaching of the University, including that of the professors, should not be entirely concentrated in one or two centres or colleges, but be given at any such approved localities as the educational requirements of the metropolis may demand; for, in the words of Bishop Westcott before the late Commission, 'the area of London is so large and the population so various that I can scarcely imagine that colleges alone would be able to deal with the whole of it.' (d) In this connexion it is necessary to specially emphasise, as other memorialists have done, the importance of making full provision for the instruction of evening students, who constitute in London a class not less important than the day students, and to whose interests an excessive centralisation of the University would be fatal.

"(4) Public Funds.—If the University is to do any considerable work, there must be liberal assistance from public sources—such as the Consolidated Fund, the County Council Funds, the City Companies, and the City Parochial Charities. For the cost of higher education can never be defrayed out of the payments of the students, nor are the college endowments, even if available, sufficient for the purpose.

"(5) Degrees and Examinations.—It can hardly be doubted that the establishment of two universities in London would be prejudicial to both, and to the best interests of education. The remodelling, therefore, of the existing University of London (as recommended by the late Royal Commission) can alone lead to a satisfactory solution of the problem. In that case the imperial character of the London degree must of course be maintained, and the examinations remain open to all comers. On the other hand, it is important to insist that if the University is to be in reality the teaching university for London, some security should be taken that students resident in London shall as a general rule pass through courses of university instruction in preparation for the degree, as is the case at present, not only at the Scotch and German universities, but also (through the college system) at Oxford and Cambridge.

"(6) Degrees in Theology.—One special point of great importance remains to be stated—the desirability of empowering the University to confer degrees in theology. There is reason to believe that this proposal would be supported by both Church of England and Nonconformist colleges, provided always that the examinations are confined to the testing of knowledge and are in no way concerned with the religious opinions of the candidates.

"CHARLES S. ROUNDALL, Chairman.
"J. SPENCER HILL, Hon. Sec."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOURGET, C. du. Campagnes modernes (1792—1892), et géographie politique de l'Afrique contemporaine. Paris: Baudouin. 5 fr.
EYSENHARDT, F. Mittheilungen aus der Stadtbibliothek zu Hamburg. IX. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 40 Pf.
KUNZ, H. Der Bürgerkrieg in Chile. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 5 M.
PARDILLAN, P. de. L'Armée allemande telle qu'elle est en 1892. Paris: Charles-Lavauzelle. 3 fr. 50 c.
SITTL, C. Die Phineusschale u. ähnlidre Vasen m. bemalten Flachreliefs. Würzburg: Stahel. 1 M.

THEOLOGY.

- BOUSSET, W. Jesu Predigten in ihrem Gegensatz zum Judentum. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 2 M. 40 Pf.
HAIN, G. L. Das Evangelium d. Lucas, erklärt. I. Bd. 2. u. 3. Lfg. Breslau: Morgenstern. 8 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- CHASSIN, C. L. La préparation de la guerre de Vendée 1789—1793. Paris: Dupont. 30 fr.
DUNCAN, H. Anhalts Bekenntnisstand während der Vereinigung der Fürstentümer unter Joachim Ernst u. Johann Georg (1570—1606). Nachwort-Dessau: Baumann. 1 M.
FIALA, E. Beschreibung böhmischer Münzen u. Medaillen. 1. Bd. Prag: Haerpfer. 10 M.
JACOB, G. Studien in Arabischen Geographen. 3. Hft. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M.
JELLINCK, G. System der subjektiven öffentlichen Rechte. Freiburg-i.-B.: Mohr. 8 M.
LOHRE, F. V. Kulturgeschichte der Deutschen im Mittelalter. 2. Bd. Frankezeit. München: Mehrlich. 9 M. 50 Pf.
OPITZ, W. Die Schlacht bei Breitenfeld am 17. Septbr., 1631. Leipzig: Deichert. 2 M.
PANDIK, A. De Cei insulae rebus. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 3 M. 60 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BACHMANN, P. Vorlesungen üb. die Natur der Irrationalzahlen. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
CANTOR, M. Vorlesungen üb. Geschichte der Mathematik. 2. Bd. Von 1200—1608. 2. Thl. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
DREGER, J. Die Gastropoden v. Häring bei Kirchbühl in Tirol. Wien: Hölder. 4 M.
KITTL, E. Die Gastropoden der Schichten v. St. Cassian der süd-alpinen Trias. 2. Thl. Wien: Hölder. 8 M.
KRAUSE, K. Ch. F. Anfangsgründe d. Erkenntnislehre. Leipzig: Schulze. 4 M. 50 Pf.
PFEIFFER, R. Beiträge zur Protozoenforchung. 1. Hft. Berlin: Hirschwald. 10 M.
STOLTE, H. Entwicklungserscheinungen der Naturvölker. Wien: Holder. 4 M.
TAUBERT, E. Die Sulfosäuren der beiden Naphty lamine u. der beiden Naphtole. Berlin: Gaertner. 3 M. 60 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- DINGELDEIN, O. Der Reim bei den Griechen u. Römern. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M.
FORSTEMANN, E. Zur Entzifferung der Mayahandschriften. Dresden: Bertling. 4 M.
FRITZSCHE, R. Quaestiones Lucanae. Gotha: Burov. 1 M.
JOANNIS GEOMETRAE carmen de S. Panteleemone, integrum ed. L. Stenbach. Krakau. 3 M.
MARCHOT, P. Phonologie détaillée d'un patois wallon. Paris: Bouillon. 3 fr.
MÖLKEN, H. In commentarium de bello africano quaestiones criticae. Jena: Pohle. 1 M. 50 Pf.
PHILODEMUS volumina rhetorica ed. S. Sudhaus. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
WESSELY, R. Ueb. den Gebrauch der Casus in Albrechts v. Eyb deutschen Schriften. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "EDINBURGH REVIEW" AND SEMITIC SCHOLARSHIP.

Trinity College, Cambridge: July 26, 1892.

In the April number of the Edinburgh Review there appeared an article on "Semitic Religions" by a writer who dogmatised with great confidence about various obscure subjects, but who at every moment betrayed his incapacity by blunders such as no scholar, whatever his opinions, could possibly commit. Had this been all, nothing need have been said. But in the July number of this same review, we find an article, entitled "Wellhausen on the History of Israel," which, if not by the same writer, is at all events worthy of him. How many more of these compositions are still to follow it is impossible to guess; but in view of their continuation, it appears to me desirable to make a few remarks in the pages of the ACADEMY. My object is not of course to defend Prof. Wellhausen, whose reputation may well be left to take care of itself, but to warn the literary public against what I cannot help regarding as a grave imposture. Ordinary readers, who know little of Oriental history and still less of Oriental philology, have no means of distinguishing accurate statements on such topics from statements which are wildly inaccurate, and they very naturally assume that any one who talks glibly about Assyrian, Phœnician, Moabite, &c., is really acquainted with those languages. That the Reviewer believes himself competent to set Orientalists right, is quite possible; but he does not seem to have realised that, before we venture to criticise the conclusions of scientific men, we must take the trouble to learn the elements of the subject at issue. A man who could not construe the Iliad would justly be ridiculed if he were to publish acrimonious pamphlets on the Homeric question. That the Edinburgh Reviewer is in a precisely similar situation appears from the following statements.

In the article on Wellhausen (pp. 73, 74), the Reviewer finds fault with the German critic for not mentioning certain "archaic forms" which occur in the Pentateuch:

"Two cases," he says, "are very well known in Genesis. The first is the use of what was, in later times, the masculine pronoun of the third person, but which the earlier writer used for both genders."

Had the Reviewer known anything of Hebrew philology, he would have been aware that what he here puts forward as "very well known" is pronounced utterly untenable, not only by foreign scholars, such as Nöldeke, Kuenen, and Delitzsch, but also by Wright (Lectures on the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages, p. 104), and by Driver (Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel, p. xxxiii, Note 2).

On p. 76 we find a still more astounding assertion:

"The nobles of Jerusalem were not obliged to learn their Aramaic abroad, for they must have heard it among the peasantry of the country, who were mainly of Canaanite extraction, while in Moab it was the court language of the royal inscriptions."

As the Reviewer elsewhere (p. 59) states that there is "nothing to show" that Wellhausen has specially studied Moabite,* it would have been prudent in him to conceal the fact that he knows nothing of Moabite himself. The inscription of king Mesha, which is all that remains of the Moabite language, is no more written in Aramaic than the Pentateuch or the book of Isaiah. Nöldeke, who in 1870 published a facsimile of this inscription with an elaborate commentary, speaks of its language thus:

"The language of this inscription scarcely differs from that of the Old Testament; the only important distinction is the occurrence of a reflexive form (with t after the first radical), which appears nowhere else but in Arabic." (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 9th ed., Art. "Semitic Languages.")

On p. 78 the Reviewer inquires whether the practice of compiling books by piecing together older works, with additions and modi-

* The Reviewer has, of course, never seen the fifth edition of Bleek's Einleitung in das Alte Testament, in which Wellhausen minutely examines the orthographical peculiarities of Moabite writing (p. 585, et seq.). "There is nothing to show" means, therefore, "I am not aware."

fictions, is not "a method peculiar to the modern book-maker." Further on he says, "If we consider the literary history of other Semitic books, we do not find that editing played a part in their composition." Such assertions imply the grossest ignorance of the Semitic literatures. The practice "peculiar to the modern book-maker" was the universal practice of the Arabic historians: this we know from their own statements, for example from the preface of Ibn Hisham to his famous Life of Mahommed, written more than 1,000 years ago.

On p. 79 we are informed that "the Assyrians, when they copied their ancient tablets, were most careful to secure accuracy." Against this assertion of the anonymous Reviewer, it is enough to quote the words of an eminent Assyriologist, the late George Smith:

"I must remark on the want of accuracy sometimes found in these inscriptions. Most, if not all, of the Assyrian characters are polyphones. In copying their documents the Assyrians sometimes mistook the phonetic value of the characters in foreign names, and when a mistake once crept in it was copied into the new documents. Mistakes also arose from some of the characters being nearly alike," &c.—(See Von Gutschmid's Neue Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Orients, p. 11.)

It would be easy to multiply examples of the Reviewer's ignorance and recklessness, but these, in my opinion, are quite sufficient. In conclusion, I would ask readers of the ACADEMY to consider whether the editor of a review who publishes virulent attacks upon well-known living authors, without demanding any proof whatever of the competence of the assailant, is or is not discharging his duty to the public.

A. A. BEVAN.

NOTES ON HERODAS.

*Cambridge: July 23, 1892.

II. 6. ἀξίω (if written closely like καλῶσαι).

II. 7. I now find in the Facsimile ἰφθισιν. For σι, almost identical with ο, cf. εἰσι in I. 10. Read ἦς εἰμί, φθισιν, ἀσπὶς ἡράσθη χάρις. "The saying runs, I love the land in which I am a dweller." Cf. πατρίς ἡ Βύσσκουσα γῆ.

II. 8. μέν is probably right: φίλος μὲν εἴ τίς ἐστι.

II. 9. I had not seen Mr. Headlam's restoration (καὶ ὥμεν οὐκ ὥς), which is undoubtedly the true one. Read κῆμέας (κμεας with η written above) δεινὸς ἔλκειν, the proper name being incomplete. The gloss νέμειν, as well as the construction, points to ἔλκειν. The construction is decisive against νέμειν in the first foot (Bücheler) or in the fifth foot (i.e., μιν written in the gap and corrected in the margin; besides νε would have been written above μιν), so that, e.g., νόμος προσέλκει. νέμειν may be dismissed.

II. 12. ἀδρανῆς.

II. 13. ης. ταα. So I read: cf. the τα in V. 85. If this is right, the third letter must be ε or ο. If ε, we might read ἀδρησε τὰ αἰκία . . . μέμνησθε (?) τοῦτων. But I fancy that it is ο. I propose θαλῆς δ τὰ οἰκία . . . ἐξ αὐθένος δρῶν. For the form αἰκία cf. αἰκισίη in 16. ταῦτα, because the offences were recited in the plaint.

II. 15. εἰ δ' ἔχει, i.e., Thales, and ἐγὼ (Bücheler) seem right; so, too, Bücheler's δεδωμένοι. But I do not understand it. I do not think it goes closely with the following verse (i.e., "have given to my patron and the people"), or had an accusative of its own in 16. I should have expected τεθώμασμαι or the like.

II. 16. I read . . . ὦρ . . . ν. The tail of the ρ appears in the detached fragment. Hence καὶ δαρῆν <πρῶν>, the last word omitted by παρα-blepsia, due to the two η's: cf. VII. 105, I. 31, IV. 61. At the close of the line (α. τ.) perhaps ἔδωκα (or ἐνεμα) δοταῖς is possible: "to any qualified as residents." But the article is much wanted.

II. 18. δ δ' ἦγε πόντας ἐκ Τύρου τί . . . δέδωκε; the pimp and the merchant reversed their parts. περὶ is not necessary, if my reading of 16 be correct; and I think the Facsimile is in favour of ο.

II. 20. καλὴν κινεῖν, Bücheler. Rightly, I think; for α is written over the final η.

I. 8? ἐπῶρο'.

I. 82. Read οὐ στύγους' ἡμί[as]. Here σ (on the same level as οὐ) τ . . . ους ημι seem certain, and γ probable. στύγειν is used by Herodotus.

V. 30. The note is obscure. I meant that ὄνομαί may have been treated as a thematic verb, cf. ὄνεσθε (this form, however, is rejected by modern editors); or that ὄνη may have been used on analogy of δένη.

VII. 43. I now think that Diels is right.

F. D.

THE ORIGIN OF "FATHER" CHRISTMAS.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: July 2, 1892.

In the course of a note on a curious old Anglo-Norman drinking song in the current number of Romania (Tom. xxi., pp. 260-3), M. Gaston Paris incidentally draws attention to the personification of "Noël" (=Christmas); the usage, he says, still survives in the familiar "Bonhomme Noël" of French children.

Our "Father Christmas" is doubtless descended from the same source. At any rate, the personification of Christmas was familiar to our forefathers, as is evident from the Noël Anglo-Normand, printed by M. Paul Meyer in his Recueil d'anciens textes (2^e Partie, p. 382), in which the expression "danz" (=dominus) Noël" frequently occurs. I subjoin four of the six stanzas of this song, showing how the feast of "Lord Nowell" was kept in the olden time:—

"Seignors, or entendez a nus;
De loing sumes venuz a vous
Quere Noël,
Car l'em nus dit que en cest hostel
Soleit tenir sa feste anuel
A hiecit jur.
Deus doint a tuz cels joie d'amurs
Qui a danz Noël ferunt honors!"

"Seignors, jo vus di ben por veir
Que danz Noël ne velt avoir
Si joie non,
E replenic sa maison
De pain, de char e de peison
Por faire honor.
Deus doint, &c.

Noël beyt bien le vin engleis
Et le gascois e le franceys
Et l'angevin;
Noël fait bevere son veisin
Si qu'il se dort le chief enclin
Sovent le jor.
Deus doint, &c.

"Seignors, jo vus di par Noël
E par le sire de cest hostel:
Car bevez ben!
E jo primes beverai le men,
E puis après chescun le soon,
Par mon conseil:
Si jo vus di trestoz: W'essey!
Dehaiz qui ne dira: Drincheyl!"

PAGET TOYNBEE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Aug. 1. 4 p.m. Victoria Institute: Address by Lord Halsbury.

SCIENCE.

"MODERN SCIENCE."—Ethnology in Folklore.
By G. L. Gomme. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

MR. GOMME starts with the assumption that the pre-Aryan peoples of Europe may be traced not only by their flint implements and long barrows, by their cephalic indices, or the colour of their hair, but by those survivals of beliefs and practices which go by the name of Folklore. That such survivals should exist is intrinsically probable, but the possibility, in the present state of our knowledge, of anything approaching to strict proof, is highly problematical. As might be expected, Mr. Gomme's book is not lacking in painstaking research; and if we are compelled to affirm that his arguments seem to us somewhat inconclusive, the fault lies not so much with the author as with the insoluble nature of the problems he has attacked.

On p. 14 Mr. Gomme gives us the premises on which his reasoning is based. The Aryans, he admits, were descended from savage ancestors; but he believes that the Aryan culture extinguished the primitive savagery, which cannot have survived because the savagery developed into civilisation, and "where development takes place, the originals from which it proceeded disappear in the new forms thus produced. To adopt the terms of the manufactory, the original forms would have been all used up in the process of production."

Hence, he argues that any savage practices found among Aryan peoples must be due to contact with savage non-Aryan aborigines whose lands they occupied. He "puts forward this important proposition, without hesitation, as a sound conclusion." The fallacy of this argument can be easily exposed. It assumes that Aryan culture advanced pari passu in all localities. To take one of Mr. Gomme's own illustrations, Orkney witches, of Scandinavian lineage, sell winds to sailors; but winds are no longer on sale in the civilised Scandinavian towns of Christiania or Grimsby, where culture has now extinguished the belief in witchcraft. Not so, says Mr. Gomme: we have here a valuable bit of ethnology; the Orkney superstition must have been derived from the pre-Aryan inhabitants. If Mr. Gomme's conclusion is sound, it would be fatal to the Darwinian theory. If some primitive ascidian or tidal monad has developed into the elephant, we should have to believe that all ascidians were destroyed in the process of evolution, and the existence of elephants would render incredible the existence of ascidians.

Mr. Gomme has not got rid of the old exploded fallacy about the "noble Aryan race." With him Teutons and Celts are alike Aryans by race, whereas the old Teutonic and the old Celtic skulls are an indication that the connexion is merely linguistic, and not racial. He also assumes some mysterious bond of savagery between all peoples of non-Aryan speech, forgetting that the oldest civilisations were of non-Aryan origin. He draws a parallel, not, however, very close, between certain customs practised in Europe, and by non-Aryan tribes in Asia; and as these practices do not belong to the Aryans in Asia, "they do not, therefore, by legitimate conclusion, belong to the Aryans in Europe" (p. 40). Thus in Sumatra, Borneo, New Zealand, Western Africa, and elsewhere, the heads of fallen enemies are exposed on poles. This practice is, therefore, a non-Aryan practice; and when we find it, as we do, in Aryan lands, it is pronounced to be a survival from the times of pre-

Aryan savagery. After the '45, the heads of the Jacobite lords were stuck on poles over Temple Bar; therefore, if Mr. Gomme's argument is legitimate, our Hanoverian kings must have inherited from pre-Aryan aborigines this non-Aryan propensity for placing the heads of their slain enemies on poles. The heads of sheep and buffaloes are ceremonially treated by Indian Pariahs; hence Mr. Gomme concludes (p. 35) that certain English ceremonies connected with heads of boars and stags are non-Aryan. The ceremonial entrance of the boar's head at certain college gaudies is therefore a valuable ethnological survival from the pre-Aryan savagery of Britain. Human sacrifice has prevailed in Borneo, Fiji, Dahomey, Mexico, Peru, Japan, and China; it is therefore a non-Aryan practice, and therefore, when practised by the Homeric Greeks, by Caesar's Gauls, by Scotch and Irish Celts, by Schliemann's Mycenaean kings, by the Romans, by the Wends in the time of St. Boniface, by Scandinavians, Iranians, or Brahmans of purest Aryan blood, and by all the Teutonic tribes, it is a custom acquired from pre-Aryan savages. Mr. Gomme does not see that he is on the horns of a dilemma. In Sweden, Norway, and Iceland, human sacrifice was practised by the Scandinavians, the purest race in Europe. They were either Aryans or not. If Aryans by blood, then human sacrifice was an Aryan practice; if they were not Aryans, then many of Mr. Gomme's savage survivals in Britain may be of Teutonic origin, and not as he contends, obtained from pre-Aryan races.

Nakedness, especially ceremonial nudity at sacred festivals, is, according to Mr. Gomme, a sign of pre-Aryan savagery, being found among certain Indian Pariahs and elsewhere; therefore, he concludes, the Godiva story is pre-Aryan. So also must be all the Greek gymnastic exercises, as well as the Olympian foot-race, in which the competitors ran unclad. Such practices in India are non-Aryan, "therefore by legitimate conclusion they do not belong to the Aryans of Europe." Mr. Gomme thinks "it is a reasonable argument to affirm that witchcraft is the lineal descendant of Druidism" (p. 62), while Druidism, witchcraft, and demonism are, he thinks, allied beliefs; and therefore since "the demonism of India is non-Aryan in origin, and produced by contact between Aryans and aborigines, the witchcraft of Europe must be equally non-Aryan in origin and produced by contact between Aryans and aborigines" (p. 53). It follows that the laws of Justinian and Constantine against witchcraft, the Canon law and the Decretals of the Popes, the 72nd Canon of the Anglican Church, the sermons of Cotton Mather, and the execution in 1691 of nineteen witches in New England, are all ultimately due to the non-Aryan aborigines of Europe. Among other things which we are told are of pre-Aryan origin is the use of two stones for grinding corn (p. 178), the erection of stone pillars (e.g., Trajan's column and the Nelson monument) and megalithic structures. Does Mr. Gomme suppose that the megaliths in Sweden with runic inscriptions are pre-Aryan, or that Stonehenge and Avebury could have been constructed by the feeble dolichocephalic folk who preceded the Celtic invaders? The most interesting thing in the book is the discussion on holy wells. Mr. Gomme shows that well worship is characteristic of the Celtic parts of Britain, sacred wells being rare in the more purely Teutonic shires (p. 77). But he does not deal with the offerings to sacred wells among Greeks and Romans, Franks and Alemanni.

The series in which Mr. Gomme's book appears is edited by Sir John Lubbock, who, in one of his early books, observed that the application of folklore to solve ethnological problems "requires to be used with great caution, and has, in fact, led to many erroneous conclusions. Much careful study will therefore be required before this class of evidence can be used with safety." Mr. Gomme's book proves that this caution, which he quotes with approval, is not less needful now than it was twenty years ago.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON SOME PRĀKRIT AND PĀLI WORDS.

Harold Wood, Essex.

1. Prākṛit "atthaggha" = Sanskrit "a-sthāgha, a-sthāgha."

On the authority of Hemacandra's Abhidhāna-cintamāni, 1070, the Petersburg Dictionary registers asthāgha, asthāgha, asthāgha "very deep." Tarkavacāspati, in his Comprehensive Sanskrit Dictionary, recognises only asthāgha = "atigabhira," and asthāgha = "agādha."

These forms have, so far as I am aware, received no satisfactory explanation as regards their etymological relationship to any authenticated Sanskrit root.

It is well known that Sanskrit dictionaries admit many pure Prākṛit words, some of which still survive in the modern dialects of India. It is also certain that the old compilers of Koṣas often "reset" or sanskritised Prākṛit forms which were adopted by the Hindu lexicographers as true Sanskrit words, though their etymology could not be satisfactorily traced.

Hemacandra, for instance, uses parishaha (Sthavirāvalīcārīta, xii. 19; xiii. 83) as the Sanskrit representative of the Jaina-Prākṛit parissaha or parissaha, which is identical with Pāli parissaya, and has no connexion with the radicle sah. He is probably the coiner of asthāgha, and we must look for its origin in Hemacandra's list of Prākṛit or Deçī words. The line in the Abhidhānacintamāni—"asthāghāsthāghamusthāghamagādham cātalaṣṭriṇi"—has some resemblance to the following passage in Hemacandra's Deçīnāmamālā, i. 54: "atthagghamatthāghamagādham . . . atthagghamatthāham itī ca pratyekamagādhadishuo trishu." To sanskritise atthaggha and atthāgha, the combination tth would naturally be turned into sth or st; hence the Sanskrit forms asthāgha and asthāgha.* The long vowel is sometimes shortened in Prākṛit by doubling the following consonant, as diyyha for dīgha or dīha, Sanskrit dirgha, &c., so that atthaggha and atthāgha (or asthāgha) are merely variants from the same root, used in the sense of "agādha."

Atthaggha is the negative of thaggha = "gādha," which occurs in H. D. v. 24; Pāyāl. 249. For thāha see Setu. viii. 40 (note), and Index, pp. 164, 254; Pāyāl. 249.

* European Sanskritists sometimes fail in endeavouring to restore a Prākṛit word. Dr. Pischel suggests prasthā as the source of patthayana (Pāyāl. 155), "food for a journey;" but it stands for patthayana*, from Sanskrit pāthya, Pāli pātheyya.

Thāha and thaggha=thāgha=thaigha, from the root thagh, which appears in the Prākṛit verb utthagghai (H. P. iv. 36, 146; Setu., p. 192), and has been referred by S. Goldschmidt to the root stambh, through the intermediate forms thambh, thābh, thāgh (Pracritica, pp. 4, 5). The root rudh becomes ruh, rumh*; and Sanskrit āsamedā, "wish," appears in Prākṛit as āsaiṅghā, through āsamlā* āsaiṅhā*. We have a noun utthaggha (in Setu. vi. 43) = "uttambha," with which we may compare utthaggha = "sammarda" (H. D. i. 93). In Gāidavaha we find utthagghana explained in the Commentary by "uttambhana."

From the evidence here adduced, the derivation of Sanskrit asthāgha and asthāgha is no longer a puzzle. They are based on the Prākṛit words atthāgha and atthāgha. Hemacandra cites thāha, which occurs in Pāyāl. 268, in the sense of thādha = thaddha = staddha. Thāha probably is for thādha = thuddha = studdha from stubbh* = stabh*. We also find niththāha = nīstaddha.

2. Osiṅghai from the root "Çriṅgh."

Osiṅgha (Hem. Deçī. 163) = osiṅghiya (Pāyāl. 177) = "ghrāta." Prof. Pischel suggests a connexion with Sanskrit avajighrati, but this would become o-ayghia (H. D. 163), cf. ā-iggha = āghrā (H. P. iv. 13). Prākṛit o, as a verbal prefix, usually represents Sanskrit ava- (or apa-); but it occasionally stands for upa-, as in osariya = upasariya (Pāyāl. 195).

The Prākṛit osiṅghai corresponds to an older upasiṅghati, a verb not unfrequently found in Pāli (see Jāt. ii., p. 408; iii., p. 308), in which we also meet with the uncompounded form siṅghāmi = ghāyāmi, "I sniff at, or smell": "ārā siṅghāmi variṅam" (Jāt. iii., p. 308, v. 118).

Prof. Whitney, in his "Sanskrit Roots," gives çriṅgh "to snuff," but evidently regards it as one of the many unauthenticated roots to be found in the Dhātupāṭha. The P. W. cites upa-çriṅgh "to kiss," on the authority of the Bhattacharyya, and adds nothing materially to Westergaard's information as to çriṅgh and its derivatives.

Osiṅghai is a Deçī form of a derivative from a Prākṛit root siṅgh, which has been sanskritised into çriṅgh by the old Hindu lexicographers. Hemacandra (Deçī. iv. 37) has the passive participle siṅghia = (siṅghita) = "ghrāta." The double forms siṅghita and siṅghita seem to point to an older Sanskrit root çriṅgh "to sniff at." Pāṇini has the allied root çriṅkh "to sneeze," from which çriṅkhānikā + nihçriṅkhana, in the law book of Āpastambya, are derived (see "Sacred Books of the East," vol. ii., pt. i., Int., p. xli.).

Pāli undoubtedly helps to throw some light on allied Prākṛit forms. In Pāyāl. 187 we find uppuniya "winnowed," as if from Sanskrit utpā. The true reading is probably opuniya, from avapā. In Pāli we find opunāti "to winnow" (see Journal of the Pāli Text Society, 1887). Prākṛit addā "a mirror" = adda = Pāli ādāsa = Sanskrit ādārca. Prākṛit unnāliya = unnāmīta "bent upwards," occurs in Pāyāl. 180, and is another form of ullāliya, from the root lal with ud (see H. P. iv. 36), where ullāl is given as a substitute for unām. Pāli has unnala "lifted up, proud." For the change of l to n compare Sanskrit lalāta and Pāli nalāta.

3. Dhagadghag.

In the Sthavirāvalīcārīta, xi. 156, Hemacandra uses an onomatopoeic word, not in the Petersburg Dictionary, but quotable from

* Cf. Sanskrit çriṅghni "the nose" (†) Sometimes written çriṅghānikā, siṅghānikā, cf. Marāṭhī siṅk "a sneeze"; siṅkhanem "to sneeze", Hindī siṅkani "mucus of the nose."

Prākṛit authorities—dhagaddhag, imitative of the sound made in eating fat :

"Gḥdayanti ca sâ prāpya tatpādaraktapicchilam tam ca khādītum ārebhe kṛitāntasyeva sodarā Cataccatī eā carma trātatrāṭī jaṅgalam dhagaddhagiti modāṇa katakkaṭī kikasam."

Originally dhagaddhag was applied to the sound made by the glowing of a fire, as in Hindi dhagdhagāni "to glitter," dhudhā "blazing"; Marāṭhī dhagdhag "the glowing of a fire"; dhagdhagnem "to glow fiercely as a fire." In Kalpa-sūtra (Jin. § 46) we find the intensive dhagaddhagāya used of a smokeless fire, which Prof. Jacobi translates "crackling" instead of "glowing."

4. Nimmaḥaiya = nir-maghlā.

Some of the so-called unauthenticated roots given in the Dhātupāṭha are most likely to be found in one or other of the Prākṛit idioms. Westergaard cites a root maigh "ire," and Hemacandra (iv. 162) gives nim-maha as one of the substitutes for gam. The Dhātup. has also the root maigh in the sense of "ornure"; and we find in Prākṛit nim-maḥaiya (= nir-maghlā) exhaling perfume (Pāyāl. 199). Compare the intensive maha-maḥai = mahamahāyati (Hāla, 497; Pāyāl. 197; H. P. iv. 78) "to give out a perfume," with Jaina-Prākṛit maghamaghamā (Kalpa-sūtra, § 32, 41).

5. Ohīrai = apahariyati.

In H. P. iv. 12, ohīra is given as a substitute for nīlā. It occurs in Jaina-Prākṛit (Spec. der Nīyā, § 22; Kalpa-sūtra 3, 6).

Ava-hīra or ohīra, in the Index of Words to Hāla's Saptacātaka is referred by Prof. Weber to dhīray. There is no doubt that ohīrai is a passive form, but not from the root dhri.

Trenckner (Pāli Miscellany, p. 78) has shown that Pāli pari-hīrai = parihariyati (see Theragāthā, v. 452), and that samhīrai is the passive of samharati, cf. Pāli asamhāriya (Theragāthā, v. 372) with asamhāra in asamhāram asamkappam cittam āmodayam aham (ib. v. 649). There is no difficulty then in connecting ohīrai with the root hri; but it does not represent Sanskrit avahariyati, but apahariyati, to be overcome (by sleep), hence "to nod, doze." In Setu. xiii. 33 (note 4), S. Goldschmidt suggests apahriyamāna as the original of Prākṛit ohīramāna, but this would produce ohīyamāna.

6. Ahi-ālū = abhikālāti.

Ahi-ālū (H. P. iv. 208) is one of the substitutes for dah "to burn." It seems to represent a Sanskrit abhi-kālā, from the root kāl, the oldest form of which has in the Vedic kālayati the cerebral l. Pāli has only upakālāti (Jāt. i., p. 65).

In H. P. iv. 92, paūla (cf. Pāyāl. pauliya "burnt," and sollā are mentioned as substitutes for √pac. With the former stem Prof. Pischel compares Marāṭhī polanem "to burn, singe, be scorched." This seems to indicate that pa-ūla = paūla = pa-kūla, from the root kāl or kād, with shortening of the original vowel. Sollū occurs in Jaina-Prākṛit in the sense of "pacita," and could be derived from sum-kālita*, through the intermediate forms sum-ālita*, sā-ālita, solita*. Sā- for sum- is not uncommon in Prākṛit before k and h; compare sā-addhai = Pāli sam-kad-dhati (H. P. iv. 187). But in H. D. viii. 44 we find a noun sollam = "somālam māmsam," from Sanskrit gālyā, through sāllā* (cf. Pāli sullā "roasted meat." It is therefore probable that sollū = ṣulākṛita, is formed from the stem sollā, from Sanskrit gālyā "roasted on a spit." In H. D. (ed. Pischel and Bühler, p. 33, l. 12), āhukhāi = dahuti. This verb appears to be another form of ād-hukkhāi* = Sanskrit ād-huksati*. Compare samdhukkāi (H. P. iv. 152)

= Sanskrit sandhukṣati, with loss of aspiration, from the root dhukṣ "to kindle," cf. sandhukhiya (Pāyāl. 16) "shining."

R. MORRIS.

GREEK "ἄνῃ" = LATIN "AQUA."

Indian Institute, Oxford : July 26, 1892.

I am quite prepared to admit that there is an apparent difficulty in equating O. Sax. aha with ehu as Mr. Mayhew has shown; but even granting that O. Sax. aha and O. Norse ā do not represent an Ind. Eur. akua, I do not see why we are bound to assume that they necessarily represent a primitive aqū rather than akū. In fact, if they stood for either, it would more probably be for the latter; since aha and ā would exactly correspond to Skt. asū*, as in Pārnāsī (Pārna-asū) "Ful-brook," Pārnāsī (Pārna-asū) and Vipāsī (Vīpa-asū) by the side of Vipās (Vīpa-as) "the whirling stream," the latter word showing, as clearly as anything can, that as-vā* "water" is compounded of a root as and a suffix -vā. Nevertheless I cannot admit that it is at all necessary to adopt this expedient in order to explain away aha by the side of ehu, since ehu seems clearly to represent an early intermediate stage between aihuwa and eh, while aha represents a later one between aihuwa and (say) -ach. I cannot say that I think it possible to draw a hard-and-fast line in the case of the Teutonic languages between the v which belongs to the -va suffix and that generated from the guttural (cf. Kluge, Nominale Stammbildungslehre d. altgermanischen Dialecte, 1886, § 187).

Lastly, Aswene, Aswenus, the Old Prussian name of the Schweine, a lake and river near Nordenburg, by the side of aswinan "mare's milk" (Nesselmann, Thesaurus Linguae Prussicae, 1873) can scarcely be dissociated from ayna and eynus, Skt. asvā* and asva, Iran. aspi* and aspa, and finally Gk. "ἄσπις" and "ἄσπος."

E. SIBREE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following are the arrangements for the annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, which opens at Edinburgh next week. On Wednesday, August 3, Sir Archibald Geikie, director-general of the Geological Survey, will take the chair, and deliver the usual presidential address. Three public lectures will be given: on Friday, by Prof. Milnes Marshall, on "Pedigrees"; on Saturday, by Prof. Vernon Boys, on "The Photography of Flying Bullets"; and on Monday, by Prof. Ewing, on "Magnetic Induction." There will be two conversations: on Thursday evening, in the Museum of Science and Art, given by the town council; and on Tuesday evening, in the Music Hall, by the local committee. Geological, botanical, and dredging excursions have been arranged for Saturday afternoon, and trips further afield for the whole of the following Thursday.

THE presidential address delivered by Prof. Boyd Dawkins, at the annual meeting of the Museums Association at Manchester, is printed at length in Nature for July 21. It has been decided to hold the next meeting in London, under the presidency of Prof. Flower.

THE July number of the Scottish Review (Alexander Gardner) prints the second of Dr. Beddoe's Rhind Lectures on "The Anthropological History of Europe." Having in his first lecture enumerated the chief influences which may be supposed to have affected the primitive types of mankind, he now begins by stating the most antagonistic views of anthropologists upon this fundamental question.

On the one side, Kollmann, of Basel, is quoted to the following effect:—

"Race characters were in my belief already so settled and confirmed when the European races first arrived here, that they remain constant under the most powerful modifying agencies, and that the whole period which has since elapsed has not been sufficient to produce even moderate changes."

The divergencies at present observable are assigned solely to mixture of blood; and De Quatrefages is cited as saying that "The companions of the Mammoth and Reindeer have not disappeared, they are still among us." On the other side, Schaffhausen is taken as representative of the transformation theory, that modern skulls show an increase in development corresponding to an increase in intelligence. Dr. Beddoe then proceeds, before dividing Europe into anthropological provinces, to give a sketch of the general succession of races, as known from archaeology and early history. First, we have the palaeolithic period, going back to quaternary times, when all the skulls are distinctly dolicho-kephalic, though belonging to two marked types, the Canstatt or Neanderthal, and the Cro-magnon. With the neolithic period, these two dolicho-kephalic types are more clearly distinguished, the former throughout Central Europe, the latter throughout France, Spain, and Britain; while a brachy-kephalic race is found to be generally diffused, everywhere except in Britain. Coming to the historical period, the expansion of the Kelts, the Teutons and Scandinavians, the Slavs, and the Turks is briefly described, though without much appeal to craniological evidence. Concerning the Hungarians, Dr. Beddoe writes:

"The Magyars from the same neighbourhood [as the Bulgarians, a Finnish race from the Volga], but mixed somewhat with Turkish blood, who, settling in Hungary, no doubt incorporated the relics of the Avars [who, if not entirely Turkish, were at least Turanian]."

This is very much the same conclusion as is arrived at by Mr. J. B. Bury, in another article in the same number of the same Review entitled "The Coming of the Hungarians: their Origin and Early Homes." With an adequate knowledge of the Magyar language, Mr. Bury here discusses the rival theories of Hunfalvy and Vambéry, with a distinct inclination towards the former. Perhaps the most valuable part of his article is where he criticises the evidence of contemporary Greek writers of the Eastern Empire. But the historical evidence is admitted to be ambiguous, nor can much more be made out of the ethnological evidence proper. We are left, therefore, with the evidence supplied by the Magyar language, which certainly seems to be mainly Ugrian in type, though with a considerable admixture of Turkish elements. It remains to say that Mr. Bury has done his best to illuminate an obscure subject by flashes of Irish humour.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. C. STOFFEL, of Nijmegen, has reprinted from Taalstudie one of the most elaborate studies of English slang that we have ever read. His subject matter is the letters in verse contributed to Punch by 'Arry from 1883 to 1889; but he illustrates the vocabulary, the spelling, and the grammar from an immensely wide number of sources. Occasionally he is able to illustrate English slang from Dutch—e.g., withangen is used in the same sense as "to hang out," which our author derives from the practice of hanging out signs. "In the swim" has a whole page devoted to it, and "oof" is abundantly illustrated, though not explained. Well-deserved praise is given to the Encyclopædic Dictionary. Altogether, we have not found a single instance where Mr. Stoffel is demonstrably wrong, and we have ourselves learned a great deal from him.

WE have received, as one of the Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, a monograph on "The Saga of Walthar of Aquitaine," written by Dr. Marion Dexter Learned, associate in German at Johns Hopkins University. He gives—(1) a critical text of all the versions in which the Saga, or any fragment of it, is preserved—Anglo-Saxon, Latin, Middle High German, Old Norse, and Polish—arranged in their probable chronological order; (2) a tabular conspectus, showing, side by side, the corresponding contents of the several versions; (3) a discrimination of the historical from the legendary elements; (4) an attempt to determine the original form of the Saga, and to trace the later accretions; (5) a vindication of the existence of Walthar as an historical personage; (6) a bibliography and index. The following is Dr. Learned's own summary of his conclusions:—

"The elements of the Saga are essentially historical, belonging, for the most part, to the period of heroic struggle of the Germanic peoples of the West with the Huns; the original form of the Saga probably developed as early as the fifth century, assumed a strongly Frankish-Burgundian colour of the Merovingian period in the 'Waltharius' version, became itself the theme of a M.H.G. epic, and was connected with the great heroic cycles of the 'Nibelungenlied,' of the epic accounts of Ermanric, Theoderic, and Charlemagne. Thus we have justified the view that Walthar of Aquitaine belongs to the historical group of heroic characters, with whom all mediæval tradition associated him, and not to the realm of myth and fable."

FINE ART.

CATALOGUE OF THE GREEK COINS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—Mysia. By Warwick Wroth. Alexandria and the Nomes. By Reginald Stuart Poole. (Printed for the Trustees.)

ALMOST simultaneously two new volumes of the British Museum Coin Catalogue have appeared. The one continues the slow progress southward and eastward in which the main series of the Catalogue is engaged, the other is a work by itself dealing with the enormous Romano-Egyptian coinage.

The first book differs from the second in covering a very small district, and contains nothing but the coins of Mysia proper, not even comprising those of the Troad, which is for all intents and purposes a Mysian district. It would, we think, have been better to include the issues of Ilium and Scepsis and their neighbours in this volume, which is one of the smallest of the British Museum series. Apparently, however, the Troad, Lesbos, and Aeolis are destined to make the next part of the Catalogue.

In Mysia by far the most important coins are the great mass of Cyzicene staters, which formed for so long the main gold currency of the northern Aegean. We had occasion to review in the ACADEMY not long ago Canon Greenwell's excellent monograph on the coins of Cyzicus, and need not now speak of them at length, more especially as Mr. Wroth agrees almost entirely with Canon Greenwell's classification, and refers the reader to it in his preface. The present volume, being only a catalogue of the national collection, is, of course, less comprehensive than the earlier work, which included the coins in other public and private cabinets. The Museum, though it owns a fine series of Cyzicenes, is rather weak in the last issues of the mint, of which it only possesses six or seven varieties. We note that Mr. Wroth places these late coins at about the year 350 B.C., while Canon Greenwell supposed that the series ended ten or fifteen years earlier. The lower date is probably the correct one, as it was the gold Philipppics which drove the Cyzicene staters out of currency, and the Macedonian coins were not established in use so early as 360 B.C.

After the issues of Cyzicus, the most important pieces included in this volume are the beautiful gold staters of Lampsacus—a series whose richness and variety is only just beginning to be appreciated. Twenty years ago hardly any Lampsacene gold money was known, and in old collections it is conspicuous by its absence. But of late several rich finds have enlarged our knowledge of these splendid coins; and Mr. Wroth is able in his Preface to give a list of thirty-one different types, all showing the winged horse of Lampsacus on the reverse, while the obverse is occupied by a variety of devices chosen from as wide a field of mythological subjects as even the Cyzicene staters can show. Only nine of these thirty-one types are in the Museum, but they include some of the most beautiful subjects—the Nike erecting a trophy, the Gaia rising from the earth, and the weather-beaten sailor in a conical cap who has been recognised as Ulysses. We hope that ere long the national collection may obtain the other interesting types—the Helle crossing the Hellespont, the Nereid riding a dolphin, and the Nike sacrificing a ram, which are the pride of some foreign cabinets.

Among the other Mysian coins points of interest are not very numerous. We note that Mr. Wroth ascribes the little gold and silver diobols of Pergamum to the year 310 B.C., when Heracles, the son of Alexander the Great, was proclaimed king there by Polysperchon. It is curious that, if this was the case, no regal title was placed on the money, but only the name of the Pergamene state. We should almost prefer to place the coins a few years earlier, and suppose that they were struck soon after the Macedonian invasion of Asia, when the cities believed that they had achieved independence, instead of merely changing masters.

Of the vast Alexandrian series, which forms the subject of Prof. Poole's last contribution to the Museum Catalogue, there are no less than two thousand six hundred varieties described in the thick volume which he has just produced. The series on the whole is not very interesting, as the art shown on it is bad, and the portraits of emperors very untrustworthy. There are, however, some important items of knowledge to be gathered from the Alexandrian coins. They present us with a very curious collection of representations of Graeco-Egyptian gods, and Prof. Poole is able to use them as the text for a very interesting commentary on the religion of Egypt in Roman times. This subject deserves more study than has yet been bestowed on it in England. The ancient Egyptian mythology was profoundly modified by Greek influence during the time of the Ptolemies, and becomes interpenetrated with many ideas unknown in the days of the ancient dynasties. Prof. Poole points out that the general rule in religious matters was that "Greek types were not affected by Egyptian, but Egyptian by Greek: when a type shows a double origin we find that the Egyptian form is Hellenised, and not the converse." The Greek dislike for monstrous forms was clearly marked in Alexandria, and we find many of the Egyptian gods losing their animal shapes in order to accommodate themselves to semi-Hellenic worshippers. Anubis, for example, a frequent figure on the city coinage, is never found with his familiar jackal-head, but has a human face and merely a jackal at his side. The ram-headed Harpokrates of Mendes in a similar way loses all animal characteristics except his horns, and so appears as a figure much like Zeus Ammon. The great Serapis, the most prominent of all Graeco-Egyptian gods, would have been tauriform if represented in his proper Egyptian shape, as his name shows that he is merely Hesar-Hapi, the Osirian form of the sacred bull Apis. But not only was he worshipped in Hellenic Alexandria as a bearded man with a modius on his head, but this shape was spread all through the comparatively un-Hellenized nomes of Egypt, and was accepted by the native worshippers as the fixed type of the god. Among all the Alexandrian coins there is only one monstrous half-animal form preserved; this is the single representation of Harpokrates of Canopus as a young man most awkwardly fitted with the hind-legs and tail of a crocodile. It is noticeable that this Greek influence had, as might have been expected, less force outside the capital. Among the coins struck for the country nomes in the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian there are three or four representations of hawk-headed, snake-headed, and ram-headed gods. On the other hand, we find Greek influence marked in the provinces by the representation of Neith of Saïs as a conventional Hellenic Athene, and of the Sun at Diopolis as a crowned Helios on horseback.

Among the purely Greek types on the coins of Alexandria, where no Egyptian deity is in question, there are one or two curious figures, which need explanation. The most strange is a goddess called Semasia, who is represented as brandishing a whip while she rides at full speed on a galloping horse. As Prof. Poole observes, she must from her name have something to do with the giving of a signal. But what her particular function was has yet to be ascertained. The goddess Kratesis, whose attributes are a victory and a trophy, is neither "Victoria" nor "Virtus," the two Roman coin-types whom she much resembles. Euthenia, though entirely a Greek conception, is from the first treated as the spouse of the Nile-god, and seldom appears without him. Yet the Nile in the Egyptian pantheon had no consort: on the contrary, the Upper and Lower Niles were usually represented as two separate male figures, wearing the one the lotus and the other the papyrus as a crown.

In his thirty-two pages of illustration Prof. Poole has gone on the principle of arranging the coins not under emperors' reigns but under their reverse types, grouping all representations of Zeus or Harpokrates or the Alexandrian Pharos together, irrespective of date. This works admirably for the history of the development of types, but makes it more difficult to follow the general history of the rise and decay of the Romano-Egyptian coinage. We do not get the opportunity of noting at a glance the gradual sinking in size and art which distinguishes the whole series from M. Aurelius to Diocletian, the small rough coins of the third century being mixed in with the large well-executed pieces of the second. Another misfortune of this arrangement is that it leads to the omission of all the imperial portraits: save for heads of Vespasian and Titus, and of the usurpers Marcus Julius Aemilianus and Domitius Domitianus, given on a supplementary page, all the plates are destitute of obverse types. We think that a few more should have been given, especially for emperors or usurpers who reigned only in the East, and whose iconography is not well fixed by their non-Egyptian coins. We allude particularly to Vabalathus, and the elder Macrianus, of whom any additional portraits are useful to supplement the unsatisfactory representations on their ordinary small brass or billon pieces.

We must credit Prof. Poole with the discovery of one more ephemeral usurper among the strikers of coins in the troublous third century. This is the tyrant Julius Aemilianus, whom we have had occasion to mention above. As Prof. Poole acutely points out, he cannot be the legitimate Emperor Aemilius Aemilianus; for not only is his nomen different—which might be a mistake of the engraver—but his year of reign is always his first, whereas we know that Aemilius Aemilianus was only recognised in Egypt after he had been proclaimed emperor more than a year, so that no Alexandrian coins of his first year can possibly exist. Julius Aemilianus was no doubt the general who rebelled against Gallienus in 262 A.D., a personage to whom no money has up to now been given.

We hardly need repeat in this review the remark which we have had so often to make before, when noticing Museum publications, that the phototype illustrations are excellent, and also given in numbers which far exceed the proportions of plates allowed in any official catalogue of any foreign State collection.

C. OMAN.

MR. RASSAM AND THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

WE quote the following letter of Sir A. H. Layard, from the Times of July 27:—

"My attention has been called to the notice of the Babylonian and Assyrian collection in the recently published 'Guide to the Exhibition Galleries of the British Museum.' That notice is in several respects inaccurate; but it is against the great injustice done in it to Mr. Rassam that I desire to protest. At page xl. of the Introduction it is stated that this 'unrivalled collection' is due to myself, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and others, and no mention is made of Mr. Rassam. Sir Henry Rawlinson is the greatest and justly the most renowned of Assyrian scholars. He would, I am convinced, be the last man to wish to deprive another of his share in Assyrian and Babylonian discoveries. He was not an excavator in Assyria, but at one time, in his political capacity as Resident at Bagdad, had a kind of general control over the excavations carried on by Mr. Rassam in the ruins of Nineveh. The colossal human-headed bulls, and 'the two colossal figures of mythological character' in the 'Assyrian transept' were not, as stated on the plinths, excavated by him, but by M. Botta, and were, by Sir Henry Rawlinson's directions, 'obtained,' as mentioned in the Guide (p. 80), for the Museum. (By the way, I am at a loss to explain why 'excavated' has been designedly substituted of late for 'discovered' on all the Assyrian antiquities, while the latter word has been retained on the antiquities we owe to Sir Charles Newton and others.) Mr. Rassam was a great 'discoverer' and 'excavator' in the true sense of the words, although his name has been omitted. To him alone we owe the magnificent series of bas-reliefs representing the lion hunt and other subjects of the chase in the 'Assyrian basement,' the priceless bronze gates from Tell Balawat, the wonderful collection of tablets from Habbu Hubba—the site of a very ancient Babylonian city which he discovered—and many other Assyrian and Babylonian monuments of the highest importance now in the Museum, to which his name, however, has not been attached.

"During his employment under the Trustees of the British Museum, Mr. Rassam discovered the remains of five Babylonian palaces and temples, and of three temples and one palace in Assyria, from which most interesting and important remains and inscriptions were obtained. I fear that a deliberate attempt is being made to deprive him of the credit which is his due. I cannot for one moment believe that so distinguished and honourable a body as the Trustees have countenanced this treatment of Mr. Rassam, who during very many years rendered them the most loyal, the most devoted, and the most disinterested services, and to whom they and the public owe some of the most important and precious monuments and records, illustrative of sacred and profane history, of which they are the guardians."

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: July 27, 1892.

The main question of the early date of the vases found at Mykenae, Ialysos, Gurob, and Tel el-Amarna, has been passed by Mr. Torr with the strange remark that I have "never attempted to defend that assumption." No. And I do not see why I should defend "that assumption" any more than I should defend the date of the Arch of Titus or the Column of Trajan. Those buildings may be of any age subsequent to the events and the names recorded on them; but only a paradoxer could debate their date.

So, no doubt, the many vases found in Greece and Egypt may be later than the time of the XVIIIth Dynasty, the names of whose kings are found with them; but in the absence of a single contradictory datum (for those of the XIXth and XXth Dynasties follow in sequence of style), it seems to me a pure waste of time to discuss at length such a possibility.

I could easily show that Mr. Torr has "misrepresented" (to use his favourite phrase) my statements in many points in his last letter, and has assumed meanings very different to those of my words. But all such matters are trivial beside the main issue, which I have re-stated once more above, and which has never been met.

When these facts are acknowledged, we may return to discussing what various personages mean—if that is worth while.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE record of Mr. Theodore Bent's archaeological expedition to the ruined cities of Mashonaland will be published in the course of the autumn, by Messrs. Longmans, with numerous illustrations.

THE Grosvenor Club has now made arrangements to exhibit paintings in its large drawing-room, and artists and others are invited to apply to the secretary for all particulars. Works by the old masters will be received as well as by modern artists both English and foreign. The first exhibition will open in October next.

THE exhibition of early Flemish and Dutch pictures at the Burlington Fine Arts Club will close on Saturday, August 6.

THE August number of the Art Journal will contain the first of three articles by Mr. Marcus B. Huish descriptive of the Isle of Wight, with special reference to the capabilities of the island as a sketching ground for artists. Mr. Percy Robertson has made a series of drawings to illustrate the papers, including an etching of the Old Church, Bonchurch, which will be given with the September number.

FROM the thirty-fifth report of the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, it appears that ten works have been added by gift and bequest during the past year. These include a plaster bust of Handel, by Roubiliac; medallions of Sir James Clark Ross and Sir John Richardson, the Arctic explorers, modelled by Bernhard Smith; a portrait drawing of Isaac Taylor, author of The Natural History of Enthusiasm, by Josiah Gilbert; a portrait of the second Earl of Godolphin, by Jonathan Richardson; a portrait of Tom Paine, by Millière, after Romney; and the portrait of Lord John Russell, presented by its painter, Mr. Watts. The most important of the additions acquired by purchase is Sir Thomas Lawrence's portrait of Viscount Castlereagh, from the Clancarty collection; and among the others is Henry Edridge's full-length drawing of Lord Nelson, executed in 1802; a portrait, by Van Dyck, of Thomas Killigrew, brother of the dramatist, and groom of the chambers to Charles II.; an equestrian portrait of Marlborough—an oil sketch by Kneller; the first Earl of Lincoln, by Ketel; Girtin's portrait by Opie, and John Constable's, a pencil drawing, by himself; the first Earl of Burlington, painted in the school of Van Dyck; the fourth Earl of Orrery, by Charles Jervas; and Sir John Millais' water-colour of John Leech. The purchases also include a portfolio of twenty-one drawings of heads by Sir George Hayter.

MESSRS. RAPHAEL TUCK & SONS have now issued proof impressions, on Whatman paper, of the Queen's Letter to the Nation, with Mr. E. J. Poynter's symbolic border design etched by Mr. Lowenstam. We may remark that the facsimile of the letter is now the exact size of the original, and that each proof has been numbered in the exact order of its impression from the plate. The publishers deserve credit for the care expended on every detail of the undertaking, which is worthy of its national character.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from Messrs. Augener & Co.

Chaconne du Ballet Héroïque. Par Pierre Monsigny. This is an arrangement by Fr. Hermann, and forms part of the Anthologie Classique et Moderne. The old French operas are a mine whence many a gem could be drawn. This Monsigny Chaconne is a graceful, piquant example of eighteenth-century music, and not difficult.

Four Pieces by Sigismund Noskowski, for Piano-forte. (Op. 36.) The music shows the influence of various composers of the romantic school, but has individuality. All four numbers are short. No. 1, "Les Larmes," has also been arranged by the author for violin and piano-forte. His Op. 35, consisting of three pieces, is also attractive. The "Duma," No. 2, deserves special mention.

Minuet and Scène de Bal, for 'cello, with Piano-forte Accompaniment. By W. H. Squire. Two light and pleasing pieces.

Miniature Trio for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello. By C. Gurliitt. A well-written ensemble piece for young pupils.

Glees and Choruses. In Four Books. Edited by Mr. Heale. The first three are for four, the last are for three female voices. Of these, many numbers are by Sir Henry Rowley Bishop, an English composer whose name is a household word. There is a straightforward English character about his music, and a spontaneity that has helped to win for it popularity. Admirers of the modern school may smile at its simplicity, but there is something genuine in it, though it be at times weak, or even trivial. Mr. Heale has selected some of the most popular glees and choruses. In the arrangement for female voices—excellent of its kind—some of the composer's effects may not be fully realised, but the form is a convenient one. The collections include also glees by Calcott, the Earl of Mornington, and other standard English composers. Mr. Heale has also arranged six Bishop choruses for two, and six rounds for three female voices. Here the end may possibly justify the means, though transcriptions are always open to criticism.

Mémoires Ruthéniennes. By Noskowski. (Op. 33.) Cahier 1 and 2. These are pleasing duets with quaint themes, piquant harmonies. No. 3 (Cantique varié) recalls Schubert; No. 7 (Zadumka), with its changes of measure and quaint cadences, is interesting. These duets, too, are short and effectively written for both performers.

The Ship o' the Fiend: Orchestral Ballad. By Hamish MacCunn. (Op. 5.) Arranged as a pianoforte duet by Mr. Marmaduke M. Barton. This is one of the composer's earliest and most striking works, and, even without the orchestral colouring, will be welcome in this form. His Ballad-Overture "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow" has also been transcribed in a similar manner.

Mendelssohn's War March of the Priests from "Athaliae." Arranged for two pianos, eight hands, by E. Pauer, will be found an effective ensemble piece.

Scherzino, by L. Schytte, pianoforte duet, is short, light and taking.

To the Distant One. By G. H. Clutsam, with violin obbligato. This love ballad is decidedly effective; the harmonies of the accompaniment may be a trifle overstudied, but the appoggiaturas in the chords produce an appropriate feeling of restlessness. The words from Lenan are well translated by Mr. W. Grist.

Foreshadowings, words and music by Edith Swepstone, has a tinge of the commonplace at times, but is expressive: the accompaniment, including a 'cello obbligato part, is interesting.

Vier Lieder. By G. Jensen (Op. 30). With German and English words. These are four songs of great interest. The form is simple, and they are all short, and have character; the harmonic colouring is excellent, and the accompaniments show taste and skill. The English version is from Mr. Grist's practised pen.

The Dame of the Farm (La Fermière), by Weckerlin. A quaint and graceful song; a successful specimen of 5-4 time.

Joh. Seb. Bach Organ Works. 3 Books. Edited by W. T. Best. These books contain the Canzona in D minor, one of the composer's early and most graceful pieces; the beautiful five-part Fantasia in C minor; an introductory movement to a Fugue, alas, unfinished; and the magnificent Fantasia in G, with its stately ascending and descending passages. But Bach requires no praise, and Mr. Best is well known as an able editor. The pieces are fingered, registered, &c. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

A TRIO for three pianofortes (MS.) by Samuel Wesley was performed at a concert given at St. James's Banqueting Hall on Saturday last by Mr. E. Fowles and his pupils. This work, unique of its kind, was written eighty-one years ago. The music recalls Handel and also Mozart, but it has nevertheless a cachet of its own. The various movements are all in the key of D, so that it resembles a Suite rather than a Trio in the modern sense of the word. The concerted writing is extremely skilful: the Presto movement is somewhat long, but the concluding Pastorale is most effective. Mr. Fowles deserves thanks for reviving such an interesting old novelty, by one of our most distinguished native composers. The Trio was well performed by Mr. E. Fowles, Miss J. Moncel, and Mr. B. Fowles. The programme included other pieces well rendered by various pupils, and songs sung by Mr. G. Tate.

A STUDENTS' Orchestral Concert was given by the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The programme opened with a Mozart Concerto in E flat for two pianofortes. It was written in 1780, and Otto Jahn tells us that we owe the work to Mozart's wish to "play a duet with his sister." The music is full of grace and charm. The solo parts were well interpreted by Miss L. Davies and Miss Maude Wilson. Dr. A. C. Mackenzie has done well in introducing one of Mozart's Concertos, which are strangely neglected in these days of storm and stress. An interesting feature of the programme was a vocal Scena, "Wulstan," by Mr. Granville Bantock. The music is thoroughly modern in spirit, fresh, and full of promise. The vocal part was artistically sung by Mr. H. Lane Wilson. The clever violin playing of Miss Gertrude Collins also deserves mention. The orchestra was under the careful direction of Dr. Mackenzie.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. Heywood. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. . .	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Edward Stanford's List.

STANFORD'S TOURIST GUIDES.

NEW EDITIONS, CORRECTED TO 1892. With Maps and Plans, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. each.

BERKSHIRE. Second Edition. Edited and Revised by the Rev. P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A.

CHANNEL ISLANDS. Third Edition. Edited and Revised by R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.

ENGLISH LAKES. Seventh Edition. By H. I. JENKINSON, F.R.G.S.

NORFOLK. Fifth Edition. By Walter RYE.

SUFFOLK. Second Edition. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., &c.

THE WYE and its NEIGHBOURHOOD. Second Edition. Edited and Revised by R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.

The Series embraces, in addition to the above:—

BEDFORDSHIRE.	LONDON (THROUGH).
CAMBRIDGESHIRE.	LONDON (ROUND ABOUT).
CORNWALL.	SOMERSETSHIRE.
DERBYSHIRE.	SURREY.
DEVON (NORTH).	SUSSEX.
DEVON (SOUTH).	WARWICKSHIRE.
DORSETSHIRE.	WILTSHIRE.
ESSEX.	WORCESTERSHIRE.
GLOUCESTERSHIRE.	YORKSHIRE (E. and N. RIDINGS).
HAMPSHIRE.	YORKSHIRE (W. RIDING).
HERTFORDSHIRE.
KENT.

"Nothing can be more convenient than the volumes of this little two-shilling county series; the type, though closely printed, is clear, and they are nearly as light and twice as portable as a fairly filled cigar-case."—Saturday Review.

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT. Fifth Edition. With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.

NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition. With 2 Maps, 6s. 6d.; Smaller Guide, 3s. 6d.

THE ISLE OF MAN. Third Edition. With Map. 6s.

CARLISLE, GILSLAND, the ROMAN WALL, and NEIGHBOURHOOD. With Map. 2s.

STANFORD'S TOURIST MAPS.

EUROPE.—STANFORD'S PORTABLE MAP, showing the Railways, &c. Scale, 105 miles to 1 in.; size, 33 in. by 30 in. Coloured and mounted in case, 10s.

CENTRAL EUROPE.—DAVIES'S MAP, containing all the Railways and Stations, Roads, Rivers, and chief Mountain Ranges are clearly delineated. Scale, 24 miles to 1 in.; size, 47 in. by 38 in. Mounted in case, 16s.

NORWAY.—WILLSON'S HANDY MAP of NORWAY, SOUTH of TRONDHEIM. Scale, 20 miles to 1 in.; size, 14 in. by 21 in. Coloured and folded for the pocket, 2s.

BRITISH ISLES.—DAVIES'S NEW RAILWAY MAP of the BRITISH ISLES and PART of FRANCE. Scale, 22 miles to 1 in.; size, 31 in. by 33 in. In case, 9s.

ENGLAND and WALES.—STANFORD'S PORTABLE MAP. With the Railways very clearly delineated. Scale, 15 miles to 1 in.; size, 32 in. by 28 in. Coloured and mounted in case, 7s. 6d.

ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT.—TOURIST'S MAP. With all the Roads and Paths marked and Heights given. Scale, 1 in. to 1 mile; size, 27 in. by 32 in. Price, with Roads and Lakes Coloured, folded in cover, 2s. 6d.; full Coloured, 4s. 6d.; mounted in case, 7s. 6d.

ISLE of WIGHT.—TOURIST'S MAP. Scale, 1 in. to 1 mile; size, 27 in. by 21 in.; and Descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; Coloured, 1s.; mounted, 3s. 6d.

NORTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP. Scale, 3 miles to 1 in.; size, 34 in. by 27 in.; and Descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; Coloured, 2s.; mounted, 5s.

SOUTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP. Scale, 3½ miles to 1 in.; size, 34 in. by 27 in.; and Descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; Coloured, 2s.; mounted, 5s.

LONDON.—COLLINS'S STANFORD MAP. Scale, 4 in. to 1 mile; size, 34½ in. by 27 in. With an Illustrated GUIDE. Coloured, in case, 1s.; extended size, 31½ in. by 34½ in., and Full Coloured, 1s. 6d.; mounted, 3s. 6d.

LONDON.—MAP of the ENVIRONS of LONDON, including Twenty-five miles from the metropolis. Scale, ½ in. to 1 mile; size, 36 in. by 35 in. Mounted in case, 10s. Other maps at 8s., 5s. 6d., 3s., 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., or 1s.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, S.W.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S LIST.

Saturday Review speaks of ARROWSMITH'S BRISTOL LIBRARY "as necessary to the traveller as a rug in winter and a dust-coat in summer."

ANOTHER SUCCESS! ARROWSMITH'S SUMMER ANNUAL, 18, ENTITLED

TRAVELLERS' TALES. Written by E. A. MORTON, F. C. PHILLIPS, WILLIAM WESTALL, I. ZANGWILL, CLEMENT SCOTT, RICHARD DOWLING, and JUSTIN MCCARTHY. Seven Illustrations by Alfred Bryan.

"Six Short Stories, sufficiently tragic, comic, sentimental, or adventurous, to satisfy all tastes."—The Star.

"All short, bright, and of a modern complexion."—Saturday Review.

ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES. Vol. XI. NEW VOLUME BY THE BROTHERS GROSSMITH. THE DIARY of a NOBODY. By George GROSSMITH and WEEDON GROSSMITH. Illustrated by Weedon Grossmith. Being Vol. XI. of the Series.

"This study of lower middle-class life is admirable, and in some of its touches it goes near to genius... the charm and the skill of it reside in little touches which it must be left to the reader to discover for himself."—Saturday Review.

"Not a page of it but affords matter for a good laugh."—Punch.

"We have read it from start to finish with the greatest enjoyment and many a hearty laugh, lying in the sun hard by a sandy beach."—Sunday Star.

ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES. Vol. X. WHEN I LIVED in BOHEMIA. By FERGUS HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c. Eighty Illustrations by Cyril R. Hallward.

"Clever and entertaining reading."—Morning Post.

"All the characters are life-like, and are sure to be appreciated."—Woman.

NEW NOVEL BY AUTHOR OF "WHERE WAS THE SIN?" IN PART to BLAME. By Haine Whyte.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Quite the volume for a railway journey, or a passage across from Dover to Calais."—Sunday Times.

"Will secure the readers' attention and interest them to the end."—Liverpool Mercury.

A pleasing story in terse and simple language. —Huntingdon Owl

NEW NOVEL BY AUTHOR OF "SAINT MONICA." THE UNWRITTEN LAW. By Mrs. HENNETT-EDWARDS.

"A pleasantly-written novel of English life, with its pleasures and prejudices."—Belfast News Letter.

"Well planned, and carefully worked out."—The Bookeller.

"A story that will certainly enhance this popular authoress's reputation."—Stationary and Bookbinding.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH, London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited.

CHISWICK PRESS EDITIONS.

JUST READY.

SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION [by SIMON WAGSTAFF, Esq.] Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAINSBURY. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With Engraved Portrait of Swift. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 6s. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 12s. net.

ONLY A FEW COPIES LEFT.

JOURNAL of a VOYAGE to LISBON.

By HENRY FIELDING, Esq. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Fielding. Limited Edition: 475 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 25 copies [all subscribed for] on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

"A very beautiful edition... worthily edited."—Times.

"In handsome type and convenient size."—Athenaeum.

"A book that is as pleasant to the hand as delightful to the eye."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Austin Dobson's critical and biographical preface is, of course, a perfect piece of work."—Review of Reviews.

"Got up in a style of extreme excellence as regards paper, printing, and type."—Notes and Queries.

THE NEXT VOLUME IN THIS SERIES WILL BE—THOMAS NASH'S LIFE OF JACK WILTON

With an Essay on the Life and Writings of Nash by EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With an engraved Portrait of the Earl of Surrey. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper. 1s. in the press.

Other Volumes in preparation.

LONDON: CHISWICK PRESS, TOOK'S COURT, E.C.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For AUGUST, 1892, price 6d., contains—

- 1.—THE LATE RIGHT HON. W. H. SMITH, M.P. Frontispiece.
- 2.—W. H. SMITH and SON. W. M. ACWORTH. Illustrated by A. G. Macgregor, and from Photographs.
- 3.—A ROYAL RECEPTION. (To be continued.) The Author of "MADMOISELLE FAY." Illustrated by T. S. C. Crowther.
- 4.—THE NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY and its ENGINES. Wilson Woodwell, Chief Locomotive Superintendent. Illustrated.
- 5.—ENGLISH RACING YACHTS. Dixon Kemp. Illustrated.
- 6.—LOVE BIRDS and PIGMY PARROTS. W. T. GREENE. Illustrations by A. F. LYON.
- 7.—THE LOSS of the "VANITY." MARY GAUNT.
- 8.—BISCUIT TOWN. JOSEPH HAYTON. Illustrations by W. H. Margaretson.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE

No. 394. AUGUST, 1892.

Price 1s., contains—

- 1.—DON ORSINO. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Chaps. XVII.—XIX.
- 2.—CHAPTERS from some UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS: My Witches' Cabanon.—IV. By Mrs. RICHIE.
- 3.—MARGARET STUART. By H. C. MACDONWALL.
- 4.—VASSILI. By SUSAN PICKERING.
- 5.—SOME LEGENDS of the VAUDOIS. By the Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSON.
- 6.—"AULD ROBIN GRAY." By J. C. HADDEN.
- 7.—ARMAND'S MISTAKE. By Miss LAYCH.
- 8.—THE RUINS of BAALBEK. By the Rev. HASKETT SMITH.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

Price One Shilling net.

NATURAL SCIENCE.

A MONTHLY REVIEW OF SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS.

CONTENTS of No. 6, AUGUST, 1892.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

- I. THE PERMANENCE of the GREAT OCEANIC BASINS. By DR. A. RUSSEL WALLACE.
- II. THE CLIMATE of EUROPE during the GLACIAL EPOCH. By CLEMENT REID, F.R.S., F.L.S.
- III. DEATH. By P. CHAMBERS MITCHELL, M.A.
- IV. THE GEOLOGY of the CENTRAL HIMALAYA. By H. R. WOODWARD, F.R.S.
- V. THE "ALBATROSS" EXPEDITION. By W. E. HOYLE, F.R.S.
- VI. PROF. ALLOYD MORGAN on the "GRAMMAR of SCIENCE." By R. J. REE, M.A., M.B.
- VII. TECHNICAL EDUCATION in SURREY. By J. PARNIVAL, M.A., F.R.S.

REVIEWS.

NEWS of UNIVERSITIES, MUSEUMS, and SOCIETIES.

OBITUARY.

OBSERVATIONS and CORRESPONDENCE.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

AUGUST.

- THE QUESTION of PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS. By the Hon. Sir CHARLES TUPPER, Bart.
- THE DRAMA in the DOLDRUMS. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
- AWAKENED CANDIDATES. By H. D. TRAVELL.
- MR. HENLEY'S POETRY. By ARTHUR SIMONS.
- THE WORKING LADY in LONDON. By Miss MARGO-PHILLIPS.
- LA DEBACLE. By GEORGE MOORE.
- CONSCRIPTION. By OLIVER.
- SHELLEV. By FRANCIS ADAMS.
- MR. BALFOUR'S WORK in the WEST of IRELAND. By the Rev. JOHN VERRIOUVER.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK. By W. E. H. LEcky, J. FLETCHER MOUNTON, Q.C., T. W. RUSSELL, M.P., H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P., FREDERICK GREENWOOD, Sir W. T. MARSHALL, Q.C., M.P.

A STRAIGHT FLUSH. By THE EDITOR. CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

Price ONE SHILLING. AUGUST, 1892.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 39.

- THE LABOUR PARTY and the NEW PARLIAMENT. I. By JOHN BURNS, M.P. II. By J. KEIR HARDIE, M.P.
- SIR JOSEPH FAYRER on the ORIGIN and DIFFUSION of CHOLERA.
- THE LIBERAL UNIONIST. By the Right Hon. G. SHAW-LEWIS.
- SOCIETY in BERLIN. By Professor GELICKEN.
- SUMMER HUNTING. By the Hon. GERALD LANCELES.
- ZOLA as an EVOLUTIONIST. By Madame BLAZE DE BURY.
- PERSONAL REMINISCENCES of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. Letters of the Comte de LALLU.
- THE DRAMA in the ANTIPODES. By the late Hon. Lewis WINGFIELD.
- A MUTTON BIRD ISLAND. By the Right Rev. The Lord Bishop of TASMANIA.
- FAILURE or SUCCESS in PARLIAMENT. By H. W. LECY.
- LITERATURE } By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
- AND } THE DRAMA. } By WILLIAM ARCHER.
- LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. And New York: 15, East 16th Street.
- PARIS: LIBRAIRIE GALLIEN-LANGLAIS. ROTTERDAM: H. A. KRAMERS & SON.
- BERLIN: ASHER & Co. VIENNA: GRUND & Co.
- LEIPZIG: BROCKHAUS. CALCUTTA: THACKER & SONS.
- MELBOURNE and SYDNEY: E. A. PETERICK & Co.
- All rights reserved.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

No. 322.—AUGUST, 1892.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS. BIRCHLEY DELIVERED, chapo. I. vii.—(O. C. FOREIGN FOOD.—OLIVER WEDDELL HOLMES.—MARTIN AR IT WAS BEFORE THE CYCLOPS.—SOMERSET and THE BEA-BIRD.—OLD ELECTIONS, by Lord BRABOURNE.—THE EFFICIENCY of the ARMY: A REPLY, by General Sir P. L. MacDONNELL, K.C.M.G. IN THE WRATH, by "A SON of the Marshes."—THE POSITION of JAWASHIR, by John C. FIELDER.—THE RESULTS of the ELECTIONS.—The Situation at Home.—The Danger Ahead.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH and LONDON.

Monthly, price Half a Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS for AUGUST.

WILLIAM and ISMARCK. IMAGINATION in DREAMS. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD. THE PROBLEM of CRIME in FRANCE. By Madame BLAZE DE BURY. IN DUTCH WATER-MEADOWS. By T. DEWY PIERCE, C. E. FICTION and FAITH. By JULIA WEDGWOOD. INFLUENZA. By JULIUS ALTHAUS, M.D. INTEREST and LOYALTY in CANADA. By ERNEST WIMMS. THE COMING REVOLUTION in TACTICS and STRATEGY. By Lt.-Col. H. ESCHER, R.E. PROVINCIAL HOME RULE. By the MARQUIS of LORNE. JOHN KNOX. By JOHN STUART BLACKIE, LL.D. THE MORAL of the ELECTIONS. By SIDNEY WEBB. THE GENERAL ELECTION and AFTER. By W. T. STUBBINS and Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

ON the ORGANISATION of SCIENCE: an Essay towards Systematisation. By A. FRANK LANE. Is not "A powerful plea."—Academy. "A weighty protest. Suggestive and interesting... such vigour and inclusiveness."—Natl. Rev. WILLIAMS & NORGATE.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 302 pp., cloth boards, 3s., post free. THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free. THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d. JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £50.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums of deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS HARRISON, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT of LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free, on application. FRANCIS HARRISON, 101, Moorgate.

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d. Office: 27, CRANCERY LANE, W.C.

SUMMER HOLIDAYS ABROAD.

NORWAY.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

Eighth Edition. 13 Maps and Plans. 7s. 6d.

"Admirably up to date."—Graphic.

An entirely New Edition, with every information for Tourists, including a new Route Map of Norway, and an Appendix containing Cycling Routes, Grammar, and Vocabulary. This Edition has been Edited and almost entirely Rewritten by THOMAS MICHELL, Esq., H.B.M. Consul-General for Norway. An Index and Directory, containing essential information, Hotels, &c., at the end.

SWITZERLAND.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

Eighteenth Edition. In 2 Parts, 10s. 22 Maps and Plans. Corrected up to 1892.

Part I. SWITZERLAND without the PENNINE ALPS. Clue Map and Plans of Towns.

Part II. THE ALPS of SAVOY and PIEDMONT, the ITALIAN LAKES, and PART of DAUPHINE.

FRANCE.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

Eighteenth Edition (1892). In 2 Parts, 50 Maps and Plans of Towns, 7s. 6d. each.

Part I. NORMANDY, BRITTANY, &c., to the PYRENEES.

Part II. FRENCH FLANDERS, CHAMPAGNE, the VOSGES, the FRENCH ALPS, PROVENCE, and NICE.

SPAIN.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

Eighth Edition. In 2 Parts (1892), 20s. 41 Maps and Plans.

"Quien dice España—dice Todo."

Part I. MADRID and the CASTILES, the BASQUE PROVINCES, LEON, ASTURIAS, and GALICIA.

Part II. ESTREMADURA, ANDALUCIA, MURCIA, VALENCIA, ARAGON, NAVARRE, and the BALEARIC ISLANDS.

ITALY.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK

to CENTRAL ITALY. Eleventh Edition. 6s. Including FLORENCE. With 24 Maps, Plans of Towns, Galleries, &c.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK

for NORTH ITALY. Sixteenth Edition. 10s. 34 Maps and Plans.

Containing TURIN, MILAN, PAVIA, the ITALIAN LAKES, GENOA, the RIVIERA, &c.

SOUTH GERMANY.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

Fifteenth Edition. In 2 Parts, 12s. 41 Maps and Plans.

Part I. WÜRTEMBERG, BAVARIA, AUSTRIA, BOHEMIA, and the DANUBE from ULM to the BLACK SEA.

Part II. TYROL, SALZBURG, SYRIA, and the EASTERN ALPS.

THE MEDITERRANEAN.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

In 2 Parts. 80 Maps and Plans. 21s. By Sir R. LAMBERT PLAYFAIR.

A Guide-Book to the Cities, Coasts, and Islands, for the use of General Travellers and Yachtmen.

INDIA.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK

for INDIA and CEYLON. 15s. With 50 Maps and Plans.

An entirely new and compact Guide to the whole of India and Ceylon.

JAPAN.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK.

Third Edition. 15s. net. By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN and W. B. MASON.

With 10 Maps and Plans of the Buddhist and Shinto Temples of Ikegami and Izuomo.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

BY

Florence Marryat.

THE NOBLER SEX.

By the Author of

"My Sister the Actress," "Facing the Footlights," "Under the Lilies and Roses," &c. 3 vols.

II.

BY

Mrs. Alexander Fraser.

A MODERN BRIDEGROOM.

By the Author of

"Daughters of Belgravia," "The New Duchess," "She Came Between," &c. 2 vols.

"Mrs. Fraser is a mistress of her art and takes her place in the front rank of the society novelists. Her style is easy and polished—her manner of telling a story commands the reader's interest."—Life.
"Mrs. Fraser's novel is clever as well as vigorous, and its moral tendency is undeniably good."—Court Journal.

III.

By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.

A BIG STAKE.

By the Author of "The M. F. H.'s Daughter," "Drawn Blank," "The Criton Hunt Mystery," &c. 3 vols. [Shortly.]

IV.

By Mrs. Alexander.

FOR HIS SAKE.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't," "Blind Fate," "Mona's Choice," &c. 3 vols. [Immediately.]

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d.

By B. M. Croker.—INTERFERENCE

(2nd Edition.)

In picture boards, 2s.

By Hawley Smart.—THE PLUNGER:

a Turf Tragedy of Five-and-Twenty Years Ago. (4th Edition.)

In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

By Florence Warden.—A SHOCK to SOCIETY.

"BELGRAVIA."

A LONDON MAGAZINE. Price 1s.

Serial Tales by ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) and IZA DUFFUS HARDY are running in the above Monthly Magazine.

Vol. LXXXVIII. (560 pages), elegantly bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edges, price 7s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

"LONDON SOCIETY."

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE. Price 1s.

Serial Tales, entitled "The Countess Pluramond," by "RITA," and "A Buried Sin," are running in the above Magazine.

Vol. LXI. (780 pages), handsomely bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edge, price 10s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

THE

LINOTYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1057.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
STEVENSON'S THE WRECKER, by LIONEL JOHNSON . . .	103
OMAN'S BYZANTINE EMPIRE, by R. NISBET BAIN . . .	104
SAINTSBURY'S LORD DERBY, by J. A. HAMILTON . . .	105
SIR F. POLLOCK'S LEADING CASES, by PERCY ADDLESHAW . . .	106
TAYLOR'S MODERN FACTORY SYSTEM, by J. M. LUDLOW . . .	106
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE . . .	107
BOOKS OF TRAVEL . . .	109
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	110
ORIGINAL VERSE: "WITH A SCARAB TO A FRIEND," by the late AMELIA B. EDWARDS . . .	110
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	111
CORRESPONDENCE— Aristotle as an Historian, II., by the Rev. Sir George Cox . . .	111
PROF. SULLY'S TEXT-BOOK OF PSYCHOLOGY, by Prof. BROUGH . . .	113
OBITUARY: DR. H. W. BELLEW, by J. S. C. . . .	115
CORRESPONDENCE— "Ethnology in Folklore," by L. Gomme; Old Prussian "Assenue," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew . . .	115
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . .	115
THE ARCHITECT OF THE SCOTT MONUMENT, by J. M. GRAY . . .	116
CORRESPONDENCE— Aegean Pottery in Egypt, by Cecil Torr . . .	117
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	117
THE THEATRES, by F. WEDMORE . . .	118
THE HISTORY OF THE LEEDS FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .	118

LESSONS.—English, Practical Mathematics, Military Topography, Geometrical Drawing, Hindustani, Sanskrit.—Mr. Wilson, 2, Gertrude Street, Fulham Road, S.W. Accountancy, Proof-reading, &c., done.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

AS LITERARY ASSISTANT, SUB-LIBRARIAN, or SECRETARY.—The daughter of a Professional man, well connected, but poor, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. She is thoroughly educated, well read in English and French literature, with some knowledge of Latin and German; good arithmetician, accustomed to secretarial work, to make researches in public libraries, to correct for the press, and to index; she can read aloud intelligently, and writes a legible hand; would undertake Copying or anything else for which the above qualifications would suffice; whole or part time; several years' reference; excellent testimonials.—Address D. H., 30, Theobald's Road, W.C.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

The COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.

PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 124, Victoria Street, S.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

TO BE SOLD, en bloc, the ORIENTAL
LIBRARY of Sir M. MONIER-WILLIAMS, Boden Professor of Sanskrit, consisting of nearly 4,000 Volumes, in Sanskrit, Arabic, Bengali, Hindi, Hindustani, Persian, and nearly every Indian language, and many hundred English Works on Oriental subjects.
Printed Catalogue and particulars on application to Messrs. Benson & Co., 6 and 7, Great Tower Street.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The Senate is about to appoint an ASSISTANT LECTURER in CLASSICS, to enter on his duties on the 1st October next. Applications should be sent on or before September 1st, to the Registrar, from whom a statement as to duties and emoluments may be obtained.
H. W. HOLDEN, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

GRADUATION IN ARTS.

Under the New Ordinance there are Twenty-seven Subjects from which, with certain restrictions, Students may select Seven Subjects for Graduation in Arts. The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS begin on 14th OCTOBER. Women as well as men are now admitted to the Lectures and to Graduation.
For further particulars see "Supplement to University Calendar" (James Thin, North Bridge, Edinburgh, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 1d.), or apply to the CLERK of Senatus.

JOHN KIRKPATRICK, Secretary of Senatus.

ROYAL SCOTTISH GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

The Office of SECRETARY will be vacant on 15th October, 1892. Applications are invited from gentlemen with previous experience, and capable of undertaking Editorial duties. A knowledge of French and German is Essential. Salary £200 per annum. Address (before 1st September) to CHAIRMAN of RECOMMENDATIONS COMMITTEE, Royal Scottish Geographical Society, Edinburgh.

HARTLEY INSTITUTION, SOUTHAMPTON.

WANTED, an ASSISTANT ART MASTER specially qualified to teach MODELLING in CLAY and WOOD-CARVING. Salary guaranteed not less than £150 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained. Applications must be received by the SECRETARY on or before August 20th.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.
Professors—Sealey, King's Coll.; Dr. Dolcien, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Hill, Signor Gatechi, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

CHELTENHAM LADIES' COLLEGE.

APPLICATIONS for the PEARCE SCHOLARSHIP, value about £25 per annum, should be sent to the SECRETARY, by September 1st. It is tenable by the Daughter of an Officer in the Army who is in need of pecuniary assistance.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EX-

AMINATIONS.—STUDENTS are successfully PREPARED at the Classes in connection with the North London Collegiate School, under the superintendence of Miss BLISS. They are also trained for Kindergarten work, and prepared for the Examinations of the Froebel Society. Arrangements made for ladies to board in the neighbourhood. Apply to Miss TORLES, 145, Camden Road, London, N.W.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, 1892.
CONDUCTOR—SIR ARTHUR SELLMAAN.
BAND and CHORUS of 450.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—"Elijah." Principals: Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Norman Salmond.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.—Schumann's "Pierrot of the Rose," Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), &c. Principals: Miss Macintyre, Miss McKenzie, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Plunkett Greene.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Mozart's "Requiem Mass," Symphony (Written for the Festival) by Frederic Cliffe, Mendelssohn's Ninth Psalm. Principals: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Andrew Black.

THURSDAY EVENING.—Selection from Wagner's "Die Meister-singer," Ballad for Orchestra, by A. C. Mackenzie; Brahms's "Song of Destiny," Suite from L'Éclair de Nord, Weber's Oberon overture. Principals: Madame Albani, Miss McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. H. Piercy, Mr. Plunkett Greene.

FRIDAY MORNING.—Bach's "Mass in B minor." Principals: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. H. Piercy, Mr. Norman Salmond.

FRIDAY EVENING.—Cantata, "Arethusa" (first performance), by Alan Gray; Duets from Gounod's Romeo and Juliet, Schubert's Symphony in B minor, Selection from Sullivan's Tenants, "Santuzza's Song" from Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana, Brahms's "Song of Triumph," Old Irish Songs, Overture Richard Third, by Ed. German. Principals: Miss Macintyre, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Plunkett Greene.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Dvorak's Specter's Ride, Suite de Ballet by Goring Thomas, Air from Saint-Saëns' Samson et Dalila, "De Profundis," Psalm by C. Hubert Parry, Beethoven's "Hallelujah." Principals: Miss Macintyre, Miss Anna Williams, Miss McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Andrew Black.

SATURDAY EVENING.—Selection from Handel's Works, and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. Principals: Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. H. Piercy, Mr. Norman Salmond.

SERIAL TICKET (consisting of a separate Ticket for each of the Eight Concerts) £6 0 0

SERIAL TICKETS (for Seven Concerts) 5 5 0

SINGLE TICKET—FIRST SEATS (GROUND FLOOR)—

Morning 1 1 0

Evening 0 15 0

Second Seats—Morning 0 10 6

Evening 0 8 0

All these Seats are Numbered and Reserved.

Applications for Tickets (with the amount required) will be entered and allotted as received. Outline programmes can be had on application. Detailed programme shortly.

All communications to be addressed,
ALD. FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Offices, Municipal Buildings, Leeds.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW BOOKS

NEW VOLUME OF "RULERS OF INDIA"
Just published, crown 8vo, blue cloth, price 7s. 6d.

RANGIT SINGH: and Sikh Barrier between our growing Empire and Central Asia. By SIR LEIF GRUFFIN, K.C.B.

"Sir Leif Gruffin treats his topic with the pen of a lawyer, and his account of the famous Malakka and his times is, in no small measure, the most valuable as well as interesting volume of the series of which it forms a part." (Times, August 1, 1892.)

Vol. I, demy 8vo, half-roan, price 18s.

HISTORY of the NEW WORLD, called AMERICA. By EDWARD JOHN PAYNE, Fellow of University College, Oxford.

"No more fascinating book than this has, for a long time, reached our hands."—Scotsman.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

THE PRINCIPAL SPEECHES of the STATESMEN and ORATORS of the FRENCH REVOLUTION, 1789-1795. Edited, with Introduction, Notes and Indices, by H. MORSE STEPHENS, Fellow of University College, Oxford, Author of "A History of the French Revolution."

Vol. I., crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

TWO of the SAXON CHRONICLES, PARALLEL, with Supplementary Extracts from the others. A Revised Text Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Appendices, and Glossary, by CHARLES PLUMMER, M.A., on the Basis of an Edition by JOHN EARLE, M.A.

"The book is one of exact and thorough going scholarship, and of the first importance to students of the early English speech."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY PLANE TRIGONOMETRY, that is Plane Trigonometry without Imaginaries. By R. C. J. NIXON, M.A., Author of "Euclid Revised," &c.

Just published, Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 9s.

SPECIMENS of FRENCH LITERATURE, from VILLOIN to HUGO. Selected and Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

Full Catalogue post free.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,
CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"A BIG MISTAKE." By GRACE
ELLIOTT. Price 5s.
JOHN PEARCE, 127, High Holborn, London, W.

RARE, tall old Oak Corner CABINET, nearly 7 ft. high, shelves inside, carved panelling doors in front, price Four Guinea. Also old Oak, carved back, Arm-chair, Two Guinea; and a small old Oak long Settee, 14 ft. 6 in. long, richly carved, panelling back, Four Guinea. Particulars forwarded—"Lava," Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM, 13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, AND SCULPTURE

OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS

THURSDAYS, and FRIDAYS, in AUGUST.

Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained from the Curator, at the Museum.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL Congress of Orientalists, 1892.

Hos. President—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK.

President—PROF. MAX MÜLLER.

All Communications as to Papers and Membership to be addressed to the Secretaries, 22, Allen Lane Street.

Tickets, £1; Ladies, 9s.

The CONGRESS will be held SEPTEMBER 7-12, 1892. MAX

MÜLLER'S ADDRESS will be delivered on the Morning of

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, and Mr. CRADSTONE, at 2 P.M., on

SEPTEMBER 7.

N.B.—Orientalists are informed that invitations have been received from Geneva, for holding the Tenth Congress there.

CATALOGUE.

BAEDEKER'S & BAUDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr.
DICKSON. The Popular Edition. 4 vols., crown
8vo, £2 6s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.;
Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.

From the German of Professor MAX DUNCKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume may be had separately, 21s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By the late WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUXON. 12 vols., demy 8vo, £9. Each separately (with the exception of III. (reprinting), IV., VI., and VII.) 15s.

The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT

FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of
M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOEBERL. With 41
Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most Celebrated Personages referred to in the work, engraved on Steel by William Greatbach. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown

8vo, with Portraits of Distinguished Commanders on Steel, 42s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES

of the WORLD. By Sir EDWARD CREASY. Library Edition, in demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Popular Edition, in crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and

PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon.
Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of MARIE

ANTONETTE, QUEEN of FRANCE and NAVARRE
by JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN, First Lady-in-Waiting. With Memoir of Madame Campan, by MM. BARRIERE and MAIGNE. New and Revised Edition, with additional Notes and Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.

From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW
SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 1s.

THE HEAVENS. By Amedee Guille-

MIN. In demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS.

(Messrs. BENTLEY'S are the only Complete Editions.)
THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION. Crown 4to, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 21s.

THE CARMINE EDITION. In small demy 8vo,
10s. 6d.

THE BURLINGTON EDITION. A Cabinet Edition, in 3 vols., fcap. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE EDINBURGH EDITION. In crown 8vo, red
cloth, 6s.

THE POPULAR EDITION. In crown 8vo, cloth,
2s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. STEVENSON'S NEW WORKS.

A FOOT-NOTE TO HISTORY:

Eight Years of Trouble in Samoa.

By R. L. STEVENSON.

Cloth, gilt, 6s. [Ready August 8.

THE BEACH OF FALESÁ, AND THE BOTTLE IMP.

By R. L. STEVENSON.

Illustrated, cloth gilt, 5s.

[Ready during August.

THIRD EDITION, price 6s.

THE WRECKER.

By R. L. STEVENSON and LLOYD OSBOURNE.

Illustrated.

The Standard says:—

"A volume crowded with exciting incidents, and written with all the imagination, the variety, the dramatic skill of the author of 'Treasure Island.'"

The Daily Telegraph says:—

"From the first page to the last the book overflows with action—action—action. Yet there is contained in it some of the cleverest character-sketching Mr.
Stevenson has done."

The World says:—

"To say that 'The Wrecker' is interesting is far below the mark—it is absorbing."

The National Observer says:—

"The artifice of the changed crew is as good a motive of romance as we have ever encountered, and the secret is most cunningly kept until the end. There is hardly a single character in the latter half of the book that is not realised and depicted to the life. The action is brisk and rapid, and the story is told with an energy and a gusto which forbid you to lay down the book unfinished."

OTHER WORKS BY R. L. STEVENSON.

TREASURE ISLAND. With 25 Illustrations, Fortieth Thousand, 3s. 6d.

THE MASTER of BALLANTRAE.
Illustrated, Twentieth Thousand, 3s. 6d.

THE BLACK ARROW: a Tale of the
Two Roses. Illustrated, Nineteenth Thousand,
3s. 6d.

"KIDNAPPED." Illustrated.
Thirty-second Thousand, 3s. 6d.

OFFICIAL ILLUSTRATED RAILWAY GUIDES.
Price 1s. each (post free, 1s. 3d.); or cloth, 2s. each.

The Official Illustrated Railway Guides with Maps, Plans, and Illustrations on Nearly Every Page.

NEW VOLUME.

THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY.
[Ready shortly.]

GREAT WESTERN. Revised Edition.

Already Published.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN.

GREAT NORTHERN.

BRIGHTON AND SOUTH COAST.

SOUTH WESTERN.

SOUTH EASTERN.

MIDLAND.

"Well arranged, full of interesting information, with a profusion of pictures and useful large-scale maps."—Times.

"No traveller who would know the land should travel without one of them."—Pall Mall Budget.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

FROM the ARCTIC OCEAN to the
YELLOW SEA: the Narrative of a Journey across Siberia, Mongolia, the Gobi Desert, and North China.
By JULIUS M. PRICE, F.R.G.S. With Photogravure
Portrait, Fac-similes, and 150 Illustrations. Route Map.
Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

"A remarkably good picture-book... full of instruction and amusement.... Mr. Price's narrative leads throughout the most impressive of the wild region through which he passed."—Spectator.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada, Japan, and China, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P.
With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.
"Picturesque and practical, and should attract both the seriousminded and those who read only for entertainment."—Globe.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN

WITHOUT A GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACY. With
numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Not only attractive, but of value."—Globe.
"Mr. Albert Tracy is an enviable traveller and a charming writer.
His 'Rambles through Japan without a Guide' is so good a book that it makes one feel that one does not want to 'go there' (this means praise, although it looks like paradox) and need not read any more books about Japan. It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched; yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."—World, July 20.

THROUGH FAMINE-STRICKEN

RUSSIA. By W. BARNES STEVENSON, Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle. With Portraits of Count Tolstoi and the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"The Russian authorities have prohibited from circulation 'Through Famine-Stricken Russia,' the recently issued volume in which Mr.
W. Barnes Stevenson, the Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, has described his tour through the famine-stricken regions of Russia."
Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY.

By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo,
cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

READY TO-DAY.

THE TERRIBLE CZAR.

By Count
A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Captain FILMORE, of the Black Watch. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales.

By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
(First Issue in Book Form.)

PER ASPERA (A Thorny Path).

By
GEORGE EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess,"
&c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

"The action is set in Alexandria at the time of the Emperor Caracalla, and the story follows the romantic fortunes of an artist's daughter residing there.... All the civilisation of the time is brought into the book either by description or suggestion, and seems to live again before the reader's eye."—Scotsman.

THE LADY of FORT ST. JOHN.

By
M. H. CATHERWOOD, Author of "The Romance of Dollard." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A simple, pretty, and touching story of Nova Scotia.... told with great freshness, and conveying an accurate idea of the state of things two centuries and a half ago."—Vanity Fair.

A SON of the FENS.

By Dr. P. H.
EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A remarkable work."—World.
"The pictures of the sea and of the fen country and the life of the people are always lightly and gracefully painted; and the book will warmly interest everyone either who knows or who desires to know the life which it describes."—Scotsman.

JUST READY.

THE MAID of KILLEENA.

By
WILLIAM BLACK. 2s. 6d. Being the New Volume in the Uniform and Cheap Revised Monthly Issue of Mr.
Black's Novels.

"Have you seen the new edition of Mr. William Black's novels, which Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. are publishing in so pleasant and cheap a form? You may here re-read, if you will, 'A Princess of Thule,' 'A Daughter of Beth,' and many another favourite. The latest volume, 'Three Feathers,' I am reading for the first time. It is a capital sketch of Cornish life. Read it, you too confident bachelors, who think that the life of clubs and of dinner-parties can give you all that the soul desires—read the story of Richard Roseleaf."
Queen, July 9.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and

LETTERS. By GEORGE SOAMES LAYARD, B.A.
With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page and 44 smaller Illustrations, including 15 Photogravures. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

The LARGE-PAPER EDITION, 250 Copies, each numbered and signed, demy 4to, boards, with extra illustrations, THREE GUINEAS NET, is now ready.

"Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from first to last."—Saturday Review.

"One of the most beautifully illustrated books that has appeared for many years."—Spectator.

CONVERSATIONS with CARLYLE.

By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G., &c. With 2 Portraits of Mr. Carlyle and 1 of Mrs. Carlyle. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A book which is well entitled to a place of honour, for it is by far the most sane, the most kindly, and the most critical estimate of Carlyle published as yet. In this book will be found much to correct prevailing false notions about a very great writer."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: SAMSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1892.

No. 1057, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Wrecker. By Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne. (Cassells.)

IN one of his early essays, Mr. Stevenson played with the charming fancy, that the conduct of life depends upon skill in literature: not indeed wholly, but in a great measure. It is no light task, he insisted, to communicate your precise sense of things, in set phrase, to another man: the choice of words, the nicety and exactitude of them, may fail to impress your companion, as you would have him impressed. All speech, all intercourse by word of mouth or by "hand of write," is so much practice of the literary art; and human converse is thus encompassed with peril.

"The world was made before the English language, and seemingly upon a different design. Suppose we held our converse not in words, but in music, those who have a bad ear would find themselves cut off from all near commerce, and no better than foreigners in this big world. But we do not consider how many have 'a bad ear' for words, nor how often the most eloquent find nothing to reply."

From the first this whimsical commonplace has powerfully influenced Mr. Stevenson; it has made of him an aesthetic casuist, anxious about the veracity of his least word, its minutest tone and accent. Be it a story, a piece of criticism, an essay in ethics, a personal reminiscence, or a private adventure, each of his words is positively tremulous with its desire to tell the truth. Since the whole of life is a continuous and coherent affair, he refuses to isolate literature in a secluded palace of art or book-worm's study: he wants to know life upon all sides, and he wants to express it upon all sides by the use of words. Thus it is that his choice of an adjective, his composition of a phrase, or his disposition of incidents, is for him an exercise in good conduct: a trial of truthfulness. We live in a very rich, full world: our behaviour in it, and our attitude towards it, expressed in words, comprehend all matters of belief and conduct. Of modern writers, only Mr. Pater shares with Mr. Stevenson this fine anxiety not to play life false by using inaccurate expressions. He also, whether he write essays or imaginative studies, or more formal narratives, shows this care for the truth, as he apprehends it. To Mr. Pater an Italian church or a French landscape, an ancient liturgy or a classical rite, is a thing with definite values of its own, a thing with claims and rights, towards which he has duties; a shipwreck or a walking tour, an American man of business or a French artist, is the same to Mr. Stevenson. The one is more meditative, more learned, more gentle, than the other; but both are men who feel the pathos, the heroism, the living significance of things—Virgil's "sense of tears in mortal things" and Browning's:

"How good is man's life, the mere living! how fit to employ
All the heart and the soul and the senses for ever in joy!"

It is curious to reflect that many critics have found in Mr. Pater and Mr. Stevenson—two intensely practical, humane, and sympathetic writers—little more than unreal eclectic profundities, intricacies, and extravagances.

The Wrecker contains, as it were in solution, all the perfections of Mr. Stevenson: upon the face of it, it has all the stirring romance of adventure which we enjoyed in Treasure Island; it displays two characters with all the impressive fidelity which made Alan Breck and the Master of Ballantrae so wonderful; it includes episodes and sketches, varieties of life, such as those in the two books of travel, in the Silverado Squatters, and many single essays; it has much of that fantastic humour which adorns the New Arabian Nights; it provides us with more of those brilliancies of moral sentiment, already so characteristic of Mr. Stevenson. The result is a delightful and imperfect book—a satura, a farrago, in which every reader can come upon something to his taste, and no reader feels satisfied throughout. The writers explain how it all came about, in an ingenious epilogue or apology: they determined, one moonlit night in the Pacific, to write a story about the tale of a wreck, often the occasion of a rascally romance in commerce.

"Before we turned in, the scaffolding of the tale had been put together. But the question of treatment was, as usual, more obscure. We had long been at once attracted and repelled by that very modern form of the police novel or mystery story, which consists in beginning your yarn anywhere but at the beginning, and finishing it anywhere but at the end; attracted by its peculiar interest when done, and the peculiar difficulties that attend its execution; repelled by that appearance of insincerity and shallowness of tone, which seems its inevitable drawback."

They determined, by a more artistic method, by a gradual approach to the story, making the chief character familiar from the first among many various scenes, to give an air of reality to the central mystery. To this end the story lies from Muskegon to Edinburgh, from Edinburgh to Paris, from Paris to San Francisco, before the puzzle of the wreck in the Pacific is introduced: and, to solve that puzzle, the story lies from San Francisco to Dorsetshire and to Barbizon, where the answer is given. The answer takes us to Australia, the Pacific, and San Francisco once more. I do not know that courtesy compels me to accept for literal truth the author's explanation: but it is more convincing, at least, than Poe's account of his evolution of the "Raven," in his essay upon the "Philosophy of Composition." To Mr. Stevenson's method are due at once the charm and the defect of The Wrecker. The charm lies in single episodes: the bohemian life of art in Paris, the bohemian life of commerce in San Francisco, the splendid voyage to the Pacific islands, the search for treasure upon the abandoned ship: and in certain characters, Pinkerton, the tactless and romantic speculator; Nares, the brutal, philosophical, and cordial seaman. But the central facts of the story are obscured by the very means employed to make them plausible and natural. The story begins and ends with some lack of symmetry and rounded form. The last details are told by Mr. Stevenson, propria persona, in a letter of dedication to a friend. It reminds us of Scott's intricate prefaces, introductions, and involved machinery for getting his main story under weigh. Pleasant in themselves, these contrivances do but embarrass the story which they are meant to serve. In the present case, the difficulties of the narrative are pardonable enough, for they help us to realise that variety and richness of life which Mr. Stevenson never wearies of praising.

It may be objected to this story, that it contains episodes of brutal violence, murder, and blood-shedding, which its author presents with a certain callousness, if not with a certain gusto. But Mr. Stevenson himself supplies an answer by his constant trust in human nature. To him every man has some nobility, and we are all incomprehensible together. Captain Nares was full of barbarity, vanity, ill-conditioned humours; but "he won me to a kind of unconsenting fondness. Lastly, the faults were all embraced in a more generous view: I saw them in their place, like discords in a musical progression, and accepted them, and found them picturesque, as we accept and admire, in the habitable face of nature, the smoky head of the volcano, or the pernicious thicket of the swamp."

The world is a pageant of vices and of virtues, to be endured by all means, to be enjoyed if may be. Our vices have something good in them, and our virtues are not all pure. Dodd, the narrator of the story, is grossly ungrateful to his strange, lovable comrade, Pinkerton: he writes him pages of penitence.

"Wonderful are the consolations of literature! As soon as that letter was written and posted, the consciousness of virtue glowed in my veins like some rare vintage."

In the thick of a dangerous storm Nares was happy:

"Well, there's always something sublime about a big deal like that; and it kind of raises a man in his own liking. We're a queer kind of beasts, Mr. Dodd."

Bellairs, a "shyster," or disbarred lawyer, with qualms of conscience, goes to blackmail an unfortunate man. Dodd comments: "I used to wonder whether I most admired or most despised this quivering heroism for evil." Mr. Stevenson feels to the full what Mr. Watson has expressed in four lines:

"Momentous to himself as I to me
Hath each man been that ever woman bore:
Once, in a lightning-flash of sympathy,
I felt this truth, an instant, and no more."

But with Mr. Stevenson this truth is always present; and it has preserved him from that easy contempt for whole classes of men, which so many brilliant living writers love to express. It is instructive to compare Mr. Stevenson's praise of a free, natural life of work under sun and wind and rain, with Mr. Kipling's praise of a strenuous, rapid, active life—the one so simply honest and exhilarating, the other so merely bitter and exasperating. The two writers have something in common: Mr. Stevenson makes us interested in such things as a “deep-water tramp, lime-juicing around between big ports, Calcutta and Rangoon and Frisco and the Canton River”: Mr. Kipling in such experience as “loafing from Lima to Auckland in a big, old, condemned passenger-ship turned into a cargo-boat and owned by a second-hand Italian firm.” Yet the interest roused in us by Mr. Stevenson is very different from that roused by Mr. Kipling: it is the difference between the truth of poetry and the truth of science. Behind Mr. Stevenson's writing there is a soul and a heart; behind Mr. Kipling's a good memory and a keen eye. A detail, recorded by Mr. Stevenson, has always some human interest; it betokens more than quick observation and mechanical experience. It means that Mr. Stevenson has been true to his pleasant boast: that he has never found life wholly dull and vapid; that his sympathy with all forms of life and all ways of men has made him alert to notice the little details which go to compose them. This is a brave book, as confused as the Iliad, as adventurous as the Odyssey, and with no little of the heartening morality common to both.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

“THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.”—The Byzantine Empire. By C. W. C. Oman. (Fisher Unwin.)

THAT the history of the great Byzantine Empire, whose thousand years' existence bridges over the gulf between ancient and modern civilisation, and whose far-reaching influence has left its abiding mark upon the art and literature of the world—that the history of such an empire should, in a cosmopolitan historical series, occupy less space than the history of a purely commercial community like the Hanse Towns or the history of a semi-barbarous despotism like Turkey, is a really remarkable phenomenon. Mr. Oman is doubtless right in attributing this perverse indifference to things Byzantine to Gibbon's pagan disdain of a Christian empire in the first place and to Mr. Lecky's irritating and eccentric disregard of patent facts in the second; and he has done his best to redress the balance in favour of the so long and so unjustly aspersed empire of the later Caesars. More than half the book traverses the ground already gone over by Mr. Bury, whom Mr. Oman so closely follows that it is often hard to say which is which. We are glad to notice, however, that Mr. Oman does not blindly adopt what we conceive to be a fault in Mr. Bury's valuable monograph—we allude to his optimistic view of the exotic iconoclastic movement, which, originally a creature of courts and owing most of its vitality to the initiative and prompting of high-handed tyrants, was really an offence to the religious instincts of the age, in East and West alike, needlessly shook the Empire internally at the very time when it most needed all its resources against external foes, and vanished completely as soon as the protecting hand of the prince was withdrawn. With Nicephorus I. and Leo V., Mr. Oman gets upon new ground; and from thence to the end of the Macedonian dynasty, the narrative is the ablest as it is the most original part of the work, although necessarily very much condensed.

It was with considerable curiosity and expectation that we turned to the section which deals with the deeds of the Comneni, for it is here that the defender of Byzantinism must always find his great opportunity. The astonishing recovery of the already ageing empire beneath the sceptre of the great Comnenian princes, who raised it from utter anarchy and prostration to a prosperity unknown since the days of Justinian, and made it for more than half a century the centre of the world's policy, is the strongest conceivable argument in favour of the innate vitality and administrative superiority of the Byzantine system; nor, in all the long line of Constantinopolitan emperors, are there three such imposing personages as the first three Comneni. The subtle, resolute, and indefatigable Alexius, equally illustrious as diplomatist, soldier, and administrator; the wise, clement, and noble-minded John; the brilliant and magnificent Manuel, the rival in chivalry of even Frederick Barbarossa, the equal in physical strength and courage of the Frankish Hercules, Raymond of Antioch himself—it is rarely the good fortune of the historian to have such personages as these for his heroes, and the empire or system which could have produced them in its decline must have been very far indeed from effete. Here, then, we insist, Mr. Oman had an unrivalled opportunity of making out the best case for the Byzantine Empire; and, we regret to say it, he has deliberately thrown his chance away. He has no sympathy for the Comnenian dynasty. He overlooks its merits, he exaggerates its faults. In Alexius he can only see “the worst type of the Byzantine character,” “the most accomplished liar of his age,” who could fight when necessary, but preferred to win by treason and perfidy; while rendering ample justice to “John the Good” (“Gentleman John” is perhaps a better if freer version of “Kalo-Joannes”), he expresses astonishment that the crafty Alexius could have had such an honest son (we should have thought that the excellence of the son's education and temperament argued something in favour of the father); while in Manuel he can see nothing more than a “good cavalry officer.” Such estimates are surely inadequate and superficial, and therefore erroneous; but, in fact, the whole of the very brief and hurried chapter on the house of Comnenus suffers from the same defects. The temporary commercial concession of Alexius to the Venetians, which gained him indispensable allies at a time when he knew not whither to turn for aid, and the whole empire seemed collapsing about his ears, is branded as “the height of economic lunacy,” and no allowance whatever is made for the emperor's extraordinary and overwhelming difficulties.

Yet, if it be the first duty of a prince to rule for the benefit of his subjects, every act of the tortuous policy of Alexius may well be justified. But we must beware of cant, and judge the man according to his motives and his circumstances. To many people Alexius' dealings with the Crusaders is the head and front of his offending. Now, of course, the sublime enthusiasm which resulted in these holy wars does honour to human nature; and it is a sufficient justification of the Crusades that they produced such beautiful types of character as Godfrey of Boulogne and St. Louis, for instance. But between Godfrey of Boulogne and the rank and file of the crusading host there was all the difference between the ideal and the real; and, to the Greek statesmen of the day, these semi-civilised vagabond adventurers, who trespassed on the domains of the emperor, plundering and ravaging everywhere at their own sweet will, were an unmitigated nuisance. Besides, even the ablest of these feudal warriors were mere children in the science of government, and could not even rule the realms their swords had won (witness the miserable history of the Kingdom of Jerusalem and the wretched fiasco of the so-called Empire of Roumania); while the Byzantines, for all their degeneracy, were still incomparably the best administrators of their day, and knew it. Thus, to every lover of good government, the artful policy of the Greeks in using the Latin hosts as catspaws to recover their own lost cities was justified by the result. For that the progress and prosperity of the Empire under the Comneni was real and evident is undeniable, though Mr. Oman's readers would never suspect that it was anything but crazy and decrepit. The financial condition of a state is a good test of its general welfare; and the finances of the Byzantine empire from the latter days of Alexius to the latter days of Manuel excited the wonder and the envy of the rest of Europe. During that period the city of Constantinople alone paid 110,000,000 of francs into the imperial treasury, while the total revenue of the empire was no less than 658,000,000; and this, too, without any excessive taxation. No doubt the overvaulting ambition and the gigantic enterprises of Manuel ultimately shook this majestic fabric; but his policy, though extravagant, was at least definite and imperial, with nothing about it of the aimless freebootery of the Latins. Even at his death the empire was far indeed from being played out; and had the savage but undoubtedly capable and resolute Andronicus (in whom Mr. Oman sees nothing but an “unscrupulous ruffian”) managed to keep his sceptre, his wise economies would have husbanded the resources of the state still further.

After disposing of the last imperial Comnenus, Mr. Oman brings his book rapidly to a close. We are quite at one with him in his contemptuous estimate of the contemptible Angeli; though we do not think that he has laid sufficient stress on the virtues and the talents of the great Nicean princes. But, in truth, the concluding chapters are so brief that little more than a bare outline of the main facts can be given. Here and there, too, are serious omissions. We are told next to nothing, for instance, of the origin and development of the Magyars, the most important northern neighbours of the Empire from the ninth century onwards; just as in the earlier part of the book the Khazar Empire, whose alliance with Constantinople was so loyal and whose disappearance was so mysterious, is barely mentioned. Had the author begun his story with the reign of Justinian, he would certainly have done fuller justice, both to his subject and to himself. Yet his book is, on the whole, a sound and solid work, and will, it is to be hoped, stimulate still further the growing interest in one of the most interesting and remarkable empires of the past.

R. NISBET BAIN.

"THE PRIME MINISTERS OF QUEEN VICTORIA."
—Lord Derby. By George Saintsbury.
(Sampson Low.)

"In some considerable reading of books of history, I have found that the most profitable are usually those in which the author, while giving his facts as fully and loyally as he can, makes no secret of his opinions, and argues as stoutly as he may for them. Therefore, and not because I suppose that these opinions are in my own case of any importance or interest to the world, I think it may not be impertinent to say that this little book is written from the point of view of a Tory; and as I have heard several persons say that they do not exactly know what a Tory means, I may add that I define a Tory as a person who would, at the respective times and in the respective circumstances, have opposed Catholic Emancipation, Reform, the Repeal of the Corn Laws, and the whole Irish legislation of Mr. Gladstone."

A book, prefaced in this sprightly manner and carried out from its first page to its last in the same thorough-going personal, not to say partisan, spirit, is certain to possess at least the quality of stimulation. It is true that, after reading the above definition of a Tory according to Mr. Saintsbury, "several persons" may perhaps be forgiven, if they feel themselves none the wiser for so negative an explanation; but if they are at the pains to read the book through, they will not merely know perfectly what Mr. Saintsbury's own point of view may be, but will find that his paradoxes are not such bare paradoxes as they seem, and that without either new facts or much learning some very fresh suggestions as to fifty years of English history are to be found in these pages. Why the author should have taken up with this particular subject is not very clear: at one time it seems to have been because Lord Derby was Chancellor of the University of Oxford when his biographer was an undergraduate there; at another, because his wit was often coarse and his versification sometimes polished. Both explanations are indicated: neither seems fully adequate. But be the reason what it may, the result is a laudatory biography of the man who sold England into democracy, and yet thought himself an aristocrat, written by an Eldonite Tory, who yet fancies that he is a practical politician. Without reckoning for a style, often slangy and slipshod, but always bright and lucid, the natural result is a volume which is second in vivacity and personal interest to none of this interesting series.

Lord Derby never had, and perhaps was never very capable of having, any rational basis for the faith, or rather for the antagonistic faiths which from time to time were in him. This Mr. Saintsbury admits; but he is not prepared, on Lord Derby's behalf, to enter a plea of guilty to a charge of inconsistency. Lord Derby was first a reforming Whig minister and subsequently a Tory leader. The first period was the more brilliant, the second the more congenial. Mr. Saintsbury views both alike with a discriminating admiration; but in order to exculpate the first and harmonise it with the second, in order to prove that "Stanley, though brought up to think nominal Toryism pig-headed and foolish, was always a Tory at heart," though his family had all been Whigs for a hundred years, he attenuates almost to disappearance the merit of that political immutability to which he is attached. Of 1821 he says:

"The fact is that there never had been [a thorough-going and logical party] division since the collapse and almost total disappearance of the Tories proper at the accession of George I. For sixty years and more after that event, even what was called the Tory party had few or no definite principles. . . . Nor had the revived Toryism of the younger Pitt, and of his not too grateful successors, Sidmouth, Liverpool, Eldon, and the rest, a much better claim to possess a coherent and definite political confession of faith. Even in its earlier days it was rather creedless, while in its later, as represented by Canning especially and to some extent by Peel and the Duke of Wellington, it was still more amorphous. It had had the good fortune, or rather the blind instinct, to fix on the defence of the empire abroad and the repression of the revolutionists at home, and to cling to them; while great part of the Whigs had been guided by ill-luck or wrong instinct into the opposite path."

If then Toryism had so little to offer to a young man, full of fire and ambition and love of the forward fighting game, small wonder and no discredit, even from a Tory point of view, if he took up the family politics and became a Whig. For Reform—the first great "cause" for which he fought—he seems to have had something like a real personal attachment, though he had not the dimmest prevision of its effects. To this liking Mr. Saintsbury reverts in dealing with 1867, and on this and other grounds attributes the real paternity of Household Suffrage not to Mr. Disraeli but to the Earl of Derby. For four years Stanley was the most splendid champion in the Whig camp. In the House of Commons during the Reform debates he was its best gladiator; in office "there may be said to have fallen upon him as Chief Secretary the entire duty of adjusting the state of Ireland to that first retreat from the Ascendancy position, which was involved in the granting of Catholic emancipation." This was, in truth, probably the most brilliant period of his life. He was hale and not yet crippled with gout; young and not yet indolent with years; militant and not yet disillusionised by years of impotent opposition or months of powerless office. He worked hard and not unsuccessfully. He was a leading member of a Cabinet which, whatever Mr. Saintsbury may think, England at large considers to have done great things; and his position was not yet one in which he was obliged to choose between attempting the impossible and achieving the discreditable.

Because he was thrice Prime Minister, Lord Derby is supposed to have been a considerable figure upon the stage of the century: because on three other occasions he might have been Prime Minister and was not, he has experienced much criticism and more censure from those of his own party. And it is true that at first sight he seems to have been a political figure of prime importance. Chief of a party in the state for about twenty years; thrice first minister and thrice entrusted with or invited to the task of forming a ministry, how should he not be a person of historic weight? Yet after he left the Whigs it may be doubted whether, except for the affair of 1867, his personality mattered much at all; and that tends rather to stamp him morally as a person of levity, than politically as a person of weight. His hours of office were few; their results were fewer. Lord Derby was Prime Minister for less than four years altogether, and even during those four years his administrations were "a struggling and at best hopeless makeshift." On the first occasion he existed on sufferance, and did nothing at all; on the second he was obliged to handle one or two difficult questions, and dealt with them sensibly, yet without covering himself with glory; on the third he allowed himself to be hustled or carelessly plunged into a measure which revolutionised English politics, and, in Mr. Saintsbury's opinion at least, left his party with hardly a shred of logic upon which to excuse its existence. For nearly seventy years all Tory leaders—such is the natural divergence between a party of inaction and its leaders in action—have had the misfortune to contradict the accepted opinions of their party. The Duke of Wellington in 1828, Sir Robert Peel in 1846, the Earl of Derby in 1867—it has been the fate of them all in turn. It is true that their party has no longer a monopoly of this manoeuvre, called, according to taste, "dishing the Whigs," or a "gran rifiuto"; but time's whirligig brings them all to it before they have done. In Mr. Saintsbury's eyes the last of these feats, though to him the least deeply dyed in turpitude, perhaps because he is its author's biographer, was also the most wanton of them all; and yet this is Lord Derby's principal title to political recollection. But if this be the verdict upon him as he was, there still remains the curious interest of speculating what he might have been; and seeing that at happier junctures he possibly might have been illustrious without being regrettable, his followers are apt to blame him, because he did not try. For his failures to form ministries, or even to make the adventure in other years, he has met with various censures; but these are found chiefly in respect of the year 1855.

"No statesman, I confess," says Mr. Saintsbury, "seems to me ever to have made a greater rishtio than Lord Derby on this occasion, though I do not think it was per villate. On the face of it there never, short of an absolute majority, was a better chance for party success, or a greater opening for making history. The Whig-Peelite Coalition was utterly discredited. . . . Parliament, the press, the country, were united in condemning their conduct of affairs. But, at the same time, Parliament, the press, and the country, were, with the exception of the Manchester School, who were not formidable, united in wishing the war to be vigorously prosecuted. Nothing else was thought of for the moment; the talk about Reform being, as was soon shown to demonstration, mere unreal party battledore and shuttlecock, which could be played, or not played, for years. In undertaking to fight out and settle the quarrel with Russia, Lord Derby and his colleagues would have had the immense advantage of coming to the help of the country at a critical time, and of being able, with no unfairness, to charge any mishaps and even some mistakes of their own on the undoubted misconduct of their predecessors. . . . I agree with Mr. Keibel, that this was the great mistake of Lord Derby's life. It is not, however, very difficult to see what made him commit it. . . . He was a very proud man, and I have no doubt that he had felt the humiliation of holding office on sufferance on the former occasion severely. He had become, as we have seen already, somewhat of an indolent one, and had no fancy for the extra labour involved in such work as he would have had to undertake, if he had come in. Interested as he was in politics, his interest was, as has also been pointed out, scarcely of the thorough-going character which would have been needed to carry him through. But I am disposed to think that, on the whole, he spoke the truth when he asserted, or implied, in his explanation to the House of Lords, that he did not consider his own party strong enough in other ways besides numbers for the task.

Thus Mr. Saintsbury, though Lord Derby's admirer, is certainly also his unsparing critic. Certainly, too, Lord Derby deserves a considerable share of admiration, if, perhaps, less than Mr. Saintsbury's. His temper was dashing and boyish and, under fire, dauntless, but especially in his later years he was not prompt to join battle. He had a wit pungent if coarse; a decided gift of oratory, resting on the only sure foundation of oratorical success, a beautiful and musical voice; and his scholarship was something more than that kind which yokes indissolubly the scholar to the gentleman. All this makes him, as Mr. Saintsbury says, "delightfully human"; but his statesmanship was of the second order. He advocated and carried Parliamentary reforms, the consequences of which he neither desired nor foresaw. He led a party that was often little more than a congeries of items, and yet he neither knew its items personally nor comprehended their foibles in the lump sufficiently to weld them into a coherent whole. He lived in a time of great political change, from which even the Tory party could not escape, and his opportunity was to have moulded his party during that time into a consistently progressive force; but, in fact, in the work of bridging the gap between the Conservatives who quitted Peel and the Opportunists who were borne into power by the recoil against Mr. Gladstone in 1874, he was conspicuously unsuccessful. He left to others the reconstruction of a party after the wreck of 1846. He abandoned that party's traditional and true line of operations in 1867. Had he been less the nobleman and more the man of the world, he might have attempted the first; had he been more the philosopher and less the sportsman, he would never have tried the second. But he was throughout a true aristocrat, with all the vices of his qualities; he belonged to a state of things that is now gone by, and the time cannot be far distant when, overshadowed by two far greater men, Peel and Disraeli, he will be remembered only by reason of a line of Lord Lytton's.

J. A. HAMILTON.

Leading Cases and other Diversions. By Sir Frederick Pollock. (Macmillans.)

THE first half of this book has already been issued thrice; but as the last edition is dated 1877, and has been for some time out of print, the present one will have for many the charm of novelty.

Something of Sindbad's astonished delight on discovering the diamonds in the valley of the Roc will be experienced by the reader who opens Sir Frederick's book for the first time. Indeed, the discovery of diamonds in a valley is probably less rare than the discovery of poetry in a law book. Blackstone and Coke scarcely yield the intellectual food upon which poets are raised; there is something prosaic about the summings up of even the wittiest judges, and the humour of the law courts is more provocative of tears than of laughter. But these Ballads of Leading Cases have both humour and fine literary quality. The very names of the litigants have influenced the author in his choice of style. Thus the famous action of trespass known as "Wigglesworth v. Dallison," concerning the estate of Hibaldstow Leys, is treated in the Tennysonian manner:

"Old Wigglesworth
Fought for old use, and in his proper cause
Established the general use of Hibaldstow
And built himself an everlasting name."

And he who is, as many there be, at once a student of law and letters will note the admirable fitness of the Swinburnian measure in which to lament the bygone "eminent days" of J. S. and his cousins John Doe and Richard Roe.

Sir Frederick's taste is catholic: Browning, Chaucer, and the style of the old border ballads are all parodied, with a skill and delicacy that only a sympathetic student of poetry may acquire. It is interesting to compare these metrical versions of legal quarrels with the bald accounts given in the text books. Take, for example, the aforementioned case of "Wigglesworth v. Dallison," and see of what material Sir Frederick has woven his pastoral.

"For local usage we may take the right of a tenant quitting his farm at Candlemas to reap corn sown in the preceding autumn, a right by custom of the county annexed to his lease, though the lease was under seal and contained no such term."

To compose verses on the romantic legal difficulties that beset the heroes of three-volume novels were no very difficult task, but to gather inspiration from such passages as this would seem impossible had not Sir Frederick accomplished the miracle. Moreover, in every case the point at issue and the judgment are related with admirable clearness, so that even for the lawyer the book might have a certain value as a help to the memory. As a literary curiosity it should be dear to all lovers of good reading.

In addition to the legal ballads there are essays in Latin, French, German, and Greek verse. This display of "so great learning" would appear ostentatious in any author less obviously well intentioned. But Sir Frederick dubs his book "diversions"; therefore, to treat it too seriously would be hardly fair. Indeed, it is impossible to urge a charge of pedantry against the writer of the charmingly simple "Lines to a Child, with a copy of Grimm's Märchen":

"New-made tales are daily told,
New-made songs are daily sung;
These I give you, they were old
When old England's name was young;
Dull are wits that fain would mock
At the wisdom these can teach,
Growth of sturdy German stock,
Heart of homely German speech."

Classical scholars will value a letter and copy of Greek verses, never hitherto published, by Richard Shilleto, appended as an answer to Sir Frederick's rendering of "King Henry V.," Act 5, Scene 1.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

The Modern Factory System. By R. Whately Cooke Taylor, H.M. Inspector of Factories. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS is an excellent work, forming a very valuable contribution to economic science. Let me at once dispose of the one serious drawback to its usefulness in the omission of a table of contents, which makes it somewhat difficult to realise its plan. This should be remedied in a future edition, which, it may be trusted, will ere long be called for.

Mr. Taylor belongs to the modern, the historical school of economists, who instead of spinning theories out of their own heads, and believing that what seems to them logic must be fact, begin by observing the development of facts, and from the observation seek to deduce conclusions. He began four years ago by publishing an "Introduction to a History of the Factory System." The present work, although professedly beginning with the "Industrial Revolution" (as so termed by the late Arnold Toynbee), inaugurated by Sir Thomas Lambo's first silk-throwing mill in 1719, is full of references to earlier periods, whether in this country's or the world's history, and bears witness of much conscientious study. The author's position, indeed, as an official engaged in administering the Factory Acts, he tells us in his Preface, imposed on him, as he conceived, a certain reticence in dealing with his subject, though it is difficult to understand why on that account he should have made "little or no use at all of the mass of valuable material available in the reports of the inspectors of factories and other repertoires of departmental literature." It is probably as a part of this reticence that so little is said of trade unions (the head "trade union" does not even occur in the Index), although these really constitute an important element nowadays in our factory system, and one which tends to differentiate it from those of foreign countries—even our friendly societies, so much more powerful than those of any continental state, exercising an influence in the same direction—so that in every modification of the law the great organisations of the working class have to be reckoned with to an extent which is not required beyond the Channel. Otherwise, Mr. Taylor must be said to have treated his subject with great freedom of judgment, taking away all suspicion of official one-sidedness. His ethical point of view may be judged by the following extracts:

"Neither the factory system nor any other system of labour is all good or bad, but each one has its characteristic excellencies and defects. But what is all bad, and equally so under whatever system, is the dealing inhumanely with one's fellow-creatures, which it is the obvious province of government to suppress—a duty that is alike binding on it, too, wherever the labour be performed, and on whomsoever the injury is wrought" (p. 330).

"Just as the modern factory system was but a novel incident in the history of labour, so is factory legislation but a new protest against the old forces of selfishness and cupidity, and a new method, suitable to modern institutions and ideas, of holding them in check. These are the permanent elements of this great problem of the regulation of labour in any free community, beside which the particular forms they manifest, and particular areas they fill at any special period of evolution, are of but insignificant and temporary interest" (p. 468).

It would be obviously impossible in the compass of this review to give any adequate idea of the contents of Mr. Cooke Taylor's 468 pages. He has done well in bringing out the value of Robert Owen's services, both in setting a practical example of the means by which the factory system could be worked for the real benefit of the workers, and as having urged remedial measures of legislation against the evils of the system which have only quite recently been fully carried out. "If Mr. Owen's Bill," Mr. Taylor tells us, "had been taken up at once by Sir Robert Peel"—i.e., the first baronet—"and passed into law, as both he and his son believed it could have been at that time, it would have ante-dated future factory legislation by more than half a century." He has correctly designated M. T. Sadler's book on the Law of Population—shamelessly misrepresented and ridiculed by Macaulay—as "a copious, learned, and thoughtful work." His sketches of the leaders in the movement for factory legislation, as Oastler, Sadler, Stephens, and Bull, give due honour to men who, grossly misrepresented at the time, did yeoman's service at a critical period in a good cause. Above all, Mr. Taylor has done well in recalling to the mind of a generation which can scarcely now comprehend them, the horrors of the labour world within the first quarter of this century, including the story of Robert Blincoe, the workhouse orphan from St. Pancras, apprenticed at seven at a cotton-mill near Nottingham for fourteen years, and who at thirty-five or thirty-six had grown up to be five feet and half an inch in height, deformed in his limbs, with both knees crooked, and incapable of hard work; who at the first mill where he worked was not treated with the same "sanguinary and murderous ferocity" as in others, being only "from morning to night—continually being beaten, pulled by the hair of his head, kicked or cursed, as were the other children," the ordinary hours of work being fourteen, sometimes extended to sixteen, and occasionally "even longer." At the next mill one practice of the overlookers was to "throw rollers one after another, aiming at his head," and "nothing delighted" them more "than to see Blincoe stagger and the blood gushing out in a stream. On many occasions his head was excoriated and bruised to a degree that rendered him offensive to himself and others, and so intolerably painful as to deprive him of rest at night, however weary he might be." In this state an overlooker "used to apply a pitch cap or plaister to his head, and after it had been on a given time, and when its adhesion was supposed to be complete, used to lay forcibly hold of one corner and tear the whole scalp from off his head at once." If Blincoe did not keep pace with the machinery, he would be tied up by the wrists to a cross-beam and kept suspended, having to draw up his legs every time the machinery came up or returned, otherwise getting knocked by it on his bare shins, and was not released till he grew black in the face and his head fell over his shoulder. The overlookers took a delight in lifting the apprentices up by the ears, shaking them violently, and then dashing them upon the floor; and they allowed their thumb and forefinger nails to grow to an extreme length, in order that they might meet in the apprentices' ears. The filing of apprentices' teeth was another punishment; or small hand-vices of a pound weight, more or less, were screwed to the nose and ears, one to each part, and kept on for hours together. Another diversion "consisted in tying Blincoe's hands behind him and one of his legs up to his hands," leaving him thus the use of only one leg and none of either hand; and if he did not move quick enough, "the overlooker would strike him a blow with his clenched fist, or cut his head open by flinging rollers," at the risk if he fell of breaking or dislocating arm or leg. Yet Blincoe considered he was "treated like a king compared to some of them." Add to this that the food and cookery were so bad that the apprentices used actually to rob the fatting pigs of the meal balls that were given to them. Blincoe had known as many as forty boys sick at once, being a fourth part of the whole number employed, and "none were considered sick till it was found impossible, by menaces and corporal punishment, to keep them to their work." There was of course no nursing "allowed," neither "candle nor lamplight." Yet England supposed herself at the time to be a civilised country, to have a system of justice, and a medical profession. The way in which the latter sometimes pandered to the mill-owner's inhuman greed may be judged of by one or two answers before a committee of the House of Lords in 1816. A surgeon and apothecary of Bingley did not, as a medical man, see it necessary that young people should have any recreation or amusement during the day. A medical man of twenty-four years' experience in Manchester could only "doubt" whether a child might work twenty-three hours without suffering, and when pressed for a positive opinion as to twenty-four hours, said that it was "not in his power to assign any limit," but deemed the latter "extremely improbable." A third was unable to say whether the inhaling of dust and cotton fibre was injurious to health, suggesting that the bad effects "were counteracted by incessant expectoration."

Under improved conditions, Mr. Cooke Taylor holds that the factory system is not proved to be injurious to domestic life; that it is proved not to increase infant mortality; that it is not proved to be injurious to the health or morals of the operatives; that it is favourable to their intellectual development. But he is not satisfied with "the condition of anxiety to which the relations between employers and employed have been brought under it." He admits that by increasing the production of the "cheap and nasty" class of goods it deteriorates the consumer and demoralises the workman; that it is not favourable to patriotism; and that its aesthetic result is "wholly unsatisfactory." He is, however, careful to point out that "the present industrial type is not an ultimate, nor anything but a very transient one." He anticipates the extension of factory legislation, "so as to cover most branches of productive labour," and also to adult male labour, and offers some interesting speculations as to the possible results of the introduction of new motors into industry. To sum up: Mr. Taylor has given us a thoughtful book, and one which should make its readers think, whether or not they accept all his conclusions.

JOHN M. LUDLOW.

NEW NOVELS.

Wife—yet No Wife: a Story of To-day. By John Coleman. In 3 vols. (Drane.)

Cousin Cinderella. By Madge King. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

A New England Cactus, and other Tales. By Frank Pope Humphrey. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Romance of a Coal-Pit. By Charles Girdwood. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Sir Vinegar's Venture. By John Tweeddale. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Lake Country Romances. By Herbert V. Mills. (Elliot Stock.)

THERE is something melancholy in the spectacle of a man who has achieved success in one branch of art assiduously courting failure in another. The more one admires "The Fighting Téméraire" the stronger is one's desire to forget The Fallacies of Hope; and those who have known Mr. John Coleman on the boards of the theatre will feel most depressed by his appearance between the boards of the threeq-volume novel. The wild, complicated incoherence of the plot of Wife—yet No Wife defies intelligible summary; but it comprises within its scope murder, hypnotism, forgery, bigamy, horse-poisoning, fortune-telling, and we know not what besides—these constituents being jumbled together in a fine confusion, and with a magnificent recklessness before which the ordinary penny dreadful pales its ineffectual fires. Mr. Coleman takes his readers into high society, and throws a flood of lurid light upon the manners and customs of the great. A duke disguises himself as a coachman to save a swindler from the clutches of the police, a baronet introduces his mistress into society as his sister, and a dowager-countess swears at a landlord and addresses her groom as “you pig.” This remarkable matter is presented to us in an equally remarkable manner. The “serene and noble forehead” of one of Mr. Coleman’s villains “appears by sheer power of intellect to have forced its way through the hyacinthine locks which, during some embryonic period of development, have overshadowed its severe and classic beauty;” and when the baronet’s supposed sister hands a roll of bank-notes to the blackmailing Jannock, we read that “at the crisp crackling sound his eyes nearly started from his head, his ears protruded, his nostrils dilated, and the erectile tissue of his mouth stood forth hard and corrugated.” This last sentence inclines us to think that, though Mr. Coleman has not written a good novel, he might produce a very remarkable supplement to Darwin’s work on The Expression of the Emotions.

Cousin Cinderella is in one or two respects somewhat unsatisfactory as a story, but it contains a number of exceedingly bright and clever character studies. American girls have of late been fairly numerous in the fiction of English society, and since Thackeray’s death we have had one or two more or less successful Becky Sharps; but an American Becky Sharp is something of a novelty, and Beulah Marquand is a young lady upon whose social achievements Miss Madge King may reasonably congratulate herself. She is an extremely clever person, and she does not make the common mistake of exhibiting her cleverness for mere ostentation; she knows that her resources are great, but she uses them with strict economy, and refrains from profligate extravagance of expenditure. Her campaign against Mrs. Jerome is conducted with as much discretion as skill; and the concluding engagement in which that good lady is thoroughly routed is led up to by a series of skirmishes, every one of which has done something towards the demoralisation of the enemy. Lady Hughes’s “goings-on” with Mr. Basset are conceived in a spirit of burlesque rather than of true comedy, and the mysterious Camma raises our expectations only to disappoint them; but Mr. Basset himself is, in his own quiet way, not less admirable than Beulah, and the story of his heroic attempt to make a society queen of the beautiful but hopelessly stupid Naomi is told with unflinching skill and delightful humour. Unfortunately Miss King, with all her good gifts, is deficient in staying power; and the concluding chapters of Cousin Cinderella rob a really clever novel of half its effect. The dénouement is an anti-climax, for the author has to cut a knot which she lacks either ability or patience to untie; and the reader closes with a feeling of disappointment a story seven-eighths of which is thoroughly enjoyable and satisfying.

If the American short story is to retain the popularity which it has so rapidly won, its producers must aim not only at delicacy of observation and sympathy of touch, but at variety of scope and treatment. Without depreciating its other and rarer charms, there can be no doubt that its vogue has been largely due to the charm of novelty; and if the story-tellers begin to run in a groove and establish a new literary convention, even the finest work will not suffice to banish that feeling of monotony which is fatal to vivid interest. Here, for example, is the latest volume of the “Pseudonym Library,” A New England Cactus, by a lady who chooses to be known as Frank Pope Humphrey. The book contains seven stories, with many merits and no defect worth speaking of except a tendency to imaginative thinness; but somehow they fail to arrest or move us because they seem a doing over again—with some diminution of artistic emphasis—what has been done before. They resemble strongly in all external features the stories of Miss Wilkins, which, during the past year or two, we have all been reading with such intense enjoyment. They are village idylls dealing with homely and familiar situations in the lives of simple people; and Frank Pope Humphrey, like Miss Wilkins, achieves her imaginative effects by boring through the prosaic crust of external detail to the underlying strata of passion and pathos. The success of this kind of work can be tested only by its emotional effect: if our sensibilities respond to the appeal made to them the author has triumphed; if not, or if the response be but languid, we feel that there must be at least a partial failure. “A New England Cactus” and its half-dozen companions are very pretty, very graceful, very finely finished; but we cannot help feeling that they lack the touch of intimacy—that we do not know Uncle Zadoc and Uncle Paul, Sarianny Durfee and Lucia Richmond, or even the faithful Prissy, in the same way that we know half-a-dozen of the heroes and heroines of Miss Wilkins and Mr. James Lane Allen. We know that comparisons are odious, but our chief complaint of Frank Pope Humphrey is that she has deliberately worked upon lines which make them inevitable. The individuality even of an untrained voice has a charm which is wanting in a perfect echo; and in the world of art an echo which is absolutely perfect is unknown.

The Romance of a Coal-pit justifies half of its title much better than it justifies the remaining half. We are taken down a coal-pit in the first chapter, apparently that we, like Tom Sheridan, may say that we have been there, and we linger in its vicinity through a few chapters more, but then we leave it never to return. If, however, Mr. Girdwood is faithless to coal, he is faithful to romance, for in the old-fashioned sense of the word his story is uncompromisingly romantic from its first page to the last. Luther Betteridge, the working collier who on p. 8 receives a tip of half a sovereign from Lady Louise Penroyal for his rendering of “The Village Blacksmith,” is on p. 355 married to the tipster—or should it be tipsteress—having in the meantime won fame as a popular operatic tenor, been sentenced to death for murder, and discovered himself to be no less a person than the Earl of Charnwood. This is a sufficiently romantic career; and as the experiences of Mr. Girdwood’s other characters are hardly less lively than those of his hero, the book is not one over which any reader will be likely to go to sleep. More than this cannot be said, but this is something.

Sir Vinegar’s Venture is a tale in which the irascible Sir Vinegar is nothing but a supernumerary, and what his “venture” was we have failed to discover. Mr. Tweeddale, who, like many other novelists, seems to be enamoured of alliteration, might with much more appropriateness have called his book “Sir Vinegar’s Venom,” or “Sir Vinegar’s Violence,” or “Sir Vinegar’s Vituperation;” but, after all, that which we call vinegar by any other name would taste as sour. The reader of Mr. Tweeddale’s thin volume does not find enough narrative material to go to the making of a six-page magazine story; but the shooting chapters are by no means bad, and the author is not wanting in that sense of humour which covers more literary sins than can justly be laid to his account. We should not suppose Mr. Tweeddale to be a teetotaler; but the disciples of Sir Wilfrid Lawson will enjoy the description of “that prosperous class called distillers,” who, “when conscience and the future crop up, prefer to be styled philanthropists.” Equally good is the description given by Duncan Grant, the gamekeeper, of the negotiations which preceded his election to the eldership of the kirk: “I bargained wi’ Mr. Lichtbody when he listed me that I wad tak’ in han’ wi’ ony han’ wark he likit to pit me tae, but that I wad not pray.” Sir Vinegar’s Venture is decidedly thin, but it is bright and readable enough.

Mr. Herbert V. Mills has for the time being forsaken sociology for fiction, and though his Lake Country Romances are somewhat ponderous they are well written and interesting. Two of the four stories deal with such familiar historical events as the wooing of Katharine Parr and the downfall of Lady Jane Grey, and the fourth is founded upon the legend of the Crier of Claife, which is known in outline to most Windermere tourists. Mr. Cuthbert Rigby’s illustrations are very creditable, and the book will be found a pleasant companion by North Country wanderers.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

The German Emperor and his Eastern Neighbors. By Poultney Bigelow. (Cassells.) This little book of 179 pages is a reprint of papers that have already appeared. Only about one-half relates to the German Emperor; the other half deals with his Eastern "neighbors." The spelling of this word and the expression "boarding a train" are the only Americanisms we have detected. Mr. Bigelow was a playmate of the present German Emperor, and "there are few," we are told in the editor's note, "who have been allowed to enter so completely into the Emperor's plans and aspirations." We cannot fairly compare Mr. Bigelow's two chapters on the German Emperor with the more ambitious work of Mr. Harold Frederic, but both these American and Republican writers pay a cheerful tribute to the splendid qualities, moral as well as mental, of William II. of Germany. Since Frederick the Great, no king of Prussia has understood his business like this Emperor. Like all men of character, he has his enemies, but they are almost exclusively of foreign birth. The number of his German detractors is infinitesimal. Mr. Bigelow considers the secret of his power with his own people to be due mainly to three causes: "First, he has courage; second, he is honest; third, he is a thorough German." There is another view which Mr. Bigelow shares with all Germans and nearly all foreigners whose opinion is entitled to respect—viz., that the Emperor's sense of duty to Germany entirely dominates every personal consideration. To a man who lives to work much is forgiven; and there can be little doubt that, if the whole country had to vote to-morrow for a leader embodying the qualities they most admired, they would vote for the young Emperor. If Ruskin had ever travelled in a Turkish or a Russian train, he would not have said you cannot know a country by travelling by railway. M. Millet, in his charming Souvenirs des Balkans, has given us a graphic account of Macedonia from the notes he made in his day's journey by rail from Salonica to Uskub. Mr. Bigelow, in his twenty-four hours' journey from the mouth of the Danube to Odessa, made an equally good use of his time. He heard the tale so universal throughout Russia of a corrupt and persecuting officialdom. On this occasion it was told by a German, the descendant of one who settled in Russia in the last century on the distinct assurance not only of free land, but of religious freedom. How that promise has been broken is told in the words of one of these now down-trodden emigrants.

"Our taxes are enormously increased, and we are told that they are going to make us pay for the land that was given to our ancestors. They treat us as they treat the Jews—as people not entitled to legal protection. They want no one who is not of the Russian Greek Church."

At Warsaw, Mr. Bigelow saw another phase of the persecution to which all "aliens" are subjected in Holy Russia. The chapters entitled "A Polish Point of View" and "The Russian Censor" deserve to be studied by all who desire to know something of Russian rule in Poland at the present day. The only fruits of such rule must be moral degradation and beggary. Is it strange, asks our author, that Poles should turn their eyes towards Berlin, and pray, not for freedom, but for any government that lifts them above barbarism? "Poland a nation" is a dream of the past; but that Poles should enjoy what Matthew Arnold has called "the luxury of self-respect" is a hope of the future. The three chapters dealing with things Roumanian are somewhat sketchy, but the author's account of his crossing the Russian frontier on foot is excellent. He is quite right in pointing out that there is no railway from Galatz to Reni, although this piece of misinformation has found its way into Murray's Russia, and most of our atlases. Mr. Bigelow is the first English correspondent who has visited Reni since the kidnappers of Prince Alexander landed their stolen goods there as the nearest Russian port to Bulgaria. His description of the place as "the dirtiest, shabbiest hole that is at present used for human habitation outside of China" is not tempting. The principal industry of the town seemed to be the filling of magazines with grain. This provision was not intended for the Czar's starving subjects, but for the Czar's soldiers that are stationed here. On the Roumanian frontier alone 25,000 Russian troops are quartered; and the Pruth, which separates Roumania from her big neighbour, is at Reni "no larger than the Thames at Oxford." Mr. Bigelow might have quoted the pathetic utterance of the Roumanian poet: "Would that the Pruth were as wide and deep as the Atlantic!" We have said enough to show that Mr. Bigelow keeps his ears and eyes open. His evidence is that of a truthful as well as an observant man. His book can be recommended to all who are interested in Germany and Russia of the present day.

In the Track of the Russian Famine. By E. A. Brayley Hodgetts. (Fisher Unwin.) This little book is a personal narrative of a journey through the famine districts of Russia. Although it professes to be nothing more than a reprint of a series of letters, which have appeared in the London and provincial press during last winter as Reuter's Special Service, it can be recommended as both useful and entertaining. It is, in fact, so full of information that it requires and merits an index, with which it is not furnished. The author speaks modestly of his "literary workmanship," but he brought to his task something more valuable for a book on Russia even than style. He is a master of the Russian language. A charming book of travels may be written by one totally ignorant of the tongue of the common people, among whom he is only a bird of passage; but it is quite otherwise with a work that attempts to solve any social problem. A physician cannot describe a disorder if ignorant of his patient's symptoms. Mr. Hodgetts did understand what the Russian sick man said to him, and his record bears on the face of it the stamp of trustworthiness and accuracy. He describes the Russian peasant just as scores of other travellers have done, as "a charming, amiable, good-natured fellow, possessed of no vicious proclivities beyond a certain fondness for drink, and absolutely without a single disagreeable virtue." Truthfulness and industry are apparently disagreeable virtues. We agree with Mr. Hodgetts that this is hardly his fault. That he was starving last winter cannot be questioned. The only doubt is whether he was starving more acutely than usual. Not in one, but in all branches of rural industry there has been a decline. "All along the line Russia has gone back." The author tells us that "from an economic point of view the emancipation of the serfs has been the curse of the country." This view is not confined to reactionary country gentlemen, but is the general opinion. Instead of profiting by emancipation, the peasant has grown poorer. Even railways have not benefited the country. When Count Tolstoi told him this in Moscow Mr. Hodgetts was disposed to smile, but bitter experience proved the truth of the Count's view.

"The whole of Russia is exhausted, with the exception of its last new territory—the Caucasus. The Caucasus is to-day what Samara was at a comparatively recent date, and what Little Russia was at an antecedent period; and so the process of exhaustion goes on."

Notwithstanding the boasted self-government of the mir, the peasant of to-day is as helpless and shiftless as the serf of a bygone time.

Fifteen provinces of Russia were during last winter in receipt of what we should call outdoor relief. These provinces are about ten times the size of England—a gigantic work-house indeed. The county gentry have become the guardians of the poor, but this has not improved the relations between them. "The peasant and the gentleman do not understand each other; they are as widely separated as if they belonged to different nations." Great as the physical suffering that the famine has produced, its worst feature is the complete standstill of all productive work. "The entire population seems to be on the tramp." This presumably refers to the fifteen distressed districts. The lowest depth seems to be reached by the German colonists on the Volga. These unfortunates number about 300,000. The author tells us that the only hope for this "fine race" lies in their removal from Russia. "If they remain, those who do not die of starvation will be gradually deprived of their religion, their language, and everything else that is distinctive of their race or of the land of their birth." The Poles are not the only race to whom the Russian government exhibits the tenderness of a steam-roller. It should be added that the author has "little sympathy for, and less faith in, the political agitators of Russia." If his testimony be unsatisfactory to Russian officials, they cannot complain of his showing any bias against them. He records the facts that came under his immediate observation, and leaves inferences and conclusions to others. Of the future of Russia, he wisely says that "what the future will bring forth, the future alone can show."

A Scamper through Spain. By Margaret Thomas. With Illustrations by the Author. (Hutchinson.) This volume differs from the ordinary run of books of tourist travel not by going at all off the beaten track. St. Jean de Luz, Burgos, Madrid, Toledo, Cordova, Seville, Granada, Malaga, Gibraltar, and Tangier are the only places visited and described. But the author is a sculptor and a painter; she is, moreover, Australian born. Thus her opinions on art are not those of a mere amateur, and her standard of comparison is not English exclusively; again and again she remarks on the likeness of the physical features of the great plateau of Spain to those of Australia. These qualities give worth and freshness to her pages. There are marks of inexperience as a writer: needless repetition; what has been said in prose is sometimes given us again in verse; but the lines on Tangier, p. 262, are distinctly good. The author has been happy, too, in the guides that she has chosen: Théophile Gautier, and John Lomas's Sketches in Spain; it is from these she chiefly quotes, when diffident of her own unsupported judgment. The book is accurate and trustworthy so far as the title would lead us to expect. There are a few exaggerations and misconceptions, which a longer experience would have modified. On p. 55 Navarino is printed for Lepanto. The art judgment is intelligent and carefully formed. We are, however, left in doubt whether Velazquez or Murillo is to be considered the supreme painter of Spain. At Madrid the preference seems decidedly given to Velazquez, but the Murillos of Seville excite equal admiration. Tangiers, where the longest stay was made, is well described, with all the enthusiasm of an artist brought for the first time into contact with oriental life. The full-page illustrations are good; but it is a pity that the inferior woodcuts in the text were allowed to be inserted. The book is decidedly to be recommended to young artists, and to ladies wishing to make a tour in Spain, and to do it cheaply.

Notes for the Nile. By H. D. Rawnsley. (Heinemann.) Mr. Rawnsley's book is an improvement upon the regulation volume of Nile travel. It deals with ancient, not modern, Egypt, Pharaohs, not fellahs; and the author may be congratulated on the diligence with which he has read up the subject. Enthusiasm is good; and Mr. Rawnsley is very enthusiastic over many things and persons, notably over Ramesses the Great, who has now, like Philip of Spain or Henry VIII., been thoroughly white-washed, and appears as one of the model characters of history. Mr. Rawnsley is also enthusiastic over a pretty, if imaginative, picture of "the return of the rightful kings of old, the Pharaohs of the true line," in the person of Amasis, the first king of the XVIIIth Dynasty, while General Taa-ken, in the character of a Garibaldi of the seventeenth century B.C., expels the foreign tyrants and restores the native rulers to a grateful nation. This is one out of several instances of a tendency exhibited by Mr. Rawnsley to look on Egyptian history through latter-day spectacles. But, without laying claim to original research, Notes for the Nile is pleasantly written, and will prove of use and interest to many actual and intending tourists. At all events, it will enable them to answer the question put by an American whom Mr. Rawnsley met on the roof of the temple at Philae: "Wall, Sir, ken you tell me whether it was Isis or Osiris that was Mister? I've got rather mixed." There is another good story of Mr. Rawnsley's, which illustrates the haziness of mind common to Nile and other tourists. He overheard a young English girl saying to her father:

NOTES AND NEWS.

"I can't make it out: the guide book says that Isis was the sister as well as the wife of Osiris."—"Nonsense, my dear, the thing's impossible. I never heard such a thing in my life."

The second half of the book consists of metrical versions, not without merit, of several of the ancient Egyptian hymns and of the precepts of Ptah-Hotep. The epic of Pentaur is faithfully rendered, and done into very spirited verse.

"THE ALL-ENGLAND SERIES."—Camping Out. By A. A. Macdonell. (Bell.) The Oxford professor who wrote that admirable book, Camping Voyages on German Rivers, has here condensed the results of his mature experience into a handbook that may be carried in the breast-pocket. Most people at one time or another have felt the desire to try a gipsy life in the open air, though the desire is not always strong enough to lead to realisation. Perhaps the fear of the unknown may have served as a deterrent. After reading Mr. Macdonell's book, that fear must vanish. Himself an enthusiast for his favourite summer pastime, he does not disguise the discomforts that may attach to it. But his object is to anticipate these by practical advice, extending to the most minute details. Travelling by road in a caravan or dogcart is briefly alluded to; but to Mr. Macdonell there is evidently only one kind of camping out—that of a boating party, by preference on a German river. The exercise, the pleasure of motion, the opportunity for bathing, the changes of scenery—possibly also the risk of an upset—all contribute to the enjoyment of a cheap form of a continental tour, the cost of which is confidently estimated at only £15 a head for one month.

In view of the increasing popularity of steamboat trips to "the land of the midnight sun," Mr. Murray has issued a new edition of his Handbook to Norway, which is edited and almost entirely re-written by Mr. Thomas Mitchell, the Consul-General at Christiania. It is amply fitted out with thirteen maps and plans, chapters on sport, cycling routes (save the mark!), directory of hotels, Norse vocabulary, &c., &c.

SOME weeks ago it was announced that Earl Spencer had resolved to sell the world-famed Althorp Library. It is now stated that the collection has been sold en bloc to an anonymous "English gentleman," whose intention it is to place the books (together with those he already possesses) in a suitable building, to which the public will have access. Messrs. Sotheby conducted the negotiations on the part of Lord Spencer, while Messrs. Sotheman acted for the purchaser. The price is rumoured to have exceeded £200,000.

WE are asked by Mr. Rendel Harris to announce the discovery of a new text of the Old Syriac Version of the Gospels (Curetonian Syriac). A copy of the text has already been made, and is under the examination of well-known English editors.

MR. JOHN BURNET, of Balliol College, Oxford, author of a recent work on Early Greek Philosophy, has been appointed to the chair of Greek at St. Andrews, vacant by the resignation of Prof. Lewis Campbell; and Mr. Edward Jenks, of King's College, Cambridge, formerly professor of law at Melbourne, has been appointed to the newly-founded chair of law at University College, Liverpool.

MR. MURRAY announces a new volume by the Rev. Charles Gore, entitled The Mission of the Church, being a series of four lectures recently delivered in the cathedral of St. Asaph.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a school history of India by the Rev. Dr. G. U. Pope, formerly of Madras, and now teacher of Tamil and Telugu at Oxford.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish in the course of the present month a new book by Mr. Robert C. Leslie, the author of "Old Sea Wings, Ways, and Words." It will be entitled The Sea Boat: how to build, rig, and sail her, and will have numerous illustrations by the author.

AN illustrated volume, entitled Bygone Derbyshire, edited by Mr. William Andrews, of Hull, will appear in a few days. The Rev. Dr. J. Charles Cox, Mr. W. E. A. Axon, Miss Cox, Mr. F. Davis, Mr. W. G. Fretton, Mr. John Ward, and other authorities on the history of the county are among the contributors.

THE next volume of the Scott Library will be an English translation of Schiller's "Jungfrau von Orleans," by Major-General Patrick Maxwell.

MR. THOMAS GREENWOOD, the author of Free Public Libraries, is now engaged upon a small book dealing specially with village and Sunday-school libraries, which will be published in the autumn by Messrs. James Clarke & Co.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish immediately a single volume novel, by Mrs. L. B. Walford, entitled The One Good Guest.

THE demand for Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson's new novel, The Wrecker, is still unabated; Messrs. Cassell and Company have a fourth edition now at press.

THE next number of The Religious Review of Reviews will contain a symposium on "A National Church Brotherhood," by several English bishops; a sermon by Canon Bell; and a harvest hymn by Canon Fleming, the editor. The frontispiece will be a cabinet portrait of the Archbishop of Armagh.

THE following is the text of the resolutions passed at the preliminary meeting of those interested in the formation of a bibliographical society, which was held on July 15:

"1. That this meeting is of opinion that a society be established, to be called 'The Bibliographical Society,' and that the objects of the society be:

(a) The acquisition of information upon subjects connected with bibliography; (b) the promotion and encouragement of bibliographical studies and researches; (c) the printing and publishing of works connected with bibliography.

"2. That the amount of the annual subscription be one guinea.

"3. That the following gentlemen constitute a provisional committee, with power to form the society on the basis laid down in the foregoing resolutions, and to draw up rules to be submitted to the first meeting (to be called as soon as convenient) of those who may have given in their names as desirous of joining the society, viz.: Lord Charles Bruce, Mr. R. C. Christie, Mr. W. A. Copinger, Mr. R. S. Faber, Dr. Richard Garnett, Mr. J. T. Gilbert, Mr. Sidney Lee, Mr. J. Y. W. MacAlister, Mr. Talbot B. Reed, Mr. J. H. Slater, Mr. H. B. Wheatley, and Mr. Charles Welch.

"4. That Mr. Talbot Baines Reed, of 4 Farn-street, E.C., be appointed hon. secretary (pro tem.).

MR. SILVA WHITE has, for reasons of health, resigned his office as secretary and editor to the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, which he has filled since its foundation. He proposes to spend next winter abroad, and subsequently to reside in London.

MISS NANCIE BAILEY has opened an office at 3, Keppel-street, Bedford-square, where she will undertake all kinds of indexing for books, reviews, magazines, newspapers, &c. Miss Bailey was sole indexer of Hansard's Parliamentary Debates for the three years 1889 to 1891; and she is recommended by Dr. Richard Garnett, of the British Museum.

MR. AND MRS. TREGASKIS have issued an interesting catalogue of MSS., rare old books, and book-bindings, which they have for sale at the Caxton Head, High Holborn. Many of them come from well-known collections, and there are some good examples of the revived art of book-binding in England.

OUR attention has been called to a paragraph in the Author for August, referring to the pension on the civil list granted to Miss Amelia B. Edwards. With regard to the opinion there expressed, that Miss Edwards "was not in any sense a great writer," we do not feel called upon to say anything. But we must protest against the words put into our own mouth—"the ACADEMY states that Miss Edwards . . . never understood that she had any claims on the ground of services to literature." While not admitting that our language was ambiguous, we will again repeat the facts. The official statement avers that the pension was conferred on Miss Edwards "in recognition of her services to literature and archaeology, and in consideration of her inadequate means of support." During her lifetime, Miss Edwards was informed only of the former ground, i.e., her services to literature and archaeology. If she had known of the latter ground, i.e., her (supposed) inadequate means of support, we have authority for stating that she would have refused the pension altogether.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WITH A SCARAB TO A FRIEND.

[THE following verses were written by Miss Amelia B. Edwards last winter, just before she fell ill, to be sent, with a Christmas present of a scarab, to an American friend. They have been already printed, we believe, in Harper's Bazar; but we venture to think that Miss Edwards's many friends will none the less like to see them in the ACADEMY.]

Day by day and mile by mile,
As I journeyed up the Nile
Pen in hand,
Taking sketches, making notes
Of temples, tourists, boats,
Palms and sand;

Labyrinthine tombs exploring,
Climbing pyramids, adoring
Gods of old;
Anteekah-hunting; trying
My 'prentice hand at baying;
Belong "sold";

Keeping Christmas without holly

In the midst of these excursions
Fantasies and diversions

Without end,
I bought a tiny searab
One morning from an Arab
For my friend.

It was once the sacred token
Of eternity unbroken
And divine;
Some long-vanished priest or king,
Lord or lady, owned the thing
—Now 'tis thine.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Expositor for August, Prof. J. T. Marshall considers the probable contents of the Aramaic Gospel, applying those linguistic tests of the objectivity of which he is so strongly convinced. He promises a volume containing a fuller account of his recent researches, to which all friends of Biblical scholarship will give a hearty welcome. The late Prof. Elmslie's lecture on Samuel follows, eloquent, but with no obvious critical basis. Prof. Milligan begins a delicate study on a group of parables. Mr. Cross mentions more difficulties in the way of accepting Prof. Sanday's conservative solution of the Johannine problem, and asks for a fuller consideration of a reasonable theory hitherto very much neglected both in England and America. Prof. Beet is still studying the Biblical teachings on the Atonement. Mrs. John Macdonell gives Part I. of a perfect little sketch of Dora Greenwell; and in strange juxtaposition, Prof. Cheyne mingles warm appreciation with friendly criticisms of some of the new pages in Prof. Robertson Smith's Lectures on the Old Testament.

THE Jewish Quarterly Review for July has a varied selection of articles. Rabbi Vogelstein discusses the references to Shiloh and Shechem in the Old Testament, with many interesting though doubtless uncertain conclusions—especially that Shechem has been made prominent in Deuteronomy, and still more in Joshua, at the cost of Bethel, Shechem being no longer a dangerous rival to Jerusalem, whereas Bethel became again a frequented place of pilgrimage under Jehoiakim. Dr. C. Taylor once more explains and justifies his theory that all that comes between the formula of transition, "In the day when" (Eccles. xii. 3), and the concluding words of ver. 5, "Because man goeth," &c., are best interpreted as a literal description of what happens when "the mourners go about the streets." He therefore entitles his paper "The Dirge of Coheleth," and points out that this "dirge-theory" is entirely separable from the "dirge-book theory" with which one critic has confounded it. He thinks that the parts of verses 3-5 to which his theory refers are more poetical in phraseology than the remainder of the section, and have an "approximately metrical character." That either verses 3-5, or a somewhat larger portion, is poetical, and possibly a quotation, few critics would care to deny; on the dirge-question many English and German critics will differ from Dr. Taylor, both on exegetical and (see Budde's and Bickell's writings) on metrical grounds. Prof. Kauffmann gives details on the ritual and Agada of the "Seder nights" according to Anglo-Jewish usage in the year 1287. Prof. Cheyne continues his critical analysis of the Book of Isaiah, giving his conclusions as to the dates of the prophecies in Isaiah i.-xxxix. in a condensed form. Mr. Wicksteed gives a beautiful and in many ways suggestive sketch of Abraham Kuenen; certainly the most generally interesting article in the number. Dr. Neubauer adds a few stones to the grand historical structure slowly being raised by Jewish scholarship; his paper chiefly relates to the Jews in the southern provinces of Italy. Mr. S. Schechter continues his notes on Hebrew MSS. at Cambridge. Mr. Jacobs gives a graceful and interesting sketch of the English Jews under the Angevin kings. On the critical and other notices and gleanings we must be brief. Dr. Friedländer reviews an important work on a recondite subject (Hebrew accents) by A. Büchler. Mr. E. J. Fripp reviews recent Introductions to the Old Testament by Driver and Cornill respectively. On the narrative books (Genesis—Kings) Mr. Fripp is almost too elaborate; on the remainder of the Hebrew Scriptures he is not only too brief, but shows an imperfect critical equipment.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ARISTOTLE AS AN HISTORIAN.

II.

Scrayingham Rectory, York.

The claim made for the authority of Aristotle as an historian is put forth, seemingly, without a misgiving that he may possibly have misunderstood some (few or many) of the political conditions of Athens and Attica before the days of Solon. Still less, seemingly, have those who urge this claim any suspicion that they in their turn may be importing into the inquiry phrases and notions belonging to the nineteenth century of the Christian era. Such a process is purely mischievous, as must be any method which is likely to lead the student to think that the conditions of the ages with which they are dealing were not what they were. In the present social conditions of this country, and, though perhaps to a less extent, throughout Europe generally, we have become familiar with a certain phraseology which may not seriously mislead because we know something of the constitutions under which Englishmen, Germans, or others are living. We have very rich men among us, and very poor men; and we hear of a struggle between capital and labour, carried on between employers who are thought to be rich, and employed who want more than they have. But this is no struggle for political rights. Before the law all Englishmen are absolutely equal. The nobles of England are not a caste. The sons and kinsfolk of peers are commoners; and every commoner may become a peer. The contest at present is one of circumstances. Some who are ill off wish to be better off, and those who are well off wish to remain so. The whole question, therefore, is now one of money, or of the property which money represents; in the earlier ages of the Greek or Latin world it was not directly a question of money at all. The battle between the Roman patricians and the plebs turned not in the least on the fact that the former might be richer and the latter poorer men. The struggle would have been just as bitter—nay, it would have been more bitter—if the plebs had been the wealthier. The facts of the case were, indeed, just as Arnold stated them, although he failed to give the explanation. The plebeian, according to the creed of the patrician, could no more, whatever might be his wealth or his culture, become an Eupatrid than a domestic beast might be changed into a man. To grant political rights to the plebs would not be merely an extravagance, but profanation, and, more strictly, sacrilege. The ideal polis, or city of the patrician, was one in which all political power was confined wholly to the members of the Eupatrid tribes, their clans, and their families. These tribes, clans, and families were essentially religious societies; and the admission of plebeians to any share of their privileges, however small, was therefore of necessity a confusing of their ideas of moral right and wrong. But the condition of things at Rome was, with scarcely a difference, the condition of things at Athens before the days of Solon. In the ages which passed before any attempt was made to dispute Eupatrid supremacy, none but the members of the Eupatrid families had any political existence at all, and all others, having no political existence, had no political rights of any kind. If non-Eupatrids were protected in any degree, the boon came from the grace and mercy of the patricians, and not because the non-Eupatrid had any title to the consideration of the law.

The present condition of our own country is, therefore, as different as possible from the earlier lot of the plebs at Rome or of that which came to be called the demos in Attica. What, then, must be the result, if we apply either to Rome or to Athens the current phraseology on the present relations, as they are called, between capital and labour, or the length of the working day, or popular education? To these phrases it is difficult to attach any meaning when they are applied to the Hellenic cities of those rude times. Thus, after the establishment of annual Archons, the Areiopagos, we are told, directed finance and guided foreign policy. In the merely inter-political relations of the Greek cities in those ages, we can scarcely say that there was any foreign policy to guide, and calculations in relation to revenue would be neither far-reaching nor profound. But it is when we come to the consideration of what are called economical phenomena that the modern phraseology becomes especially perplexing. We have in pre-Solonian Athens rich people and poor people, and it is money only which, according to these representations, determines the relations of the one to the other. We are informed that the cultivators of the land, unable to stand the pressure of bad seasons, had fallen into the hands of the more moneyed class, and were crushed under a load of debt and mortgages. In the accounts, whether of Solon or of Aristotle, nothing is said of bad seasons as the cause of the distress; but whoever they may have been, they had, it would seem, the power of contracting debts and offering their property as security for money lent on mortgage; and this security could only be that of which we speak as real property. In this state of things the poor, we are told, complained of their want of representation in the government, just as the East Anglians or the Northumbrians of the present day might complain if they were kept without representatives in the parliament of Westminster. But the fact is that, before the days of Solon, the Eupatrids themselves had scarcely risen to the idea even of a primary assembly; and the idea of a secondary or representative assembly never dawned upon the Hellenic mind. They complained further, we are assured, of the uncertainty of the administration of the law, as Englishmen might have done in the days of Jeffreys or of Scroggs; whereas the contention of the Eupatrids was that there was no law to be administered to plebeians, who were beyond the pale of law and must be kept so. In like fashion we hear of the codification of the laws by Dracon—a high sounding phrase, indeed, when applied to a few dozens of lines scratched on wooden blocks, or on some other equally unmanageable and heavy material. So, too, we are told that the fourth class of the so-called timocratic division of Solon contained the unskilled labourers of the country, as though these stood out in contrast with an organised population of technically educated artisans. The effect of Solon's legislation is said to have been an improvement in the "position of the lower orders," the "labouring class" being for the first time allowed to have a voice in the government: the question really being whether they should be delivered from a tyranny which treated them as vermin, fit only to be trodden under foot. We have a set contrast between the "poorer classes" or "the populace," and the higher classes of the aristocracy. The picture generally seems likely to leave on a reader the impression that Attica contained, before the time of Drakon or Solon, a small number of rich men and a non-moneyed class who were, for the most part, in a chronic state of destitution, the controversy between the two turning wholly on the possession or the lack of money. Yet we have, after all, the admission that other considerations besides those of money determined the distinctions between one class of men and another in pre-Solonian Attica. The ascendancy of the Eupatrids in its palmiest time was avowedly a power inherent in the blood of the lords, for whom all aliens could rightfully be only slaves. This ascendancy was for the time broken when, in the days of Kleisthenes, the demos, plethos, or plebs, whom Solon found in such abject degradation, were admitted to share certain powers which had been confined to the Eupatrid houses. But this demos or plebs, so set free, is no longer, it would seem, the populace or the working classes, or the lower orders, or the unskilled labourers. The Athenian demos now becomes a society founded upon slave labour, which enabled its members to devote themselves to "personal participation in the affairs of practical politics," and left them leisure for general self-culture.

Such pictures as these are not a little confusing. They seem to imply that there was an Athenian aristocracy and an Athenian democracy, and that the busy working classes and unskilled labourers had no more to do with the latter than with the former. They also imply that, if it had not been for slavery, the "members of the democracy" would not have had time for art, or science, or self-culture of any kind, or for devoting themselves to participation in the affairs of practical politics. The subject of Athenian slavery is one of which our knowledge is but scanty. The Milesian Aristagoras found at Athens, as Herodotus tells us, thirty thousand citizens; but what proportion these may have borne to the slave population Herodotus does not say. In the time of the Phalerean Demetrios, Athens had, we are told, twenty thousand citizens, with ten thousand metoikoi or resident aliens, and four hundred thousand slaves, exclusive of the women in domestic slavery. But there must always have been a considerable number of citizens too poor to be possessed of such property; and we are scarcely justified in assuming that these were all no better than the mean whites of the Southern States in the American Union before the great war. Who, then, or where, were the unskilled labourers, and poorer classes, and lower orders, and busy working men, for whose benefit Solon toiled and legislated, and what had become of them?

We were thus brought face to face with the main question. What amount of light does the newly-found Aristotelian treatise throw on difficult or obscure questions connected with the Athenian constitution, and, more particularly, what knowledge of new facts do we obtain from it? The opening sentences of the manuscript refer apparently to the conspiracy of Kylon; and of this conspiracy we learn from this treatise nothing fresh, apart from the fact that Aristotle seems to speak of it as occurring before the legislation of Drakon. It is a matter of quite the slightest importance; and we do not know what Aristotle supposed to have been the fate of Kylon himself. He merely indicates the time of the conspiracy; and this must be regarded strictly as his opinion and nothing more. It makes no difference whether the event preceded or followed the supposed reforms of Drakon. The result is in each case precisely the same. The attempt failed; but the treatment of the adherents of Kylon left animosities which had important effects many generations later. It must, however, be stated at the outset that Aristotle had and could have before him for the history of this period no sources beyond oral tradition or the writings of historians whose works we possess, or who are, at all events, known to us by name. But of these writers, the greater number may almost be called the contemporaries of Aristotle, and therefore had very little advantage over him for the accurate report of events belonging to a time two or three centuries earlier. Oral traditions relating to the age of Kylon or Solon, which had never been reduced to writing, would, in Aristotle's time, be worthless. Practically, whatever authority Aristotle might have for any of his statements would come to him from Herodotus or Thucydides, or from the few surviving contemporary documents. Among these, the poems of Solon are the most prominent and the most important, because in them the most serious change in the despotism of the Eupatrids, and in the position of the demos who were crying out against it, is described by the great lawgiver who brought it about.

Of the state of things before the time of Solon, Aristotle says, briefly but emphatically, that the men who worked in order to live were with their families slaves to the wealthy, being called pelatai and hektemoroi, as cultivating the land for a sixth portion of the produce. Whether they paid or whether they retained only this portion, he does not tell us; but he must have known that the work of farming, when the farmer has to pay five-sixths of the produce, would be a sheer impossibility. Whatever the payment may have been, failure to meet it rendered them, with their families, liable to be sold into foreign slavery. They were, in short, he says, down to the time of Solon bound in their persons to those who lent them money, the hardest infliction lying in the fact that they were debarred from all protection of law, and were kept, "so to speak" (chap. ii.), without any share of anything. This is rather like the language of a man who is not very confident as to his possession of facts; and this is literally all that Aristotle has to tell us of the social condition of the non-Eupatrid population in Attica before the time of Solon. The statement that they were "bound on their bodies," and that the soil was in the hands of a few, is repeated at the end of chapter iv.; but there can be no doubt that this is a gloss made by someone who wished to impress the fact on his memory, and afterwards introduced into the text. What Aristotle says here is that the "binding of their persons" was in favour of those who had lent them something, be it money or goods. But who were these lenders? According to this passage, they could be only the owners of the soil—that is, the heads of the Eupatrid families. The tillers of the soil and their kinsfolk were their slaves, and were allowed to work on only on the terms of paying a certain proportion of the produce. This statement is of the first importance, because, so far as the opinion and belief of Aristotle were concerned, it effectually disposes of a number of notions which have been entertained on the subject in ancient and in modern times. It gets rid at once of the professional usurers or money-lenders (Dancistai), who in Plutarch take the place of "those who lent them money" in the text of Aristotle. It gets rid also of the more modern notion that they were "crushed under the load of debt and mortgages." It is quite certain that no one, be he professional usurer or not, would lend money without some sort of security, and the security must be either personal or real. But it could not be real, because these people had no land which they could offer in mortgage (the land being in every case that of their Eupatrid lord); and it could not be personal, because their persons were already the property of their masters, who might convert them into money by selling them into slavery. Had their bodies been free, they would even then have been unable to offer any real security, for land can be pledged only by the owner; the free tenant can no more deal with it than a slave could.

The explanations profess to explain an impossible state of things, and resolve themselves into absurdities. Aristotle says distinctly that the cultivators of the land were slaves, agreeing in this with Solon, only that Solon goes further in saying that the land itself was enslaved. Even if we take them to be wealthy slaves, who for any reason desired a loan, can we suppose for a moment that the serf-owner would allow a foreign lender to advance money on the security of men whose bodies were already the property of their lord? We hear also of certain Horoi (landmarks or stones or pillars), which some regard as mortgage stones, with inscriptions recording the name of the lender and the amount of the money advanced by him. To suppose that the lord of land tilled by his bondsman, whom he might sell, would allow strangers to set marks on his own land on the security of the bodies of his bondsman, and so to deprive him of his property in both, is ludicrous indeed. The lord might certainly, if he chose so to do, lend money to his bondsman; but that he should set up a pillar for the express purpose of publishing the fact to all the world is scarcely less preposterous. Of these Horoi, or marks, Aristotle says nothing. The word is found only once in his treatise, and this is in a passage quoted from a poem in which Solon says of himself that he stood as a Horos in the open space between two contending forces (ch. xii.). Of the measures taken by Solon, he says that the lawgiver freed the demos, both for the time and permanently, by forbidding the contracting of loans on the security of their persons, and by "making cuttings off of debts both private and public, which they call Seisachtheia, as being a shaking off of a burden" (ch. vi.). Having said this, he goes on to give some anecdotes affecting Solon's fair fame, the story being that he informed his friends of his purposed financial legislation; that they therefore bought land, escaping payment on the publication of the Seisachtheia; and that Solon took part in, and profited by, these frauds. Aristotle's way of dealing with these slanders is significant. Solon, he says, might have made himself a despot if it had pleased him; but that he found matters in very evil plight, and that he brought about a healthier state of things, no one could doubt, the poems of Solon himself witnessing to the fact. He adds that as to this all are agreed, and therefore that these charges must be treated as groundless (ch. vi.). But he does not tell us who these others were who expressed an opinion on the subject, and it is clear that he is not speaking from evidence better than that which was accessible to Herodotus. As to Thucydides, it is strange that he never even mentions the name of Solon.

But Solon had something to say about his own work; and fragments of what he said have happily been quoted, and so preserved to us by Aristotle himself as well as by other writers. The words of the lawgiver bear the stamp of an impassioned earnestness. He appeals to the Black Earth, the mighty mother of the Olympian Daimones, and proclaims that he found the earth enslaved, and that he had set her free by taking away the Horoi which had been fixed on the land in every direction. It is clear that everything turns on these Horoi. What were they? Certainly not pillars, proclaiming the fact of mortgage, the names of the debtor and lender, and the amount of the loans. In few words, Aristotle did not know what these Horoi were, and therefore he says nothing about them. Solon, however, admits that the question before him was one of slavery and freedom. The people, as Aristotle admits, had no rights whatever. In other words, the religion of the Eupatrids had passed on them the sentence of political death. The primitive Aryan home had been the den of a wild beast to which none but its owner's family would have access. The more powerful of the owners of these dens had grown into clans by making alliances with other powerful owners, and the multiplication of these clans had led to their association in tribes. The lords of these houses formed a confederation of despots, whose title to power lay strictly in their blood descent. If aliens were allowed to live, it was only by sufferance. The house had, of course, been a stronghold long before the religious sanction came from the worship of the dead. In the Hellenic, as in the Latin world, every house was a fortress, carefully cut off from every other. No party walls might join together the possessions of different families, nor might the plough disturb the neutral ground which separated one from another. With the religious sanction obtained from the worship of ancestors, the fortress became also a temple, and the master or father (the two words have the same meaning) became its priest. To allow strangers to be present at the sacrifices which he offered would, therefore, be a profanity and a sacrilege; and this was the ground which the Eupatrid took, and which, indeed, he was obliged to take, in his relation with the demos or plebs of Attica. So far as he could, he made them, and he kept them, his slaves. The land was his own. His boundary marks, the Horoi, were set up everywhere under a solemn curse upon any who might dare to move them; and none dared to do so before Solon. Their removal was his special work; and thus the course which he seems to have taken was precisely that which is indicated by his words. From all lands occupied by cultivators, on condition of yielding to the lords a certain portion of the produce, he removed the Termini or boundary-stones which marked the religious ownership of the Eupatrids, and lightened the burdens of the cultivators by lessening the amount of produce or money which henceforth took the shape of rent.

This last statement brings us to another measure which Solon is said to have taken after his summary breaking of the iron yoke of Eupatrid despotism. He is said to have lowered the currency, or, as some put it, to have debased the coinage. According to the popular tradition, the necessity for so doing never again occurred in Athenian history; and the suspicion is at once aroused that we have here an idea of later writers, who from the social state of their own day concluded that the relief which Solon gave was chiefly through the abolition or diminution of debts. But if Aristotle says nothing of the debasing of the currency, he speaks of an "increasing of weights and measures, and of the coinage," and mentions the "cutting off of debts" as a measure adopted before his legislation (ch. 10). What then was this "cutting off of debts" which in one passage already cited he speaks of as "cuttings off of debts, both private and public"? It could not refer to debts of the serfs of the Eupatrids, because they could contract none, and could receive nothing except from their masters; nor could their obligations (whatever they were) be spoken of as debts of the state. Aristotle certainly does not make the measure universal. Cuttings off of debts are not necessarily cuttings off of all debts. But it has been taken, nevertheless, literally, in the latter sense; and it has been asserted that all debts public and private were cancelled, and for the future the securing of debts upon the persons of the debtor was forbidden. At no time had such security been forthcoming. But if all debts without exception were thus wiped out, what possible need could there be for any debasing of the coinage? As to the universal abolition of all debts at one given time, we need only ask whether such a thing be conceivable. Every subsequent contract would restore the old state of things; and against such voluntary resumption of old obligations all statutes would avail nothing.

The indebtedness of the plebs of Athens, like that of the plebs at Rome, is a difficult subject. It was so before this treatise of Aristotle was recovered. It will remain so still, unless we go back to the earliest conditions of Aryan life. That it was not an indebtedness for coin or money is in every way certain. In the words of Cornwell Lewis, "It is difficult for us to conceive a state of things in which the poor are borrowers of money on a large scale." When we remember that these people were bondmen who with their families might at any time be sold into foreign slavery, the difficulty becomes an impossibility. The conclusion is that, so far as this most momentous change in Athenian life is concerned, this treatise of Aristotle leaves us pretty much where we were. It might have led Mr. Grote, had it been recovered in his lifetime, to alter a few sentences in his history. I do not know that it affects in any way my narrative of these events published eighteen years ago.

GEORGE W. COX.

SCIENCE.

The Human Mind: a Text-Book of Psychology. By James Sully. (Longmans.)

THIS work is an expansion and further elaboration of the doctrine set forth in the author's Outlines of Psychology, published in 1880. "It is specially intended for those who desire a fuller presentment of the latest results of psychological research than was possible in a volume which aimed at being elementary and practical." The author hopes that his new treatise will find its place beside the Outlines, and without supplanting it.

The latter was not only elementary, but was written with a special reference to the theory of education. The author and his publishers have planned the new book differently, and we now find offered to us a complete and well balanced resumé of psychology in all its breadth.

The Human Mind is a book more specially suitable for students who have already acquired a little knowledge of psychology. Verbal elaborations, such as swell the pages of the Outlines and impress the imagination of commencing students; bright fancies and humour, such as detain a leisured reader within Prof. James' expansive volumes, are conspicuous here by absence.

We may take as random specimens of the style the opening and the closing sentences: "Psychology . . . is commonly defined as the science that investigates and explains the phenomena of mind. . . . These phenomena include our feelings of joy and sorrow, love, &c., our processes of imagination and thought, our actions so far as they are ours, that is, involve our conscious impulses and volitions, our perceptions of external objects as mental acts, and so forth."

The beginner might reasonably ask for some illustration to show how far our actions are "ours" and how far not, and what there is in perception that is "mental," what over and above. The following is from the closing paragraph, the subject being the forms of volitional disorder:

"In the region of action we see the double tendency to depression and exaltation observable in the other departments. A common form of pathological disturbance is loss of impulse and motor vigour, and intensification of the sense of effort, the correlative and in part the result of the loss of belief and of objective feelings or interests. On the other hand, &c."

Throughout the book we move on a high level of abstraction and generality of statement; and while there is sufficient profusion of concrete examples, these examples are sketched with severe parsimony. For students not altogether uninformed or unimaginative, there is just the most suitable selection of information and brevity of expression.

Considering more closely this selection of information, the contents of Prof. Sully's book could scarcely be improved as regards balance of topics. The space divided between intellect, feeling, and volition represents fairly the comparative amount of pains which modern psychologists have spent, and the success they have attained, in studying those subjects. A special chapter is devoted early in the book to the physiological ground of mental phenomena, and Prof. Sully distinguishes his treatment by including only those physiological facts which have obvious correspondence with important features of our strictly mental life. The final chapter deals with the variations which individual minds may show from the normal lines of development—temperament, genius, eccentricity, illusion, natural and artificial sleep, and insanity. An error might easily have been made by taking too much notice of these interesting side-lights of psychology. But happily the few pages allowed to the physiological and the abnormal scarcely count when compared with the detailed description of the normal course of mental life.

Taking the elaborate description of psychical elements and fundamental processes with which Prof. Sully, observing recent precedents, commences, along with the picture of mental development which he then progressively fills in, he seems to have included all that is most important in contemporary psychology, at least within conventional boundaries. And outside these boundaries, for example, in Rational or Metaphysical Psychology and Teleological Psychology, there are topics worthy enough of study; but Prof. Sully's business with them ends in a glance and an appreciative allusion. Those students who wish to learn more we advise to go direct to the last metaphysician and the last teleologist, to Lotze and Herbert Spencer.

A feature of the book for which our hard-reading undergraduates must be grateful is the care and completeness with which the newest results of research have been incorporated. Prof. Sully has done much in past years to familiarise English students with the researches of psychologists abroad; and, as might be expected from him, the bewildering accumulations of experimental, philological, and anthropological learning are made to fall into appropriate nooks of the psychological system.

Another similar feature is the eclectic spirit which has led Prof. Sully to incorporate all valuable suggestions from contemporary writers. Even in the general plan of the book he has profited, as we have noticed, by recent precedents, his division between elements, processes, and products of mental life being much more decided than it was in the Outlines. And on special topics the student who reads carefully need not fear being detected in total ignorance of any important author, while the careful and constant references will enable him to rapidly acquaint himself with the originals when leisure serves.

A mechanical means which has made these merits possible is the contrast between large and small type, separating the main course of exposition from comments, critical notices, and illustrative and evidential details. Few text-books have used this contrast more effectively. The large type gives a connected doctrine, a sort of stay-at-home duty for the apprenticed psychologist; the small type points where he may start in search of intellectual adventure.

But the greatest thing which this book does for the student is to furnish him with a ground plan of psychological knowledge more logical and elaborate than has yet appeared. Henceforth any student who neglects to avail himself of it will compete under disadvantage with contemporaries.

The soundness of the main divisions may be illustrated by the change which takes place in logical method when we step across them. In the general view of elements and processes which immediately follows the introductory chapters on definitions and method, we find ourselves analysing and verifying by direct self-scrutiny the truth of what is said. Similarly in the chapter on the general features and conditions of Feeling which opens vol. ii. As soon, however, as we proceed to the graded forms of Intellection and the "Varieties and Development" of Feeling, we become aware of a new logical effort. It is that for which we have been prepared by an early formulation of synthesis as one of the two great methods. "From a knowledge of the elements and of the laws at work, the psychologist seeks to deduce the successive phases of the typical mental history." Analysis is not, of course, abandoned. It is essential, both to find the special materials for each effort of synthesis before this begins, and, while a complex structure is being outlined and shaded, to recognise it as real and truly drawn. Prof. Sully explains in regard to space-perception:

"We may best begin our genetic account of the factual space-consciousness by inquiring what modes of consciousness having a spacial or quasi-spacial character our motor experience yields us. Having considered these apart, we may go on to trace out the effect of their combination with those aspects of passive touch which we have marked off as extensity and the correlated local differences of sensation."

But the main effort is thus deductive, and might furnish examples to the chapters on deductive method and hypothesis in our books of logic.

For these and other reasons I believe Prof. Sully's to be our best available text-book. What is the value of the many original suggestions which are contributed to science I cannot now venture to say. Some have appeared in more detailed form in previous essays, or may be expected to be elaborated in future essays. Nor can all the current doctrines be mentioned which Prof. Sully has sanctioned, but from which a critic whose mind has been differently biased must dissent.

But there are instances of bias in Prof. Sully's treatment which colour a specially wide area of doctrine. One is the acceptance of physiological solutions of problems which some writers try to solve by hypothetical psychology. The genetic method cannot, of course, account for the elements which it presupposes. How then shall we introduce psychical simples, such as sensation and feeling, upon the platform of explanation? Again, there lie on the border-line where genetic explanation begins some facts which are insolubly complex—e.g., the primitive co-ordination of movements. How does the process of composition become effected? And there are also psychical complexes which appear and re-appear. How shall we assign the medium of their conservation? Some writers have met these difficulties by imagining a sort of chemical combination of mental atoms into conscious elements, a pre-conscious evolution of mind whose goal becomes the starting-point of consciousness, and a store-house of sub-consciousness which subserves memory. Prof. Sully's solution is:

"The sensations which constitute the material of all our knowledge of objects can only be accounted for by reference to the organs of sense."

"The child inherits . . . woven into its nervous system, a number of dispositions representing ages of ancestral experience."

"There is no greater difficulty in understanding how a persistent cerebral action or disposition should secure the revival of a sensation than how the original peripherally induced cerebral excitation occasioned the excitation itself."

So, also, the secret of pleasure and pain lies not in the changing facility and difficulty of strictly intellectual life, but in the freshness and exhaustion of nerve function. In fact, the whole subject of study is conceived as psycho-physical rather than as psychical, and when once a psychical explanandum is run to earth in some feature of nerve structure or function, the pursuit is over.

This bias is perhaps a consequence of another and deeper tendency, a friendly concern for empiricist metaphysics. No psychologist has more carefully delimited his sphere from that of metaphysics. But at the boundary he shows a certain special sympathy. Thus, he intervenes in a controversy as to admitting the idea of personality into the definition of psychical fact. May we assume that every reader knows what "I" means, and define our study by directing it where can be said "I think, I feel," &c.? Prof. Sully objects that the assumption of an ego is extra-psychological. He prefers a more guarded reference to "the organising activity which discriminates and combines the multitude of particular mental phenomena, and which in its clearest form becomes self-consciousness." The "positive characteristic" of mental phenomena is that they are "organised" by an "activity"! And yet the psychologist who affects ignorance of the "ego" does not affect ignorance of a thousand material "things" of which his science subsequently explains the perception, nor of the "organism" where he finds registered the "primitive dispositions." A similar friendliness to empiricist ethics may be traced in Prof. Sully's theory of desire and of deliberative volition.

Any systematic treatise on psychology reminds us at how many points we have to be content for the present with only half-way researches and with axiomata media for explanation; how seemingly transitional, indeed, the whole science now is. We cannot blame Mr. Sully for the obvious confusion which still overspreads the description of fundamental functions of mind: the begging of the very conception of "function," and the absence of demonstration that function is triple, intellection, feeling, and activity; the wavering of the antithesis between intellection and feeling, now sharply drawn, now admitting the same laws of elaboration; the elusiveness of the mark set to identify volition, according to Prof. Sully, the "consciousness of innervation." Nor could we expect him to dissolve the plurality which stubbornly infects the causal ground of pleasure and pain, nor to get behind the veil of "instinctive impulse to seek pleasure and avoid pain" which we cannot but believe covers some more definite reason why random movements bringing pleasure should be burned as habits into our nature.

There is one complaint, however, which I hesitatingly incline to prefer against him. It is that his anxiety to be catholic in his appreciation of current ideas sometimes runs into an eclecticism which is faulty as science. In his theory of the faculty of localising in space, for instance, he uses an unusual complexity of material. There is, of course, the combination of motor and passive experiences in definite series; there is also a native massiveness or extensity into which these series become woven; and there are primitive local differences of sensation which appear to be of a double nature, both qualitative like Lotze's, and also something less than qualitative and yet not spacial. It will be a keen appetite for explanatory causes which does not complain of a surfeit here.

J. BROUGH.

OBITUARY.

HENRY WALTER BELLEW, M.D., C.S.I.

WE have to record the death of Dr. H. W. Bellow, retired surgeon-general on the Bengal establishment, which took place at Farnham Royal on Tuesday, July 26. In accordance with his express wish, his body was cremated at Woking on the following Saturday.

Dr. Bellow was in everything a representative Anglo-Indian. He was born in India in 1834, his father being then Assistant Quarter-master-General in the Bengal army. His son, a lieutenant of the 16th Lancers, is now serving in India. Having entered the Indian medical service in 1855, he was immediately posted to the Punjab; and almost all his active career was passed on the frontier. Though he took part in missions to Kandahar, to Seistan, to Kashgar, and to Kabul, he was unlucky enough to miss the hard fighting of the Mutiny and of the Second Afghan War. Of all these expeditions he has left records, for to scientific tastes he added the pen of a ready writer. He possessed considerable linguistic gifts, and a genuine sympathy with oriental thought and customs. He was also an industrious observer and a wider reader. But, unfortunately, he was totally ignorant of the modern standards of scholarship. And thus it has come about that his long and intimate acquaintance with the people of Afghanistan led him only into confusion and error. At first he took up with the traditional view that the Afghans must be identical with the Lost Tribes, and gravely recorded the legend that they call themselves Beni Israel, and claim descent from Sam and Kish. Lately, he had abandoned this theory in favour of another of his own imagining, which is no less absurd. In a treatise laid before the Ninth Congress of Orientalists, he elaborately argued that the Afghans represent a different diaspora, that of the Greeks who were transplanted by Darius Hystaspes, or left behind by Alexander. This very spring the Royal Asiatic Society listened to a paper from him, maintaining that Pushtu is to be interpreted as a Greek dialect. The truth about the Afghans, their origin and their language, is to be found in the work (Chants Populaires des Afghans, Paris, 1890) of Prof. James Darmesteter, who spent about as many months among them as Dr. Bellow did years. It is necessary to speak plainly on this subject, not only because Dr. Bellow's fantasies seem to have met with a kind of acceptance, but also because they represent a typical tendency of pseudo-orientalism among Anglo-Indians.

J. S. C.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OLD PRUSSIAN "ASSWENE."

Oxford: July 30, 1892.

If you can still give me a few lines in the ACADEMY, I beg to be allowed to make a short comment on Mr. Sibree's argument for the equation of Lat. agua with a hypothetical Skr. aqvā, drawn from two old Prussian words. I will give his argument in his own language:

"Asswene, Aswenus, the Old Prussian name of the Schweine, a lake and river near Nordenburg, by the side of aswinan, 'mare's milk' (Nesselmann, Thesaurus Lingue Prussicæ, 1873) can scarcely be dissociated from agua and equus, Skr. aqvā* and āqva, Iran. aspā* and aspa, and finally Gr. ἄρκος* and ἄρκος."

Now, this is not a very lucid statement, and the reason of the "can scarcely" is by no means plain to the simple searcher after truth. If, however, it has any meaning at all, it must mean that, in Mr. Sibree's opinion, there is an analogy between the relation of the Old Prussian words, asswene and aswinan, and the relation of agua and equus; that, radically, asswene (=watery) : aswinan (pertaining to a mare) :: agua : equus. If Mr. Sibree's argument means anything, there must be an assumption here that Old Prussian asswene means "watery." I don't know what reasons Mr. Sibree may have for giving this radical meaning to Old Prussian asswene. Certainly his view is not shared by Nesselmann. Nesselmann suggests that the name of the lake and river (Asswene) may mean, etymologically, "Milchsee" (Milk Lake), and may be connected with aswinan, "mare's milk," just as Dudei, the name of a lake near Bischofsburg, may mean, etymologically, "Milchsee," and be connected with dudan, "milk."

I cannot understand how Mr. Sibree, with the plain statement of Nesselmann before him, could tell us that asswene "can scarcely be dissociated from agua." It is a remarkable fact that a cognate of agua is not to be found within the Baltic-Slavonic area.

A. L. MAYHEW.

"ETHNOLOGY IN FOLKLORE."

Barnes: Aug. 1, 1892.

It is, of course, not for me to quarrel with the method of my critics, even if the method is so obscure as to deserve the description of no method; but on questions of more precise range I may perhaps be permitted to say something.

Canon Taylor says, "Mr. Gomme has not yet got rid of the old exploded fallacy about 'the noble Aryan.'" Will Canon Taylor tell me where he gets this conception of my ideas from? For unless he has adopted it from previous reviewers, I fail to see where my book conveys it.

Will Canon Taylor explain "the fallacy" of my argument, that customs which have developed do not also remain in survival, and wherein it is "fatal to the Darwinian theory?" I have tried hard to understand Canon Taylor's illustration from the primitive ascidian or tidal monad. If in one place, under favourable conditions, the primitive ascidian developed into the elephant, "we should have to believe" on the principles of evolution that in this place, under the same favourable conditions, the primitive ascidian disappeared; but we should not "have to believe" that the migration of the elephant to other places under different conditions means that "all ascidians were destroyed in the process of evolution."

Canon Taylor criticises my arguments and some few of my illustrations by a process which, if amusing, is not scientific. Having picked out here and there some of my illustrations, he then asserts that certain very absurd conclusions "follow" therefrom. Well, I imagine that Canon Taylor is the only scholar who would draw such conclusions even for the purpose of a hostile review. Then at the beginning and end of his review certain broad opinions are given. At first my "arguments seem somewhat inconclusive," the fault not being mine but the subject I have dealt with; but afterwards my book is held up as an awful example to folklorists of the very caution, adopted from Sir John Lubbock, by which I have all along believed I have been guided. Finally, there are dashes into other lines of criticism. It is a fault that I do not "deal with the offerings to sacred wells among Greeks and Romans, Franks and Alemanni," and it is a fault that I do not see that skulls are the only indication of race. Alas! there are many other races whose folklore I have not dealt with in my 200 pages; and again, alas! I think it "a fallacy" to believe that skulls prove race.

LAURENCE GOMME.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE. (Annual Meeting, Monday, August 1.)

SIR JOSEPH FAYRER, vice-president, in the chair.—The report read by the hon. secretary, Captain F. Petrie, showed that the total number of members and associates now reached 1450, of whom one-third resided in the colonies and foreign lands. The subjects considered, all chosen for their usefulness, included an analysis of the philosophy of Islamism; the Master of Downing's researches in regard to reflex action and volition as affecting the question of human responsibility; Prof. Bernard's analysis of the philosophical value of the arguments from design; inquiries by Profs. Gellie, Seeley, Rupert Jones, Blake, Sir W. Dawson, Mr. Mello, and the United States geologists into the glacial epoch as affecting the question of the age of man; Sir Charles Wilson's report of his surveys in Syria in connexion with its future water supply; Count de Hult's Egyptian investigations; and the investigations of Sir Joseph Fayrer and many other medical men as regards poisonous reptiles within the tropics.—The Lord Chancellor then delivered the annual address. He said that his task was rendered more easy by the fact that he was not a specialist dealing with a particular subject. He was there not as a teacher, but rather as a student and an average auditor, to say something of the work and the methods of the Victoria Institute. He was not altogether unfamiliar with the process of considering the weight of evidence, and had been taught by some experience to listen to both sides. The investigations upon which the Institute entered were both thorough and independent. Other avocations had hitherto prevented him from taking much part in them himself, but he knew that the various subjects brought under review had been fully and freely discussed. It was one of the supreme advantages of such a method that no refuge could be found for confused thought in words of learned length, or in what he might call the slang of the Schools. Since the famous protest of 1865, less had been heard of all scientific men giving up the Bible, but a quiet assumption that they were doing so had been allowed to run through a certain kind of literature. It had become the fashion to deal with every subject as if nothing were absolutely true or absolutely false. As long as such words as "subjective" or "objective" were recognised as the x and y of an algebraic problem, and had no meaning in themselves, they might be accepted as convenient words for the purpose intended by the calculator; but their use had unfortunately become such as to mislead. There were, however, such things as truth and falsehood, irrespective of what people thought or said. To some everything seemed yellow; but were things yellow for that reason? That there were degrees of proof, from demonstration to a slight balance of probability, would not justify the term "proof"; and one had perpetually to be on guard against the allegation that a thing was proved because there was some evidence in its favour. He would not proceed, though he might, with a whole catalogue of words which modern sophists used either in a double sense or as involving the very proposition which they professed to establish. What he was insisting upon was that in that Institute, at all events, they were brought to the test and discussed in the open, in the presence of many who were both able and willing to ask with impartial judgment whether the particular thesis was established or not. Certainly no age ever demanded such an institution more. Among the many advantages introduced by the facility with which printed matter might be circulated, there was the corresponding disadvantage that error was consulted as easily as truth. And error was ignorance, not knowledge. One great Roman poet denounced with bitter indignation the poetasters of his time who degraded the literature of his country. In our time we had the printing press, which Juvenal had not. Each period had its popular madness, and the torrent of trash which each age in turn produced in full measure was turned in different directions. In these days it had taken the form which induced each publication to contribute its own little addition to the literature of unbelief. But, side by side with an incongruity not without example in the way of human error, we had seen in a proportionate degree the most marvellous credulity on the subject of spiritual manifestations. Many who, if they did not reject them absolutely, treated with a polite indifference the teachings of eternal truth, sat round a table and listened to the rappings and creakings with a half belief, if not more, in the inspired character of mahogany. One was not very likely to undervalue the services to knowledge in its widest sense of the researches of scientific men. It was absolutely bewildering to think of the silent but effective additions to knowledge that were being made from day to day, often without reward except the satisfaction which success in such research afforded for its own sake. Here, however, was a remark made by no mean authority on the subject, that the highest achievement of the most exalted genius of man had been only to trace a part, and a very small part, of that order which the Deity had established in His work. When we endeavoured to pry into the causes of that order, we perceived the operation of powers which lay far beyond the reach of our limited faculties. Those who had made the furthest advances in true science would be the first to confess how limited those powers were, and how small a part we could comprehend of the ways of the Almighty Creator. They would be the first to acknowledge that the highest acquirement of human wisdom was to advance to the line which formed its legitimate boundary. They would not doubt that their faith would long survive the cavils of each succeeding wave of unbelief. Not for the first time in the history of Christendom had heresies seemed for a time to prevail. A period of great intellectual activity would naturally give rise to many varieties of thought. But the darkness of one period might be only the precursor of a brighter dawn to succeed.

FINE ART.

THE ARCHITECT OF THE SCOTT MONUMENT.

Biographical Sketch of George Mickle Kemp.
By Thomas Bonnar. (Blackwoods.)

THERE is hardly any edifice in the Modern Athens that is more attractive to the visitor, either for its visible beauty, or for its interesting associations, than the Scott Monument, whose stately altitude rather dwarfs its surroundings in one of the most picturesque of European streets—a structure recalling the memory of that Scotsman who, perhaps more than any other, is widely known and widely loved not only in his native country, but also in foreign lands. It was fitting that some worthy memorial of the architect of this fine work should exist; and the production of such a memorial has evidently been a pious labour of love to the artist's relative, the author of the present volume. One's admiration of Kemp and his work is certainly enhanced when we learn how indomitable was his genius, and with what unwearied resolution he "broke his birth's invidious bar," and acquired the skill and knowledge which finds such exquisite embodiment in the one great work with which his name is associated.

He was born in 1795 at Moorfoot, a hamlet, now in ruins, that nestled at the foot of the hills of the same name which bound the southern limits of Midlothian. His father was a farmer. On the very day of the future architect's birth the lease of this Moorfoot farm had expired; and a very few hours after Kemp's arrival in the world, both mother and infant were removed to Newhall, some fourteen miles distant, on the southern side of the Pentland Hills, that beautiful range of sloping pastoral greensward, mingled with bolder rocky crags, which forms so prominent an object in the varied view from Edinburgh. The record of this early portion of Kemp's biography introduces us to the quiet, serious, pastoral life of Scotland in bygone times; the life of which Burns wrote in his "Cottar's Saturday Night"; the life of those "grave livers" of the north which impressed Wordsworth so greatly, to which the pure austerity of his own nature thrilled with so deep and so immediate a response. The father was a man of fine character and exceptional intelligence, who personally laid the foundations of his son's education, which was afterwards completed, so far as it ever received formal completion, at the village school of Penicuik. At first the boy was employed as a shepherd on his father's and a neighbour's farms; and in the long days spent among the Pentlands and the wooded valleys at their foot, he imbibed a love for nature—for flowers, animals, and every detail of nature—that never left him in after years. It was about this time that the incident occurred which led to his first perception of the beauty of architecture, and so became the turning point of his life. At his father's fireside he had heard tales of the legendary wonders of Roslin Chapel—of the light that mysteriously illuminated the St. Clair vault before the occurrence of a death in the family; of the Prentice Pillar and the tragedy that followed its making; of the enchanted lady with the golden treasure, who lay asleep in its hidden crypt—and having been sent to Edinburgh one day in charge of a pony, he, boy-like, turned out of his way to examine the haunted structure, and the impressions that he then received were never effaced.

Before long he manifested that aptitude for mechanical construction which has been characteristic of many workers in the finer arts, from Leonardo downwards; making miniature water-wheels, and dextrously carving ornaments with his knife out of fragments of black oak found in the peat-moss. His skill in such directions led to his being apprenticed, at the age of fifteen, to a carpenter at Redsearhead, a hamlet between Eddleston and Peebles. Here he acquired, in addition to a knowledge of his craft, some acquaintance with the elements of architecture and practical geometry. His four years' apprenticeship being ended, he started to walk to Galashiels, where he had procured employment as a wheelwright; and, near the old tower of Elibank, he was overtaken by a gentleman in a carriage, who offered him a seat, and whom he afterwards found to be none other than Walter Scott himself, to whose memory he was afterwards to rear so splendid a memorial. Once again, by chance, as he was sketching at Dryburgh, he encountered the great novelist, who looked with interest at his work, but was called away before any conversation could follow.

At Galashiels Kemp was in a neighbourhood especially rich in the finest architectural remains. The abbey of Dryburgh, Jedburgh, Kelso, and Melrose were carefully studied, measured, and drawn. The enthusiastic youth thus laid the foundation of a knowledge of Gothic, which he increased year by year as opportunities offered. Meanwhile he diligently devoted himself to literary culture. He was especially attracted by poetry, and some of the verses which he himself wrote are given in the appendix of the present volume, and show a certain simple directness along with considerable command of metrical expression. Barbour, Dunbar, Lindsay, and the other old Scotch "makers" were his favourites, with Chaucer and Spenser, whose works he generally carried in his pocket to beguile the way during the long walks that he undertook in search of architectural remains. One can well believe that such a journeyman carpenter as this had little in common with his fellow-workmen, and proved a somewhat silent companion. One of his associates at the bench, being asked his opinion of Kemp, replied, "Weel, he's a guid tradesman, but I dianna think there's muckle in him; for him and me have been workin' thegither for the last fortnicht, an' he has hardly opened his mouth to speak a word a' that time." We next find him at work for two years in Edinburgh; then in Lancashire, whence he walked fifty miles to study York Minster; later, he spent more than a year in London; and afterwards, with the slenderest funds, and apparently no knowledge whatever of any foreign language, he started for France, supporting himself by his handicraft in Boulogne and Paris, and carefully studying many of the cathedrals of the north.

On his return to Scotland there appeared, at last, a prospect of his being able to make practical application of his architectural knowledge. He was employed by William Burn, the architect, upon working drawings for the Duke of Buccleuch's mansion of Bowhill, which he was then erecting; and his old skill in wood-carving aided him in the construction of a model of a new palace at Dalkeith, which, however, was never carried out. He was next employed in making measurements and drawings for a projected publication on the "Scottish Cathedrals and Antiquities"; and while engaged in this work he conceived a plan for the restoration of Glasgow Cathedral, and prepared lithographed drawings and a model in wood, which were publicly exhibited. There seemed good prospect of the work being taken up and subsidised by government, but in the end the negotiations failed; and it was not till some years afterwards that the building was restored by Mr. Edward Blore, of London.

It was in 1836 that Kemp, encouraged by his friend Mr. Scott, a Glasgow architect, set about preparing his design for the Scott Monument, a Gothic tower or spire, of which the details were chiefly adapted from those of Melrose Abbey. His drawing gained one of the £50 prizes offered for each of the three best designs; and when a second competition was decided on, he improved his first design so markedly that on March 28, 1838, it was adopted by the acting committee. Although approved by the general committee, various difficulties were experienced from the action of a dissatisfied minority; but warmly supported by men like John Britton,

Dr. Memos, and William Chambers, Kemp triumphantly held his own, and proceeded towards the erection of his work. Unfortunately he never lived to see its completion; for returning home on the evening of March 6, 1844, he fell into the basin of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Canal and was drowned—a melancholy accident accounted for by the dark and foggy condition of the night, and by the dreamy, abstracted mood of mind into which Kemp frequently fell when ruminating over the details of his architectural projects. He left behind him an unblemished character, as a kindly, upright, self-reliant man. The story of his resolute efforts, amid many difficulties, to perfect himself in his chosen art, is one full of stimulus, full of interest; and it has been told by Mr. Bonnar with much clearness and directness. The volume is illustrated with excellent portraits of Kemp himself, of his father, and of his oldest son Thomas, who displayed promise as an architect, gaining various prizes and bursaries from the Royal Scottish Academy, but who died at the age of twenty-one. There are also views of the Monument as originally designed and as erected; various architectural details, reproduced from Kemp's sketches; and a series of pleasant vignettes of localities associated with his early life, from the pencil of Mr. James Heron.

J. M. GRAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: August 1, 1891.

Mr. Petrie's collapse seems to be tolerably complete. He dealt with four points in his letter of July 16, and I answered him on those four points in my letter of July 23. There is hardly a ghost of a reply in his letter of July 30.

1. I showed that, although he was now asserting that he had always known that the dating of the Kahun pottery was debatable, he had previously stated that the date was fixed beyond all doubt. He makes no reply. 2. I showed that he was wrong in his assertion that Egyptologists were agreed that the Aqanasha were Achæans, and wrong again in his assertion that his archaeological results would not be affected if the Aqanasha were not Achæans. He makes no reply. 3. I had said previously that he simply begged the question in dating the tomb of Maket, and I showed that his only rejoinder was wide of the mark. He makes no reply. 4. I showed that he had contradicted himself about the decoration on two sets of vases, and I called upon him to specify his grounds for now asserting that the decoration on one set was (a) quite different from, and (b) clearly later than, the decoration on the other set. He makes no reply. I showed also that he had obtained his date for the vases of this class by means of an assumption which he had never attempted to defend. Here, at last, he does reply.

"No; and I do not see why I should defend that assumption any more than I should defend the date of the Arch of Titus or the Column of Trajan. Those buildings may be of any age subsequent to the events and the names recorded on them, but only a paradoxer could debate their date. So, no doubt, the many vases found in Egypt and Greece may be later than the time of the XVIIIth Dynasty, the names of whose kings are found with them; but in the absence of a single contradictory datum (for those of the XIXth and XXth Dynasties follow in sequence of style), it seems to me a pure waste of time to discuss at length such a possibility."

This allusion to the Arch and Column is misleading. In the first place, there are the names of certain emperors upon those structures, but there are not the names of any kings upon the vases. The names of the kings were upon some objects found with the vases. There is a difference between getting the name of a king upon the object itself, and getting it upon some other object found at the same time. In the second place, those structures exhibit inscriptions and reliefs relating to the events which led to their construction; but these Egyptian objects exhibit the bare names and titles of certain kings, and such names and titles continued in common use as hieroglyphic ornaments long after the decease of the kings to whom they belonged.

Mr. Petrie contends that objects are practically certain to be of the same date, if they are found together. I must remind him of what he said about the tomb of Maket in Ithunu, pp. 22-24. He has assigned the date 1100 B.C. to the so-called Ægean vase from that tomb, though, in that same tomb, he found a scarab bearing the name of Tahutmes III., "and probably contemporary with him, by the style of it," and also a blue glass frog, "which is probably of Amenhotep III. or IV.," who reigned soon after Tahutmes III. If that Ægean vase is some 400 or 500 years later than Tahutmes III., why must another Ægean vase be contemporary with Tutankhamen, simply because it was found in the same tomb with some little blue pendants bearing the name of Tutankhamen? Yet that is his assertion in Ithunu, p. 17; and on pp. 16-18 he makes similar assertions about the other Ægean vases from Gurob. There must always be a doubt whether the Egyptian objects are contemporary with the kings whose names they bear; and he has admitted in Ithunu, p. 24, that such objects might be handed down as heirlooms, or might be dug up in plundering tombs, and used again.

He speaks also of "the absence of a single contradictory datum." That is an audacious statement after all that has been said about the vases in the tomb of Ramessu III., and their relation to the vases which he assigns to the reign of Tutankhamen, some 250 years earlier.

Mr. Petrie's letter contains another paragraph which requires notice. It follows immediately after the paragraph quoted above.

"I could easily show that Mr. Torr has 'misrepresented' (to use his favourite phrase) my statements in many points in his last letter, and has assumed meanings very different to those of my words. But all such matters are trivial beside the main issue, which I have re-stated once more above, and which has never been met."

Whenever I have complained that Mr. Petrie has misrepresented my views, I have made specific charges, and supported those charges, where necessary, by quotation from the passages in question. He has never tried to justify his statements, nor has he retracted them; and now he simply says tu quoque. If he will make specific charges, he will find me ready to justify my statements, or else retract them.

What he now describes as "the main issue" is only one of the issues raised by one of the four points which have been under discussion; and he has never before suggested that it is of greater importance than the rest. I cannot imagine what he means by saying that this issue has never been met. In my article in the Classical Review, I challenged his assumption that a vase must be contemporary with a king if found in the same grave with some object bearing the name of that king. And in all my replies to his letters I have returned to this point, and have twice commented on the fact that he had never attempted to defend that assumption. The defence, which I have criticised above, is contained in his last letter. In short, I raised the issue, and it was for him to meet it. At length he does meet it; and then, having met it, he says triumphantly that it has never been met.

Cecil Torr.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER has been re-elected to the Slade professorship of fine art at Oxford, for a third term.

MR. E. J. POYNTER's picture of "The Queen of Sheba's Visit to Solomon" is now on view at Mr. McLean's gallery in the Haymarket.

For some time past the Gresham committee, composed of members of the Corporation and the Mercers' Company, in which body the ownership of the Royal Exchange was vested by Sir Thomas Gresham more than three centuries ago, have had under consideration a scheme for the decoration of the interior walls of the Exchange. The panels, twenty-four in number, in the ambulatory of the Exchange, have been recently cleaned, and it seemed a good opportunity for depicting upon them scenes from the history of the City. The committee accordingly placed themselves in communication with Sir Frederic Leighton, Mr. Calderon, and Mr. Poynter, from whom they received hearty support. The subjects which were suggested by the Gresham committee for pictures were approved by these artists. Looking to the importance of such a building as the Royal Exchange, they recommended that a list of well-known artists of approved ability should be drawn up and a subject allotted to each. The Gresham committee have adopted the recommendation. Sir F. Leighton has offered to execute one of the designs on a panel and to present it as a gift; and Mr. Deputy Snowdon has undertaken to present another picture, the subject chosen by him being the opening of the present Royal Exchange by the Queen in 1842. It is confidently expected that when this proposal is before the citizens of London, the Gresham committee will have similar offers from public bodies and merchants and bankers.

By the advice of Sir Frederic Leighton and Mr. W. B. Richmond, with the approbation of Messrs. Bodley and Garner, the cautious and tentative experiments lately made in painting the stone in the interior of the east end of St. Paul's Cathedral have been discontinued, and the application will probably in a few weeks be removed.

IN a letter to a correspondent Lieutenant H. G. Lyons writes as follows from Wadi Halfa: "At present I am getting on well with my excavating, and have discovered old Egyptian fortresses at Halfa and at Matuga, twelve miles south, the latter containing a cartouche of Tseresen III. I have opened three rock-tombs at Halfa, all rifled, but have found quantities of pottery, two jars being almost perfect. There are between six and ten hieratic inscriptions on the rocks, of which I am taking squeezes. In the temple of Thothmes IV. at Halfa, on removing the sand, I found a two-line ink inscription, but so defaced that I do not think I can copy it."

THE Punjab Government has published (Calcutta: at the Baptist Mission Press) a Catalogue of the coins in the Lahore Museum, compiled by Mr. C. J. Rodgers, who is understood to be now engaged in cataloguing what is by far the largest public collection of coins in India, that in the Calcutta Museum. The Lahore Catalogue is the subject of an elaborate review, by Mr. Vincent Smith, in the Indian Antiquary for June, from which we learn that the collection is of a miscellaneous character. Among the pieces believed to be unpublished are: a billon coin bearing the names both of the last Hindu Raja, Prithivi, and of his conqueror, Muhammad bin Sam; a brass coin of the Gupta type, with the legend, Pasata; two small silver coins of Ali, an early governor of Sindh; and several new coins of the Sultans of Ghazni.

THE STAGE.

THE THEATRES.

PENDING the production of a more serious piece—which may be expected, we presume, when people are coming back to town in the late autumn—there has been produced, at the Criterion, a free adaptation from the French, the libretto by Mr. Gilbert and the music by Mr. Grossmith, who has many reminiscences of Sullivan. The piece bears the inviting title of “Haste to the Wedding.” It is gay, and not particularly cynical; and though it may not be reckoned among the most important of his productions, it affords abundant evidence of Mr. Gilbert’s familiar talent for dealing in entertaining fashion with the most commonplace of characters and the most ordinary of events. It narrates, for example, in that ordinary talk of the period, which so few dramatists have at their command, how a modern lover of careful tendencies escorted a fair one to the Horticultural Exhibition, where the rain poured down on her brand new hat.

“Did he stand me a hausom? Oh, dear no!
He stood me under a portico.”

And he kept her waiting, it would appear, in that exposed situation while he lied him to borrow, on her behalf, “a friend’s umbrella.” The younger Mr. Grossmith, Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. Frank Wyatt, Miss Ellis Jeffreys, Miss Sybil Carlisle, and Miss Day Ford are among the players engaged in interpreting the latest, and one of the lightest, of Mr. Gilbert’s productions.

I can attribute to nothing but the pure perversity of human nature—to sheer “cussedness,” as an American would say—a visit which I paid to the Strand Theatre in the broiling heat of last Saturday afternoon, when, to the well-regulated mind, any conceivable pursuit that may be followed in or out of London would have seemed more justifiable than going to the play. Yet in witnessing, for a second time, the “Niobe, all smiles” of Mr. Harry and Mr. Edward Paulton, I was not without my reward; for, however much there is in the piece to recall the “Pygmalion and Galatea” of Mr. Gilbert, it is really highly ingenious in conception and construction, and executed with all possible brightness of dialogue. A statue come to life—and one who, with extended arms and large gesture, ejaculates “Hail! hail!” when the mortal of to-day would wish you a cramped and meaningless “Good morning”—and a statue, too, who, in pure innocence, naïveté, and naturalness, puts her arms affectionately around any elderly married gentleman who happens to have been considerate to her—such a being, it will be conceded, affords endless opportunities for stage diversion, and authors and actors alike make the most of an admirable opportunity for gentle satire and entertaining malentendu. Mr. Paulton is as funny as ever in the part of the blameless husband who has sheltered the statue in the interest of a friend; Mr. Herbert Ross is quietly and dryly amusing; Mr. George Hawtreys affects the graces of the provincial dilettante, who imagines himself in sympathy with ancient art chiefly because he is oblivious of the interests of modern life; Miss Isabel Ellisen is handsome and indignant as a “new governess” whose place the statue has unjustly usurped—for, in momentary confusion, Niobe had at first to be represented as the learned young lady whose arrival was somehow delayed; Miss Zerbini imitates, not without success, the method of Miss Sophy Larkin in the enactment of the part of a prude, whose past will not bear inquiring into; Miss Ina Goldsmith and Miss Eleanor May act with sufficient veracity in situations that are inconceivable, and are, both of them, according to the somewhat imprudent dictum of Edmond About, “doublement femmes, puisqu’elles sont blondes.” But, so far as the “female interest” is concerned, the weight of the piece falls upon Miss Beatrice Lamb, whose part of Niobe fits her “like a glove,” exacting from her nothing which she cannot supply, and permitting her the full display of stately charm, of real intelligence, and of a gentlewoman’s graces of diction and voice. What may be the future of “Niobe” when it shall have ceased to draw at the Strand cannot yet be said; but, as regards the parts assigned to Mr. Paulton and Miss Lamb, they are such as afford to their present interpreters (who have known how to do so much with them) an almost unexampled opportunity of successful provincial “starring.” I expect to hear that “Niobe” is taken into the country by one or both of its principal performers.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

History of the Leeds Musical Festival, 1858-1889. By Fred. R. Spark and Joseph Bennett. (Novello.)

OF all the provincial Festivals, the one held every three years at Leeds is the youngest; but it has already rendered valuable services to musical art, and proves—both in the importance of the novelties produced and in the general excellence of the performances—a formidable rival to Birmingham, which proudly boasts of its “Elijah” and other brilliant successes. The volume under notice contains a full record of the various Festivals held—the business of organisation, the engagement of artists, the selection of works, &c. This alone would make it acceptable as a work of reference, and all the more so since it has been prepared with the greatest care; but for the general public much of the information must necessarily appear somewhat dry. It possesses, however, some features which will secure for it a wide circle of readers. There are, for instance, accounts of Festival Committees, in which one gets many a peep behind the scenes: the troubles with regard to choice of works in 1858; the search after a conductor in 1874, and the correspondence with Messrs. Hallé, Barnby, and Costa; also difficulties in connexion with the engagement of prime donne—all of which will undoubtedly prove diverting reading. Most of the revelations are of a comparatively harmless character; but, on the other hand, there are one or two which lead us to doubt whether the line between private and public information has been scrupulously maintained.

The history of the Leeds Festival from 1874, when the real triennial succession commenced, is one of triumphant progress. First, as to finance. In 1874, after all expenses had been paid, there was a balance of £12 15s. 9d., but in 1889 over £3000. Again, in 1874 the sale of serial tickets was 676, but in 1889 1195.

In the choice of works the committee seem to have displayed, for the most part, sound judgment, and the bold policy adopted with regard to “The Messiah” and “Elijah” deserves full recognition. In 1883 the former was omitted; in 1886 the latter was removed from its position as head of the Festival, and put down for the Saturday evening popular concert; in 1889 neither appeared in the week’s programme. No disrespect was intended towards either masterpiece, but it was felt that the noble choir and grand orchestra might be more profitably employed in doing justice to other great works heard less often.

Again, applications were made to various native and foreign composers of eminence to write specially for Leeds. Their answers, printed in facsimile, are highly interesting. Like the invited guests in the parable, many made excuses for not complying with the invitation. Gounod in 1878 was “engaged now to write a great opera.” Verdi in 1883 writes “Je ne travaille presque plus”; Macfarren, on the other hand, in 1883 was willing to write an oratorio “if I can find a subject”; a month later he decided on “King David,” which proved, indeed, his swan’s song. Dvorák, in 1884, answers: “I am particularly anxious to write an important work for you.” Sir A. Sullivan in the same year was asked to contribute something, and wisely replies: “Let me know in good time, so that I may not be hurried over it.” The application to Brahms elicited from that eminent composer a somewhat curious reply. He could not make up his mind to promise a new work, but expressed the pleasure it would give him to have “one of my old works” performed. There are not many composers who would have thus resisted the “charm of novelty.” Brahms looked at the matter from a high-art point of view, and he was undoubtedly right not to reckon without that important host, inspiration. Rubinstein was applied to in June, 1887, and a reminder was sent three months later; but, as the authors laconically state, “the oracle remained dumb.”

The volume concludes with a useful index of all the works performed at Leeds from 1858 to 1889.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day. The Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS

	6 Months			12 Months
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
For One Volume at a time ...	0	12	0	1	1	0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	0	17	6	1	11	6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four " "	1	3	0	2	2	0
For Eight " "	1	15	0	3	3	0
For Fifteen " "	3	0	0	5	5	0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time ...	0	12	0	1	1	0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	0	17	6	1	11	6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three " "	1	3	0	2	2	0
For Four " "	1	8	0	2	10	0
For Six " "	1	15	0	3	3	0
For Twelve " "	3	0	0	5	5	0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ...	5	5	0	9	9	0
For Thirty-six " "	8	0	0	14	2	6
For Forty-eight " "	10	10	0	18	16	0
For Sixty " "	13	0	0	23	9	0
For Seventy-two " "	15	10	0	28	2	0
For Eighty-four " "	18	0	0	32	15	0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information, can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

Edited by LLOYD BRYCE.

AUGUST, 1892.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS and HOME RULE. By the DUKE of ARGYLL.
 THE SHUDDER in LITERATURE. By JULES CLARETIE.
 OUR RECENT FLOODS. By Major J. W. POWELL.
 ABRAHAM LINCOLN as a STRATEGIST.—II. By ARCHIBALD FORBES.
 THE POINT of VIEW. By GAIL HAMILTON.
 THOMAS PAINE. By Col. ROBERT G. INGHAM.
 THE POPE at HOME. By GIOVANNI ARMADI.
 BUSINESS in PRESIDENTIAL YEARS. By F. R. THURBER.
 A LAST WORD on LONDON SOCIETY. By Lady FRANCES BALFOUR.
 TWO CONGRESSES CONTRASTED. By Ex-Speaker REED.
 PARTY CONVENTIONS. By Senator JOHN T. MORGAN.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE DEACONESS MOVEMENT. By THE NUN of KENMARE.
 ART STUDENTS in ITALY. By Ex-Governor J. SCHUYLER CROSBY.
 FARM ORGANISATIONS. By NEWTON L. BARNELL.
 A TIME to be OUT of DOORS. By Woods HUTCHINSON, M.D.
 BRENTANO'S, 5, Agar Street, Strand, W.C.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

To be had at all Newsagents and Booksellers.

THE EASTERN AND WESTERN REVIEW.

Vol. II., No. 3.

AUGUST NUMBER CONTAINS—

TURKEY TO-DAY. By H. A. SALMON and FRANCIS SCUDAMORE.
 MOROCCO and her ENEMIES. By W. MARTIN WOOD.
 SCENES from GREEK LIFE. By Mrs. E. M. EDMONDS.
 PRINCE GARITZINE.—Part II. (Conclusion). By FELIX SANDT.
 ASIA and AUSTRALASIA. By an AUSTRALIAN OBSERVER.
 SKETCHES on the RIVIERA. By E. M. LINGU.
 DEMOCRACY in ENGLAND. By F. W. GREY.
 A MAN of GENIUS. (Continued.) By HENRY MURRAY.
 COMMERCIAL IMMORALITY. By F. C. HUNBLE.
 REEVAN, QUEEN of SILHULAND. By H. B. (Continued.)
 WINTER MOOSE HUNTING in NOVA SCOTIA. By W. H. POSTER.
 THE TWO HEMISPHERES—Notes of the Month—History of the Eastern and Western Churches (continued)—History of the Nineteenth Century—Reviews—Eastern Affairs and Western Reviewers—Index to Current Literature.

Offices: 21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., OULS, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SERENO," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

SHELLEY CENTENARY NUMBER.

THE BOOKMAN, for AUGUST, price 6d., containing Illustrations of the Shelley Memorials at Christchurch and Rome, and the following among many other interesting Articles—

OUR DEBT to FRANCE. By W. HALE WHITE.
 SHELLEY as a POET. By WILLIAM WATSON.
 SHELLEY'S PRELUDES. By JANE BARLOW.
 ALICIA. Part II. By EMMY PAINE.
 &c. &c. &c.

Publishing Office: 37, PATERNOSTER ROW

Just published, 76 pp., 1s. net; by post, 1s. 1d.

THE "NEW GOSPEL of INTERPRETATION." Being an Abstract of the Doctrine and a Statement of the Objects of the Esoteric Christian Union. (President-Founder, EDWARD MANTON, B.A.; Hon. Sec., Miss ETHEL FORSYTH, 37, Chelsea Gardens, S.W.)

London: LAMLEY & Co., 1 and 3, Exhibition Road, S.W.; and at all Booksellers.

CHISWICK PRESS EDITIONS.

JUST READY.

SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION [by SIMON WAGSTAFF, Esq.]. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With Engraved Portrait of Swift. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 6s. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 12s. net.

ONLY A FEW COPIES LEFT.

JOURNAL of a VOYAGE to LISBON.

By HENRY FIELDING, Esq. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Fielding. Limited Edition: 475 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 25 copies [all subscribed for] on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

"A very beautiful edition....worthily edited."—Times.
 "In handsome type and convenient size."—Athenaeum.
 "A book that is as pleasant to the hand as delightful to the eye."—Saturday Review.
 "Mr. Austin Dobson's critical and biographical preface is, of course, a perfect piece of work."—Review of Reviews.
 "Got up in a style of extreme excellence as regards paper, printing, and type."—Notes and Queries.

THE NEXT VOLUME IN THIS SERIES WILL RE—
THOMAS NASH'S LIFE of JACK WILTON

With an Essay on the Life and Writings of Nash by EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With an engraved Portrait of the Earl of Surrey. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper. In the press

Other Volumes in preparation.

LONDON: CHISWICK PRESS, TOOK'S COURT, E.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.
 THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
 THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).
 "Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
 21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
 SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
 and
 POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
 PIECES. Also,
 ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
 TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
 SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
 11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
 TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
 STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums or deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAYNES, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
 TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAYNES, Manager.

THE

LINO TYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
 December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1058.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1892.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

VINOGRADOFF'S VILLAINAGE IN ENGLAND, by Miss L. TOULMIN SMITH	121
DENT'S MOUNTAINERING, by REGINALD HUGHES	121
HOSKEN'S PHAON AND SAPHIRO, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	125
A CLASSIFIED INDEX TO MURATORI'S LITERARIES, by the BISHOP OF EDINBURGH	126
THE LIFE OF COLONEL DUNCAN, by J. G. C. MINCHIN	126
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	127
CURRENT LITERATURE	128
NOTES AND NEWS	129
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A PRAYER," by GRANT ALLEN	130
OBITUARY: SIR DANIEL WILSON	130
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	131
LEE & GIBBING	131
CORRESPONDENCE— Pendland Park and Pentland Hills, by Prof. Rhys; The Early History of Babylon, by Sir Henry Howorth; The New 'Aphrodisias,' by F. T. Richards; Notes on Herodas, by F. D.; Eranismus Dates in Westminster Abbey, by A. Ashton	132
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	131
PROF. HILSONFIELD'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE STUDY OF THE VEDA, by Prof. MAX MÜLLER	131
CORRESPONDENCE— "Ethnology in Folklore," by Canon Isaac Taylor; Old Prussian "Aswene," by E. Sibre	135
PHILOLOGY NOTES	135
THREE BOOKS ON MICHELANGELO, I., by MAURICE HEWLETT	136
CORRESPONDENCE— Aegyrian Pottery in Egypt, by W. M. Flinders Petrie	137
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	138
PROF. FROE, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	138

TO PUBLISHERS and others.—University Graduate, with some literary experience, would be glad to undertake TRANSLATING, COMPIING, or other Literary Work, or to act as Publisher's Reader.—Address M. A., 1, Ravenscourt Square, Ravenscourt Park, W.

LITERARY and ARTISTIC OCCUPATION and INVESTMENT.—An excellent opening is available for a competent Author or Artist, willing to make a moderate investment in a Partnership Share in a Publishing Business, promising great success.—Full information from Emson, care of George Eugene Solomon, Esq., 7, Crutched Friars, E.C.

A LADY or a GENTLEMAN of Education can obtain a seat on the Board of Management of a very important PUBLISHING UNDERTAKING. Established under exceptionally favourable auspices. Qualification, £300, invested in a PARTNERSHIP SHARE.—Address Synagogue, care of George Eugene Solomon, Esq., 7, Crutched Friars, E.C.

LESSONS.—English, Practical Mathematics, Military Topography, Geometrical Drawing, Hindustani, Sanskrit.—Mr. WILSON, 2, Gertrude Street, Fulham Road, S.W. Accrancy, Proof-reading, &c., done.

AS LITERARY ASSISTANT, SUB-LIBRARIAN, or SECRETARY.—The daughter of a professional man, well connected, but poor, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. She is thoroughly educated, well read in English and French literature, with some knowledge of Latin and German; good arithmetician, accustomed to secretarial work, to make researches in public libraries, to correct, and to index; she can read almost intelligently, and writes a legible hand; would undertake Copying or anything else for which the above qualifications would suffice; whole or part time; several years' reference; excellent testimonials.—Address D. H., 20, Theobald's Road, W.C.

"BLACK AND WHITE."
MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

The COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.

PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND WORK of every description.—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUE.
BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOUTH SQUARE, LONDON, W.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for filling up about EIGHTEEN VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 7th SEPTEMBER, 1892. For information apply to THE Rector, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM

(WITH QUEEN'S FACULTY OF MEDICINE.)

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

Principal: Professor R. S. HEATH, M.A., D.Sc.

THE SESSION 1892-93, will be opened on FRIDAY, 30th SEPTEMBER, by Professor Sir GEORGE HUMPHRY, M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., who will distribute the Prizes and deliver AN ADDRESS. COMPLETE COURSES OF INSTRUCTION are provided for the various Examinations in Arts and Science, and the Preliminary Scientific (M.B.) Examination, of the University of London; for students of Civil, Mechanical, or Electrical Engineering; and for those who desire to obtain an acquaintance with some branch of Applied Science. Students may, however, attend any class or combination of classes.

(There is also a Faculty of Medicine. A Syllabus containing full particulars is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham. Price 6d.; by post, 7d.)

A SYLLABUS containing full information as to the various Lecture and Laboratory Courses, Lecture Days and Hours, Fees, Entrance and other Scholarships, Prizes, &c., is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

Further information may be obtained on application to

GEO. H. MOWLEY, Secretary and Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

LECTURER and ASSISTANT DEMONSTRATOR in BIOLOGY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in BIOLOGY, at a stipend of £150 per annum. It is necessary that candidates should have a special knowledge of Botany. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The NINTH SESSION will BEGIN on MONDAY, October 3rd, 1892.

The College Prospectus, containing a detailed account of the Classes in the Faculties of Arts and Science, in the Departments of Engineering and Mining, and in the Department for the Training of Teachers, together with particulars of Scholarships and Exhibitions to be offered for Competition in September, may be obtained on application to the Registrar.

ABERDARE HALL.

The ABERDARE HALL of RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS is under the Superintendence of Miss HENRY (Somerville Hall, Oxford).

University College, Cardiff, July 21st, 1892.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turin, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principal—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.

Professors—Seely, King's Coll.; Dr. Dolcken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.

Full list and references on application.

Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Ridding.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EX-

AMINATIONS.—STUDENTS are successfully PREPARED at the Classes in connection with the North London Collegiate School, under the superintendence of Miss BISS. They are also trained for Kindergarten work, and prepared for the Examinations of the Froebel Society. Arrangements made for ladies to board in the neighbourhood.

Apply to Miss TODD, 145, Camden Road, London, N.W.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

FORTHCOMING EXAMINATIONS.—Assistant in the Museum of Science and Art, Dublin, and Junior Assistant in the Museum of Science and Art, Edinburgh 18-24, 2nd SEPTEMBER.

The date specified is the latest at which applications can be received.

They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars, from the SECRETARY, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

PUBLIC SCHOOL ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS.—TWO promising BOYS can JOIN (on nominal terms) the SCHOLARSHIP CLASS in a Seaside Preparatory School, working under a special Tutor. Scholarships have been gained at all the best Public Schools.—"Scholar" and ACADEMY, 27, Chancery Lane, London.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

HARTLEY INSTITUTION,

SOUTHAMPTON.

WANTED, an ASSISTANT ART MASTER specially qualified to teach MODELLING in CLAY and WOOD CARVING. Salary guaranteed not less than £150 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained. Applications must be received by the SECRETARY on or before AUGUST 20th.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price 81s Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Maps, Manuscripts, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

2, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Now ready, in 1 vol.

OMARAH'S HISTORY of YAMAN.

The original Texts, with Translation and Notes by H. C. Kay, M.B.A.S.

With Sketch Map. Penny 8vo. cloth. 17s. 6d. net.

London: Edward Arnold, 25, Bedford Square.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE HALLETTS," &c. IN SPITE OF HERSELF.

By LESLIE KEITH,
Author of "Alasnam's Lady," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS. KEITH'S CRIME." AUNT ANNE.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mrs. Clifford has achieved a success of a very unusual and remarkable kind in this book. She has had the extreme daring to take for the subject of her story the romance of an old woman, and to fill her canvas with this one figure.....She and her treatment are quite original and new. She is often laughable, but always touching; her little figure is full of an old-fashioned grace, though grace combined with oddity; her sense of her 'position,' her susceptibilities in that respect, her boundless generosity, are always delightful. Indeed, we do not know when we have met with a more loving and recognisable, as well as attractive personage in fiction."—Spectator.

NOW READY.

THE STORY OF A PENITENT SOUL.

Being the Private Papers of Mr. Stephen Dart, late Minister of Lynnbridge, in the County of Lincoln.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

"Is it impossible in the brief sketch we have been able to give of this human tragedy to convey any adequate idea of the air of intense realism in which the whole story is suffused. It is less an autobiography than a cry de profundis—as difficult to criticise as the wail of a lost soul—a human document indeed."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

COUSIN CINDERELLA.

By Mrs. PAUL KING.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

BY A NEW WRITER.

A HIGH LITTLE WORLD, And What Happened There.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

Sale over One Million and a Quarter Copies.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS. THE NEW EDITION.

Thirty-four Novels have now been issued, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, scarlet cloth, 6s.

At all Libraries and Booksellers.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

A HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the BOOKS of the NEW TESTAMENT. By GEORGE PALMON, D.D. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, 9s.

HANDBOOK of GREEK ARCHÆ-
OLOGY: SCULPTURE, VASES, BRONZES, GEMS, TERRA-COTTAS, ARCHITECTURE, MURAL PAINTINGS, &c. By A. S. MURRAY, Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum, and Author of a "History of Greek Sculpture." With 134 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 18s.

THE HISTORY of CORNELIUS TACITUS. A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE TEXT, WITH NOTES. By ALBERT W. QUILL, Trinity College, Dublin. Vol. I. containing Introduction and Books I. and II. 8vo, 7s. 6d. To be completed in 2 vols., 8vo.

SCIENTIFIC and TECHNICAL PAPERS of WERNER VON SIEMENS. Translated from the Second German Edition. Vol. I. SCIENTIFIC PAPERS AND ADDRESSES. With Illustrations, and a Portrait of the Author. 8vo, 14s.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK for NORWAY. Eighth Edition. 13 Maps and Plans, post 8vo, 7s. 6d.
"Admirably up to date."—Graphic.

NEW CHAPTERS in GREEK HISTORY. HISTORICAL RESULTS OF RECENT EXCAVATIONS IN GREECE AND ASIA MINOR. By PERCY GARDNER, M.A., Professor of Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations, 8vo, 15s.

PLAYING CARDS of Various Ages AND COUNTRIES, SELECTED FROM THE COLLECTION OF LADY CHARLOTTE SCHREIBER.
VOL. I.

ENGLISH and SCOTTISH; DUTCH and FLEMISH. With 141 Plates, folio, 3 guineas net.

ITALIAN PAINTERS: Critical Studies OF THEIR WORKS. By GIOVANNI MORELLI (Ivan Lermolieff). Translated from the German by CONSTANCE JOCELYN FFOULKES, with an Introductory Notice by Sir HENRY LAYARD, G.C.B. THE BORGHESSE AND DORIA PAMPHILI GALLERIES in ROME. With Illustrations, 8vo, 15s.

JULIAN'S DICTIONARY of HYMN-
OLOGY, setting forth the ORIGIN and HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN HYMNS of all AGES and NATIONS, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THOSE CONTAINED IN THE HYMN-BOOKS OF ENGLISH-SPEAKING COUNTRIES, AND NOW IN COMMON USE. Medium 8vo, £2.2s.

OCEAN STEAMSHIPS: a Popular Account of their Construction, Development, Management, and Appliances. By VARIOUS WRITERS. With 96 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 12s.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS. NEW VOLUMES.

THE STUDY of ANIMAL LIFE. By J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., F.R.S.E., Lecturer on Zoology, School of Medicine, Edinburgh. With 80 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The latest volume in the University Extension Manuals, edited by Prof. Koight. It is a fascinating and able book... the intricate problems concerned are handled throughout with the care and skill of a trained expert."—Speaker.

THE REALM of NATURE: a Manual of Physiography. By Dr. HUGH ROBERT MILL, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With 19 Coloured Maps and 68 Illustrations. 330 pp., crown 8vo, 5s.

"The whole book shows signs of the greatest possible care in preparation, and it is not an easy matter to suggest improvements. It is a very valuable contribution to the literature of the subject."—Nature.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET

TWO REMARKABLE NOVELS.

JUST READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

I.—THE TERRIBLE CZAR. By Count A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Captain FILMORE, of the Black Watch. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

II.—PER ASPERA (A Thorny Path). By GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.
"The action is set in Alexandria at the time of the Emperor Caracalla, and the story follows the romantic fortunes of an artist's daughter residing there... All the civilisation of the time is brought into the book either by description or suggestion, and seems to live again before the reader's eye."—Scotsman.

NEW STORIES FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales. By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.
(First Issue in Book Form.)

THE LADY of FORT ST. JOHN. By M. H. CATHERWOOD, Author of "The Romance of Dullard." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A simple, pretty, and touching story of Nova Scotia... told with great freshness, and conveying an accurate idea of the state of things two centuries and a half ago."—Vanity Fair.

A SON of the FENS. By Dr. P. H. EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A remarkable work."—World.
"The pictures of the sea and of the fen country and the life of the people are always lightly and gracefully painted; and the book will warmly interest everyone either who knows or who desires to know the life which it describes."—Scotsman.

NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

SECOND EDITION JUST READY.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY. By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

FROM the ARCTIC OCEAN to the YELLOW SEA: the Narrative of a Journey across Siberia, Mongolia, the Gobi Desert, and North China. By JULIUS M. PRICE, F.R.G.S. With Photographic Portrait, Facsimiles, and 150 Illustrations. Route Map. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.
"A remarkably good picture-book... full of instruction and amusement... Mr. Price's narrative leaves throughout definite impressions of the wild regions through which he passed."—Spectator.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada, Japan, and China, by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.
"Picturesque and practical, and should attract both the serious-minded and those who read only for entertainment."—Globe.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN WITHOUT a GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Albert Tracy is an evasive traveller and a charming writer. His 'Rambles through Japan without a Guide' is so good a book that it makes one feel that one does not want to 'go there' (this means praise, although it looks like paradox) and need not read any more books about Japan. It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched; yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."—World.

THROUGH FAMINE-STRICKEN RUSSIA. By W. BARNES STEVENI, Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle. With Portraits of Count Tolstoi and the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
"The Russian authorities have prohibited from circulation 'Through Famine-Stricken Russia,' the recently issued volume in which Mr. W. Barnes Steveni, the Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, has described his tour through the famine-stricken regions of Russia."—Full Moll Gazette.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NOVELS.

New Uniform Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S COMPLETE NOVELS at 2s. 6d. each.

A DAUGHTER of HETH. With Portrait of Mr. Black.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a PHAETON.

A PRINCESS of THULE.

IN SILK ATTIRE.

KILMENY.

MADCAP VIOLET.

THREE FEATHERS.

THE MAID of KILLEENA. Just ready.

The 6s. Edition can still be obtained.

"Have you seen the new edition of Mr. William Black's novels, which Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. are publishing in so pleasant and cheap a form? You may here re-read, if you will, 'A Princess of Thule,' 'A Daughter of Heth,' and many another favourite."—Queen.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1892.

No. 1058, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Villainage in England. Essays in English Mediaeval History. By Paul Vinogradoff, Professor in the University of Moscow. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS is on several counts a remarkable book. The author is not the first Russian scholar who has successfully set himself to the study of English institutions; but he is the first who, treating of an intricate and difficult subject, has at once appealed to the judgment of English scholars by placing his results before them in an English dress. It is not a little remarkable that a Russian should so master "the arduous study of English mediaeval documents" as every page of this work testifies, and still keep his footing sure on the path before him. Our wonder may diminish on learning the motives that dictated such an inquiry: the keen interest taken in Russia in "social history and its problems," "how far legislation can, and should, act upon the social development of the agrarian world," and what things Western history may teach should be aimed at or avoided. In his efforts to benefit his own country, this accomplished scholar has conferred a boon also upon Englishmen for which our warmest gratitude is due. The peculiarity of his standpoint gives a tone of calm dispassion to his statements which inspires confidence; while it confers on him the advantage of familiarity with an actual state of society at home resembling in some points that which with us has long since passed away. The scientific habit of mind which looks at every fact on all sides before putting it into place, bears sway in this valuable work, though, indeed, the enthusiasm of a collector of natural history does sometimes break forth when "a most beautiful specimen" of such a custom occurring in such a record is found.

The title "Villainage in England" may mislead some who have in mind our ancient legal treatises. This is not a lawyer's book, but rather a study in history by a philosopher, who takes up his subject in the light of anthropology and science, seeking "laws of development and generalisations that shall unravel the complexity of human culture." It thus approaches the problems presented by village life in England, mainly in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, from a side which is neither legal, ecclesiastical, nor even military, although several feudal relations are necessarily considered. Legal facts and theories are dealt with on a level with economic fact and theory, but it is upon the broad ground of human science and development. By this means, although the book does not profess to treat of constitutional matters, the arguments and inferences drawn from the records lead to the enunciation of several important constitutional principles as corollaries, which, arrived at in this way, come upon the reader with the more force that they are unexpected. The exercise of local government; the germs and growth of the habit of representation; the recognition that the community, not the individual, was the chief factor in social life, and was therefore the idea for ages underlying representation of the people; the responsibility of the community for taxes, for peace and good neighbourhood—these are the sort of facts and truths known long ago to the careful seeker in English history, but often forgotten, which here receive fresh confirmation. That the life of the old community lay at the back of the feudal system, permeating it with freedom, comes out strongly throughout the work. The aim of the author is to show why it did so.

The volume consists of two essays, (1) on "The Peasantry of the Feudal Age," (2) on "The Manor and the Village Community." In treatment and method of inquiry into historical development it belongs on the one side to the group of writers who have, although with much divergence, followed Sir H. Maine, as Nasse, Seebohm, and Gomme; on the other side it touches the more definite studies of Mr. Elton, Sir Frederick Pollock, and Prof. F. W. Maitland. The author's intent is, by a careful study of the records of the feudal age in which England is so rich, to present the general features of the English mediaeval system; cartularies, court-rolls, surveys, hundred-rolls, are once more made, through keen insight, to give up their secrets. "The whole field has to be gone over with an eye for proof and not for doctrine": such is the spirit informing the inquiry.

In a brilliant Introduction Prof. Vinogradoff passes in review the writings of his chief predecessors in the path of institutional history, showing the characteristic bias or special view of each, and pointing out where historical research came in. The recognition of the vast importance of the social side of history he considers to have begun after 1848, thus excluding Blackstone and Palgrave, the learned confusion of the latter, however, having started inquiry. He calls attention, inevitably, to the great division among scholars into Germanists and Romanists, viz., those like Kemble, Freeman, and Gneist, who have sought for the origin of free institutions in the traits and influence of Teutonic peoples, born to liberty; and the school, headed by Savigny, Palgrave, and Thierry, and later swelled by Coote and Seebohm, who would reduce Teutonic influence in the past, and would trace the social foundations of English life to an abiding Roman civilisation. The contention of these two schools is sketched with much acumen and fairness; it is reserved for the Slave to hold the balance, which inclines in his hands to the Teutonic side. As a result of his survey of previous investigations on the whole subject, he declares that "The village community comes out of the inquiry as the constitutive cell of society during an age of the world quite as characteristic of mediaeval structure as the town community or civitas was of ancient polity."

Of the first essay, the first four chapters are devoted to the examination of the "legal aspect of villainage," its conditions as regards the rights and disabilities of the villain, and his position under the law of ancient demesne. It is essential to the author's method, and a mark of the new science, that he looks at the villain from other points of view besides that of the lawyer. But he must begin with the positions defined by the great legal authorities of those times, above all by Bracton; compare these with the cases tried in the early courts of justice; then, again, observe closely the evidences of life and action scattered up and down the yearly local records of manors all over the country. He finds "what the theories of the lawyers were with regard to villainage in its divers ramifications," and shows that the discrepancies and apparent anomalies in this law must be explained historically. It has been formed by layers, at different periods, by accretions of custom caught up and formulated from time to time, or, again, some local custom approved and obtaining pre-eminent recognition till it became a general right, as with the law of primo geniture, or the privileges under "ancient demesne." Remains of pre-conquest freedom, the effects of feudal law, the influence of Roman law, the increased power of the King's Courts—all these elements are taken into account in resolving the problem: What was a villain in the thirteenth century; what was his status under various names; what his rights and duties?

The issue of Prof. Vinogradoff's researches on this head, presented with so much wealth of detail and so many side-lights that the course of his argument is not always clear, appears to be that the rigid legal status of the villain was in practice modified by the economic incidents of his tenure; that legal theories were worse than the actual reality; together with post-conquest politics they would have reduced the villain to slavery, but that a great counteracting force was at work—"the Conquest had cast free and unfree peasantry together into the one mould of villainage; feudalism prevented villainage from lapsing into slavery," and the rights claimed and maintained in continuance of Saxon traditions made also towards the freedom of the class.

The term "villainage" is not, however, to be taken with a hard and fast definition; further study shows that there were several groups of men, sub-divisions of the servile class, within its limits, living under various customs and privileges, which increased with expanding population.

The part that the feudal system had in the past in developing the resources of England and in the protection of her population is so often ignored, or mis-represented as one of mere oppression and tyranny, that too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of this author's evidence to the contrary. His words come out in sharp contrast to the common opinion. "In the mediaeval system there is no slave market, and no slave trade"; the workman was not "a saleable commodity." Economic necessities in a country whose chief industry was agriculture determined the conditions of tenure of the soil. Service of various kinds within the manor was given to the lord as the condition of holding land by the villain. Hence personal dependence, which was, however, as here pointed out, "locally limited, and not politically general." The commutation of service for a money payment—in other words for rent—began very early, here and there; and the fact that money could be owned and so disposed of, speaks of itself for an amount of personal freedom. That liberties of all kinds have been paid for by money is a truth patent throughout English history; and the distinguishing land in villainage held by rent as of "free," and land held by labour as of "servile" tenure, shows the early prevalence of the practice, and the limited meaning attached to the word "free."

Prof. Vinogradoff works out closely the customary duties and rights of the peasantry, the customary duties of the lord. He shows how these arose out of the elements of village life, and becoming "inbreviated" on the manorial documents obtained great local authority. He marks the force and influence of "custom" in levelling up the state of the unfree to that of the free; but it does not occur to him that the declaration of these customs on the rolls was, within the manorial jurisdiction, what the passing of declaratory statutes was for the kingdom. Special chapters on the "Servile Peasantry" and "Free Peasantry" carry on the inquiry, treating of important points, such as the merchet, heriot, molmen, hundredors, socmen, gavelkind, the bearing of which upon the subject is illustrated no less by their collocation than by the learning explanatory of each.

Leaving the question of the individual and his personal relations to freedom, slavery, or serfage, the second essay deals with the organisation of the land system, going to the land as of necessity for the basis of English society. The sketch given of this, and of its various component parts, material and human, is of the highest interest, and presents, on the whole, perhaps the best picture of English agrarian life that has yet been written. The orderly evolution of political, or what we should call constitutional action, out of the economic relations and obligations (i.e., between men of higher and lower positions depending upon the soil) is clearly indicated. Bread was the first necessity; in co-operation to gain their bread men found the elements of local institutions.

In describing the open-field system of husbandry, and the way the village affected the holdings of land, numerous perplexities are met and solutions proposed. Among these not the least ingenious is the explanation why each man's holding (the lord's sometimes included), instead of being compact, is found divided into strips scattered over the communal fields. Reasoning, among other data, from a narrative found in a very early survey of Dunstable Priory, it seems "that the assignment of scattered strips to every holding depended on the wish to equalise the shares of tenants," giving to every man his chance in the advantages or disadvantages of soil and situation. The wide prevalence of the open-field system with the inter-mixed strips in the Middle Ages—in Russia even now—and its co-existence with the village community, calls for some wide and natural principle of this kind. A chapter on the "Rights of Common" next finds due place.

As the manor is taken, broadly, to represent the village community, the remaining disquisitions group themselves round the incidents of a manor, which are very thoroughly explored. Every student of old local records will be grateful for the light thrown upon many obscure antiquarian terms connected with rural work, services, and money payments of various kinds, including the older farm system or payment by produce. Relics of this system existed even later than Mr. Vinogradoff supposes, as in the case of manors belonging to Holy Trinity Priory, Dublin, in the fifteenth century. He establishes that "the development from food-farms to labour organisation, and lastly to money rents, was a result not of one-sided pressure on the part of the landlords, but of a series of agreements between lord and tenants," testifying again to the growth of independence. The lord's household, his numerous servants, with the functions of all of these on the estate, the home farm or demesne and the relation of the other holdings to it—these interesting matters prelude an intricate inquiry into the peculiarities of free tenancies, which may point back to the earlier days of the village community. The author finds here and elsewhere proof that the manor was superimposed upon the old community; a manor and a village (vill) did not always mean the same thing, as is well known. The self-government of the village came to strengthen the lord in the administration of his manor. In the chapter on "Manorial Courts," which gathers together and elucidates the facts of communal action, the true relations of the lord to his people come out emphatically.

"Let us repeat again, that the management of the manor is by no means dependent on capricious and one-sided expressions of the lord's will. . . . Notwithstanding the absolute character of the lord with regard to his villains taken separately, he is in truth but the centre of a community represented by meetings or courts. Not only the free but also the servile tenantry are ruled in accordance with the views and customs of a congregation of the tenants in their divers classes. . . . The manorial courts were really meetings of the village community under the presidency of the lord or of his steward."

To touch on a tithe of the points of interest arising out of this volume were impossible; the reader must go to it himself. Criticism might point out a few minor omissions, and that, in some portions, clearer arrangement of matter would be desirable to avoid misapprehension. But the book is pleasantly written, full of acute thought and lucid passages, and the occasional foreign turns of expression do but add to its agreeable flavour.

LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

"THE BADMINTON LIBRARY."—Mountaineering. By C. T. Dent. (Longmans.)

"Nothing in the history of modern sport has been more striking than the growth of interest in mountaineering." Such is the view of Mr. Justice Wills, who speaks with authority, for he was one of the earliest of the pioneers, and did as much as any one to win public acceptance for this pastime. But in truth there is more than the prodigious increase of public interest to record, there is the entire reversal of public judgment. Five and thirty years ago the mountaineer had begun to provide matter for debate in the press, but the debate was whether his folly was greater than his wickedness or his wickedness greater than his folly. Now all this is changed. Mountaineering is recognised, not only as a legitimate, but as an actually creditable sport, and the completeness of the change is singularly emphasised by the demand for such a book as this.

It contains, besides what one may call "the treatise," a good deal of interesting matter. Sir F. Pollock has contributed a sketch of the early climbers from Rotario d'Asti in the fourteenth century, down to Albert Smith and the Egyptian Hall, finding room to touch on the hazardous theory which places Lionardo da Vinci on a spur of Monte Rosa. Mr. Freshfield, a Caucasian explorer who is by no means played out, has written on extra European mountaineering; Mr. Pilkington treats of climbing without guides; Mr. Conway of maps, and Mr. Willink of sketching; while Mr. Matthews contributes recollections of the mountains in the old days before the irruption of the tripper.

What we have called "the treatise" is entirely the work of Mr. Dent, and may be described as a complete text-book of the theory and practice of mountaineering. As the writer was, by the nature of the case, bound to be both didactic and descriptive, the true path was hard to find and to keep. On the one hand, there was the tendency to deal with Alpine difficulties in the "Oh, it's nothing" manner of Mr. Toole in "Walker, London"; on the other hand, there was the temptation to over-emphasis, by a Zolaesque elaboration of detail; and, on both hands, there was the danger of prosing. From this maze of literary crevasses Mr. Dent has extricated himself brilliantly, and he is equally successful whether dealing with technical details or with wide generalisations on health and mountaineering morals. There has of late been a disposition to treat mountaineering as though it was another name for alpine gymnastics, and we are glad to note that with this Mr. Dent has no sympathy.

"Mountaineering (he says) is a many-sided sport, of which climbing is but a single, though a very important, branch. The part should not be mistaken for the whole. A man may be an active or even a good climber and yet a very poor mountaineer. Ability to run rapidly up the rigging does not qualify a man in seamanship. A proper balance must be observed between the various departments by anyone who wishes to excel; and to mountaineer well means to mountaineer safely. In that best of all training grounds, the Alps, far too much importance is attached to a man's purely gymnastic prowess on rock or snow. Not only do people apply a purely climbing test in gauging their own proficiency as well as that of others, but they even go further, and imagine that the traditional difficulty and the height of the mountains climbed constitute the real measure of excellence. A far better criterion than a long list of peaks and passes successfully overcome is the manner in which a reputedly easy mountain has been accomplished. The skilled mountaineer has always a large balance in hand."

That really goes to the root of the matter. The good mountaineer is the safe mountaineer, and without this balance in hand there can be no safety. The way may be temporarily lost in a snowstorm; unexpected sleet may in a few minutes turn a safe and easy staircase into a dangerous man-trap; the day's work may be doubled, because through numbed hands or a broken snowbridge a particular short cut is rendered impracticable. In such a case the check thus "opened" to the climber makes a sudden and extraordinary call on his powers. The skilled man meets the demand out of his reserve, the unskilled man is bankrupt of nerve and strength, and from such bankruptcies there may be no discharge. Mr. Dent is as far as possible from croaking about the perils of mountaineering; but, like Mr. Justice Wills and the other contributors, he holds very strong and very clear opinions about the folly of running into useless danger.

"If a given passage," he says, "is too bad to be crossed when a party is roped lest the slip of one should drag down all, then it is too dangerous to be crossed at all. No way, whether it be of snow or rock, is reasonable if it involves danger from falling stones or ice."

Perhaps the most complete chapter in the book is that on snow-craft, with its disquisitions on glacier and névé, on bergschrund and crevasse, on cornices that break back, and that most treacherous of all surfaces, smooth ice covered by a thin layer of snow. Nor is that on rock-climbing much inferior, though perhaps a few more words might have been spared to the Dolomites, and the brilliant and safe going of certain Austro-Italian guides, either bare footed or shod with the scarpe di gatto. One more wholesome word, and that addressed to aspiring youth, we cannot forbear to quote:

"If he wishes," says Mr. Dent, "to make himself a good rock-climber, let him not aim at becoming a mountain acrobat. It is better to be spoken of behind your back by the guides as a man who is always trustworthy on rocks than applauded to your face as a Herr who goes like a chamois. The compliment is a doubtful one. Recollect that chamois are beasts that follow their leader rather tamely, are chiefly concerned with their own individual security, and lose their heads readily when in positions of unexpected peril."

There is, by the way, one other point in which the young climber usually is quite as good as a chamois; that is, in his faculty of kicking stones on the heads of those below him.

Not the least interesting chapter is that supplied by Mr. C. E. Matthews, which is devoted to the early fathers of the Alpine faith and the famous guides of a generation now passing away. He also has something to say on the dangers of the Alps, though he insists, and with reason, that of the 150 fatal mountaineering accidents of the last thirty years, "almost every one can be traced to ignorance, rashness, carelessness, or the culpable neglect of some well-known precaution." Still, he admits that "all really noble pursuits contain some element of danger, or they would lose part of their charm." He would, however, limit the dangers of mountaineering to sudden storms and falling stones, deeming all others preventable, assuming guides and climbers to be competent, experienced, and prudent. He, too, is eloquent on the impropriety of breaking the rules of the game, such as the neglect or improper use of the rope, and on the folly of climbing in bad weather. It is, however, not uninteresting to observe that Mr. Matthews is "so far human as occasionally not to practice what he preaches"; for, in a sympathetic note on the late Bersaglior Carrel, and his ascents of the Matterhorn from the Italian side, we come across the statement that he "led Mr. Morshead and myself to the summit of the great mountain twenty-one years ago, notwithstanding a severe snowstorm, and although Melchior Anderegg justly protested against the folly of the expedition." Possibly, knowing of whom the party consisted, we may admit that Melchior was wrong; but the incident illustrates a dictum of Mr. Dent's, that it is easier to quote the rules than to apply them—a dictum which has special application to this burning question of what amount of risk is legitimate. From the merely aesthetic standpoint, there can be no doubt that the quantity must be small: for the flavour of danger, like that of musk or garlic, is agreeable only if extremely attenuated, the least excess being absolutely intolerable.

The volume is profusely illustrated, though the illustrations are somewhat uneven in merit. Many of them, like "Backing-up"—a slip in traversing a snow couloir rendered innocuous by the competent use of the rope—are models of accuracy, and the same may be said of the wild snowstorm in "The Pass in Sight," and the crossing of a bergschrund in "Up you come." Occasionally, however, as in "the Messergrat," a clever drawing is spoiled by the faulty proportion of the figures; and in some cases—the awkward corners in "Kommen Sie nur" and "Player in hand," for instance—we find ourselves fairly in the region of caricature. This is regrettable; for though the clever draughtsman who is responsible for these pictures knows all about it, the uninitiated reader cannot well be expected to distinguish the jocose from the serious presentment. Moreover, with few exceptions, the drawings are provided with legends, in which the intention to be humorous is hardly matched by the achievement—a fact which exercises a depressing effect on the reader, inclining him to do less than justice to what is, in the mass, very spirited work. These matters, however, demand but a leris nota of reprobation, and do not seriously detract from the value of the book, which for soundness of view, lucidity of statement, and the composite merit of "readableness," deserves one of the highest—we should rather say one of the most accessible—places in the library of sport.

REYNOLD HUGHES.

Phaon and Sappho, and Nimrod. By James Dryden Hosken. (Macmillans.)

THE fly-leaf prefixed to these two dramas gives them a curious interest. They are written by a young Cornishman, of Helston, self-educated, except for a short time spent at an elementary school. Untrained to any trade, he found casual employment in East London during three or four years, part of which he spent as an out-door officer in the Customs. He then became a rural postman; then a night-sorter in the General Post Office, where his health failed, and he returned to his native place much shattered and broken. A partial recovery has enabled him to find partial employment as an auxiliary postman.

Such is the simple story made remarkable by the way in which the leisure of this anxious and hard-pressed life has been spent. There is indeed nothing unprecedented in the fact of a postman-poet: the West Country has known an Edward Capern, as it may now know a James Hosken. But these poems are not wayside lyrics or country idylls: they are real attempts at the drama in its Shaksperian form. They are full (as the writer avows in his preface) of anachronisms. "Phaon and Sappho" is a Greek play in the sense in which "Timon of Athens," or "Midsummer Night's Dream" may be called Greek, but in no other. "Nimrod" is "wanting in a fixed era," and has little that is ancient or oriental about it. Both plays are full of action, but fuller still of a kind of fiery meditation, which, interesting to read, is yet too recurrent, too didactic, to be fully compatible with dramatic success.

The circumstances of an author give a collateral interest to his work; the work itself must be judged independently. From this point of view, the defect of these dramas lies in the drawing of character. The verse is forcible, and often melodious; the plots are interesting. But the heroes and heroines, in spite of their self-explanations, do not cling to the memory. The loves of Phaon and Sappho, though not, perhaps, more sudden than those of Romeo and Juliet, are less natural, and seem to occur by a kind of dramatic jerk. On the whole, we think Cleon, Sappho's guardian, is the most lifelike and interesting character, in a play crowded with figures none of whom stand out in very clear personality. The humorous characters—Brass, Bury the Town Crier, and the First Servant—are comic in a somewhat laboured way: in truth, Shakspeare has spoilt us for any further attempts in that line. It is not in character-drawing, but in pure reflection, that Mr. Hosken reaches his best level—as here, for instance, in Sappho's speech (Act ii., sc. i.)—

"We are such fools with feeling, that those things Which we would have withdrawn, we manifest More clearly by deceit: our large emotions Unbind our tongues like wine: yet are we chary In this respect, that we would keep great joys As sacred to ourselves. . . . O crowning joy That stands above me like the sheltering heaven

I would I had a little sorrow now
To make my state seem mortal, for I fear
Some nectar-quaffing Power will envy me,
And snatch my golden happiness away,
Being smit by Phaon's beauty; then the gods,
When they intend their heaviest strokes for us,
Prelude them with some most imperial joy,
Smiling us on to death."

On the whole, we like "Phaon and Sappho" better than "Nimrod." In the latter, the canvas is too crowded, the passion of Nimrod for Nitocris, wife of Machiavarel, is too crude and hasty; the outrage that befalls Astarte is horrid rather than tragic, somewhat reminding us of an episode in "Aurora Leigh." Raphael, scholar, lover, prince, and finally soldier, is the best drawn character. Some of his reflections are finely expressed, though the thoughts are more true than new—e.g., p. 266, act iv. sc. i.:

"Nature oft makes her greatest consequence
Hang on some little cause our ignorance
Thinks insignificant, and out of range
Of our dark guesses which we misname truths.
The foot's scarce kept from sliding; overhead
A law-abiding governance deals out
Rewards and punishments, and every sin
Carries with it an infinite consequence,
And from the moment than evil's done
Its leaden-footed punishment begins
To walk beside the offender."

And the song (p. 196) "O, the long, long days of youth" is very pretty and graceful.

We think that some solecisms in the pronouncing of Greek names should be removed from the first play: Icæro, Athenagōras, Timolæon, Archidāmus. But these are trifles. It is impossible to read these plays without admiration for the mind which, under such stress of circumstances, could produce such work.

E. D. A. MORSEHEAD.

A Classified Index to the Leonine, Gelasian, and Gregorian Sacramentaries, according to the Text of Muratori's Liturgia Romana Vetustas. By H. A. Wilson, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. (Cambridge: University Press.)

STUDENTS of western Liturgies, both abroad and at home, have cause to thank Mr. Wilson for this laborious piece of work. The Syndics of the Cambridge Press have also to be thanked for undertaking its publication, and the more so as the honour of its achievement is due to a member of the sister University.

The helpful indices to such books as Mr. F. E. Warren's Leofric Missal, Dr. Wickham Legg's Breviarium Romanum Quignonianum, and the exhaustive "library" of indices appended to Messrs. Procter and Wordsworth's Sarum Breviary, make us feel more acutely the want of such aids to the study of Muratori's great work. From the standpoint of scientific students of the present day, much of the controversial matter which Muratori has prefixed in his preliminary Dissertations is only a monument of the time which, if not absolutely wasted, might certainly have been better employed. There are few of us who would not gladly exchange the chapters intended to establish that the Greek and Syrian Liturgies taught transubstantiation, and to refute Bingham or Samuel Basnage, for a few pages of such modest but most useful work as Mr. Wilson has given us. But it was after the fashion of Muratori's day to dedicate his book to a cardinal, and to place upon the title-page that it was intended "ad confirmandam prae ceteris Catholicae ecclesiae de eucharistia doctrinam."

Mr. Wilson supplies to the two folios of 1748 indices as follows: (1) "of Eucharistic Prefaces"; (2) "of Special Clauses in the Canon"; (3) "of Episcopal Benedictions at Mass"; (4) "of Collects, including Secrets, Postcommunions, Orationes super populum, and prayers for special purposes"; (5) "of Benedictions, Exorcisms, and Forms of Ordination and Investiture"; and, lastly (6), "of Bidding of Prayers, Notifications, Instructions, &c."

One of the most serviceable features of the book, removing it entirely from the class of mechanically constructed tables, is to be found in the notification of resemblances, parallels, and differences of reading.

"It frequently happens," as has been remarked by Mr. Wilson, "that a particular form, say a Collect, appears in more than one of the three Sacramentaries, or in more than one place in the same Sacramentary, sometimes with variations of reading, sometimes with the insertion of words intended to fit it for a special purpose, or with such an amount of variation as to suggest a revision of the form."

All such variations are indicated by Mr. Wilson; and a labour like this is proof of a very real and intimate familiarity with the entire contents of the Sacramentaries, such as would be by no means established by a mere citation of initial clauses.

I have to add that I have tested the accuracy of the printing of the figures in scores of places, and have not lighted upon a single error.

J. EDENBURGEN.

The Life of Francis Duncan. By Henry Birdwood Blogg. (Kegan Paul.)

"If you cannot pray," a distinguished headmaster is reported to have said, "read a good biography." In a brief but eloquent introduction to the book now under review, these words are quoted by the Bishop of Chester. If there ever was a man who realised the old adage laborare est orare, that was the late Col. Francis Duncan, the historian of the Royal Artillery and member of parliament for Finsbury. "Better," he used to say, "to wear out than to rust out." He never seems to have known rest except as change of occupation. His powers of work were gigantic. He was an historian, an active officer, the life and soul of the ambulance department of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England, an eloquent speaker, and an indefatigable Sunday-school teacher. It is a matter of deep regret that his hours of recreation were so fatally few. He should be with us now, had he been as others are. Writing from Cairo on August 17, 1883, to a friend, he says—

"I am very much out of sorts. . . . If I get worse I shall start for England early next month; but if I can hold out to the end I will, as I should like to see the last of the cholera before leaving my post."

He did "hold out," but died of cirrhosis of the liver, probably first contracted in Egypt, at the comparatively early age of fifty-two. The facts of Col. Duncan's life are clearly and sympathetically stated by the Rev. H. B. Blogg; but the most skilful and sympathetic of biographers cannot reproduce the fragrance of a charming home such as Col. Duncan's. It is with good reason Dr. Jayne says that:

"The best portion of the memories of the richest and deepest life must always be incommunicable. Humour and humour's near kinsman—sympathy—tenderness, and loyalty, and all those fireside charities and pieties which alike in fruition and remembrance form our 'treasure of delight'—these are plants yielding a fruit which does not lightly lend itself to transference and exhibition."

Francis Duncan was born in Aberdeen on April 4, 1836. His father was known as "the Scottish railway king." Like his son, he was a man of varied accomplishments, but circumstances compelled him to devote his time more exclusively to his profession—that of the law. He was eminently successful, but absolutely free from any taint of the intolerance sometimes found in self-made men. He showed his wisdom in not compelling his son to follow his own profession. In 1857 Francis Duncan embarked as a subaltern in the 7th Artillery Brigade for Canada. In the following year he married. His marriage proved a most happy one. Husband and wife walked this world together,

"Yoked in all exercise of noble end."

The biographer dedicates his book to his "friend's best friend." In 1862 Duncan returned to Woolwich, and nine years later was appointed Superintendent of the Royal Artillery Regimental Records. This appointment led to fortunate results, for it induced Duncan to write the history of his regiment. Mr. Blogg quotes the opinions of two eminent officers regarding this history. These reviews are very favourable; but the interest of the book, so far as non-military readers is concerned, centres in its revival of the long-forgotten story of the Duke of Wellington's injustice to the artillery after his most famous victory.

"The Duke, in December, 1815, wrote a private letter to Lord Mulgrave, in which he gave as his reasons for not recommending the artillery for its full share of rewards, that the gunners did not obey orders by taking shelter in the squares when the French cavalry attacked, but withdrew from the field. The letter, though private, was published in the Correspondence, fortunately while officers were alive who could definitely deny and disprove the charges contained in it. There was not a particle of truth in the accusation."

The despatches of the Iron Duke are too well known to need any eulogy, but the Duke's private letters are not always written in the clear, crisp English of his despatches. Certainly this famous letter to Lord Mulgrave is not a good example of the Duke's style, though it contains a touch of irony rarely met with in his writings. After stating that he objected to "what is called a history of the battle of Waterloo" being written, as a history must be "the truth and the whole truth," the Duke goes on:

"but if a true history is written, what will become of the reputation of half of those who have acquired reputation, and who deserve it for their gallantry, but who, if their mistakes and casual misconduct were made public, would not be so well thought of."

In December, 1882, Sir Evelyn Wood telegraphed to Major Duncan asking him to take command of the Egyptian Artillery. Major Duncan accepted the offer, and in 1884 was selected to assist the refugees whom General Gordon was sending to Assouan from the Soudan. He regarded the evacuation of the Soudan as "a great mistake." From Assouan—a very ancient city mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel as Syene—Col. Duncan moved south to take command of the forces at the front at Wady Halfa. The expedition for the relief of General Gordon was described by Col. Duncan as "the most extraordinary polyglot expedition that had ever been seen for its size." The shock of Gordon's death was "a blow that was felt by everyone. The look on every private soldier's face was as if he had lost a dear friend." Col. Duncan was not, however, despondent about the future of Egypt. Through the mists of intrigue, which for ever hang over Cairo, he saw "pisanter relations growing up between the natives and ourselves"; and he believed "that the Nile expedition did a good deal to encourage this kind of feeling, for never did soldiers in another country than their own behave better than our soldiers did towards the natives." When at Dongola, 13,000 men, women, and children passed through his hands, and not one single complaint did he receive from any refugee against an English soldier.

Col. Duncan had received the baptism of defeat usually accorded to political aspirants before he entered the House as member for the Holborn division of Finsbury in 1885. His maiden speech, made on the vote for Sir Henry Drummond-Wolff's mission to Constantinople, was a brilliant success. Probably no Conservative in the Parliament, either of 1885 or of 1886, received so many compliments from Mr. Gladstone as the honorable and gallant member for the Holborn division of Finsbury, and none better merited them. It was not merely the fact that Col. Duncan spoke only when he understood his subject, or that his sentences were pithy and pungent, or that his sincerity was manifest; but there was also about his utterances the element of the unexpected. He was no party hack. He might almost be described as that phoenix among politicians—an impartial man. He proved his title to be thus considered when he seconded Mr. Sexton's motion to place the municipal franchise in Belfast on the same footing as in the cities of England and Scotland. Unfortunately his parliamentary career was limited to three brief sessions. After a long, painful and wearisome struggle, on November 16, 1888, Francis Duncan

"Gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace."

J. G. C. MINCHIN.

NEW NOVELS.

Ingelheim. By the Author of "Miss Molly." In 3 vols. (Blackwoods.)

Belhaven. By Max Beresford. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Quintin Doornise. By J. McGavin Sloan. (Alexander Gardner.)

Suspected. By Louisa Stratenus. (Chapman & Hall.)

My Geoff. By John Strange Winter. (White.)

In Part to Blame. By Haine Whyte. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Tom Buxton's Aim. By Smith Robertson. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Millicent's Mistake. By Sarah Selina Hamer. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Into the Unknown. By Lawrence Fletcher. (Cassells.)

Branksome Dene. By Hugh Mulleneux Walmsley. (Hutchinson.)

With Ingelheim, the author of "Miss Molly" has made a great advance. It is a delightful story delightfully told. There are several characters in it that are quite Norrisian and better than Norrisian; there is at least one, Virginia Shore, that is worthy even of the artist who has drawn Adela Pole. Only one fault, indeed, can well be found with Ingelheim; the connexion between the prologue and the story proper is not so clear as it might be. It was inevitable, of course, that the Countess Miramar should find her stolen child; but it is not easy to understand why she so readily accepts Dolores as the girl she wants, when apparently the necessary resemblance either to herself or to her dead husband does not exist. But when all interests are concentrated in Ingelheim, which bears an almost suspicious likeness to Weimar—Ingelheim with its intrigues, its heart-burnings, its artistic enthusiasms, all steeped in antique Teutonic courtliness—then the evolution of plot and the revelation of character proceed without hitch. The princess will, by most readers, be considered the centre of the story; for she has passions, and a passionate lover—although he is too much of a pessimist. But Virginia Shore, her friend—cool rather than cold, good-natured, not bad-hearted, an intrigante to the finger tips, yet quite worthy of the social and matrimonial successes she achieves—will appeal to most connoisseurs in fiction as a more finished work. Then we have—and not in the background—good disowned but not disheartened Dolores and her two lovers: Jerome Shore, who is as simple as his sister is subtle; and Jim Traherne, who triumphs in the long run over Jerome, not because he is a better man, but because he is "one of her own people." Finally, supervising all, managing all, pervading all, is "His Excellency," a Bulwer-Lyttonian philosopher, man of the world, and politician "up to date." Ingelheim is a comedy of the Meredithian sort, "dealing with human nature in the drawing-room of civilised men and women, where we have no dust of the struggling outer world, no mire, no violent crashes, to make the correctness of the representation convincing." But it is perfectly played, and the ethic it insinuates is as exquisite as the style in which it is conveyed.

There are some of the elements of a good tragical story, although of a quite conventional kind, in Belhaven, but they have not been made the most of by the author, who shows no skill in serving up his horrors. Gordon, the hero-villain, murderer, swindler, expert in poisons, and sentimental humbug, would have been quite a notable character in his way had there been any kind of consistency in his conduct. As things are, he is simply a nuisance to his daughter and all associated with him, and richly deserves the miserable (and original) fate that befalls him in America. Sybil, the daughter, although rather too given to Scotch "greetin'"—a very different thing from English crying—is a better drawn character. Alec Macdonald, too, is a fair example of "the son of the manse" who is quite equal to the task of bearing up against an infamous and unjust accusation. The author of Belhaven might have made a good deal more of the society in the little Scotch seaside town in which the most of his scenes are laid. In fact, a reading of the book leaves one with the abiding and provoking impression that in every respect it might easily have been better than it is.

Quintin Doornise looks, above all things, like an experiment in fiction by an author who is better qualified by nature and culture to write a pamphlet or a sermon. There is a good deal of argumentation—and some of it decidedly acute—about marriage, "the sovereignty of God," "the presence of divine grace," "the sinner's ability to save himself," and other equally enlivening subjects. In addition, the book has a plot, and a tolerable tragic one. Quintin Doornise, a small Scotch laird with a fair share of passion and of half-aristocratic pride, falls deeply in love with Mary Lamb, the pretty daughter of a worthy farmer. Mary falls not less deeply in love with Quintin, and tries the eminently risky experiment of acting as his housekeeper. The results are what De Quincey used to delight in calling "a pledge," a scandal, and the breaking of hearts. Quintin, however, is not a bad man, and "makes an honest woman" of poor Mary. But unable to face the social difficulties involved in his "marrying beneath him," Quintin blows out his very muddled brains, and leaves Mary to play the part of widow, devoted to her husband's interests and memory, which she does exceedingly well. There is a great deal of character in Quintin Doornise, and, all things considered, it is one of the best Scotch novels that have been published for a long time. But Mr. Sloan will have to learn the art of condensation.

Suspected is neither more nor less than a commonplace, though painstaking, story of a familiar English type, the incidents in which have given to them a Teutonic-Dutch setting. Otto Van Weert, the unworthy betrothed of the heroine Anna, is just the sort of young man who gets into debt, and goes to the bad generally, through being impressed too much by the pleasures that are offered by a great English city, and who, in spite—or in virtue—of his weaknesses and vices, fascinates impressionable young women. Anna is, however, a little more unreasonable, unjust, and ungenerous than the majority of fair-minded and healthy English girls; for she attributes the mysterious murder of Otto to a young man the latchet of whose shoe that scamp was unworthy to loose, and on whom as she knows he had shamelessly sponged. Wolff, however, who, after a time, is allowed to take Otto's place, and his friend and rival, Egbert, are excellent sketches of quite possible persons. Altogether, Suspected, though slight, is quite readable.

Simplicity of plot and of style is the one thing which My Geoff has in common with the majority of its author's novels. The heroine is a little creature who somehow recalls Jane Eyre, and who tells her experiences as lady help in several families. Several of her characters savour too much of caricature, notably Clement Warrington, the painter, and his wife, who worships him rather too effusively, and the fearfully and wonderfully vindictive Lady d'Ecie. On the other hand there are some really excellent and obviously life-like portraits in My Geoff, notably those of the well-intentioned, although rather too ambitious, Mrs. Poplin-Browne and her cockney husband with his 'earty ways and his 'omey manners. Geoff himself, however, is rather a failure. One would not indeed have wished him to have played Rochester to Miss Nugent's Jane Eyre, but Mrs. Stannard might at least have given him the brains and manliness of a Bootles.

Don Francisco Freitas is a thorough-paced scoundrel of the familiar Spanish-American type. He commits murder and bigamy, fascinates and assaults ladies, and when in London puts up at the Langham. But he may be forgiven, for he imparts a certain amount of liveliness to In Part to Blame, which otherwise is a poorly-written, deadly dull story, filled with uninteresting creatures of whom even Edna Lyall could have made nothing, although they vex themselves with the problems she discusses in her stories. One of these is described as "a poor poet, but a good lover." This is the most accurate statement in the whole book, for the "poet" writes of Love that

"It beams from out the eyes
The feelings of the soul;
And once its flame doth rise
Its fire doth all control."

"There is something almost God-like in the tender, patient, unwearying love of a true man." So one learns from the commencement of the fifth chapter of Millicent's Mistake, and this simple "Annie Swan" idea is the essence of this book, which is the work of an author who now occupies a prominent position in this same "Annie Swan" school of fiction. The "true man," Caleb West by name, falls in love with Millicent Welland—he cannot, indeed, well help himself—and, in course of time, marries her. She is quite worthy of Caleb, but, unfortunately for him, and still more for herself, does not inform him that, long before they have met, she has been all but married to another and inferior man, Edwin Winters. The difficulties that follow are of the conventional kind, and are surmounted in the conventional fashion. It is, of course, quite impossible to criticise the style of Millicent's Mistake; style is, indeed, conspicuous by its absence from the book. It is a simple, wholesome, painfully unambitious story of the kind that Sunday-school pupils, and still more Sunday-school teachers, will take kindly to.

Tom Buxton's Aim is a decidedly effective, though by no means pleasant, study in the morally sordid. Tom is, indeed, only an undiscovered, or partially discovered, Uriah Heep. He is capable of any meanness; he is even, it seems, capable of being the instigator of, and the accomplice in, a murder. Yet he is industrious, thrifty, tenacious of purpose, and full of devices. Above all things, he is successful. So, at all events, his biographer assures us. We are told that "to make as much money as is possible within the short allotted span was and is Tom's aim; and he has succeeded." Yet, when Tom is last seen in this book, he is lying on the floor, and his wife—who had been his landlady, and whom he marries in case she "splits upon" him—is "pommeling his face until the blood streams on his collar and shirt-front." The story is, indeed, eminently unsatisfactory, in so far that it has really no end, and indeed no beginning, to speak of. Harry Lintoft, who, reckless and good-natured in his selfishness, is a foil to his friend Tom, is not more agreeably disposed of in the end than is that apology for a hero himself. In fact, Tom Buxton's Aim should really be taken as a collection of instantaneous photographs of several scoundrels and one drunkard. As such, it will bear a second reading.

Mr. Lawrence Fletcher has, in his Into the Unknown, set himself to out-Rider Mr. Haggard, and, in one respect, at all events, he has succeeded. He has compressed into his 200 odd pages quite as many adventures and almost as many deaths as even his master has crowded into an equal amount of space. There is a certain novelty, too, in the central incident of his story. South Africa has been so long the happy hunting ground of the melodramatic novelist, that, but for Mr. Fletcher's book, we should have said it was impossible to discover or plant there anything new in the way of incident. Mr. Fletcher has, however, found or manufactured a colony of Mormons, governed by a blackguardly "Holy Three" and endowed with almost as remarkable an appetite for murder as for matrimony. How his hero, Grenville, succeeds in frustrating the designs of the Mormons and in penetrating into their fortress the reader of Into the Unknown must, of course, learn for himself. It must suffice to say that he is aided by a magnanimous, big-boned Zulu, who is a sort of half-brother to Umslopogaas, and by a self-sacrificing girl who meets a fate almost as tragic as that of Nada the Lily. Mr. Fletcher's story, however, recalls Mr. Haggard simply by the number and character of his homicides. He has none of his master's imagination and "force"—misused as both of these have sometimes been.

Branksome Dene is a fairly good novel of the old shiver-my timbers school, rather than of that of which Mr. Rider Haggard is still the undisputed chief. The leading character in it is a rugged, warm-hearted smuggler of the name of Gulliver, who pursues his essentially respectable avocation in and near the Isle of Wight. Gulliver has a daughter (?) with two lovers, who are even more decidedly at daggers drawn than lovers usually are, from the one being in the revenue department of the public service, and the other being emphatically not. There is plenty of hard fighting and knockdown blows, and conspiracy of a kind which it is not easy to conceive of as taking place at any period in the history of the British navy; and the scene of the story shifts merrily and with James Grantish rapidity from England to France, from France to Italy, and finally from Italy to Scotland. There is a vast deal more of action than of character in Branksome Dene, yet Giacomo, the Italian, who does such valuable service to the hero of the story, is a rather striking sketch. The Scotch dialect attempted by the author towards the close of the volume is not quite perfect. At all events it is in the last degree improbable that a Dumfriesshire peasant should be found saying in the same breath, "There's no the like on ye left among the bairns o' Lochmaben," and "The wee bairnies all greet for thee mony a day." "Ye" is infinitely better Scotch than "thee."

WILLIAM WALLACE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE three volumes of Lord Chesterfield's Letters, edited by Dr. Bradshaw, and published by Swan Sonnenschein & Co., are printed in excellent type, and are admirably bound. The edition of Lord Mahon has, up to the present time, held its own against all comers; but it has long been unobtainable, except at a very high price. Dr. Bradshaw has adopted his predecessor's method and notes, and has shown good judgment in following in his steps. His own observations are not numerous, and most of them refer to Irish matters and Irish persons in which he is well informed. Five communications from Lord Chesterfield are now printed for the first time, and one of them, from the Newcastle MSS. in the British Museum, makes the set of letters to Dayrolles complete. These MSS. contain a very large collection of letters from Lord Chesterfield, and it is gratifying to read that Dr. Bradshaw purposes to make them public "at no distant date." Lord Charlemont's criticism of the Letters is reprinted from the Historical Manuscripts Commission (Twelfth Report, Appendix, Pt. 10), but the erroneous note which was inserted on p. 327 should not have been included by the present editor. The companion at Berne of the young Stanhope, who is described as "the excellent Mr., now Lord Elliott" (sic), was not Lord Heathfield, of Gibraltar, but the Cornishman by whom Stanhope was afterwards placed in parliament for more than one Cornish borough. The name of one of these constituencies should not be printed as St. Germain; and as the younger Eliot succeeded to his father's barony in 1804, it is incorrect to say (as on p. 51) that "he was raised to the peerage in 1815." The work which Dr. Bradshaw promises should prove a welcome addition to our knowledge of the last century.

Lectures on the History of Literature, Delivered by Thomas Carlyle, April to July, 1838. Now printed for the first time. Edited with Preface and Notes, by Prof. J. Reay Greene. (Ellis & Elvey.) No one ignorant of the dates would imagine, on reading these discourses—which were partially reported by a diligent barrister, Mr. Chisholm Anstey, and have lately been published in two distinct editions—that they were subsequent to Sartor Resartus. While recognising the piety of the editing, we can hardly allow them more than an antiquarian interest. Little is said in them that is not better said by Carlyle elsewhere, and the traces of the great accent are surprisingly few. The mind of Carlyle in the year 1838 would be most unjustly estimated by the impression given in this book. It is an instance of misdirected zeal that, while so many priceless letters of Carlyle lie unknown for lack of a public or a publisher, this tame and washed-out matter should be twice edited. In the years 1837 to 1840 Carlyle gave an annual course of lectures. One would hardly believe, without the evidence, that the course on Heroes and this course on Literature were by the same man. At the best, the present set might conceivably be the work of the same man in early youth, when his ideas were struggling into shape; and if this were so, they would have their historic value. But, in reality, they are partial reports of more or less extemporised public monologues, never meant for literary form or thought worthy of it by their author, who would probably have been galled by their publication. Carlyle, feeling the prohibitive range of the subject—European Literature—which he had chosen, evidently abandoned all pretence at an academic survey of it, and talked away. It may well have been grand talk; but the chief effect must have lain in the turns of his idiom, in his tones and looks and bearing—in things which the reporter cannot pencil down. We seem to hear the speech of Carlyle most unmistakably when he talks of Homer and Dante, especially of Dante; indeed, he could hardly speak or write about such men in a way that is not memorable.

"Dante was afterwards reduced to wander up and down Italy a broken man. His way of life is difficult to conceive of, with so violent a mind as his, whether sad or joyful. Henceforth he had sorrow for his portion."

Even more characteristic are the words on the Francesca story: "The whole is so beautiful, like a clear piping voice heard in the centre of a whirlwind." There are also appreciations of Goethe, Schiller, Milton, and many others, in which this distinctive style hardly appears, and which look like a rudimentary draft of the classic passages we all remember, though in a few cases we have an interesting utterance upon something Carlyle has not elsewhere spoken of. The notes by Prof. Reay Greene, though painstaking, cannot, any more than those of Mr. Karkaria in the rival edition, be of great value in so unwieldy a subject.

Poets the Interpreters of their Age. By Anna Swanwick. (Bell.) The set of papers, ranging over universal literature, originally addressed to a private society, which Miss Swanwick has republished, are totally without pretension, despite their alarming programme, and will safely and pleasantly introduce a number of great writers to those who have hardly heard of them. "To the learned," says the authoress, "I have nothing to offer," but of the learned there are not so many who have read as widely and sympathetically as Miss Swanwick. Her style is somewhat flowing and old-fashioned, but always estimable; and her information, though confessedly in many cases secondhand, is chosen with judgment and carefully checked. The ground covered may be judged from some of the headings. One chapter is given to Homer alone, another to the rest of Hellas. Rome, Babylonia, Mediaeval Christianity each have one. The sequel is mainly taken up with a sketch of English literature, in several chapters, interspersed with other chapters on writers of France, Germany, and Italy. Of modern Frenchmen Hugo, we are glad to see, has a chapter to himself. The list closes with the names of Browning and Lord Tennyson, and the rapid journey which we are taken by express train through the whole continent of literature is not unrefreshing.

"ABBOTSFORD SERIES OF THE SCOTTISH POETS." Edited by George Eyre-Todd. Vol. II., Mediaeval Scottish Poetry. (Glasgow: Hodge; London: Williams & Norgate.) We like this volume better than its predecessor, even though it repeats some of the editorial mannerisms to which we have taken exception. It will doubtless be welcome to many as a handy collection of poetry hitherto inaccessible except in the expensive editions of the Societies. Less liberty has been taken with the texts. Henryson and Dunbar escape epitome, because the average length of their poems is short; James I. because his artistic mity and balance defy tinkering. Gavin Douglas suffers much in an abridgment of 32 pages; and somewhat unreasonably, since Mr. Eyre-Todd has thought him worth a preface of 18 pages. The selections are for the most part good, and fairly illustrate the different moods of the poets. We note, however, that Dunbar is not represented by any of his religious pieces. This is a serious omission; for we cannot have an adequate notion of the rich symphony of his verse, if we leave out of account the triumphant organ-notes of poems like "Done is a Battell on the Dragon Blak." The prefaces are very readable, though they impress us as the work of a compiler rather than of an independent critic. When we see so many of the opinions of one Merry Ross on old Scottish verse quoted with generous approbation, and are told that Mr. John Small edited Douglas "in an entirely satisfactory manner," we are warned not to expect too much from the volume in the way of criticism. We have a repetition of the Warton fallacy in the remarks about the "wave of civilisation" which passed over the country at the advent of Margaret Tudor, though Mr. Eyre-Todd would not have found it a hard task to collect facts to prove the anachronism of this pretty story.

Sancho Panza's Proverbs, and others which occur in Don Quixote. With a literal English Translation, Notes, and an Introduction by Ulick Ralph Burke. (Pickering & Chatto.) This is really a third and enlarged edition of a charming little work published in 1872 under the present title, republished in 1877 as Spanish Salt, and now reappearing under its original designation. We may as well say at once, as the only fault that we have to find with this dainty little volume, that it has far too many misprints for a book in its third edition: there are some score of these which certainly ought to have been corrected. Otherwise, the book is delightful. It should be in the hands of every reader of Cervantes; for without a knowledge of the proverbs we miss the point of half the wit; and the ordinary dictionaries do not explain these sayings sufficiently to enable the reader to grasp their full meaning. Proverbs are often obscure, not seldom susceptible of more than one interpretation, and the student is sure to find among them some hard nuts to exercise his strength upon. It is, therefore, in no depreciation of Mr. Burke's powers that we say that on one or two points we dissent from him. On No. 10 is a note: "Alcalde, originally spelt alcayde, from the Arabic al kadi, or al kadi, is the title of the local judge or magistrate in every town and village in Spain." Is not Mr. Burke confounding here two words which are as distinct in meaning and as separate in derivation as our "mayor" and "major"? Alcalde, from the Arabic caidi, a chief, means the commander of a fortress, in Spanish; alcalde, from the Arabic caidi, is a judge; see Dozy's, or Eguilaz's Glossario, sub. voc. No. 25. Arruquib, is more used of a man who has landed property, a stake in the country, a root in the soil, than for a merely rich (moneyed) man. No. 81: "Castigame mi madre, y yo trompogela" cannot, we think, mean, "My mother corrects me, and I go on deceiving her." It may refer to the whipping-tops; las is clearly plural. In 401: "A mal viento va esta parva," we cannot accept the etymology of parva from Latin parvus, and the reason given. We should rather connect it with Barche, Berge, a heap of straw, and kindred words in the dialects; cf. Du Cange, s.v. Berga. Differences of opinion such as these do not detract from, but rather show both the interest and the need of consulting, such a work as this, if we would enjoy with full relish all the salt of Sancho Panza's witty sayings.

Towards Democracy. Third edition, enlarged. (Fisher Unwin.) The author of this work is known to be Mr. Edward Carpenter, although his name does not appear on the title-page, but only, as the holder of the copyright, at the back of it. It was first published in 1883, a thin little book, one-fourth the bulk of the present edition. The poem, "Towards Democracy," has not, however, been enlarged; some passages have, indeed, been eliminated, and considerable alterations have been made in its structure. The remainder of the volume consists of other pieces written in a similar tone and style. The style is that kind of chant or rhythmic prose which Walt Whitman preferred; and, in this particular, Mr. Carpenter has consciously followed in the footsteps of Whitman. A certain brusqueness of phrase, too, in the first edition gave an impression of imitation; it hardly seems native to Mr. Carpenter's nature. For the rest, so far from being an imitator of Whitman or anyone else, Mr. Carpenter is one of the few truly original thinkers to be found at present in the literary world. His writings, whether in prose or verse, are richly suggestive, and withal he is a cordial lover of his fellow men—a philosopher who yet is active in the daily life of the world. His aim and hope are thus indicated in the work before us:

"I conceive a millennium on earth—a millennium, not of riches, nor of mechanical facilities, nor of intellectual facilities, nor absolutely of immunity from disease, nor absolutely of immunity from pain; but a time when men and women all over the earth shall ascend and enter into relation with their bodies—shall attain freedom and joy."

"And the men and women of that time looking back with something like envy to the life of to-day, that they too might have borne a part in travail and throes of birth."

"All is well; to-day and a million years hence, equally. To you the whole universe is given for a garden of delight; and to the soul that loves, in the great coherent Whole, the hardest and most despised lot is even with the best; and there is nothing more certain or more solid than this" (pp 5, 6).

Comparing the first edition with the third, we prefer the latter. Some crudities of expression have disappeared, and it is more fully the author's own unfettered work. There is a natural grace in Mr. Edward Carpenter's writings, which we like to find there, because it is natural, but which we do not find, do not expect to find, and do not wish to find, in the more rugged Whitman. This natural grace asserts itself in the third edition with advantage. Men and women who are accustomed to think for themselves will be thankful for the healthy mental and moral stimulus contained in this remarkable work.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. JOHN UNDERHILL is engaged upon an edition of Gay's Poems, which will be published by Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen in the early autumn. It will fill two volumes of the "Muse's Library," and will contain practically everything that Gay wrote in verse, including, of course, the songs which form part of his plays and operas. Mr. Underhill has arranged the poems in sections, to each of which a short bibliographical note is prefixed. A life of Gay, embodying the results of independent research, will occupy some sixty pages of the first volume, in which will also be contained an engraved portrait of the poet, after Aikman. Each volume will have a number of notes.

MR. LUCY'S Diary of Two Parliaments is about to become a Diary of Three. The volumes dealing with the Disraeli and Gladstone Parliaments will be supplemented by one covering the period of the late Parliament under the premiership of Lord Salisbury. Mr. Harry Furniss will illustrate the volume, which Messrs. Cassell & Co. now have in the press.

The September number of Temple Bar will contain the opening chapters of a new serial story by Miss Rhoda Broughton.

Indian Nights Entertainment is the title of a new volume of folk tales announced for early publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. The collection has been made by Mr. Charles Swynnerton from oral narration, and will be copiously illustrated with drawings by native artists.

MR. MURRAY announces for publication in the early autumn two abridged biographies—that of Charles Darwin, by his son; and that of Jenny Lind, by Canon Scott Holland and Mr. W. S. Rockstro.

THE new volume in the "Cameo Series"—The Countess Kathleen—by Mr. W. B. Yeats, will appear next week, with a frontispiece by Mr. J. T. Nettleship.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a collection of reprinted pieces by Mr. Julian Sturgis, to be entitled After Twenty Years.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will issue immediately a humorous work entitled Golf in the Year 2000, by J. A. C. K.; and on August 19 the new volume in the "Pseudonym Library," The General's Daughter.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will in a few days publish A Highland Chronicle, a novel in one volume, by Mr. S. Bayard Dod. It will contain descriptions of life among the gypsies of the Highlands of Scotland in the middle of the eighteenth century, and of the ill-fated attempts of "Bonnie Prince Charlie" to gain a throne, the leading characters being among his adherents.

MESSRS. BEMROSE & SONS have in preparation a series of illustrated handbooks, designed as elementary courses of instruction, to meet the requirements of technical classes in connexion with the Science and Art Department. Mr. Thomas C. Simmonds will contribute to the series Woodwork, Wood-carving, and Modelling in Clay and Wax; and Miss Barron and Mr. John Oliver will collaborate in a volume on Butter and Cheese Making.

THE circulation of Mr. Poultney Bigelow's book, The German Emperor and his Eastern Neighbours, just published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., has been promptly suppressed in Russia.

MR. FREDERICK WEDMORE, who, we are sorry to say, was very unwell before leaving town, is now staying at Harrogate to take the waters, and will afterwards pay some visits in the North.

THE Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held in Paris on September 12, 13, and 14 next. By the kind invitation of M. Bourgeois, the Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, the sessions will be held in the Salle de l'Hémicycle of the National School of Fine Arts. This meeting, the first that has been held outside of the United Kingdom, promises to be one of the most interesting and enjoyable ever held. The Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, the Prefect of the Seine, and M. Delisle, the chief of the Bibliothèque Nationale, all offer a most cordial welcome; and everything will be done to facilitate the objects of the visit, and to make it in every way not only useful but pleasant. The Marquess of Dufferin will receive the Association. Reports on various important branches of library work will be presented for discussion, and it is hoped that definite results will be arrived at in the matters of Size Notation and Cataloguing Rules; the latest edition of Mr. Cutter's rules will be taken as the text for the discussion of the latter. After the usual business of the annual meeting, three or four days will be devoted to visiting the libraries of Paris, and in particular to a careful inspection of the Municipal Libraries, which possess many points of interest that distinguish them from any similar institutions in this country, both as regards organisation and administration. Members will also have unusual facilities offered them for visiting places and objects of interest in Paris and the neighbourhood, and special arrangements have been made for excursions.

WITH reference to the Lowell memorial at Westminster, Mr. Leslie Stephen, the chairman of the committee, writes:

"We have already sufficient support to insure the insertion of the two windows in the Chapter-house; but the character of the commemorative tablet to be placed beneath the windows will depend upon the amount of subscriptions received, and we desire to make it as satisfactory as possible. Subscriptions may be paid to the account of the Lowell Memorial Fund, with Messrs. Roberts, Lubbock & Co., Lombard-street.

The total amount of subscriptions already promised is about £215.

MR. BOK has acquired a quantity of unpublished material by the late Henry Ward Beecher, which will shortly be published as a series of articles in The Ladies' Home Journal.

THE results of the L.L.A. examination at the University of St. Andrews have just been issued. It appears that 699 candidates entered for examination at 42 centres, being the largest number yet entered in any one year, and 63 in advance of any previous occasion. Taking a joint view of all the subjects in which candidates entered, 1164 papers were written; passes were obtained in 651 instances, and honours in 276. One hundred candidates having this year passed in the full number of subjects required for the L.L.A. diploma, are entitled to receive it. From the commencement of the scheme in 1877, 2629 candidates in all have entered for this examination. For women who intend to become regular students in arts or science at the University of St. Andrews during the coming winter session, ten bursaries, varying in amount from £30 to £10, will be open to public competition.

THE address of Sir A. W. Croft, as president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, includes a summary of the vernacular literature published in India during the year, from which we make some extracts. The prose works of imagination, that is to say novels and plays, treat mostly of the following subjects: the quarrels of the daughter-in-law with her mother-in-law; educated ladies married to uneducated men of equal family rank; learned Babus married to illiterate wives: the miseries of married widows (written by the orthodox classes); and the miseries of girl widows (written by the friends of progress). Among biographies, there were lives in various vernaculars of Socrates, Gibbon, Richard Cobden, Abraham Lincoln, Sir Henry Lawrence, Dr. Duff, and Charles Bradlaugh. History is almost confined to the Marathas, who have published the Chronicles of the Peshwas from 1713 to 1818, written just after the British conquest by an officer of the court of Baji Rao. The only work on politics worthy the name is a collection of the political opinions of the late Sir T. Madhava Rao. The Senior Raja of Venkatagiri has written a valuable work in Telugu on music, vocal and instrumental, embracing both the Hindu and the Muhammadan systems. Under philology, there were published at Bombay—a metrical grammar of the Avesta language; a Hebrew dictionary, "to help people in acquiring a knowledge of Talmudic and Chaldaic"; and a guide to the Swahili language, in Gujarati, compiled on account of the native merchants trading with the west coast of Africa.

WE quote the following from the Boston Literary World:

"The first victory under the new international copyright law has been scored by Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, on June 30, handed down a decision in a suit brought by that firm to restrain the American News Company from publishing and selling copies of Carlyle's novel Wotton Rein-fred. A permanent injunction is granted against the Company, prohibiting them from handling the work, and also ordering them to pay to Messrs. Appleton all the profits they have derived from the sale."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A PRAYER.

A CROWNED caprice is god of the world:
On his stony breast are his cold wings furled.
No tongue to speak, no eye to see,
No heart to feel for a man hath he.

But his pitiless hands are swift to smite,
And his mute lips utter one word of might
In the clang of gentler souls on rougher:
"Wrong must thou do—or wrong must suffer."

Then grant, O dumb blind god, at least that we Rather the sufferers than the doers be!

GRANT ALLEN.

OBITUARY.

SIR DANIEL WILSON.

THE death is announced of Sir Daniel Wilson, at his home in Toronto, on Sunday last, August 7. He had attained his seventy-seventh year.

A nephew of Christopher North, Sir Daniel was born at Edinburgh in 1816; and his name is almost as closely associated with his native city as it is with the land of his adoption. The first public post that he held was that of secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland; and the first important book that he published, with illustrations from his own pencil, was Memorials of Edinburgh in the Olden Time (2 vols., 1847), of which a new and greatly revised edition appeared only last year. In 1853, he was appointed to the chair of history and literature at the University of Toronto; and henceforth he acquired a new patriotism, without putting off the old. In 1881, he became president of the university, a post which he held until his death. On the foundation of the Royal Society by the Marquis of Lorne, he was nominated vice-president in the section of literature; and he received the honour of knighthood in 1888. The extent of his interests in science, archaeology, and literature may be learnt from the long list of his published works, of which we can only mention a few:—The Archaeology and Prehistoric Annals of Scotland (1851); Prehistoric Man: Researches into the Origin of Civilisation in the Old and New Worlds (1863, largely re-written in later editions); Chatterton: a Biographical Study (1869); Caliban: the Missing Link (1873); as well as several articles in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of Mind opens with a careful critical examination of Lotze's "Antithesis between Thought and Things," by Mr. A. Eastwood. As this is only the first instalment of an essay, it may be well to indicate the line of its argument later on. Mr. J. Donovan contributes for the second time an article on "The Festal Origin of Human Speech." It appears to be merely a re-statement of views set forth in the first article (Mind xvi. pp. 498, seq.). Why did not the author or the editor introduce a reference to this earlier article? Mr. W. E. Johnson proceeds with his exposition of "The Logical Calculus." The present instalment bristles with mathematical formulæ, and suggests that the new symbolic logic might well find its place as a branch of the higher algebra. It certainly appeals more directly to the mathematical faculty than to the logical faculty as this was understood by the older logicians. Mr. H. R. Marshall follows up his interesting critical review of the theories of pleasure and pain by a similar inquiry into the aesthetic doctrines. In the present article, a first instalment, he contents himself with briefly reviewing some of the more familiar theories of beauty, and determining their character as basing themselves, or not, on a psychological doctrine of pleasure. The essayist himself evidently attaches but little importance to those doctrines which are not at bottom hedonistic.

In the current number of The American Journal of Psychology there is an interesting experimental study on "The Growth of Memory in School Children," by Mr. P. L. Bolton. It is found, among other results, that the memory-span—as measured by the number of successive digits temporarily retained in the memory—increases with age rather than with intelligence (as Mr. Jacobs and Mrs. Bryant seemed inclined to infer from some earlier experiments carried out in London), and that girls have better memories than boys. The study is an excellent example of a careful method of psychological experimenting unaided by any physical apparatus. In the same number there is an ingenious essay by Mr. A. Fraser on "The Psychological Foundation of Natural Realism." The writer argues that the peculiar sense of reality which accompanies tactual perception is to be explained by saying that throughout the animal series touch is the sense which excites the most immediate reaction (we recoil from a painful touch as we do not, say, from an ugly sight). The sense of reality is the intense belief which accompanies this powerful reaction.

THE last two numbers of Brain do not fall below their predecessors, and it is only want of space which has prevented our calling attention to them earlier. Among the articles of greatest interest mention may be made of a re-statement by Prof. Bastian of his view of "The Neural Processes underlying Attention and Volition"; also an interesting comparison of the characteristics of the nervous system in childhood and in adult life, by Dr. Ch. Mercier. Both of these are worth reading by others than pure neurologists.

LEE v. GIBBINGS.

WE think that our readers may be glad to have before them a shorthand writer's report of the judgment in the above case, which was tried before Mr. Justice Kekewich on August 3. The summary of the case which precedes is quoted from the Times:

"This case raised a somewhat important question to authors—namely, whether, where an author has sold his copyright in a work, the work can be published in a condensed or popular form without stating that it is in fact condensed from the original work. The question arose upon the recent publication of a condensed edition of Mr. Sidney Lee's 'Autobiography of Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury.' The facts of the case were shortly these. In 1886 the plaintiff, Mr. Sydney Lee, prepared, at the request of Mr. J. C. Nimmo, the publisher, and at an agreed price, a library edition, published at one guinea, of the 'Autobiography of Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury.' Mr. Lee's work contained a preface, a table of contents, an introduction, a bibliographical notice of the circumstances under which the text was originally printed, explanatory notes, a continuation of Lord Herbert's life from the point at which his autobiography terminated until his death, also an appendix and an index. A certain number of copies were issued, but the work did not command any great sale. In May 1st the defendant, Mr. William Walter Gibbings, publisher, of Bury-street, Bloomsbury, announced the publication, at the price of 5s., of a smaller edition of the work, to form the third volume of a series called 'The Memoir Library,' but omitting the preface, introduction, table of contents, bibliographical notice, and index of the original. On the title-page of this smaller edition Mr. Lee was stated to be the author, and the date of publication as '1892.' It appeared that the defendant had purchased from Mr. Nimmo the remaining unpublished sheets of the original work, cut them down in size, omitted the parts already mentioned, and then published the smaller and cheaper form of the work, but without any intimation that it was taken from the original work of Mr. Lee. The plaintiff complained that the omissions from a work of a serious and scholarly character were so important as to be injurious to his reputation as an author and scholar; and accordingly he issued the writ in this action, and now moved for an interim injunction to restrain the defendant from publishing or selling any copies of the 'Autobiography of Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury,' edited by the plaintiff and published by Nimmo in 1886, with any material alteration or omission, and containing any representation to the effect that such copies had been prepared for publication by the plaintiff.

"Mr. Renshaw, Q.C., and Mr. Armitstead, for the plaintiff.

"Mr. Warrington, Q.C., and Mr. Theodore Dodd, for the defendant."

JUDGMENT.

MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH: "There are two aspects of this case, one of which had better be left alone, but the other must to some extent be regarded. The one which I think had better be left alone is what I may fairly call the moral side. The defendant's evidence is directed almost entirely to that. Instead of giving me facts—and the disputed facts are extremely few—I have a considerable amount of evidence, which, of course, has occupied a long time in reading, respecting what is called the custom, or more strictly, the habit of the publishing trade, and there is more than something about common sense. Those affidavits, like many other affidavits, might with great advantage have been omitted altogether. Certainly they might have been cut down within the narrowest possible limits. No doubt the same observation is to some extent applicable to the affidavits on behalf of the plaintiff, but not to the same extent. Whether a jury would take into consideration the moral side of the case or not, it is not for me to prophesy. I certainly cannot. I can only regard it from the legal point of view, and I refrain from making such remarks as occur to me on the moral side.

"The legal side of the case is one of considerable interest, and not at all free from difficulty. I regard the defendant for this purpose as the owner of the copyright of this work. He is not, I am aware, the owner of the copyright, but he has purchased the unpublished sheets of the plaintiff's work; and as regards those unpublished sheets he stands in Mr. Nimmo's place, and is the owner of the copyright. He has Mr. Nimmo's assent to their publication. He has even Mr. Nimmo's assent to the publication in the present form. And he, therefore, though having no right to multiply copies in the sense of printing further copies and publishing anything else but these sheets, can deal with these sheets as he pleases, provided he gives the plaintiff no cause to complain.

"He thinks fit—that is to say, he finds it convenient to his trade—to publish the plaintiff's work in a mutilated form. The word 'mutilated' may or may not imply something in derogation of the work or of the defendant's manipulation of it, but, strictly speaking, the form is mutilated. The index is left out. I do not myself attribute very great importance to that in such a work as this, but I only speak for myself in saying that. There are other parts left out, including the introduction; and I should certainly say that the omission of the introduction to such a work as this was very nearly leaving out the principal part of the work. Then the date is altered, so as to give the impression that it is a new work. I am told that is not so; that nobody would suppose it was a work published in 1892 because the figures '1892' are on the title page. I suppose that there are some people who would regard 1892 as meaning nothing. I confess to be among those who would have regarded it as meaning that the work was published in 1892 and not in 1886; but that is a question of injury to the plaintiff to which I will come presently, and not otherwise a mutilation of the plaintiff's work. The omission of the introduction does seem to me to be a very cogent instance of mutilation. Is the defendant entitled to do that? There is no law compelling a man to publish the whole of a work because he has the copyright in the whole. Nor can he be prevented from publishing extracts from the work. Whether it is right for him to publish extracts without saying they are extracts, or whether he can publish a work in a mutilated form without indicating in the least that there has been that mutilation, is a question to my mind of some difficulty.

"The question resolves itself into this—does he thereby injure the author's reputation? For that, what is the author's remedy in law? His remedy in law is, I think, undoubtedly libel or nothing. Injury to reputation is the foundation of the remedy in an action of libel. It is what you have to prove in order to get your damages: and if one endeavoured, which I am not intending to do, to frame the innuendo in an action of libel by the plaintiff against the defendant, it would necessarily point to the injury of the reputation of the author here by informing the public that this mutilated work was really the work of the plaintiff, whereas in fact his work was something far superior, and that this would be discreditable to him. That would be necessarily the general line of complaint.

"It comes therefore to a question on this part of the case whether I ought to grant an injunction now to restrain a libel before that question has been before a jury, which is the avowedly proper tribunal for the purpose of determining whether a libel exists or not. The jurisdiction of the Court to restrain a libel is undoubted. It has been affirmed over and over again, even in those cases in which the Court has refused to grant an injunction, in particular in the last case of Bonnard v. Perryman. Of late years there has been no such thing as an injunction to restrain a libel, except in the recent case where Mr. Justice Chitty distinguished trade libels from other libels, and granted an injunction, a decision with which, within the last week or two, I have had occasion to express my entire concurrence. But with that exception, so far as I know, the Court has not of late granted an injunction to restrain a libel before the point has been submitted to a jury—in other words, on interlocutory application.

"Now, ought this to be an exceptional case? I see no reason for making an exception in favour of a case such as this. The balance of convenience does not seem to me to point in favour of granting an injunction, because though the sale of the work will no doubt go on, and though if it goes on it is injurious to the plaintiff's reputation—the injury will be continued—yet the injury must to a great extent be done by the mere publication, and after all success in the ultimate result would be quite satisfactory to the plaintiff. I mean if it were eventually determined that the plaintiff was right and could sustain an action of libel against the defendant by reason of this publication, then, not by the damages awarded, but by the mere verdict of the jury, he would have, I will not say rehabilitated, but maintained his reputation at the level at which it before existed. It cannot be suggested that the mere sale of a few copies more or less would place him in any worse position if eventually he succeeded; and, of course, if he did not then succeed, he has no reason to complain.

"Now on the balance of convenience I think I ought not to grant an injunction, especially it being of course understood that I express no opinion whether it is a libel or not. That is really the reason why the Court in these cases does not grant an injunction, because if it granted an injunction or even if it refused it on the other ground than the one I have mentioned, the Court would be obliged to express an opinion, and the Court ought not to express an opinion on a matter that is to be left to a jury.

"But the plaintiff's case has been put by Mr. Renshaw on another ground, which strikes me as extremely deserving of attention, though I do not think I ought to grant an injunction on that ground at the present moment. He says this is like the case of Clarke v. Freeman, and Clarke v. Freeman may be considered for this purpose as decided quite differently from the way in which it was decided. In that I follow him. I do not think that after the observations of Vice-Chancellor Malins, Lord Cairns, and Lord Selborne on that case I ought to hesitate to regard it as really erroneously decided; and I do not think that, having regard to Lord Cairns's observations on page 310 of the Second Chancery Appeals, in the case of Maxwell v. Hogg, I ought to doubt what the proper decision should have been in Clarke v. Freeman, or on what ground that proper decision would have been rested, because he says distinctly, speaking of it remembered in the Court of Appeal:—"It always appeared to me that Clarke v. Freeman might have been decided in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that he had a property in his own name." The question of whether a libel was a fit subject for an injunction either on motion or at the trial was not discussed in Clarke v. Freeman. It is not discussed by Lord Cairns; it is not discussed by Lord Selborne, and it is not discussed by Vice-Chancellor Malins; but they all disapprove of the decision, and Lord Cairns says, "because the plaintiff had a property in his own name, the name was invaded by the action of the defendant, and the plaintiff could therefore restrain the defendant from doing what he did on that ground." That is entirely independent of libel.

"Now, can I decide this case on that ground in favour of the plaintiff? I think not, and I think not because when you come to test that argument according to my present opinion, you really come back again to the question of libel in this case, though you would not have done so in Clarke v. Freeman. The plaintiff's case on this part of it is that 'the defendant is publishing as my own what is not my own; that is to say, I am the author of an entire book; the defendant is publishing only part of it, and such part that really he is not publishing my work at all; he is bringing out what I never sanctioned as my work, and which cannot be fairly represented as my work, and therefore I complain of him using my name in connexion with a book that is not mine.' It comes back to this. Is the book the plaintiff's or not?

"It is avowedly only part of it; but is it such a substantial part of it that it may be fairly called the plaintiff's? It is so unless the mutilations are such as to give the plaintiff a right of action for libel. So that, try it as you will, it comes back to the same point; and I think, therefore, I should be doing wrong in seizing hold of the doctrine, not of Clarke v. Freeman, but which ought to have been supported in Clarke v. Freeman, to give the plaintiff relief which ought, on the other hand, to be denied him because he is really bringing an action of libel. I, therefore, on those grounds, must refuse the motion, without expressing any opinion whether what has been done is injurious to the plaintiff's reputation or not.

"This is really the whole question in the case. If the case is tried out, there is nothing else to be tried: and, therefore, the proper way to deal with the costs is to make the costs of both parties costs in the action."

CORRESPONDENCE.

PENTLAND FIRTH AND PENTLAND HILLS.

Oxford: July 25, 1892.

In my Rhind Lectures I failed to discuss the disconnection of these two names as thoroughly as I might have done. Since the publication of those Lectures my attention has been called to Blaeu's Maps of Scotland, especially part V. dated Amsterdam 1654. The Scotch maps were entrusted to "Pontius" and "Gordonius." From these I copy as follows:—Fol. 7, Fretum Picticum hodie Pentland Fyrth (twice); fol. 11, Pentland Fyrth (twice); fol. 97, Pentland Fyrth; fol. 115, Fretum Pictlandicum and Pentland Fyrth; fol. 133, Pictland Fyrth, and Pentland, or Pichtland Skerries. Here Pentland is doubtless derived somehow from the Pettlands firth of the Norsemen, who seem to have called Caithness and Sutherland Pettaland or Pictland; but when they turned Cape Wrath they found themselves in what they called Scottlands Fiorth, the sea of Scottaland, or the Land of the Scots.

Now let me return to Blaeu's maps, namely, to fol. 37, which is devoted to "Lothian and Linlith"; there we have Penkethland, Pentlandt Hill and Pentland Hill; also the village of Penth land. Here a different combination is attested from that in "Pentland Fyrth"; and this is supported by Fordun's Chronica Gentis Scotorum as edited by Skene (Edinburgh, 1871) from MSS. of the sixteenth century, see especially pp. 284, 292, where he reads Penland and Pentheland. If Dr. Skene had any prepossession in the matter, it was his belief that Pentland is of the same origin in Pentland Firth and in Pentland Hills, so his evidence is all the more deserving of consideration. This is not all, for I have accidentally come across Pentlandiskery, p. 45—it is not in the index—where we have the Pentland Skerries referred to under a designation involving the spelling of the Pictish Pentland with the usual tl.

Now in the case of the Pentland Hills, I take the hill to be so called from the village of Pentland, and the two references by Fordun seem to be to the village, nothing being said about the hills. Was Pentland ever an important place? Was there a road leading to the south through it, or was it otherwise of any great strategic value? Such are some of the questions I should like to ask with regard to it and the passages in Fordun. But one would also like to know what spellings of the names here in point are given in the oldest manuscripts of that chronicler.

With regard to the thl of the Pentland Hill, it has its parallel, as will have been seen, in that of another Lothian place-name, Penkethland; and of the actual pronunciations of this word I have the following curious account in a letter, written to me on March 23 last by my Edinburgh friend, Dr. Alfred Daniell:

"In the course of a conversation last summer with two East Lothian men, of whom one (since dead) was considerably over seventy and the other slightly over fifty years of age, the new branch railway through Pencaitland was discussed. As the talk became topographical, I sat for awhile quietly listening, and I was much interested to hear both pronounce Pencaitland as Penkêthlun or Penkêthl'n. I said nothing, but waited until I had thoroughly satisfied myself that I was correct about the th. As the topic became exhausted, I asked how Pencaitland was pronounced. 'As it is spelled, Pen-câit-land,' was the reply. 'Do you ever pronounce the t as if it were th?' 'No, never.' I then told them that they had been doing so for the past five or ten minutes. They would give no credit to that proposition; but eventually they suggested that they might have dropped into a schoolboy pronunciation of the word; it was, however, quite wrong even if they had done so; the right way to pronounce Pencaitland was the way it was spelled. I thought that was a very good illustration of the difficulty of getting authentic information as to local pronunciations."

Perhaps somebody acquainted with Pentland would inform us in what ways its name is still pronounced. In any case I take it that the thl in the two names is the modern Lothian representation of the Welsh sound of ll, which English people nowadays often equate with thl, a spelling that, in Wales, goes back, however, as far as the "Record of Carnarvon." Accordingly Pentland would be in Welsh "Penllan," and belong to the same category of names as Penllech and Penllyn; also Henllan, made into "Hentland" in Herefordshire. Penkethland would similarly be Pencellan, with the same cellan which occurs as the name of a parish in Cardiganshire, and as part of farm names like Rhos Cellan and Nant Cellan. The Welsh word pen "head, top, end," occurs also in Pennycuik in the neighbourhood of the Pentlands, and altogether the traces of a former occupation of the Lothians by Brythons seem to be unmistakable. On the other hand the name of the Pentland Hills has been supposed to prove the former presence of Picts. Now if, as I think, this name never had anything to do with the Picts, one would be glad to know accurately what evidence there is of a Pictish occupation of the Pentland district. The question is one of such interest as regards early Scottish history, that I hope to be forgiven for raising it in the ACADEMY.

J. RHYS.

THE EARLY HISTORY OF BABYLONIA.

Athenaeum Club: August 5, 1892.

The general election has intervened, and absolutely distracted all other work, which accounts for my not having sent you another letter on the origins of Persian history, about which I think I have something to say that is new. It may be a short time now before I can resume the subject. Meanwhile, will you allow me to send you a note about early Babylonian history, which clears up a small point?

In the last volume of the Records of the Past, Mr. Pinches published a most interesting fragment of a Babylonian tablet. There has crept into his translation, by the merest inadvertence, a mistake which makes the story impossible to follow as it stands. Mr. Pinches has re-examined the tablet, and quite agrees with me. He had discovered in an American cuneiform tablet a transcription of the name hitherto read Kara Murdas, showing that it ought to be read Kadisman Murus. He has made the correction in line 5 of his translation of the new fragment, but has failed to do so in lines 12 and 14. The name ought to be read Kadisman Murus in all three places.

This is not all. It has been generally supposed that the Babylonian king to whom Muballidhat-Seria, the daughter of Assur-uballidh, king of Assyria, was married was Burraburiyash. It seems clear from line 5 of this inscription that it was Karaindash who married her.

Again, it has been very generally said in histories of Babylonia and Assyria that Karaindash was the father of Burraburiyash. Of this there is no evidence. Dr. Lehmann is of the same opinion as myself. Burraburiyash, as we know from his own letters, was the son of Kurigalzu, and it is more probable that he and Karaindash were brothers.

Lastly, it has been suggested that a chief who who styles himself Ris Kullinma-Sin (?), and who calls himself king of Karduniyash or Babylonia, intervened between Karaindash and Burraburiyash. I do not think this is likely. He himself speaks in one of the Tel el-Amarna tablets of having given his daughters in marriage to the kings of Karduniyash, showing there were other kings of Babylonia beside himself; and it seems to me that this points to there having been more than one independent ruler in Babylonia at the time. Perhaps he was a subordinate chief, or perhaps he represented the old royal family which had been displaced by the Kassite dynasty.

The succession in Babylonia at this time seems to run:

Kurigalzu I.
Karaindash (married a princess of Assyria).
Burraburiyash (? his brother).
Kadisman Murus, son of Karaindash.
Nazi Bugas, a usurper.
Kurigalzu II., son of Burraburiyash.

May I say in conclusion how very desirable it is that the British Museum authorities should publish as soon as they can the series of tablets dealing with the correspondence of the Assyrian kings with the provincial governors, generals, &c., and known as the Despatch Tablets. There are more than 200 of them, I believe, in the Museum. They are contemporary documents, intended to inform the king of what was doing, and are therefore of the highest value as authorities. They are difficult to read, but could no doubt be read, and thus be made available by the same two scholars to whom we owe the edition of the Museum series of the Tel el-Amarna tablets, Mr. Budge and Dr. Bezold, or by Mr. Pinches. The tablets I refer to have been in the Museum a very long time, and their publication is urgently needed.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

THE NEW 'Αθηναίων Πολιτεία.

Cornwall: July 28, 1892.

I see from Sir George Cox's interesting communications to the ACADEMY that he looks upon Aristotle as the author of this treatise, but I am afraid that we can hardly take so much for granted yet. In fact, the more we study the treatise, the more difficulty we find in coming to a decision as to its character and authority.

It was remarked many months ago that the book before us does not read like Aristotle. That author may have sometimes written with the beauty of expression which Cicero seems to attribute to him, but we have no beautiful fragment to judge by; and the 'Αθηναίων Πολιτεία is neither such in style as to deserve Cicero's praise, nor such as to recall the familiar crabbedness of the Politics or of the Metaphysics. It is supposed, on the view most favourable to it, to be one of a collection of constitutions of states, πολιτείας, made up by Aristotle as a storehouse of materials from which might be drawn facts and generalisations for the Politics. But then (though I fear that this is very much a question of taste) there does not seem to be so much similarity of language as we should expect between the two writings, and the new treatise does not fit itself well into the divisions, definitions, and other schematism of the more ambitious work. Moreover, the Athenian history of the Πολιτεία does not reflect closely enough the Athenian history of the Politics. I am not thinking now only of Politics 2, 12—that chapter has been dealt with by others, and I will cheerfully give it up altogether as spurious; but there are other respects in which the history does not coincide. Dr. Caer perhaps points out one of these (Uat Aristoteles die Schrift vom Staate der Athener geschrieben? Stuttgart, 1891, p. 46), though it is fair to say that Mr. Kenyon has an answer for him (3rd edition, p. 71). It is a probable, though not a certain, premise that, if the Politics be built on the Πολιτεία, then the Πολιτεία may contain facts about Athenian history which do not reappear in the Politics, but the Politics ought to cite no facts which are not told (and told more fully) in the Πολιτεία. Yet the Politics does mention facts which the Πολιτεία does not give us at all. Let me briefly note some passages which show that the correspondence of the two works is defective. They have not, so far as I know, been brought forward before.

(1) The author of the Politics held some very peculiar views about the accession of Kodros to the throne (p. 1310 b). Of this view there is, I believe, no trace in the Πολιτεία, and c. 3 is perhaps even incompatible with it.

(2) The Politics (p. 1305 b), shows that to Aristotle's mind Phrynichos was a man of importance in the history of the Four Hundred, and Charikles a man of importance in the history of the Thirty. But neither of these men is even named in the tolerably full accounts which the Πολιτεία gives of these two usurpations.

(3) The Politics (p. 1267 b), alludes obscurely to some arrangement about the position of working men which one Diophantos (otherwise, it seems, unknown) tried to introduce at Athens. Why does the Πολιτεία fail to tell the story of this and even to mention the name of Diophantos?

(4) How is it that, if Aristotle knew all the intricate story of appointment to office at Athens by lot ἐκ προαρκτήτων, "from candidates previously selected," which we find in the Πολιτεία, he makes no reference to it in the Politics. It is not for want of occasion. He mentions such an arrangement as a possibility three or four times in the Politics, and it would have been in keeping with his method to intimate to readers of the Politics how it had been found to work at Athens.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

NOTES ON HERODAS.

Cambridge: July 28, 1892.

I. 25. The ascript is, I think, κόβης, cf. κίμβης: that on I. 78 κόλκα.

I. 70. ἐγὼ ἐξ ἑλάνης.

II. 6. Prefix τί to Bücheler's μη δίκην δῶ.

VI. 68. ἰδούσ' ἀληθῶς. I do not think that λήμψ is possible, even if suitable.

VII. 96. λαλεσσω. Diels reads αἰθάλας ἔδω πρῆξαι. But there is no room for θα, and the sense is incomplete. Still ἔδω is right, and Diels recognised α before the second λ. After the second λ the remains of α are quite plain. Read λαῖα λαῖος ἔδω. Only one other reading is possible, viz., δεῖλὰ δεῖλός. But in our MS. neither leg of λ is so raised as to make it resemble Γ or Γ reversed (hence πυργῖδα is the reading of the MS. in VII. 15). If δεῖλὰ were right, the λ would be a reversed γ. When the letter is repeated it looks more like λ (it is the letter transcribed and treated as ε). Still, even here, τ is more probable. The cross-stroke of τ is sometimes more or less below the top of the upright. Hence, in VII. 104, I read ἐστὶ χρεῖη; and in I. 56 κατόδω (τ, not θ) is possible, though not probable. The letter which looks like ε has deceived the palaeographers. I suspect that the same thing has happened in another passage.

In I. 71 we read μυτρηται, only the second half of the μ is preserved. I believe (I cannot here support my belief at length) that μυτρηται is equally possible. I hardly think that μυτρηται (cf. μυτρηται) is likely to be right, but I venture to propose μυτρηται, "lewd". That a word beginning with λα- or λασ- is likely to have the meaning suggested by the context is plain from the list in Curtius, Etymol. v. c. λω. (As to λασ- in VI. 10, I will only say that I am not altogether satisfied with λασ-.) I assume, therefore, an adjective μυτρηται. And in my reading there is no synizesis, cf. μουσηιον in I. 41; the synizesis in the conjecture μυτρηται is unpleasant.

In another passage ε raises a difficulty. In V. 43 I propose φομαρται σφι (σφι δ) δν. Herodotus uses σφι before a vowel. The σφι I take from Bücheler.

The upright of τ is normally straight, but often curves toward the reader's left, only rarely to his right. In VII. 96 both top and bottom curve towards the right, and the cross-stroke completes an ungainly ε. The tau's with the cross-stroke below the top of the upright led me to conjecture μυτρηται in II. 8; this seems more probable than μυτρηται with mutilated ε. I ought to have classed I. 69 with the cases of ε, not ε. As to μυτρηται, it is possible that it may be a substantive (μυτρηται). But the ρ points to its being an adjective. Perhaps there was a word μυτρηται, cf. φίλτρον, and hence μυτρηται. I should rather prefer μυτρηται (μυτρηται, cf. μυτρηται, μυτρηται, &c.) and μυτρηται. And I might cite the authority of the eminent scholars who read μυτρηται (μυτρηται). But in our texts of Herodotus Attic -αῖος always appears as -αῖος, cf., τάρχατος in Herodas V. 81 and τριταῖος III. 37. In Caer and Dittenb. I find δικαῖος, τὸ Ἀθηναῖον, and a few proper names in -αῖος, e.g., Ἰστιάος, but no sign of -ήιος except when = -αῖος. I therefore doubt the form μυτρηται, quite apart from the probability or improbability of the reading in itself.

I should like to correct one or two misprints in my letter in the ACADEMY of July 20. In II. 10 read δῶν "it is necessary"; 13, αἰκία for αἰκία; 16, πρῶν; 18, place full stop after Τύρον. On II. 7 I quoted παρὶς ἢ βάσκουσα γῆ, I was thinking of the ἀσπὶς as a meto. Perhaps it is better not to restrict the meaning. In II. 15, unless some critic can suggest a satisfactory solution, I shall be constrained to give the cloak to the patron, and to read κῆρυξ . . . μέμνησθε (to which the only objection is that it has a letter too many; but it may have been miswritten μέμνησθε τοῦτων . . . ἢν δ' ἔχει . . . ἀτεχνῶς ἐγὼ τῷ π. δειδῶρμαι. As for this last word, I have not noticed any δ precisely similar, while the θ in I. 12 is very like the letter which Mr. Kenyon read as θ. In II. 16: ἴεμα ὑμῖν. II. 19, ἐπέδωκε would give one more letter than δῶκε, but I do not think it is necessary. In II. 27 Prof. Palmer changes ὕμῶν to λυμῶν. But the latter word is superfluous and awkward, and therefore impossible; whereas ὕμῶν is almost indispensable. In favour of the trisyllable we have the Homeric ὕμῶν and ὕμῶν in Sapph. 32 and Alcaeus 96 (but dissyllabic in Alc. 88). Neither the genitive of ἡμῶν nor of ὕμῶν occurs in Archilochus (except ἡμῶν once, in 66, where it is an insertion), Semonides, or Hipponax. On the other hand, Archilochus uses ἀγῶλλος (quadrisyllable), &c., by the side of ἀγῶν, &c. And in Herodas -ω in the genitive of proper names forms one syllable, except in IV. 23.

F. D.

ERRONEOUS DATES IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

London: August 7, 1892.

I think attention ought to be called to an error contained in the inscription on Sir James Mackintosh's monument in Westminster Abbey. For it is there stated that the great lawyer and statesman died in 1831, whereas the actual year is 1832. It is also surely about time that the notorious blunder in the date of birth on the slab which covers Handel's remains in Poet's Corner should at last be set right. The illustrious musician was not born, as the gravestone asserts, in 1684, but in 1685, the same year that Johann Sebastian Bach first saw the light.

ALGERNON ASHTON.

SCIENCE.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

The Etiology and Pathology of Grouse Disease, Fowl Enteritis, and some other Diseases affecting Birds. By E. Klein. (Macmillans.) Scientific inquiry has not advanced with regard to the grouse disease since the late Dr. Spencer Cobbold announced that it was due to a parasite (strongylus pergracilis). But birds have been found dead of grouse disease without this parasite, and some have, on the other hand, been infested by the parasite without dying of grouse disease. Dr. R. Farquharson, however, in 1874, surmised that the disease was of the nature of a contagious fever; and after careful observations on grouse at the moors, as well as from experiments carried on with other birds in the laboratory, Dr. Klein agrees with him. Grouse disease, in short, is "an acute infectious pneumonia." He has detected and cultivated the characteristic microbe of the disease. From the nature of the case it is manifestly far from easy to inoculate wild specimens of grouse, and trace the effects which the microbe speedily causes; but Dr. Klein states confidently that "the lung and liver of grouse affected with disease contain a definite species of bacteria, forming continuous masses or plugs in some of the capillary blood-vessels, but that in the blood of the general circulation they cannot be demonstrated." The remedy is much more important than the diagnosis of the disease, but little is recommended save to destroy as much as possible all suspicious-looking birds. There are also chapters on Fowl Enteritis, and the "cramps" in young pheasants. Dr. Klein writes with abundant knowledge. There are excellent figures of the microbe and its development; and the book, if sufficiently scientific for the library, will not be out of place on the table of the shooting box.

English Botany. No. 91. Supplement to the Third Edition, Part 2. Compiled and Illustrated by N. E. Brown. (Bell.) The new part of this most useful supplement begins with Acer campestre and ends with Rosa arvensis, var. gallicoides. It is overflowing with information on the myriad perplexing forms of Rubus and of Rosa, though, with regard to these genera, Mr. Brown modestly says that he is but adopting the latest views of Prof. Babington or Mr. Baker. It will be good news to all botanical students that Prof. Babington has a new revision of our British Rubi in hand, and in an advanced condition; but, in the meantime, Mr. Brown's arrangement, with its corrected nomenclature, will be indispensable. The greatest addition to our Flora recorded in the present part is Potentilla Norvegica, now well established in Cambridgeshire, Yorkshire, and elsewhere. A full description and an excellent drawing should make it easy for field-botanists to discover this plant in other counties. As Mr. Brown surmises, Cytisus scoparius, var. prostratus, does not seem, even when in the living state and in flower, to differ from the type by any character except its prostrate habit. To his list of stations for it may be added L'Etac, Jersey. As to Genista tinctoria, var. prostrata, the Kynance Cove plants, of which the present writer has seen many, have, so far as his experience goes, the ovary and pod quite glabrous. In Trifolium repens, var. rubescens or Townsendii, we can, like Mr. Brown, find no distinction from the type but that of colour. We have seen all shades, from white to the deepest red, in the Scilly Isles, and in South-West Britain all shades up to a point just short of what one could call rubescens. Good reds are perhaps still commoner in the Channel Islands, though even there we do not get full rubescens. We are inclined to connect red or reddish T. repens, in Great Britain at any rate, with two conditions—hot, dry weather, and soil containing gravel or ironstone.

PROF. BLOOMFIELD'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE INTERPRETATION OF THE VEDA.

PROF. MAURICE BLOOMFIELD, of Johns Hopkins University, has published from time to time in the Journal of the American Oriental Society some learned and ingenious articles entitled, "Contributions to the Interpretation of the Veda." These truly substantial contributions deserve more careful consideration than they have hitherto received, and I propose to examine some of them in order to show their importance both for the interpretation of the Veda and for the study of comparative mythology.

Prof. Bloomfield is anxious to show that the traditions preserved in the Brāhmanas, the Sūtras, and even in later works, are extremely useful for a right and full understanding of a number of obscure verses in the Rig-Veda and the Atharva-veda. We can hardly be surprised that this should be so, though we must remember that there may be two classes of such traditions—those which are posterior to the hymns, and were in fact invented on purpose to account for certain obscure allusions in the hymns, and others which are anterior to the hymns, and are presupposed by them, though they were reduced to their present prose form at a much later time. To the former class belong such legends as that Savitri once cut off his hand at a sacrifice, and that it had to be replaced by an artificial hand made of gold—all this simply in order to explain the very natural expression, "the golden-handed Sun-god."

But there are other legends of a very different character which may become a real help for the interpretation of Vedic hymns. No one would suppose that even these legends, because they are presupposed by the hymns, existed at that early time in exactly that form in which we possess them in the Brāhmanas. No one has yet shaken the old Wolfian principle that poetry is everywhere older than prose; and Prof. Bloomfield would probably be the last person to approve of the impression which some of his essays seem to have produced on the public, namely, that hymns and Brāhmanas belong to the same period of thought and language in India. It is one thing to say (p. 144) that "no Vedic hymns were composed without the environment of legendary reports which we find in the Brāhmanas and Sūtras." No one, so far as I know, has ever doubted this. But Prof. Bloomfield, by calling the form in which these legendary reports occur in the Brāhmanas and Sūtras exaggerated and distended, has himself warned scholars against supposing that the poetical atmosphere of the hymns was contemporaneous with the prose atmosphere of the Brāhmanas and Sūtras. It is true that in some cases his words lend themselves to be misunderstood. Thus, when he says that he cannot believe that even a single Vedic hymn was ever composed without reference to sacrificial application, he does not make it quite clear whether he wishes us to believe that every hymn was originally composed for the sole object of being employed at some kind of regular sacrifice, or whether he thinks that he can prove that every hymn was afterward employed for sacrificial purposes in their widest sense, that every Mantra had, in fact, its vinīyoga—not only those of which the authors of the Sūtras were able to record it, but likewise those of which the old Sūtrakāras were not able to point out any definite vinīyoga. All I can say is that not only are there many hymns of which the old authorities on sacrificial questions know no vinīyoga, but of which even we ourselves should find it extremely difficult to imagine any such ceremonial employment. One might as well imagine that all the Psalms of the Old Testament were meant for the Temple service, because many of them undoubtedly were. We gain nothing by these ready generalisations, and we may lose much by them, if they prevent us from appreciating the gradual development of ancient thought. I have myself often insisted on the importance of the legends collected in the Brāhmanas and Sūtras as throwing light on the traditions which found poetical expression in the hymns. When the Brāhmanas tells us, for instance, that the daughter with whom Pragāpati fell in love was the Dawn—by whatever name it may be called—we have no right to reject such explanations as the inventions of later mythologists. It is absurd to imagine that mythology was studied at that early time as we study mythology, from a purely scientific point of view and with all the help of comparative philology. The idea that the Dawn was followed, was loved, was carried off, was destroyed by the Sun, is expressed again and again in the hymns; and even if we suppose that the poets had forgotten that Ushas, Urvasi, and all the rest were originally names of the Dawn, we can learn from the Brāhmanas that the tradition of those names and of their original meaning was never entirely lost. It is quite true, that in many cases comparative philology gives us a safer key to the secrets of these names than the Brāhmanas do. But a positive statement from the Brāhmanas is a help which those only can afford to despise who imagine that comparative mythology can ever be studied without a knowledge of Vedic Sanskrit.

When I treated of Kerberos, the dog of Hades, and identified that name with the Sanskrit Sarvara (Savala) from which Sarvari, "the night," I was not aware that this explanation could derive support from the Brāhmanas. The passages which Prof. Bloomfield has collected are, therefore, extremely welcome to me. They place the origin of the two dogs of Yama, the ruler of the departed, in the clearest light, and thus elucidate more fully the original character of the one dog of Hades that survives in Greek mythology. In the Kāth.-Sanhitā xvii. 14, we have the distinct statement that the two dogs of Yama were day and night—etau vai yamasvā ahas ka rātri ka. And in K. B. ii. 9, we read, Sabala, "the speckled," is the day; Syāma, "the dark," the night. We must always bear in mind that the divine representatives of any physical phenomena represent these phenomena in a very comprehensive way. Thus, the representative of the sky is often the representative of the sun also, and afterwards of the day, of daylight, of the morning—nay, of light in general as opposed to darkness. Hence it is quite natural that the two dogs of Yama should be representatives not only of day and night, but, likewise, of sun and moon. Thus, while in Greek mythology the representative of the dim twilight survived in Kerberos, in India the dog who represented light and sun assumed greater prominence. Strange as it seems at first that the sun should, in the Veda, be spoken of as the Heavenly Dog, Divyah svā, the passages collected by Prof. Bloomfield leave no doubt on that point. He translates the hymn from the Atharva-Veda vi. 80, quite rightly by:

"He (i.e., the sun) flies through the air, looking down upon all beings; we desire to do homage with this havis to thee (who art) the majesty of the heavenly dog."

or, more literally:

"That which is the majesty of the heavenly dog, under that form we worship thee with this oblation."

And, again, v. 3:

"In the waters is thy origin: in heaven thy abode; in the midst of the sea and upon the earth thy greatness. That which is the majesty of the heavenly dog, under that form we worship thee with this oblation."

Now it is quite true that the idea of worshipping a heavenly dog, or calling the sun a heavenly dog, does not seem to harmonise with the ordinary ideas about the Vedic religion, nor is it quite in harmony with the general character of that religion. To say that other religions also, in America, for instance, worship the sun as a dog, or conceive the supreme deity by that name, does not help us much, unless we can discover why they do so. This is what we can do in the Veda, and generally nowhere else. We have there not only the fact that the sun was called the heavenly dog, and was worshipped as such, but we can get behind these ideas, and understand how they arose. The S. B. xi. 1, 5, 1, tells us distinctly that not only the sun, but the moon also, was called the heavenly dog—Sa (kandramā) haisha divyah svā sa yagamānasya pūṣin avekshate, "He (the moon) is the heavenly dog; he looks down on the cattle of the sacrifice." If, then, sun and moon, day and night, are called the heavenly dogs, the dogs of Yama, the god of death, we see clearly that this thought was naturally suggested by the fact that day and night, or sun and moon, go on for ever, looking out for men, and at last hunting them down, like dogs seeking for prey. That is a natural concept; and in that sense sun and moon were called the dogs of Yama, the heavenly dogs, till after a time each one by himself was called the heavenly dog.

And, after all, there is no reason why the sun should not have been conceived as a dog, for we see how often it has been conceived as a horse. Thus, Shadgurusishya, in his commentary on the Sarvāṅkramanī, says: "Who but the sun is the horse of the wind, the companion of Vāyu, the hermit (muni) urged on his course by the gods, who lives in both seas, the eastern and the western." Here we meet with a new and somewhat startling simile, namely, that of hermit. Most likely this simile was suggested by the solitariness and silence of the sun; but, unless we had been warned beforehand, we should certainly have been puzzled when reading in v. 5, "He flies through the air, looking down upon all forms, he, the muni, the friend, good to benefit every god."

If we once know that the two dogs of Yama were originally sun and moon, day and night, called also, as we saw, Sabala and Syāma, we shall now better understand a well-known passage in the Akhandogya-Upanishad, viii. 13, where the journey of the soul after death is described, and where we read: "From the black (syāma) I come to the spotted (sabala), from the spotted to the black," that is, as Prof. Bloomfield has explained it, "I came from the moon to the sun, from the sun to the moon."

Of course it may be said that the conception of sun and moon, or day and night, as the messengers, or as the dogs of death, is too abstract for primitive people. But is not this conception of primitive people as being averse to such abstract ideas a mere theory? No one has ever defined what he means by primitive people; but, if the Vedic poets are to be called primitive, let us take these primitive poets such as we find them, not such as we imagine that they must have been. The idea that the sun is the cause of death as well as of life is expressed in so many words in the Sat. Br. ii. 3, 3, 7: "The sun who shines is the same as death." Again, in Sat. Br. x. 4, 3, 1, we read: "The year is death, by means of day and night does it destroy life." Or, in still more mythological phraseology, K.R. ii. 9, "Day and night are the two arms of death." This shows how familiar all these ideas were to the so-called primitive humanity of the Veda, and how strongly the dualism of nature is reflected in them. I tried, many years ago, to collect these dualistic conceptions in the ancient Vedic mythology; and I thought that I had proved that the two Asvins, too, were expressions of that dualism which runs through the whole of nature, whether as day and night, or as sun and moon, or as morning and evening, or as spring and winter, or as light and darkness, or as life and death. Why they were called Asvinau, "horsemen," has never been explained; but when we see how dog and horse were used almost as proper names of the sun, we are probably not very far wrong if we interpret horsemen as the riders or representatives of the heavenly horse or the sun. In that case, Nāsatyau, also—another name of the Asvinau, and derived from nas, to return (νῶσ-τος)—would be an appropriate predicate of the ever returning diurnal or nocturnal deities. It is quite true that in the Asvinau, as we find them in the hymns of the Brāhmanas, the traces of their fundamental physical character are not always discernible, being overlaid by later legends. Nor should we have discovered in the dogs of Yama, particularly when they appear as the brood of Saramā (the Dawn), their original character of day and night. The aftergrowth of mythology is very luxuriant, often most enigmatic, and but seldom reducible to physical or rational sources. And here, again, Prof. Bloomfield's warning should be taken to heart by all comparative mythologists:

"It is a prime need," he writes, "of mythological investigation, and one which has certainly been neglected in the past, to draw a sharp line of demarcation between the primary attributes of a mythological personage which furnish the causes of the personification, and the attributes and events which are assigned, or are supposed to happen, after the anthropomorphism has been completed. He who would search for the primary qualities of the Greek Zeus, as expressed—e.g., in the formula sub Jove Frigido—in every action and attribute of the Homeric Zeus, necessarily errs; his error is likely to be as great at some points as is his who would look for naturalistic events and physical phenomena in the actions of the Hellenic gods in a play of Euripides, where the gods are afflicted with all the passions and weaknesses of men."

Nothing can be truer, if only we remember, on the other hand, that below this legendary growth there must always have been, whether visible or not, the deep roots and feeders of physical realities, as conceived in the words of ancient observers. As truly as the most magnificent three-decker presupposes the oak-tree and the small acorn from which it sprang, every myth, however elaborate and artificial, requires for its very existence the simple phraseology in which the great phenomena of nature were first realised and spoken of in the dialects of the various languages of mankind. In the present state of mythological science, we may safely say that all mythology in its origin was physical, whatever it may have become in its later development; nor can it be denied that in certain places the lowest granite breaks sometimes in the most marvellous way through the latest tertiary strata of more modern mythology.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ETHNOLOGY IN FOLKLORE.

Settling in Rectory, York August 8, 1892.

It is only fair to Mr. Gomme to acknowledge that, if his premises be admitted, his conclusions are not impossible. His fundamental assumption is stated on p. 14, where he asserts that "there was a definite advance in culture by the Aryan race before its dispersal from the primitive home." But the existence of this "Aryan race," and of its "primitive home," and the fact of a "dispersal" are the very things that have to be established. We no longer believe, as was asserted thirty years ago, that a small Aryan clan dwelling somewhere in Central Asia, sent off successive swarms to Europe. Instead of an "Aryan race," it is now held that there were several unrelated European races, which, in some unknown way acquired Aryan speech, just as Belgians, French, Spaniards, Portuguese, Aztecs, Guaranis, and negroes have come to speak neo-Latin languages. This does not make them into a "Latin race." Aryan can, therefore, only be used correctly as a linguistic, and not as an ethnic term. It is useless to talk about Aryans unless you know who they are. That this hypothetical "Aryan race," before leaving its hypothetical "primitive home," should have made "a definite advance in culture," which excluded witchcraft, sorcery, demonology, nature worship, human sacrifice, megalithic structure, querns, and the exposure of heads on poles, is a pure assumption, without evidence, or rather contrary to such evidence as we possess.

Mr. Gomme objects to my methods of criticism; but when a book is based on assumptions that cannot be proved, the easiest way of testing those assumptions is by seeing whether they lead to impossible or absurd conclusions.

My review was not meant to be "hostile" to Mr. Gomme, for whose very useful labours, when he leaves ethnology alone, I have a sincere respect.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

OLD PRUSSIAN "ASSWENE."

Indian Institute, Oxford: Aug. 9, 1892.

Mr. Mayhew objects to my disregarding Nesselmann's conjecture with regard to the meaning of the above river name. Nesselmann says:—"Der Name (Asswene) steht wohl in demselben Verhältniss zu Aswinan (Pferdemilch) wie der Name des Dudel (Name eines sees bei Bischofsburg) zu dadan (Milch)." Now Asswene cannot possibly be derived from aswinan, any more than "maritime" can be derived from "marine." Aswinan and asswene as collateral derivatives would imply each of them a separate and distinct idea, just as, e.g., Lith. vakarene means "supper" and vakarinis "evening star," from a base vakaras "evening." The base asw- may mean "horse or mare" in the case of aswinan; but we are not, therefore, bound to suppose that it means the same in the case of asswene.

E. SIBREE.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

A PRELIMINARY prospectus has been issued of the International Congress of Orientalists that will be held in London from September 5 to 12, under the presidency of Prof. Max Müller. The following are the titles of some of the papers promised:—"Jaina Sculptures from Mathura," by Prof. G. Buhler; "Coins of the White Huns," by Sir A. Cunningham; "A Buddhist Account of the Three Religions of China," by Prof. Legge; "Jain and Sanskrit Etymology in the light of Pali," by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris; "Eastern Numismatics," by Mr. E. J. Rapson; "Administrative Aspects of Anthropology," by Mr. H. H. Risley; "The Progress of Armenian Studies," by Dr. Schrupf; "The Gupta Coius," by Mr. Vincent A. Smith. We understand that Mr. C. H. Tawney will attend the congress as a delegate from the Asiatic Society of Bengal. During the meeting of the congress, Messrs. Luzac & Co. will have on view, in Great Russell-street, an exhibition of all oriental works that have been published in England since the Stockholm congress of 1889.

MR. C. J. LYALL, the Arabic scholar, has accepted the vice-presidency of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, vacant by the death of Dr. Rajendralala Mitra. Mr. Lyall has recently edited, in the Arabic series of the "Bibliotheca Indica," the Commentary of Abu Zakhariya Jahiya at-Tibrizi on ten pre-islamic poems. It is by the same hand as the Commentary on the Hamasah, published by Dr. G. W. Freytag. The text is based upon an excellent MS. at Cambridge, collated with others in the British Museum and at Leiden.

DR. A. F. R. HOERNLE has resigned the post of philological secretary to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, though he will continue his valuable reports on coins that fall to the government under the law of treasure trove. Dr. Hoernle is now devoting himself entirely to the publication of what is known as the Bower MS., of which he has issued instalments in the Journal of the Asiatic Society and in the Indian Antiquary. Agreeing with Prof. G. Bühler, he now believes that no part of the MS. can probably be dated later than the first half of the fifth century A.D. The government of India has undertaken to defray all the expenses connected with the publication, including photographic facsimiles of every page of the MS.; while the provincial government of Bengal has relieved Dr. Hoernle of his duties as principal of the Calcutta Madrasa, during the whole time that may be necessary for the completion of the work.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal recently deputed Mahes Chandra Nyayaratna, principal of the Sanskrit College at Calcutta, to report on the *tol*s of Nadiya, in which for centuries Sanskrit has been taught by pandits of repute to successive generations of Brahman pupils. During the last sixty years, an allowance has been made by the Government for the support of the pupils, now amounting to £200 a year; but it appears that these indigenous Sanskrit schools are steadily declining, both in quantity and quality.

"The old custom of bringing up sons to pursue the calling of their fathers is losing its hold upon the country. Families of pandits in Bengal have all been tending to assimilate themselves to the other Brahman families of the province—i.e., to adopt secular callings that hold out prospects of pecuniary gain. Non-pandit families hardly ever think of training up any juvenile member at a tol for the career of a pandit. Our *tol*s are thus being threatened with a stoppage of supply of boys. The average intellectual capacity of the present generation of tol students is lower than that of the past generation, as unquestionably as the number is lower; and this deterioration in quality and decrease in number, judging from present circumstances, tend to be progressive. To arrest this decline, very liberal help from individuals and from the State would be needed."

We should add that the principal himself is a member of the Brahman clan of Mahāmahopādhyāya, to which many of the most learned pandits of former days belonged.

NOT the least interesting feature in the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.) is the occasional department headed "Progress of European Scholarship." The Index number for last year, which has just reached us, includes a summary, by M. Sergius d'Oldenburg, of the contents of the Journal of the Eastern Section of the Russian Archaeological Society, whose labours, we venture to say, are otherwise hardly known in England. Among the more important papers analysed are: (1) Those dealing with the Uigur inscriptions of the eighth century, written in an alphabet derived from the Nestorian, and adopted by the Mongols 500 years later; (2) a translation of an inscription, in Manju and Mongol, relating to the conquest of Korea by the Manjurs, which can be dated in 1624; (3) an account of an inedited MS. of the Arabian Nights, in the library of Baron Gunzburg, which comprises the tale of Aladdin's Lamp, hitherto known only from Dr. Zotenberg's edition; (4) a description, by M. N. J. Marr, of a summer journey to Armenia, undertaken with the object of collecting MS. materials for a work on the fables ascribed to Vardan. Incidentally we are told of a MS. of the thirteenth century, containing a statement that at that time there was no Armenian alphabet.

FINE ART.

THREE BOOKS ON MICHELANGELO.

Michel-Ange. Par Emile Ollivier. (Paris: Garnier Frères.)

Michelangelo: eine Renaissancestudie. Von Ludwig von Scheffler. (Altenberg: Geibel.)

Michel-Ange, Poète. Par Gabriel Thomas. (Paris: Berger-Levrault.)

(First Notice.)

"Pour faire l'histoire d'une religion," says M. Renan in one of his enchanting moods of common-sense, "il faut ne plus y croire, mais il faut y avoir cru." Two of these three studies are shining examples of how far that little paradox will stretch. It is to be hoped that Mr. Addington Symonds, in due season, will strike the mean; for, in truth, the real Michelangelo is still to seek. MM. Ollivier and von Scheffler claim to have discovered and laid him bare: one presents us with a reactionary Catholic, the other with a Neo-Platonist. M. Gabriel Thomas, who is last in the field and makes more modest pretensions, takes Platonism for granted, and devotes himself to a sympathetic (if not very searching) little essay upon the Platonic tradition—as he deems it—in Italian erotic poetry, from Dante's time to that of the great sculptor who in many respects reflected him. Thus bluntly stated there is nothing very surprising in any of these views: in fact, M. Ollivier's is curiously old-fashioned in the way it leaves the Renaissance out of account; but Herr von Scheffler, in reality, goes further than any previous critic. Some of his conclusions may require modification, and there may be tendencies and influences for which he has not sufficiently allowed; his book is none the less scholarly and suggestive—a genuine contribution to the study of the Sonnets. In his view Michelangelo was more than a theoretical Platonist: he did not accept the myths and allegories of the Phaedrus and Symposium merely as approximations of metaphysical truths; he reduced them to practice; he himself was, in turn, Agathon, Phaedrus, Pausanias; or, again, he was the Platonic Socrates with his Alcibiades and his Diotima—in other words, his Tommaso Cavalieri and his Vittoria Colonna.

"Dass Individuelle in diesem Platonismus⁸ Michelangelo's . . . ist nur zu verstehen, wenn man sich eben immer wieder vergegenwärtigt, dass hier nicht nur eine Congenialität der Ideen, sondern ein durchgängiger Parallelismus auch der Lebens- und Liebeszustände vorliegt" (p. 95).

That is Herr von Scheffler's key to the position; but there is more. The sonnets and madrigals echo the life; they are Platonic, naturally. What of the Medici tombs, of the Sistine chapel, the Doni Madonna? Platonist all, says Herr von Scheffler. "Michelangelo ist Christ und Heide, Italiener und Hellene" (p. 222); but the dominant note, which alone could bind together such discordant strains in him, is Platonism. He sees in the Florentine artist the Greek faculty (pre-eminently Plato's) of personifying abstractions, of lodging them, so to speak, in concrete objects. He believes that Tommaso de' Cavalieri, Vittoria Colonna, Luigi del Riccio, and any others to whose persons the poems were directed, were so many real incarnations of the Idea of Beauty, and that the poet felt himself possessed by the daemonic offspring of Penia and Poros, Eros the ever hungry and ever bountiful, in whom, as Socrates says, "that which is always flowing in is always flowing out." That beauty which moved his soul to soar on the wings it had nourished lay indifferently in man and woman; it lurked, as he was fond of saying, in his blocks of marble, in the very crags of Carrara. It lurked in himself; and the époumenos alone could be the true sculptor to hew it out of him and give it free and living expression. This abiding Eros (playing in and upon many fair and transient things) is, Herr von Scheffler suggests, the clue to Michelangelo's life, poetry, and art. I do not say he is always convincing. I think he puts down to Plato's score much that was instinctive and, as it were, conventional in the poet's lines. Perhaps every artist, assuredly every lover, is a Platonist by temperament. It is certain that Dante, for instance, knew nothing of Plato at first hand; he had only what he could glean from Cicero and Boethius. By education, too, he belonged to the positive school, whose mainstay was the Aristotle of Albert and the Paris University. And yet is not the Vita Nuova a Platonic piece? Are not his sympathies in the Paradiso with the Areopagite and St. Bonaventura rather than with St. Thomas? So with Michelangelo, it does seem that Herr von Scheffler leaves out of the reckoning the chivalric Amor of the Trobadors—Dante's "lord of terrible aspect"—and considers, whenever he finds a sonnet addressed to a "Signior," that it necessarily refers to a Tommaso Cavalieri, or some other beautiful youth in whom—like Sidney, Shakspeare, and, later, Winckelmann—the poet found his ideal reflected and embodied. Here Herr von Scheffler does not keep sufficiently in sight the fact that, between the Athens of Pericles and Plato and the Rome of Leo X. and Benvenuto Cellini, Christianity had intervened—Christianity and the feudal cultus of woman. But still it is only right to say that his chapter on Vittoria Colonna is one of the best in the book. He makes proper allowance there for the sobering and refining influence her hardly disguised attempts to "convert" him had upon his life; he shows us how she raised him from beauty to wisdom, from wisdom to the contemplation of "the good," and how she, in this way, made him—in Plato's phrase—"a spectator of all time and all existence." She was, in truth, the Diotima of this Tuscan Socrates. She fostered in him that instinct towards ἀσκησις which all Platonists have known, a stern schooling of his soul to a life that could be lived apart from body and earthly passion. He seems to have "loved" her, in ordinary parlance, hardly at all. Throughout their intercourse he was writing in strains of exalted affection to Cavalieri and to Riccio; often he employed the former as an intermediary to carry her his little presents, sonnets, letters, sketches for a crucifix. From all which Herr von Scheffler concludes, and rightly to my mind, that his attitude towards her was mainly intellectual—an affection of the soul. Perhaps it is going too far to say:—"Er ist ausnahmsweise der Empfangende, der weibliche 'Freund' der Gebende"; but there is no denying, on the evidence, this strange circumstance that, where the Marchesa was his friend, Cavalieri was his ἐρώμενος. It is the difference between ἀγάπη and ἔρως, says Herr von Scheffler.

Then we come to painting. In his eleventh chapter Herr von Scheffler considers the decoration of the Sistine by the light of the Sonnets. It would certainly have been better to have viewed them as the painting of a sculptor rather than of a rhyming philosopher; but in spite of that he gets much closer to the vraie vérité than M. Ollivier. It is here, above all, that one feels the bite of Renan's maxim: Put aside your convictions before a work of art: trust to your instincts, verify and then justify them. That is the whole duty of a critic. For what is the thought binding these amazing tiers of figures together? Is it the "earnest expectation of the creature" awaiting the predicted Messiah? Or is it an allegory of life, struggling from birth to birth, alternately buoyed, swayed, or held in check by those mysterious symbolic assurances of prophets, sibyls and dark oracles which, the Neo-Platonists said, lay shrouded in every simple object or event? In a word, has Moses prompted the painter, or Plato? Herr von Scheffler expounds the entire scheme as a representation of the powers of "divine madness," elaborated in the Phaedrus of Plato. It is the painful and age-long effort of man to recover his inheritance. The culminating row, beginning with the "Creation," reveals the "artistic-poetic mania," the possession by the Muses "which enters into delicate and virgin souls, and there inspiring frenzy awakens lyrical and other numbers." The "Prophets and Sibyls" point to the prophetic mania—μαντική; the so-called "Genealogy of the Virgin" shows mankind waiting still upon God, working out in grief and labour its own deliverance; and the part played in that deliverance "from an ancient wrath" by "holy prayers and rites and inspired utterances" is symbolised by the scenes of "Judith," "Esther," "David," and the "Brazen Serpent." Lastly, the lunettes of certi ignudi (the "Athletes") on the cornice depict, in our author's opinion, those possessed by the love-frenzy. They are, indeed, patterns and types of Love himself—Canones as he aptly says; exquisite figures, appearing also in the Doni Madonna of the Uffizi and in our half-finished picture in the National Gallery, where the artist has achieved what was for him the standard of physical beauty—the incarnation of the concept of the Beautiful itself. Appropriately enough Herr von Scheffler closes his case with Berni's lines:

"Ho visto qualche sua composizione;
Sono ignorante, e pur d'lei d'havello
Lette tutto nel mezzo di Platone."

And while we are considering whether Michelangelo had indeed set himself the task of philosophising in tempera, or whether it may not have been his lot, as it has been Plato's, to suggest more to his commentators than he ever imagined himself, comes M. Ollivier and gives another reading—the theological. In a very lengthy chapter, fortified with rather laboured eloquence and frequent citations from the Old Testament, St. Augustine, Dante and Milton, he expounds the orthodox, exoteric view of the series. The Phaedrus and the Renaissance drop out of sight; we are in the fourteenth century with Orcagna, Simone Memmi, and the Lorenzetti brothers. As for the "Genealogy" groups, he appears to connect them with the Seven Deadly Sins; the nude youths he does not mention at all. Who shall decide between these disparate doctrines? Moses or Plato? Of course, there is just half a truth with each. That dressing up of the Hebrew Scriptures in a Greek garb had been a solemn mission to Ficino and Pico and Matteo Palmieri: its performance was still in the range of possible things. To fit together into an irresistible whole all shades of thought and creed, or to discern the underlying purpose in Judaism, Christianity, and Paganism was the dream of all the finer spirits of Italy, as it has been of all ages and races standing, as they did, at the parting of two ways. Michelangelo was no scholar: he knew neither Latin nor Greek: such knowledge of Plato as he had had floated to him in snatches of conversation heard at Carreggi, from Politian's odes and Lorenzo's lyrics. He was no sounder as a theologian. But he lived in a time when the old dogmas of the Church were still the given subjects of art, and still received a shrugging acceptance, while newer and wilder theories—tending surely to the Pantheism of Bruno and Campanella—were pressing their vague fascinations on all hands. The problem before him, therefore, was rather how to satisfy at once the requirements of custom and the intuitions of an artist, than how to work out on canvas deep-seated religious convictions. This, and one other point, Herr von Scheffler seems to have missed. He does not recognise sufficiently that Michelangelo outlived the Renaissance, that even when he began his work in the Sistine its bloom had gone. Greece had once "risen from the dead with the New Testament in her hand," and the earnestness and naive sincerity which gives such an inextinguishable charm to Lippi and Botticelli betrayed the first flush of that great re-incarnation. The curiosity, too, and bright audacity of Leonardo belong really to the earlier generation. The enthusiasms of one age are the commonplace of the next. All these things were impossible to the man who had lived through the sack of Rome, the enslavement of Florence, and had seen the Reformation begin. Michelangelo felt as these pioneers had felt—all religions were true, all truth was beautiful, all beauty divine. But the spring, the ecstasy of discovery was gone. In brief intervals of transport he felt that indeed he lived—

"Wingless upon your pinions forth I fly.
Heavenward your spirit stirreth me to strain.
E'en as you will, I blush and blanch again,
Freeze in the sun, burn 'neath a frosty sky."

But nearly always there is bitterness for an afterthought;

"... Hersoul that fashioned mine hath sought the skies,
Wherefore unfinished I must meet my end,
If God, the great artificer, denies
That aid which was unique on earth before."

There is an echo of the Cratylus in this sonnet, as of the Symposium in the preceding, as of the Phaedrus in the Sistine, as perchance, of some instinctive nature-worship in the Madonna of the Uffizi. But in the main these felicitous moments of his show him neither christian nor pagan, neither philosopher nor theologian, but an artist to whom these schools and habits of mind have a positive aesthetic value, a broad, general appeal to the imagination, independent of moral and spiritual considerations. When, therefore, he was commissioned to treat of the stock subjects of "Creation" and the symbolical events of Old Testament story, while he clung in the main to the traditional lines of Orcagna, della Quercia and Masaccio, he coloured them with his own peculiar temperament, modified but not directed by the spirit of the age. So the last word is with Herr von Scheffler after all: "An stelle des Papstes tritt in der Sistine-composition des Kunstler's Ego."

MAURICE HEWLETT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: August 9, 1892.

On the essential question of the date of the vases of Mykenæan style, the absence of a single fresh datum in the recent letters appears to show that your readers may rely on the following propositions.

(a) That all the data yet found with the widely spread examples in Greece and Egypt show a period of between 1450 and 1100 B.C., the limits, which I have assigned in Illahun and adhered to since.

(b) That nearly all of these data are of names before 1300 B.C., and in those which are later the style of vase is distinctly different from the earlier.

(c) That the only hypothesis which could date these vases later than these limits needs the assumption that in every case the vases are

* My citations are from Mr. J. A. Symonds's beautiful and close versions of the originals as printed by Gussati.

associated with the names of long anterior kings to the exclusion of any contemporary datum.

Turning now briefly to the minor details:

1. I have already pointed out that I recognised the conclusions on the Kahun pottery to be debatable, although I fully adhere to those conclusions being the fair result of the evidence. I am not, therefore, going to be saddled with an absolute position which I have never adopted.

2. I stated that both of the theories about the Mediterranean peoples agreed in identifying the Akauasha and Akhaians; this is the fact. And I am not, therefore, going to be saddled with a statement that all Egyptologists agreed on the point. No doubt some differ, but only by negation. In any case this only affects historical views, and not the archaeological results.

3. As to the Maket tomb I have said all that need be said. We can only go by the period of the latest dateable objects in any deposit.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. LEONARD BORWICK, the pianist, and Mr. Francis James, the water-colour painter, are about to leave England for the North of Italy, and are expected to make some considerable stay in Venice.

To the new museum of the Brassey Institute at Hastings, which will be formally opened on Tuesday next, Mr. Felix Joseph—in continuation of similar donations to other provincial museums—has presented thirty-seven water-colour drawings by Thomas Stothard and Clarkson Stanfield, together with a number of pieces of old Chelsea, Derby, Worcester, and other ware.

THE pictures chosen by this year's prize-winners in the Art Union of London have been on view during the past week in the rooms of the society, 112 Strand. The first prize is Mr. C. Stuart's "Sunshine and Rain," from the Royal Academy. The engraving for distribution is a mezzotint of Sir J. E. Millais's "Souvenir of Velasquez," which has been previously reproduced in line by the late Lumb Stocks.

WE ought earlier to have taken an opportunity of commending the cyclorama of "Ancient Egypt" at Niagara Hall, Westminster, which is made intelligible to the least instructed by a scholarly guide, written by Mr. T. Hunter Boyd. This exhibition should contribute—as we believe is the object of its organiser—to increasing the popular interest in Egyptology.

THE following is the text of the imprecation on the tabella devotionis from Hadrumetum, mentioned in the ACADEMY of July 16, (p. 56):—

"Adjuro te, demon, quicumque es, et demando tibi ex anc ora, ex ac die, ex oc momento, ut equos prasini et albi crucies, ocidas, et agitatore[s] clarum et Felicem et Primulum et Romanum ocidas, collidaneave spiritum illis lerinavas."

"Adjuro te, per eum qui te resolvit temporibus deum pelagicum aerium fao, Iasdao, Oorio, Acia."

At a later meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Bréal suggested certain corrections in this text: "collidas nervos" for "collidaneave," and "extinguas" for "lerinavas."

DR. L. A. WADDELL contributes an interesting paper to the first number of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1892 (Kegan Paul & Co.), in which he claims to have identified an ancient Buddhist site.

This is "the small solitary mountain with a double peak," on which (according to Hiuen Tsiang) Buddha spent the rainy season of the sixteenth year of his ministry, after having subdued the demon Po-khu-lo. Hiuen Tsiang goes on to mention the marks of Buddha's feet, a sitting figure of Buddha in stone, a stupa, and many other details. Sir A. Cunningham had identified this site with the Mahadeva peak in the Kharakpur Hill; but Dr. Waddell, after visiting both spots, is able to show that all the details are satisfied only by Mount Uren in the district of Monghyr. Besides the geographical position and physical conformation, here are to be seen to this day the footprint and other rock-markings, brick ruins of a stupa, numerous votive statues and chaityas, and thousands of names carved on the rock, indicating a place of Buddhist pilgrimage. The tradition of the demon still survives, under the name of Bakura, which is the exact equivalent of the Chinese Po-khu-lo. Unfortunately, the site has been already discovered by the engineers of the East Indian Railway, who are busily engaged in blasting away the rock-sculptures, &c., for ballast for the permanent way. Dr. Waddell's paper is illustrated with four plates, showing a plan of the hill, and some of the more important sculptures and inscriptions.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Fugue. By Ebenezer Prout. (Augener.)

THE theorist André once declared that Bach was not a good model for Fugue, because he allowed himself too many exceptions. Mr. Prout, however, proposes to bring Bach within the pale of orthodoxy by turning those many exceptions into rules. He remarks, very truly, that Cherubini and Albrechtsberger followed the great theorists Fux and Marpurg, taking "little or no account of the reformation, amounting almost to a reconstruction, of the Fugue at the hands of J. S. Bach."

Our author finds in Bach many subjects answered in the key of the sub-dominant, yet the possibility of such an answer "has not, so far as we know, been touched upon in any existing treatise." (Marpurg, it may be mentioned, notes a subject of Bach's with its answer in the sub-dominant.) Mr. Prout carefully analyses these Bach examples, and deduces rules enabling the student to decide when such an answer is permissible. In referring to one, he tells us that the answer is given thus, "in order to carry out the important principle that dominant harmony should be answered by tonic." It would perhaps have been better to say that, by such an answer the principle is carried out. At the time of writing, Bach was probably more occupied in taking care that the figure or figures of his subject should not be spoiled (as would have been the case had he adopted the usual answer at the fifth), than in doing something "in order to" carry out a principle. Mr. Prout's remarks on answers in the sub-dominant are full of interest, and his illustrations are not confined to Bach, but include Handel, Beethoven, and Schumann. Again, the rule that tonic must be answered by dominant, and vice versa, is, says our author, "a good rule enough, if it were only observed." But he finds Bach and Handel "driving a coach and four through it" continually, and hence proposes that it should be considerably modified. Nothing could be more reasonable. In some of the illustrations, however—as, for instance, in the one from Mendelssohn's "Christus" and the one from Verdi's "Requiem"—a special reason (similar to the one given by Mr. Prout for real answer in Bach's Wohl. Clavier Fugue in E Minor, Bk. 1) can be assigned for the non-observance of the rule, whereas, in others, quoted by Mr. Prout, it seems to some extent a matter of caprice.

The two chapters on "Answer" display great research, and the desire shown throughout to distinguish between liberty and lawlessness is most praiseworthy. In the chapter on "Countersubject," the first countersubject in Bach's Fugue in B, from the second book of the Wohl. Clavier, is spoken of as being "heard no more" after the exposition. There is certainly no formal repetition of it afterwards, yet it lingers in spirit until the closing bar of the Fugue. The chapter on "Episode" is interesting, but the author could have written half a dozen such chapters without exhausting his subject.

Is Stretto an essential part of a Fugue? Cherubini declares that it is; and yet, as Mr. Prout reminds us, out of the forty-eight Fugues in the Wohl. Clavier, more than half have no Stretto at all. But in his capacity of theorist and instructor, Cherubini looked at the matter otherwise than Bach, who, according to his own showing, wrote at any rate the first half of his forty-eight Fugues "especially as a pastime."

In dealing with the middle and final sections of a Fugue, Mr. Prout describes a Fugue as in "ternary" or three-part form, for which idea he acknowledges his obligations to Dr. H. Riemann. True it is that a Fugue has three sections; but it would seem more legitimate to compare it with a movement in Sonata or so-called "binary form," which also has three sections—for in both the middle section is occupied with the development of subject-matter, whereas in ternary form proper the middle section introduces new material. The term "binary," applied to a movement in Sonata form is, indeed, a misnomer; the beginning of the second half of the old binary movement of the Suite, in the course of evolution, having itself grown into what is now called the "development section." To speak of a movement with three clearly-defined sections as in "binary" form recalls Talleyrand's satirical description of the aim of language.

Mozart, when writing his "Musical Joke," a burlesque on unskilful composers, could scarcely have imagined that one day it would serve as an illustration in a treatise on Fugue. Mr. Prout uses it as a text to bring home the necessity of continuity in fugal writing; thus the joke of the master serves a serious purpose.

The treatise before us contains so much valuable matter that it is impossible in a brief notice to do justice to it. We have ventured to differ from the author in the selection of a term, and have found his attacks on the old theorists somewhat severe; but these and other minor matters do not affect the general substance of the book, and we have no hesitation in describing it as one of the most valuable, and certainly one of the most practical works on Fugue ever written.

In his preface Mr. Prout gives us some idea of the extent of his labours in preparing this volume. Besides consulting all the standard authorities, and studying "every fugue, vocal and instrumental, to be found in the forty volumes of Bach's works published by the Bach Gesellschaft," he has also examined "at least a thousand fugues" by Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, and other composers. He has written on a dry subject without showing dryness, and in every line one can see that his labour was to him a labour of love. Many musicians have felt that, in the matter of fugue, Bach ought to be the final authority; Mr. Prout is the first to accept him as such.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

WARNE'S ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.—NEW VOLUME.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

HIS LIFE'S MAGNET.

By THEODORA C. EMSLIE,

Author of "A Queen of Roses," "The Little Lady of Lavender," &c.

This new Novel by the Author of "A Queen of Roses" has a well-sustained plot, the characters are true to life, and it is written in a natural and telling style.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

First Edition (large) exhausted in a few days, price 4s.

INTO THE UNKNOWN :

A Romance of South Africa.

BY

LAWRENCE FLETCHER.

"The book will hold the Rider Haggard class of readers in entrancement."—Liverpool Mercury.

"The tale is not ill-written at all, and has that air of verisimilitude without which the most daringly conceived romance is as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.....'Tis a capital book."—National Observer.

"'Into the Unknown' is a rattling good story of adventure, which we cordially recommend to all our readers."—British Sport.

CASSELL & Co., Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

THE ARENA.

AUGUST, 1892. 2s. 6d.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS on the LECTURE PLATFORM. MARY A. DIVESMORE.

BACON versus SHAKESPEARE.—H. EDWIN REED.
AN IDEALISTIC DREAMER. R. O. FLOWER.
UNPUBLISHED LETTER from E. B. BROWNING. L. C. MOLLTON.
THE PENDING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN—
Republican—GAIL HAMILTON.
S. Democrat—Hon. Wm. T. BELL, M.C.
N. Democrat—Hon. Geo. FRED. WILLIAMS, M.C.
People's Party—U.S. Senator J. H. KALE.

AN IRRESPONSIBLE EDUCATED CLASS. H. H. GARDNER.
THE COMING BROTHERHOOD. FRANCES E. WILLARD.
DRESS REFORM IN AMERICA. FRANCES E. RUSSELL.
THE CHAIN OF THE LAST SLAVE. SUSAN E. WALLACE.
A WOMAN'S CAUSE. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.
WOMEN'S CLUBS: A Symposium. By ELEVEN LEADING AMERICAN WOMEN.
BRENTANO'S, 5, Agar Street, Strand, W.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAMEPIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, sent free on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

TRISCHLER & CO'S next publication ready about 20th inst.

BY A NEW NOVELIST.

The FASCINATING MISS LAMARCHE.

By C. C. FERNIVAL. A Romance up to Date of the Turf, the Drama, and Society.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Will be obtainable at all Libraries and Bookstalls.

TRISCHLER & Co., 18, New Bridge Street, London, E.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Lionel Rignold, Charles Dalton, W. A. Elliott, G. W. Cockburn, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote, Mrs. Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jecks, &c.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Mr. W. S. Penley, Mr. W. F. Hawtrej, Mr. Robt Harwood, Mr. Sam Botham, Mr. Cecil Thornbury, Mr. W. Aysom, Mr. G. Tomkins; Miss Nina Boucicault, Miss Violet Armbruster, Miss C. Ewell, Miss Alice Yorke, Miss Caroline Elton. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NEW SUB. At 9.10, FAITHFUL JAMES. And at 9.50, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, W. Drycott, C. P. Little, S. Warden, Vaughan, Bertram, and Weedon Grosmith; Misses G. Kingston, Edith Briant, Sybil Grey, Bertride, Palfrey, and Ellaline Terriss.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.55, HASTE TO THE WEDDING. Messrs. Lionel Brough, Frank Wyatt, Wm. Blakeley, S. Valentine, D. S. James, W. Dale, F. Atherley, Geo. Grosmith, jun., P. Brough; Misses E. Jeffries, M. Studholme, S. Carlisle, H. Crofton, D. Ford. Preceded, at 8.15, by POOR MIGNONETTE.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, George Edwardes.

THIS EVENING, at 8, FAUST UP TO DATE. Mesdames Florence St. John, Amy Augarde, Ada Dorie, Kitty Loftus, Gissy Fitzgerald; Messrs. Edmund Payne, George Honey, C. H. Barry, and Arthur Williams.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, T. W. Foreyall, Harcourt Beatty, Henry de Solia, W. Bruntton, jun., H. Gray Dalby, B. Whitcomb, H. Ludlow, Alker, Hennessey, Sauter; Mesdames Lesley Bell, M. Watson, F. Wyatt, L. Wyatt, Maude St. John, Ormesby, Herrick, Patrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, NIROE (ALL SMILES). Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George Hawtrej, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Ellison, Venie Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Esmond, I. Goldsmith, and C. Zerhini. At 8, NO CREDIT. Misses Esmond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtrej, &c.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Messrs. E. W. Garden, C. M. Lowe, Seymour Hicks, Cecil Ramsey, and G. Shelton; Misses Liston, Vanbrugh, Ansell, Rachel, and Mary Brough. At 8, DAISY'S ESCAPE. Messrs. Billington, Shelton, Lowe, Arlton, and Coventry; Misses Conynhame and Brough.

THE

LINO TYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

*Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.*

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

EACH IN ONE VOLUME.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

DONOVAN.

A MODERN ENGLISHMAN.

WE TWO.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DONOVAN."

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.

BY EDNA LYALL.

KNIGHT-ERRANT.

BY EDNA LYALL.

WON BY WAITING.

BY EDNA LYALL.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

BY EDNA LYALL.

HURST & BLACKETT'S 3s. 6d. SERIES.

Crown 8vo, uniformly bound, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

THE IDES OF MARCH.

BY G. M. ROBINS.

THE AWAKENING OF MARY FENWICK.

BY BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS.

BY MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE.

BY M. E. LE CLERC.

A MARCH IN THE RANKS.

BY JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

NINETTE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VERA," "BLUE ROSES," &c.

A CROOKED PATH.

BY MRS. ALEXANDER.

ONE REASON WHY.

BY BEATRICE WHITBY.

MAHME NOUSIE.

BY G. MANVILLE FENN.

Each Work Complete in 1 vol., price 5s., Illustrated by Sir J. E. MILLAIS, Sir JOHN GILBERT, HOLMAN HUNT, JOHN LEECH, BIRKET FOSTER, LASLETT POTT, JOHN TENNIEL, E. J. POYNTER, F. SANDYS, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

Of Cheap Editions of Popular Modern Works.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX."

John Halifax, Gentleman.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women.
A Life for a Life.
Nothing New.
The Woman's Kingdom.
Mistress and Maid.

Christian's Mistake.
A Noble Life.
Hannah.
The Unkind Word.
A Brave Lady.
Studies from Life.
Young Mrs. Jardine.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAM SLICK."

Nature and Human Nature.
Wise Saws and Modern Instances.
The Old Judge; or, Life in a Colony.
Traits of American Humour.
The Americans at Home.

BY ELIOT WarBURTON.

The Crescent and the Cross. | Darien.

BY F. W. ROBINSON.

Grandmother's Money. | No Church.

BY JULIA KAVANAGH.

Nathalie. | Adele.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Barbara's History. | Lord Brackenbury.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

Adam Graeme.
Laird of Norlaw.
Agnes.
Life of Irving.

A Rose in June.
Phoebe, Junior.
It was a Lover and his Lass.

BY DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

David Elginbrod.
Robert Falconer.

Alec Forbes.
Sir Gibbie.

BY JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON.

The Real Lord Byron. | A Book about Doctors.

BY VARIOUS AUTHORS.

Through the Long Night. By Mrs. E. LYNN LINTON.
Margaret and her Bridesmaids.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.
St. Olave's. By the Author of "Janita's Cross."
My Little Lady. By E. F. POYNTER.
Les Misérables. By VICTOR HUGO.
Annals of an Eventful Life. By Dr. DANENT.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Prof. C. D. YONGE.
Sir Bernard Burke's Family Romance.
Freer's Life of Jeanne D'Albret.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.
Dixon's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.
The Englishwoman in Italy. By Mrs. GRETTON.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1059.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1892.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
AN ENGLISHMAN IN PARIS, by F. HAWKINS . . .	113
PIERRE'S BABY'S GROUND OF NORTHERN CANADA, by Dr. R. BROWN . . .	116
SKIPSEY'S SONGS AND LYRICS, by WALTER LEWIN . . .	117
KNOWLING'S THE WITNESS OF THE EPISTLES, by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND . . .	147
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINT-RUBY . . .	148
SOME CLASSICAL TRANSLATIONS . . .	150
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	150
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES . . .	151
ORIGINAL VERSE: "AYENORD," by ARTHUR L. SALMON . . .	151
IN MEMORIAM: SIR DANIEL WILSON, by W. J. A. . .	151
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	152
CORRESPONDENCE— Aristotle as an Historian, III., by the Rev. Sir G. W. Cox; Notes on Herodes, by F. D. . . .	152
SOME BOOKS IN PHILOSOPHY, by A. W. BENN . . .	153
THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION GRANTS . . .	154
CORRESPONDENCE— The Language of Arzawa, by Prof. Sayce; "Ethnology in Folklore," by Laurence Gomme; Race and Speech in Belgium, by Dr. Karl Blind . . .	151
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .	156
THREE BOOKS ON MICHELANGELO, II., by MAURICE HEWLETT . . .	156
CORRESPONDENCE— Aegean Pottery in Egypt, by Cecil Torr . . .	157
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	158
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHELDON . . .	158

LESSONS.—English, Practical Mathematics, Military Topography, Geometrical Drawing, Hindustani, Sanskrit.—Mr. Wilson, 2, Gertrude Street, Fulham Road, S.W.
Accountancy, Proof-reading, &c., done.

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

The COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND.
WORK of every description.—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—
undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED.
VERBATIM, in moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S
Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 22, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Now ready, in 1 vol.

OMARAI'S HISTORY of YAMAN.
The Original Texts, with Translation and Notes by H. C. KAY.
M.R.A.S. With Sketch Map. Demy 8vo, cloth, 17s. 6d. net.
London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street

FRENCH AND GERMAN NOVELS.

ARMY SERIES.

LE COUP DE PISTOLET, &c. Prosperi
MERIMEE. 2s. 6d.

VAILLANTE. Jacques Vincent. 2s. 6d.

AUF VERLORNEN POSTEN and NAZ-
ZARENA DANTI. JOHANNES v. DEWALL. 3s.

IN PREPARATION.

CONTES MILITAIRES. A. Daudet.
2s. 6d.

ERZHLUNGEN. E. Hofer. 3s.

Edited by J. T. W. PEROWNE, M.A.

"The Series has brought fascinating examples of fiction under the eyes of English readers in a neat and handy form. Besides having the military flavour, they are models of style."—Scotsman.
"The notes are few and brief, but all are helpful."—ib.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

11, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE,

90, HIGH STREET, OXFORD

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting
Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

PROGRAMME OF LECTURES FOR THE SESSION 1892-93.

Principal—
Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt.
CATHOLIC EPISTLES (Introduction, Criticism, and EXEGESIS).
INTRODUCTION TO THE FOURTH GOSPEL.
TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Vice-Principal—
Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
OLD TESTAMENT: Introduction to the Religion of Israel: History of the Text.
COMPARATIVE RELIGION: History of the Doctrine of Revelation:
Brahmanism.

Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.
Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., will Lecture on SOCIOLOGY
The College OPENS in OCTOBER. All Lectures are Free to the Public.
For further particulars apply to the Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, 18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford;

or to R. D. DUNDAS, Esq.,
25, George Street, Manchester; } Secy.
or to Rev. H. ENFIELD DUNN, B.A.,
Gee Cross, near Manchester.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM

(WITH QUEEN'S FACULTY OF MEDICINE.)

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

Principal: Professor R. S. HEATH, M.A., D.Sc.

THE SESSION 1892-93, will be opened on FRIDAY, 20th SEPTEMBER, by Professor Sir GEORGE HUMPHRY, M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., who will distribute the Prizes and deliver AN ADDRESS.
COMPLETE COURSES OF INSTRUCTION are provided for the various Examinations in Arts and Science, and the Preliminary Scientific (M.B.) Examination, of the University of London; for students of Civil, Mechanical, or Electrical Engineering; and for those who desire to obtain an acquaintance with some branch of Applied Science. Students may, however, attend any class or combination of classes.

(There is also a Faculty of Medicine. A Syllabus containing full particulars is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham.
Price 6d.; by post, 7d.)

A SYLLABUS containing full information as to the various Lecture and Laboratory Courses, Lecture Days and Hours, Fees, Entrance and other Scholarships, Prizes, &c., is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

Further information may be obtained on application to

Geo. H. MURLEY, Secretary and Registrar.

CRYSTAL PALACE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

THE SCHOOL OF ART, SCIENCE, AND LITERATURE (LADIES' DIVISION)

THIRTY-THIRD SESSION, 1892-93.

Education of the highest class for ladies by Tutorial Instruction, Private Lessons, and University Lectures and Classes, the Art and Scientific Collections of the Crystal Palace being utilised for Practical Education.

Faculties of Fine Arts, Letters, Music, &c., distinguished instructors.
There is a Junior Section with Inclusive Fee.
Particulars in the Library, next Byzantine Court, Crystal Palace

THE SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL ENGINEERING.

NEXT TERM opens MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5th.

I.—MECHANICAL COURSE.
II.—CIVIL ENGINEERING SECTION.
III.—COLONIAL DIVISION.—For Preliminary Practical Training of young men for Colonial Life.
ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING, MARINE and MINING DIVISIONS.
Prospectus of the undersigned, in the Library, next Byzantine Court,
Crystal Palace.

F. K. J. SIMON, F.R.Hist.S.,
Superintendent Educational Department.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, AND ARTS.

THE NINETEENTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, OCTOBER 12th.
The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees
in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Studio, Tye-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Secretary:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medial Students.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, E., LONDON.

Principal: Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress: Miss M. TODD, Girton, Cambridge.
Professors: Selwyn, King's Coll.; Dr. Deeken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Hehl, Signor Gatti, Lupton, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-

TION for filling up about EIGHTEEN VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 17th SEPTEMBER, 1892. For information apply to THE Rector, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

THE TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

LISBON (23rd SEPTEMBER to 1st OCTOBER, 1892.)

President-Patron HIS MAJESTY DOM CARLOS I.

Orientalists and friends of Oriental studies are specially invited to take part in the above Congress, which will be followed by literary excursions to Cintra and other places of interest in Portugal, and to Cordova, Seville, and Granada in Spain. The programme of work comprises all known branches of Oriental learning, as also recent explorations, and subjects bearing on "Portugal and the East." The subscription (1), papers to be read at the Congress, books for presentation, or collections for exhibition, may be forwarded to "The Delegate General," at the Portuguese Legation, 12, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., from whom also particulars may be learnt regarding Prize-translations and the award by the Congress of Diplomas, Medals, and other honours. The dates of the Congress and of its excursions have been so fixed as to enable members to attend the Americanist and other Congresses, Exhibitions, and Columbian Festivities that will take place in Spain between September 12 and the end of October. Reductions in Railway fares, &c., are being arranged for Members.

FOR PUBLICATIONS of the NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

including SUMMARIES OF ORIENTAL RESEARCH in Sixteen Specialities, apply to PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT,
ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WOKING.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EX-

AMINATIONS.—STUDENTS are successfully PREPARED
at the classes in connection with the North London Collegiate School, under the superintendence of Miss BISS. They are also trained for Kindergarten work, and prepared for the Examinations of the Froebel Society. Arrangements made for ladies to board in the neighbourhood.—Apply to Miss Torkis, 14, Camden Road, London, N.W.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—

FORTHCOMING EXAMINATIONS.—Assistant in the Museum of Science and Art, Dublin, and Junior Assistant in the Museum of Science and Art, Edinburgh (18-24, 2nd SEPTEMBER).
The date specified is the latest at which applications can be received.
They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars, from the Secretary, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman
Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Hollar, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art.
The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

A SELECTION FROM Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s.,
of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX. | WEE WIFIE.
WOODED AND MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA. | THELMA.
ARDATH. | WORMWOOD.

By W. E. NORRIS.

THRILBY HALL.
A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER
MAJOR and MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO.
THE ROGUE.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
HEALEY.
KITH and KIN.
PROBATION.

By JANE AUSTEN.

(The only COMPLETE Editions of Miss Austen's Works
are Messrs. Bentley's.)

EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, and the WATSONS.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.
PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS.
UNDER a CHARM.
FICKLE FORTUNE.
NO SURRENDER.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE RYE.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN. | NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
ALAS!

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING O'T.
HER DEAREST FOE.
LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
THE EXECUTOR.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

UNCLE SILAS.
IN A GLASS DARKLY.
THE HOUSE by the CHURCHYARD.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A GILTON GIRL.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE LINO TYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

*Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.*

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION JUST READY.

THE BEST TOUR IN NORWAY. By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6s.
"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN WITHOUT a GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched; yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."—World.

THE MEMBER for WROTTENBOROUGH: Passages from his Life in Parliament. Edited by ARTHUR A'BECKETT. With Fancy Cover Design by E. J. Wheeler. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NOVELS. New Uniform Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S COMPLETE NOVELS at 2s. 6d. each.
A DAUGHTER of HETH. With Portrait of Mr. Black.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a PHAETON.
A PRINCESS of THULE. MADCAP VIOLET.
IN SILK ATTIRE. THREE FEATHERS.
KILMENY. THE MAID of KILLEENA.
The 6s. Edition can still be obtained.

TWO REMARKABLE NOVELS. JUST READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.
THE TERRIBLE CZAR. By Count A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Captain FILMORE, of the Black Watch. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

PER ASPERA (A Thorny Path). By GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.
"A skilful piece of literary workmanship and a pleasing picture of an interesting stage in the world's history."—Poll Mall Gazette.

NEW STORIES FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

THE MAGIC INK, and other Tales. By WILLIAM BLACK. 1 vol., crown 8vo, buckram, 6s. (First Issue in Book Form.)

THE LADY of FORT ST. JOHN. By M. H. CATHERWOOD, Author of "The Romance of Dollard." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A simple, pretty, and touching story of Nova Scotia... told with great freshness, and conveying an accurate idea of the state of things two centuries and a half ago."—Vanity Fair.

A SON of the FENS. By Dr. P. H. EMERSON, Author of "East Coast Yarns," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A remarkable work."—World.

THE RECTOR of AMESTY: a Novel. By JOHN RYCE. New and Cheaper Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A readable novel, and the interest of the story is sustained to its close."—Western Press.

By T. HOLMAN, R.N. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s. each.
SALT YARNS.

"Plenty of movement, adventure, and fun. We have enjoyed Mr. Holman's book very much."—Literary World.

LIFE in the ROYAL NAVY.
"It is a straightforward narrative of the personal experiences of a British bluejacket... and should find many readers."—Times.

LOW'S ONE-SHILLING STORIES.

1. The VISITORS' BOOK; or, Sketches in a Swiss Hotel. By "IGNOTUS." "Admirable in every way; full of quiet, trenchant humour and observation."—World.

2. MARRIED by PROXY. By a "NEW HUMOURIST." "Extremely diverting and well arranged to entertain the tedium of a railway journey."—Northern Echo.

3. HIS GOLF MADNESS, and other "Queer Stories." By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD. "Piquant and humorous without being long."—Liverpool Mercury.

4. THE EFFACEMENT of ORIEL PENHALIGON. By E. M. HEWITT. "This is a powerful story... The supernatural and mysterious machinery are so cleverly handled that the interest of the book is soon started and maintained to the close."—Scotsman.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1892.

No. 1059, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

An Englishman in Paris: Notes and Recollections. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

It is much to be regretted that this book, so rich in matter of interest respecting memorable events and people, should be produced under conditions almost fatal to its authority and value. In the first place, the writer, who would seem to have been in the most exclusive society of Paris from the days of Louis Philippe until the fall of the Second Empire, has thought fit, for reasons which he "cannot and will not mention," to withhold his name. How, then, can his testimony be accepted as worthy of credence? Not a few of his readers, it is true, will think that the veil which he casts over himself is peculiarly thin. They will point to some personal details in the work as establishing his identity beyond rational dispute. In his youth he settled in Paris under circumstances which made it likely that he would spend most of his life there. At the time of the Dujarrier duel (1845) he was twenty-seven years of age. He liked painting and sculpture a good deal better than books. He mixed with many sorts and conditions of men, from princes and statesmen down to the art students of the Quartier Latin. His name appeared on several committees for the relief of the poor. He was probably the only foreigner whom the French had agreed not to regard as an enemy in disguise. During the siege he was arrested by some numskull as a spy, though only to be released immediately afterwards, on the production of his card, by an officer of the Municipal Guard. "I wish," the latter remarked, "that we had a thousand or so foreign spies like him in Paris; France has no better friend than he." Of course, these facts point to the conclusion that the Englishman in question was the late Sir Richard Wallace, with the record of whose somewhat romantic career they exactly correspond. What other Englishman in Paris during the siege could have answered the same description? it will be asked. But this conjecture may not prove quite so correct as has been supposed. It is at least difficult to believe that, if Wallace wished to preserve an incognito, he would have made a variety of significant references to himself, that his perfect mastery of French would have permitted him to write "Ils ont si peur," or that anyone with his refinement of thought and feeling would have been guilty of the extremely bad taste occasionally shown in the substance and wording of the narrative.

And the course taken by the editor—for there is an editor in the case—places the book at a further disadvantage. He, too, elects to be anonymous, though admitting that he formerly acted as the Paris correspondent of a London evening paper. He gives us no assurance that the original manuscript is printed as it left the writer's hands, that it has not been amplified by extracts from private correspondence. Altogether, "An Englishman in Paris" comes before us in a very questionable shape. For the moment, however, we will assume that any doubts which it may raise are unfounded, and will presently be set at rest.

Rich, well-connected, and presumably an acceptable companion, the Englishman soon achieved a social success in his new home, even to the extent of being numbered by some of Louis Philippe's sons among their personal friends. The Citizen King was under no illusion as to the insecurity of his position. "The crown of France," he remarked to one of the author's relatives, "is too warm in summer, too cold in winter; the sceptre is too blunt as a weapon of attack or defence, it is too short as a stick to lean upon; a good felt hat and an umbrella are at all times more useful." For the bourgeoisie who had set him on the throne, and whom he professed to hold in so much admiration, he had nothing in his heart but resentment and contempt. He knew that they were seeking their own interests only, and that their supposed goodwill towards him was "sheer hypocrisy." Cold-shouldered by the old noblesse, he avowedly found it more difficult to get people to his court entertainments from the Faubourg St. Germain than from across the Channel, and the Englishman confesses that his countrymen were then in too great a majority at the Tuileries. The King's weakness for hoarding money was probably due to a real fear that he would die a pauper. Walking with Queen Victoria in the gardens at Eu during her visit in 1843, he took from his pocket a large clasp-knife to skin a peach for her. "When," he said, "a man has been a poor devil like myself, obliged to live upon forty sous a day, he always carries a knife. I might have dispensed with it for the last few years; still, I do not wish to lose the habit: one does not know what may happen." His sons were brought up on sound principles, but as they arrived at man's estate he seems to have allowed them to be out when they were supposed to be in bed. Lord H—one day remarked that he had seen them on the previous night. "Where?" anxiously asked Louis Philippe. "At the Café de Paris, your majesty." "That's all right," said the King, laughing. "As long as they do not go into places where they are likely to meet Guizot, I don't mind; for if he saw them out in the evening it might cost me my throne. Guizot is so terribly respectable." One of his many clever mots deserves to be recorded. Talleyrand had just died. "Are you sure of it?" the King asked, when the news arrived. "Very sure, sire; why, did not your majesty notice yesterday that he was dying?" "I did; but there is no judging from appearances with Talleyrand, and I have been asking myself for the last four and twenty hours what interest he could possibly have in departing at this particular moment."

Of the tumultuous scenes in the streets of Paris during the Revolution of '18 we have rather graphic accounts from personal observation. The Englishman was also present at the sacking of the Tuileries:

"The idea that 'there is a divinity that hedgeth round a king' seemed, I admit, preposterous enough at that moment; but I could not help being struck with its partial truth on seeing the rabble invade the palace. . . . For the first ten minutes they stood positively motionless, not daring to touch anything. It was not the fear of being caught pilfering and punished summarily that prevented them. The minority which might have protested was so utterly insignificant in numbers as to make action on their part impossible. No, it was neither shame nor fear that stayed the rabble's hand; it was a sentiment for which I can find no name. It was the consciousness that these objects had belonged to a king, to a royal family, which made them gaze upon them in a kind of superstitious wonder. It did not last long."

What the Englishman has seen of the sovereign people in France does not tell in their favour. He has "no hesitation in saying that for cold-blooded, monkeyish, tigerish cruelty there is nothing on the face of God's earth to match them, and that no concessions wrung from society on their behalf will ever make them anything but the fiends in human shape they are."

To many readers the account given of Napoleon III. will be the most fascinating part of the record. The Englishman first met him at the Hôtel du Rhin, in the Place Vendôme, while he was a candidate for the Presidency of the Second Republic. But for his impecuniosity at this time, it is asserted, he would never have come forward, whatever may be said of his unfaltering belief in his star.

"When Prince Louis held out his hand, and I looked into his face, I felt almost tempted to put him down as an opium eater. Ten minutes afterwards, I felt convinced that, to use a metaphor, he himself was the drug, and that every one with whom he came in contact was bound to yield to its influence. When I came away that evening, I could have given Cavaignac, Thiers, Lamartine, Hugo, and the rest a timely warning if they would have condescended to listen to or profit by it, which I am certain they would not have done. Strange as it may seem, every one of these men, and, with the exception of one, all undoubtedly clever, thought Louis Napoleon either an imbecile or a secret drunkard."

In person he was insignificant enough, but certainly not ungraceful. When he stood still, or was on horseback, there was "an indescribable something about the man which at once commanded attention." Strange as it may seem, he never spoke French with entire ease and accuracy. The moment, we are assured, he became in any way excited, the f's and the v's and the p's were always trying to oust the r's and the d's and the b's from their newly-acquired positions, and often gained a momentary victory. One story on this head is very probably true. "M. de Bismarck," said the Emperor to his great foe in the future at their first meeting, "I have never heard a German speak French as you do."

"Will you allow me to return the compliment, sire?" "Certainly." "I have never heard a Frenchman speak French as you do." He was generous and soft-hearted to a fault; "he could no more have done without his charity than without his eternal cigarette." Except to a limited few, he never wore his heart upon his sleeve. The Englishman knew him "very well" for nearly a quarter of a century, and was "as little competent to give an opinion on him on the last as on the first day of the acquaintance."

What the writer sets down about the Empress should not be taken without a grain of salt. He seems to have had a deep prejudice against her. He describes her as imperious, tyrannical, cruel at heart, intolerant of opinions differing from her own, and vindictive towards those who happened to give her offence.

"That playful cry which she was so fond of uttering in the beginning of her married life—'As for myself, I am a Legitimist'—without understanding or endeavouring to understand its import, had gradually grafted itself on her mind, although it had ceased to be on her lips. . . . Superstitious, like most Spaniards, she was firmly convinced that the gipsy who foretold her future greatness was a divine messenger, and from that to the conviction that she occupied the throne by a right as divine as that claimed by the Bourbons there was but one short step. A corollary to divine right meant, to her, personal and irresponsible government. That was her idea of Legitimism. Though by no means endowed with high intellectual gifts, she perceived well enough, in the beginning, that the Second Empire was not a very stable edifice, either with regard to its foundations or superstructure; and, until England propped it up by an alliance and a state visit from our sovereign, she kept commendably coy. But from that moment she aspired to be something more than the arbitress of fashion. . . . She, no more than her surroundings, had the remotest idea that France was undergoing a political change, that she was recovering her constitutional rights. Her party was like the hare in the fable that used the wrong end of the opera-glass, and lived in a fool's paradise with regard to the distance that divided it from the sportsman."

In the second volume we are treated to a repetition of the old nauseous tittle-tattle, to the effect that Louis Napoleon did not marry her until he had failed in more than one attempt to make her a La Vallière or a Pompadour—tittle-tattle with which Sir Richard Wallace, if only as one of the Emperor's friends, was hardly likely to have concerned himself.

But little new light is thrown by the Englishman on the characters of the leading statesmen and politicians of the July monarchy, the Republic of '48, and the Second Empire. Under an austere and haughty exterior in public, Guizot, who "carried too far the privilege of being poor," as Pélisson had been said to abuse the privilege of the clever to be ugly, concealed a kindly, gracious, and even affectionate disposition. "C'est la politique qui le rendait méchant," said one of his daughters; "heureusement il la laissait à la porte." Thiers was lively, witty, and charming, but miserly and treacherous. During his first tenure of power his sister kept a boarding-house, and the Opposition ostentatiously patronised her table d'hôte. On one occasion she was asked whether the pheasants were of his bagging. "Non," she replied bitterly; "le Président du Conseil n'a pas l'honneur de fournir mon établissement—à quoi bon? Je peux les acheter à meilleur marché que lui, et au même endroit. S'il m'en envoyait il me ferait payer un bénéfice, parce qu'il ne fait jamais rien pour rien. C'est un peu le défaut de notre famille." Lamartine, though deeply pledged to support the Orleanist cause, sided with the revolutionists of '48 as a means of paying his debts, especially those which he had contracted during his journey to the East. His household reminded the Englishman of Mrs. Jellyby's. Cavaignac was only a "surly and bumptious drill-sergeant, with nothing, absolutely nothing, to recommend him for the elevated position he coveted." Persigny, with his fervid devotion to the Napoleonic legend, conceived and organised the coup d'état, Morny taking but a subordinate part therein. The latter, who posed as nothing less than a prince of the blood, had a cordial hatred for Walewski, and the ill-starred expedition to Mexico is attributed to a quarrel between them respecting a box at the Opera. Lastly comes Eugène Rouher, an energetic and perfectly upright servant of his country, but with the weakness of permitting his better judgment to be overridden by the Empress. His power of mimicry would show itself even in debate:

"His eyes remained steadily fixed on his interlocutor, his arms folded across his chest. Then he would rise slowly from his seat, walk to the tribune when there was one, take up the argument of his adversary, not only word for word, but with the latter's intonation and gestures, almost with his own voice—which used to drive Thiers wild—and answer it point by point."

It would hardly be an exaggeration to say that the Englishman was on terms of friendship with every person of distinction in literature during the period under notice. Dumas the elder is again before us with his amazing fertility of invention, his unflagging industry, his splendid profusion, his frequent impecuniosity, his boisterous enjoyment of life, and also his unquestionable talents for cookery. It is believed that he took greater pride in concocting a stew than in constructing a novel or a play. In the middle of a dinner he would put down his knife and fork with the remark, "Ca c'est rudement bon; il faut que je m'en procure la recette." His friend Véron long questioned his capabilities in this way, but allowed himself to be convinced about them by a noble dish of stewed carp. It was with indifferent success that Véron's house-keeper, though provided with the recipe, sought to equal the achievement. "Ah," she sneered, "c'est avec sa carpe comme avec ses romans; les autres les font, et il y met son nom." Dumas, hearing of this, betrayed the utmost indignation. "There is but one reply to such an accusation," he loftily said. He insisted upon cooking a dinner in the presence of a witness (the author), and the result was all that his guests could have wished. Nothing short of "inveterate snobbishness" is laid to Sue's charge; he made light of his literary gifts, posed as one solely actuated by a desire to benefit humanity, and dressed with the dandyism of a young Disraeli. More pressed by creditors than Dumas himself, Balzac, a visionary among visionaries, at one time could go out for a walk only at break of day, "for as long as the sun is not up they cannot arrest me." Prévost's description of Alfred de Musset as "Miss Byron" is partly endorsed, and Victor Hugo's soirées are said to have been distinguished by "perpetual adoration" of the host and a plentiful lack of hospitality. Béranger, who was unconsciously portrayed "to the life" by Hablot Browne in the sketch of Tom Pinch, did not allow his republican sympathies to deter him from rushing out to see Queen Victoria when she visited the Emperor and Empress in Paris. "Je vais voir la femme: s'il y avait beaucoup de femmes comme elle je leur pardonnerais d'être reines." Prévost-Paradol long suffered from suicidal mania, as may be gathered from the fact that he was the original of the hero of an anonymous story, "Madame de Marçay," brought out in the Revue des Deux Mondes about ten years before his death.

Of eminent composers, too, the Englishman has something to tell us. Meyerbeer "could never make up his mind whether magnificent scenery and gorgeous dresses were an implied compliment or the reverse to the musical value of his compositions. At one of the final dress rehearsals of 'Robert le Diable' he felt much upset. At the sight of that beautiful set of the cloister of Sainte Rosalie, where the nuns rise from their tombs, Meyerbeer came up to Véron. 'My dear director,' he said, 'I perceive well enough that you do not depend upon the opera itself; you are, in fact, running after a spectacular success.' 'Wait till the fourth act,' replied Véron, who was above all logical. The curtain rose upon the fourth act, and what did Meyerbeer behold? Instead of the vast, grandiose apartment he had conceived for Isabella, Princess of Sicily, he found a mean, shabby set, which would have been deemed scarcely good enough for a minor theatre. 'Decidedly, my dear director,' says Meyerbeer, with a bitter twinge in his features and voice, 'I perceive well enough that you have no faith in my score; you did not even dare to go to the expense of a new set.'"

On certain days the street in which the old Opéra stood was crowded with beggars. Roger de Beauvoir explained the reason thereof to a bewildered English peer:

"Both Rossini and Meyerbeer never fail of a morning to look at the bills, and when the latter finds his name on them he is so overjoyed that he absolutely empties his pockets of all they contain. Notwithstanding his many years of success, he is still afraid that the public's liking for his music is merely a passing fancy, and, as every additional performance decreases this apprehension, he thinks he cannot be sufficiently grateful to Providence. His gratitude shows itself in almsgiving."

Auber, though not bald, had a mania for wearing his hat at all times and in all circumstances. He never felt at ease without it:

"When, in January '55, Gérard de Nerval was found suspended from a lamp-post in the Rue de la Vieille-Lanterne, he had his hat on his head. His friends, and even the police, pretended to argue from this that he had not committed suicide, but had been murdered."

'A man who is going to hang himself does not keep his hat on,' they said. 'Pourquoi pas, mon Dieu?' asked Auber simply. 'If I were going to kill myself, I should certainly keep my hat on.'

Félicien David's poverty in early life showed itself in his mind and face to the end. He had "positively starved" in order to buy the few books and the paper necessary to his studies. "Why," he then wrote, "am I not a little better off? How can my brain, constantly occupied as it is with the worry of material wants, act unhampered?" But for Azevedo, the musical critic, he would have gone supperless to bed on the night before the production of "Le Désert," which first made him known to fame.

Not a few theatrical luminaries come before us as we pass along. According to the Englishman, Rachel, of whom he saw a good deal in the green-room of the Comédie Française, was by no means so amiable and open-handed a person as she is generally represented to have been. He says that she had few of the good qualities and many of the bad qualities of her race; was greedy to the last degree, and could be very spiteful. Of her greed he gives a remarkable illustration. One evening she dined at the house of Comte Duchâtel, Louis Philippe's minister. On the table was a superb silver centre-piece, which she induced her host to give her. She had come in a hackney cab; the Comte politely placed his carriage at her disposal. Fearing that on the morrow he would alter his mind, she at once accepted his offer. "Yes, that will do admirably; there will be no fear of my being robbed of your present; I will take it with me." "Quite so, Mademoiselle," replied the Comte; "but you will send me back my carriage, won't you?" She made presents herself, though only to regret her generosity. On one occasion she gave a ring to the younger Dumas, who at once placed it on her finger. "Allow me," he said, "to give it you in my turn, so as to prevent your asking for it." Régnier preferred art to the suggestions of nature. He once produced a great effect by acting upon the impulse of the moment, but waived it in favour of a more artificial and less moving way of going to work. Decidedly unflattering is the Englishman's portrait of Tagliioni:

"Of the gracefulness so apparent on the stage, even in her decline, there was not a trace to be found in private life. One of her shoulders was higher than the other; she limped slightly, and, moreover, waddled like a duck. The pinched mouth was firmly set; there was no smile on the colourless lips, and she replied to one's remarks in monosyllables. . . . The wonder to most people who knew her was not that Comte Gilbert de Voisins should have left her so soon after their marriage, but that he should have married her at all. 'The fact was,' said someone with whom I discussed the marriage one day, 'that De Voisins considered himself in honour bound to make that reparation; but I cannot conceive what possessed him to commit the error that made the reparation necessary.'

Long afterwards, at the Due de Morny's, the two were introduced to each other as if they had been strangers. "I am under the impression," said the danseuse, with a stiff bow, "that I have had the honour of meeting you before, about the year 1832"; and she turned coldly away.

The author's artistic sympathies naturally led him to contract friendships with the great painters and sculptors around him. He had the run of their studios while they were at work. With Delacroix he was on particularly cordial terms. Of an extremely chilly temperament, the latter, even in hot weather, would go to his easel with "an old jacket buttoned up to his chin, a large muffler round his neck, a cloth cap pulled over his ears, and a pair of thick felt slippers." "But for my wrapping up," he said, "I should have been dead at thirty." In this garb he was surprised one day by the Circé-like George Sand, who, evidently without sufficient cause, laid the flattering unction to her soul that she had drawn him within her toils, and who wished to make him speak out. The story is not entirely new, but is worthy of being retold in the form it takes here:

"My poor Eugène," she began, 'I am afraid I have got sad news for you.' 'Indeed,' said Delacroix, without interrupting his work, and just giving her one of his cordial smiles in guise of welcome. 'Yes, my dear friend, I have carefully consulted my own heart, and the upshot is, I grieve to tell you, that I feel I cannot and could never love you.' Delacroix kept on painting. 'Is that a fact,' he said. 'Yes, and I ask you to pardon me and give me credit for my candour—my poor Delacroix.' Delacroix did not budge from his easel. 'You are angry with me, are you not? You will never forgive me?' 'Certainly I will. Only I want you to keep quiet for ten minutes. I have got a bit of sky here which has caused me a good deal of trouble; it is just coming right. Go and sit down, or else take a little walk, and be back in ten minutes.' Of course George Sand did not return."

Horace Vernet, that "walking cyclopaedia on military costume," is described as in some respects a counterpart of Dumas—buoyant, insensible to fatigue, given to "bouts of idleness," and fond of money for the pleasure of spending it. As the novelist would laugh long and loudly over his comic characters while bringing them into being, so would the painter sing at the top of his voice before his canvas. During his stay in Russia he was much noticed by the Czar, but not for long.

"After the partition of Poland, Nicholas proposed that Vernet should paint a picture on the subject. 'I am afraid I cannot do it, sire,' was the answer; 'I have never painted a Christ on the Cross.' 'The moment I had said it,' continued Vernet, when he told me the story, which is scarcely known, 'I thought my last hour had struck. I am perfectly certain that a Russian would have paid for these words with his life, or at least with life-long exile to Siberia. I shall never forget the look he gave me; there was a murderous gleam in the eyes.'

Meissonier related to the author a rather whimsical story:

"His granddaughter, on her fifteenth or sixteenth birthday, had a very nice fan given to her. The sticks were exquisitely carved in ivory . . . ; the fan itself, of black gauze, was absolutely plain. The donor probably intended the grandfather's art to enhance the value of the present, and the latter was about to do so when the young lady stopped him with the cry, 'Voilà qu'il va me gâter mon éventail avec ses mammequins.'"

Connected with the name of David d'Angers is something like a romance of real life, which, however, is too elaborate to be entered into here.

Other interesting passages in the volumes may be briefly mentioned. Brougham was often in Paris, where his vanity and imperfect knowledge of French exposed him to no little derision. "Il n'y a pour lui," said one, "qu'un pas entre le sublime et le ridicule; c'est le pas de Calais, et il le traverse trop souvent." As for the wealthy but mysterious Major Fraser, the Englishman has a notion that he was the son of some exalted personage, and that the secret he so successfully kept might be found in the records of the scandals and intrigues at Spanish courts. Lola Montès, beautiful and dignified, might have been taken for a woman of high birth if she had never opened her lips. Education she had none; her wit was "that of the pot-house." Yet men who ought to have known better would rave about her, so great was the fascination she exercised. Then, again, we are confronted by Alphonsine Plessis, the original of Marguerite Gautier in the "Dame aux Camélias." The Englishman, speaking from personal experience, avers that the younger Dumas did not in the least idealise her character, and that the incident of her being provided for by a foreign nobleman because she resembled his dead daughter was a positive fact. "Alexandre," said his father, in the course of some remarks on the story,

"is my son every inch of him. At the outset of his career he is a better dramatist than I am ever likely to be. He has been true to nature, but"—here the shrewd critic came in—"he has taken an episode showing her at her best. He was not bound to let the public know that the frequent recurrence of these love episodes, but always with a different partner, constitutes a disease which is as well known to specialists as the disease of drunkenness, and for which it is impossible to find a cure. Messaline, Catherine II., and thousands of women have suffered from it."

Rouget de l'Isle, we are again assured, had but a comparatively small part in the creation of the "Marseillaise." The last strophe, the "strophe of the children," was by the Abbé Pessoneaux, and the music, apart from alterations necessitated by the words of the hymn, by Alexandre Bouchet. Only the first six strophes can be placed to the credit of the not too scrupulous Rouget.

By far the most important part of the work is that which relates to the war, the siege, and the Commune. Marshal Vaillant did not deceive himself as to the quality of the French army. He saw the necessity of reforming it altogether, but was prevented from giving effect to his ideas. He told the Englishman that it was rotten to the core, that there was not a general in it who knew as much as an Austrian or Prussian captain. Such were the conditions under which France blindly entered upon the tremendous struggle of 1870. For a time it was believed by experienced diplomatists that that struggle would be averted. "William," said Lord Lyons to the Englishman, "is too wise to go to war on such a pretext, and the Emperor is too ill not to want peace. I wish the Empress would leave him alone." For this wish there was only too much reason. The Empress held a war to be essential to the interests of the reigning dynasty, especially as the republican minority would take care to exclaim against any peace the Emperor might keep as shameful to the country. Napoleon remained firm until after a second ministerial council at St. Cloud, when, as the Englishman learnt from a friend in the confidence of Ollivier's brothers, the Empress was with him from ten o'clock at night to one o'clock in the morning. A few hours later the decisive step was taken. Of the excitement then shown on the Boulevards the Englishman has a good deal to say. It was universally believed that the army would sweep all before it, and a bookseller brought out a dictionary "for the use of the French at Berlin." General d'Hautpoul was far from sharing this sanguine mood. "If every one of our officers," he remarked, "were Moltke's equal in strategy, the chance would then only be equal. We are a doomed nation." One incident of the war is thus described to the author by an eye-witness:

"The Emperor is in a very bad state. After Saarbrück, Lebrun and Leboeuf had virtually to lift him off his horse. The young prince, who, as you have probably heard already, was by his side all the time, looked very distressed, for his father had scarcely spoken to him during the engagement. But after they got into the carriage, which was waiting about a dozen yards away, the Emperor put his arm round his neck and kissed him on the cheeks, while two large tears rolled down his own. I noticed that the Emperor had scarcely the strength to walk that dozen yards."

Meanwhile, as disaster followed disaster, it was said by the people surrounding the Empress that the dynasty might be saved by the death of the Emperor at the head of his troops. "That death," said a lady-in-waiting to a relative of the author's, "would be considered an heroic one, and would benefit the Prince Imperial." It is hinted, not very obscurely, that the Empress was of the same opinion, since she "discountenanced" the idea of her husband returning to Paris. But might she not have been actuated in this matter by a sense of the loss of prestige which his return would have involved? Sedan came; and it was by the merest chance that the revolution of September 4 anticipated the advent to power of the Commune. Unlike many of his countrymen in Paris, the author elected to remain there during the siege, which Moltke would not have undertaken but for a conviction that Trochu, a really able general, would find his hands hopelessly tied by his nominal superiors. On the whole, the people did not allow their privations to damp their spirits very much, and a broken-down omnibus in the street would have "excited as much curiosity as did the sight of the battered tenements of Vaugirard, Montrouge, and Vanves." The Englishman, though well-off, suffered to some extent with the mass, eating horse, dog, cat, rat, and field mice, the last of which, dexterously disguised, he took to be larks without the bones. At Durand's, a comparatively cheap restaurant, he had had to pay twenty-four francs for a filet de bœuf aux champignons.

For the rest, he saw not a little of the Commune, with the fall of which his reminiscences come to an end.

The errors in the book are few and not very important. Marshal Vaillant's language, it is stated, was "frequently that of Rabelais or Molière, vigorous, to the point, calling a spade a spade, and, as such, not particularly adapted to these notes." Can the writer have supposed that the great dramatist used language unfit for men or women to read? It is not exactly true that Molière "consulted" his old housekeeper about his productions, and the title of one of them is given as the Comtesse d'Esbarnas. As usual, Piron's famous epigram against the French Academy is misquoted, while the maiden name of Mme. Dubarri, really Vaubernier, is said to have been "Bécu." Again, the German emperor is spoken of as "the Emperor of Germany," a mistake which a well-informed student of politics might have been expected to avoid. The French scattered through the work is occasionally misprinted, however well versed in the language the editor may be. But the worst thing about An Englishman in Paris is that it is unprovided with an index, the absence of which is not to be made up for by the fullest tables of contents.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

The Barren Ground of Northern Canada.

By Warburton Pike. (Macmillans.)

MR. PIKE anticipates hostile criticism—which is not called for—by declaring that his book is for sportsmen and sportsmen alone, and that it is idle for the geographer to waste his time in pointing out inaccuracies. "I admit all the errors before he discovers them." At the same time, it is impossible not to close this pleasant narrative without regret at the thought that so capable a traveller, and, as his narrative shows, so modest a one, should have gone so far afield so ill-prepared for bringing back a more precise account of what he saw. For he traversed routes rarely, if ever, trodden by white men, and has actually laid down in a rough way chains of lakes not hitherto on any map, when, by a little preliminary training, such as the Royal Geographical Society supplies, something like topographical accuracy might have been secured. He did not carry any instruments with him—though these are now made in so portable a form that a set does not weigh more than a trifle—and with the exception of a score of common plants (the existence of which might have been predicted), few data such as those one expects nowadays from every wanderer above tourist rank were brought from the outer world in which Mr. Pike spent the best part of two years. These drawbacks aside, and the main object of his expedition pardoned, we have nothing except praise for the style in which the plucky young sportsman tells his tale. It is a model which many pretentious "explorers" might imitate with profit. For it is lucid, and without swagger, but not without humour—though the writer is not always in one long guffaw; and had Mr. Pike only possessed some familiarity with science, his record of long tramps and weary months in camp might have claimed a higher place in the literature of travel than it is likely to obtain.

Along the Northern extremities of Europe, Asia, and America lies a broad strip of dreary lowland, the tindren of the old world—what in Lapland Linnaeus called the "terrae damnatae"—the Barren Ground of the old Hudson Bay territories. It is a region treeless, full of lakes and rivers, its surface varied by rocky hills of modest height; and of all parts of North America this lichen-covered waste, which towards the extreme east descends as low as the sixty-first parallel of latitude, is the most uninviting. The Eskimo inhabit its seaward border, and ascend some of its rivers like the Mackenzie, Coppermine, and Great Fish, where they come into collision with their hereditary enemies, the Indians. Yet, owing to the icy winds which sweep across it during winter, and, perhaps, also on account of the swarms of mosquitoes which blacken the air in summer, even these hardy tribesmen do not inhabit it permanently. But it is the haunt of game animals which are not seen further to the South, and of fur-beavers, in search of which trappers penetrate it; and the lone posts of the Hudson Bay Company (here not mere land-jobbers and shopkeepers, as in the more southerly lands of semi-civilisation, but still following their legitimate trade pro pelle cutem, as of old) are scattered hard by for their convenience. On its borders are found great numbers of cariboo or American reindeer, so that in storm-time they can retreat to the stunted woods. The brown and grizzly bears do not range so far north, and the Polar bear is never found far from the ice fields on which bask the seals that form its prey. But there is one animal in these barren lands which never deserts them. This is the musk ox, or rather the musk sheep, a peculiarly Arctic animal, which was found during the glacial period far to the south of its present limits, though now confined entirely to North America east of the Mackenzie River. Even there it does not come far from the Arctic circle in Greenland, its range being limited on one side by the glaciers of Melville Bay, and on the other by Franz Josef's Fjord. Hence, it is little disturbed except by the Eskimo and the Yellow Knife Indians, whose language, these folk affirm, it understands.

It was this hapless beast which tempted Mr. Pike into the Barren Ground. He had slaughtered almost everything except the musk ox, and the musk ox had therefore to be added to his trophies. He had no other object, and the energy which he displayed in compassing the destruction of a harmless hyperborean makes us regret that this pluck and perseverance did not find a more useful ambition on which to expend itself. As posts more or less civilised extend close to the border of the Barren Ground, a journey thither is by no means so difficult as in the days when Hearne, Franklin, Back, Richardson, Rae, and other Arctic explorers traversed it, and, in spite of the nauseous tripe de roche, barely escaped perishing for lack of food. Yet, as Mr. Pike's unassuming narrative is in proof, there are still perils of hunger and cold to be faced by anyone prepared to get far afield in this terra damnata of the North; and possibly—if we read the latest hunter-traveller aright—had those hardships not existed north of the Great Slave Lake, he would have confined his exploits with the rifle to a region where the risks of death by starvation and frost-bite are less imminent. Starting from Calgary, a station on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, in the month of June, he passed in August the last post of the Hudson Bay Company, and a few weeks later was in the wilds with a troop of Indians and half-breeds, burdened—thanks to their improvidence—with few impedimenta except powder and shot and some camping utensils. Fattening up among the Cariboo, four of the party pushed on, in the middle of September, without either tent or provisions; and just as famine, barely postponed by a meal off a half-putrid carcase left by some Yellow Knives, pinched them, the long-looked-for quarry was sighted and killed, just three months and twenty days after leaving Calgary. This experience proved so attractive that, after camping for a time further south, the musk-ox hunt was resumed with varying success.

These episodes in his journey enable Mr. Pike to furnish many interesting particulars regarding the habits of the game animals and of the Indians, and to write one of the best accounts of a winter camp which we have seen. From this we gather that there still exist in the Hudson Bay fur-countries Indians who believe—as most of them did in my day—that, though the Queen of Great Britain may be a very powerful person, she is at best only an ally and fellow-monarch of the Hudson Bay Company, who, in spite of their long cancelled charter, are still the virtual rulers of the greater part of the vast territory over which, up to 1869, they were the recognised suffragan-sovereigns.

"No," was the indignant rejoinder when the contrary was stated, "she may be your Queen, as she gives you everything you want, good rifles and plenty of ammunition, and you say you eat flour at every meal in your own country. If she were my Queen, surely she would send me sometimes half a sack of flour or a little tea, or perhaps a little sugar, and then I should say she was indeed my Queen. As it is, I would rather believe Mr. Reid, of Fort Province, who told me once that the earth went round and the sun stood still; but I myself have seen the sun rise in the morning and set at night for many years. It is wrong of you white men, who know how to read and write, to tell lies to poor men who live by the muzzle of their guns" (p. 77).

Starvation in these regions is almost chronic; and so, in spite of "good rifles and plenty of ammunition," it caught Mr. Pike's party more than once, and on one occasion in the Rocky Mountains so keenly that they were reduced to a mouse and a boiled mouse-skin. Indeed, if the wolfish instincts of some of the savages or semi-barbarians in the party had attained full play, murder and cannibalism might have been the close of a tragedy. In February, 1890, Mr. Pike heard of a band of wood bison, not far from Buffalo River, and (we regret to learn) killed one of that almost extinct species of animal. Mr. Pike tells us that they are sometimes heard of at Forts Smith and Vermilion, sometimes at Fort St. John, close up to the big mountains on Peace River, and occasionally at Fort Nelson, on the south branch of the Liard. Yet the country is not quite a hunting paradise. For, unless in winter—and the winter is terrible—it is almost impossible to travel in this swampy, mosquito-infested region. And,

"by the way, it is as well when going for a hunting expedition in the North to leave at home all the old-fashioned notions of shooting-etiquette. If you see a man in a good position for a shot, run up, jostle his elbow and let your gun go off. If an animal falls, swear you killed it, and claim the back fat and tongue, no matter whether you fired or not: never admit that you are not quite sure which animal you shot at. It is only by strict attention to these rules that a white man can get a fair share of plunder when shooting with half-breeds and Indians" (p. 145).

Mr. Pike gives directions as to the best means of reaching the musk ox. We wish he would keep his information to himself—in any case we shall not repeat it—though, perhaps, considering the amiable character he gives the people and the country, it might be revenging the slaughtered Oribos by tempting many to go in search of what they are not likely to find. But all this does not preclude us from thanking Mr. Pike for an admirable volume, so full of interesting matter that an instructive extract might be made from almost any page.

ROBERT BROWN.

Songs and Lyrics. By Joseph Skipsey. (Walter Scott.)

THE present collection includes old favourites and new pieces quite worthy to rank with the old. It is now upwards of thirty years since Mr. Skipsey issued his first book; and he has made steady progress ever since, both in a widening and deepening experience, and in the public recognition due to his merit.

When we reviewed his Carols from a Coal-field in these columns (ACADEMY, January 22, 1887) we laid stress on the fact that his poems were sincere expressions of the author's mind and mood. What he had seen and felt he wrote, and nothing besides; and he wrote these things in verse because verse was his natural mode of expression. All this is confirmed in the volume before us. According to Carlyle, "It is a man's sincerity and depth of vision that makes him a poet." Mr. Skipsey's sincerity manifests itself everywhere. He is never a mere verse-maker. As to the depth of vision, his experiences have been many and varied, often painful and heartbreaking; and he has learned their lesson, absorbed them into his life, and expressed them in his writings:

"What tho' in bleak Northumbria's mines
His better part of life hath flown,
A planet's shone on him and shines
To Fortune's darlings seldom known;

"And while his outer lot is grim,
His soul, with light and rapture fraught,
Oft will a carol trill, or hymn
In deeper tones, the deeper thought."

Leigh Hunt once spoke of Burns as "the inspired ploughman." The phrase is attractive and pretty, but it is not true. Burns was not a ploughman, but a poet. To describe him as a ploughman, inspired or not, is to miss the point, that essentially he was a poet, and only incidentally followed the plough. In the same manner, although Mr. Skipsey laboured all his earlier years—and laboured efficiently—in Northumbrian mines, he has proved himself visibly to be a poet, not a miner. Thus we read what he has written, not with surprise that a miner could write such excellent things, but with a sense of joy (mingled indeed with pity when we remember the hardship) that he has descended into the dark regions of the earth, and brought thence not coals merely, but rare gems, which a poet, and not a miner, could find in the galleries and hew out of the rock. The relation of man to his circumstances is a problem not yet solved. Applying it in the present connexion, it is impossible to believe that Mr. Skipsey, placed under other conditions, would not have proved himself a poet. If he had dwelt all his life in rose-gardens, he would no doubt have produced graceful songs and lyrics. But, on the other hand, we do not believe the force of so strong a nature as his could there have found its full development. It needed storm and struggle for its full and rich maturity. All of which may be entirely true, without absolving the autocrats of the British literary world, who usually fail to recognise true men of letters when they see them; while the adventurer, with no love for letters and much for self, with his smooth tongue and facile pen, does with them what he will.

In the case of Mr. Skipsey—although he has extremely little occasion for gratitude to eminent editors and others who pose as the patrons of literature—he has fought his own battle through long years of discouragement, until now his claims cannot be disregarded. Literature has yielded him no wealth; yet he is the dispenser rather than the recipient of favours, for he has produced poems which, for their own sake, lovers of poetry cannot disregard. The present volume is peculiarly the poet's own. It contains his chosen and favourite work. The printer has used his art to make the form worthy; and the copies—limited to 250—are likely to fall into the hands of persons able to appreciate properly the quality of the work.

WALTER LEWIN.

The Witness of the Epistles: a Study in Modern Criticism. By the Rev. R. J. Knowling. (Longmans.)

It is a very important and interesting question which is discussed in this volume. What knowledge had the Apostle Paul of Christ's earthly life, of the circumstances of His birth, His ministry, and the details of His betrayal, trial, and death; of His mighty works and His words; and how far therefore can he be cited as a witness to the facts recorded in the Gospels? The importance of the inquiry will not be denied. It is generally agreed that Paul's conversion took place within a few years of the crucifixion, and that, although he was not himself a personal follower of Jesus, he was contemporary with those who were, and must have known what was currently believed among them concerning their Master. If, then, Paul shows himself to be acquainted with the facts of Christ's life as they were afterwards put on record, it is evident that we have in his writings a witness to those facts earlier than any of the Gospels, and one so near the facts themselves that its credibility can scarcely be challenged. Now, besides the death and resurrection of Jesus, which certainly are the events that bear the greatest emphasis in the Apostle's writings, it would seem that Paul also knew, or believed, that Christ was of the seed of David; that He was born of a woman, and born and brought up under the law; that His ministry was confined to the Jews; that He lived in poverty; that He was of a meek and gentle nature; that He was betrayed (by one of His disciples); that He suffered reproaches from His enemies, and was put to death by the rulers of the world. He seems to have known that the crucifixion took place at the season of the Passover, and he shows himself thoroughly familiar with the words and acts made use of by Jesus in instituting the last supper. He was aware that Christ had permitted the preachers of the Gospel to live by the Gospel, and he is able to appeal to Christ's authority on the question of divorce. This is all thoroughly in accordance with the accounts given by the evangelists; and it is a plausible enough argument that, if Paul, writing without any object of giving information, evinced so much knowledge of the details of Christ's life, it is probable that he possessed much more. If, for example, he was able to cite a commandment of Jesus to meet a special question which had arisen in the Corinthian Church, it is only reasonable to infer that there was a store of knowledge in reserve on which he might have drawn had occasion required.

All this, of course, on the assumption that there was such a person as the Apostle Paul, and that the Epistles which go by his name, or the more important of them, are really his. These things, however, are now gravely called in question. Certain Dutch theologians, and the Bern Professor Steck, if they do not absolutely deny the existence of a Paul, make him a very different person from the Paul we have hitherto known, and will not admit that one of the Epistles ascribed to him came from his pen. The Epistles they place long after the Gospels; and of the four chief Epistles, inverting the usual order, they make Galatians the last. This theory has not yet, I believe, found any adherents in this country, but Mr. Knowling's chapter entitled "Recent Attacks on the 'Hauptbriefe,'" in which he carefully examines the speculations of Loman, of Pierson and Naber, of Steck and of Völter, and shows how baseless they are, will be read with special interest.

Even if no Epistle but Baur's four be admitted as genuine, it is clear that Paul's knowledge of Christ's earthly career was by no means limited to the bare facts that he lived, died, and rose again; still more if there be added First Thessalonians, in which there is a seeming reference to a discourse on the last things, and Philippians. At the same time, it is obvious to remark that the argument from Paul's proved acquaintance with certain of the facts of Christ's life cannot be used to prove his knowledge of all the facts, or even of any particular ones. It cannot be inferred, for instance, that because he knew that Jesus was born of a woman, he was also acquainted with the whole narrative of the infancy, whether in the version of Luke or of Matthew, or even had heard of the Virgin-birth, however reasonable it might be to assume that the names of the parents were not unfamiliar to him, as well as the place of the nativity. Nor again, though it may be certain that Paul believed in the wonder-working power of the Messiah, and probable even that he was acquainted with particular instances of it, although he mentions none, are we entitled to infer a knowledge of any of the special miracles described in our Gospels. It cannot be inferred, for instance, that he had ever heard of the raising of Lazarus, the stilling of the storm, the walking on the sea, or the feeding of the five thousand. He may have known of these things. His silence does not prove the contrary. But to affirm that he must have known of them would be to assume, if not that our Gospels were already in existence, at least that the reports they contain were already in circulation. This we have no right to assume; and the witness of Paul cannot therefore be pushed beyond this, that he and his contemporaries were firmly convinced of the existence of miraculous powers in the church, and undoubtedly ascribed to Christ, the source of all, an unstinted measure of the power which they felt in themselves.

When the Apostle appeals to the authority of "the Lord" for any precept which he delivers or any fact which he states, is it so clear, as is generally assumed, that he is appealing to authentic tradition and not to revelation—in other words, to his own mental impressions? It is certainly a forcible argument that he knows so well how to distinguish between "the word of the Lord" and his own judgment—in the question of divorce, for instance, "unto the married I give charge—not I, but the Lord"; "But to the rest say I, not the Lord," and afterwards, "Concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord, but I give my judgment." But how do we know what test Paul may have had to distinguish between a revelation and his own judgment? May not the mere force and spontaneousness of an impression have sometimes sufficed to credit it with supernatural authority? However, there can be no great difficulty in believing that Paul had some traditional knowledge of Christ's teachings, and his writings are so imbued with Christ's spirit that they seem almost to presuppose a knowledge of some such collection of "logia" as we possess in the Sermon on the Mount. A more serious scruple arises in connexion with the account of the institution of the Lord's Supper, commencing, "For I received from the Lord that which also I delivered unto you," &c. Here it is generally assumed that the Apostle had received his information indirectly through

Peter, or some other witness; but I do not know whether it has been before noticed how very loose and inaccurate the form of expression he makes use of would be, if this were its meaning. How could Paul say that he received from the Lord what he had learned from Peter, unless Peter could say that he had received it from the Lord? But in the present instance this is out of the question. Peter, having been present at the transaction, had obviously not received the facts from any other, but was himself a primary source of information. The word "covenant," too, which occurs in all four accounts, may well give us pause. This is not one of the characteristic words of Jesus. It occurs in no previous discourse, and it seems unlikely that He should have introduced it now. If it is permissible to believe, as some do, that Jesus did not Himself claim the Messiahship, and that it was not till after His death that He was invested with the office, much more improbable does it seem that He should have announced Himself as the founder of a new covenant between God and His people and ascribed an atoning efficacy to His own blood. It need not, indeed, be doubted that the Eucharist was a primitive Christian institution, nor that it was founded by Christ Himself. It is at least credible that, in anticipation of His approaching death, Jesus requested His disciples whenever hereafter they should break bread to bear Him in affectionate remembrance, and that the request was gladly complied with; but obviously, if Paul depended for his facts upon a revelation, and not on the evidence of eye-and-ear witnesses, his account must be received with considerable reserve.

The witness of Paul is undoubtedly of great importance so far as it goes. It proves, at least, that the Christ whom he loved, and for whom he was ready to die, was no purely ideal figure, but a great historical personage whom he may possibly have seen in the flesh, and of whom certainly some authentic report had reached him. To what particulars beyond the few facts expressly indicated it can be made to extend is, however, a point on which great variety of opinion is possible. The whole question is most ably considered in this book, and in a spirit of commendable impartiality, though it may be with a tendency sometimes to draw larger inferences than the facts entirely warrant. As a summary of critical opinions upon this subject, gathered from writers of every school, Mr. Knowling's work will prove of the greatest interest and value.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

NEW NOVELS.

A Modern Dick Whittington. By James Payn. In 2 vols. (Cassells.)

The Magic Ink, and other Stories. By William Black. (Sampson Low.)

A High Little World. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

No Place of Repentance. By Gertrude M. Hayward. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Average Woman. By Wolcott Balestier. With a Biographical Sketch. By Henry James. (Heinemann.)

Lady Patty. By the Author of "Molly Bawn." (White.)

The Unwritten Law. By Mrs. Bennett Edwards. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

A Woman of Shawmut. By E. J. Carpenter. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

Timothy's Quest. By Kate Douglas Wiggin. (Gay & Bird.)

"The Pseudonym Library."—Makar's Dream, and other Stories. (Fisher Unwin.)

It is one of Mr. James Payn's good points (though by the way we do not clearly know what his bad ones are) that he is very little given to repeating himself, and you never quite know where he will have you. A Modern Dick Whittington is less comic than the stories which are perhaps the favourites of those with whom Mr. Payn is a favourite, and it may be open to the charge that, with one exception, its characters are not bitten in quite deep enough; but it is not at all obvious, and it maintains its interest very well indeed. We must have read more than a hundred pages of it without being at all certain what was going to happen in the last hundred, a thing which very rarely happens to us. One may regret a little that Mr. Payn did not emphasise the biting in; for even in the one character which may be said to have been subjected to that process it is not quite complete. It is no doubt a triumph to have invented an almost new variety of the wicked baronet—we did not think it was in even Mr. Payn to do it—and Sir Charles Walden is well nigh new. But we want a little more of him and a good deal more of Kate Salesby, the young woman to whom he behaves wicked-baronetishly. These are the two interesting figures of the book. The others are less interesting, though they speed the story well enough. The household of an Indian Commissioner who is quite the last survival of the wicked Nabob that used to keep dead wives in chests at the foot of his bed; the husband who poisons his wife in the most assiduous and affectionate manner in the world; the good-angel cousin; the rowdy clergyman; the drunken papa—we know them all, but we have no objection to be introduced to them again. Only the hero is, perhaps, a little below par. Even a young man of genius has no right to be quite so colourless. But his colourlessness throws up the wicked baronet's colour as well as that of Kitty Salesby, the young woman of whom we see too little. It was, we must say, either a little ungenerous or a little unheroic of Mr. Payn to let us see so little of Kitty Salesby. He either feared his fate too much or he thought our desert was small.

Two of the three stories which Mr. Black has collected in the pleasant volume called The Magic Ink are open to a very obvious criticism. They are not exactly stories at all, but only studies for or incidents in stories—half bodiless childful of story life. The "magic ink" which a mysterious Mongol against whom he had stumbled gave either in kindness or wrath to Arthur Hughes, the bank clerk, when somebody had stolen his satchel, and which had the, in this case, beneficent property of writing not what the writer intended to write, but his real thoughts, is an excellent notion, and we do not know that it has ever been used precisely before. But its fortunes are not worked out, the incident is never properly closed. So also the wraith of his beloved, which Hector Macintyre saw on Halloween, induced him to take a most romantic and interesting night walk across the solitudes of the Reay forest, and provided Mr. Black with a famous opportunity for describing both the walk itself and the Halloween sports that preceded it. But here, again, the thing seems a little unfinished or even a little unbegun—a sort of note or jotting merely. The same cannot be said of the third story, "Nanciebel," which is excellent. The mistake which "Mr. Richard" made in thinking that he loved a very pretty and not altogether unladylike shop girl, and the mistake which she made in thinking she loved him, and the fortunate manner in which these mistakes were simultaneously corrected by the unconscious co-operation of an Australian cousin Floss and a Scotch gardener, Mr. John Bruce, of the modern superior and educated type, are all handled easily and completely, with a mastery which is very agreeable to see and to an effect which is very pleasant to read.

It was, of course, impossible that any readers of A High Little World who had also read Wuthering Heights should fail to be reminded of the one by the other; but the resemblance, like some other resemblances which strike strongly at first sight, fades away almost entirely on nearer acquaintance, or rather subsists only in such a manner as entirely to preclude any thought of plagiarism or even of unconscious imitation. The Yorkshire moors of the West Riding and the race of hard and rather, or more than rather, brutal Squireens who existed in them well within living memory cannot be said to be other than publica materies. And for the rest the anonymous author of A High Little World has applied his or her very considerable talents rather in the manner of George Eliot than in that of any of the Brontës. The humour of her folk and their talk is not obtrusive, but is very racy; and we have not recently read a better touch than that of the invalid and religiously troubled Kizzy, who relieves her more mundanely worried sister-in-law of the task of baking with this generous and philosophical remark, "Shove me beside t' oven and I'll mind yor loaves, if I burn mysen; it's nobbut a beginning o' damnation—a kind of foretaste like." This stoical attitude is sufficiently shared by all the characters, good and bad, of the story, whether they attempt to murder their wives, or discover long afterwards that they have not succeeded, or contemplate the discovery of the action from outside; whether they are bad, good, or indifferent, they are all, or nearly all, pretty "hard." The chief exception, "Lady" Hartley, improperly so called, is in a certain sense the heroine of the book; and the author has certainly piled it on pretty heavily, by providing her with a son who is not merely a debauchee and a brute, but a would-be murderer and an actual thief, and a daughter who makes a wretched marriage, and burdens her mother with a pair of scrofulous grandchildren. Whether the somewhat hopeless suffering of Lady Hartley does not contravene a well-known canon need not be too narrowly questioned. Besides the Hartley interest, there is another in the shape of the fortunes of a deaf and dumb heiress, Laura Garnett, and yet others, all of which are wound up and unwound very gnostically. The author, if she be really a new hand, is one of remarkable promise.

It is an odd coincidence that while A High Little World inevitably suggests Wuthering Heights, No Place of Repentance, at least at its opening, as inevitably suggests Villette. But here there is even less real likeness than in the other case. Miss Hayward's handling is not more different from the handling of Currer Bell than the fortunes of her heroine are from the fortunes of Lucy Snowe. The novel, indeed, consists of two parts, combined not without ingenuity in respect of the manner in which the lots of Margery Riddell, of her half-brother (a shocking "bounder") George, afterwards Sir George Richmond, and of Richard A'Court, a young gentleman of good impulses, entangled fortunes, doubtful friendships, and very considerable thoughtlessness, are blended and conditioned with and by the lot of M. and Mme. Thionville, citizens of the good town of Duclle in French Flanders. It may be urged that Margery is too much of an innocent, George too much of a rascal, and Richard too much of a scatterbrain for art, if not for nature; also that the denouement is hardly satisfactory. But this would be hypercriticism. The book does not aim very high, but it is distinctly above the average of the circulating library novel.

When the work of a dead man who died young is put forth by his friends with warm protestations that he was much greater than his work, that he was what Mr. Henry James calls "a salient apparition," and so forth, those who, knowing nothing of him personally, have to criticise his book, are put in a rather difficult position. It is impossible for them to apply the salience of the apparition so as to heighten the attraction of the actual remains, and it seems superfluous and a little ungracious to anatomise the latter as if there had been no apparition and no salience. We shall therefore only say that we have no doubt whatever that the praise which Mr. James gives to Mr. Balestier as an author's agent who had learnt not to "blink ugliness," and was able to "encounter the human, not to say the supposedly literary spirit bared of fastidious graces in the simple severity of some of its appetites," is quite well deserved. We should not from the evidence contained in this volume have ranked Mr. Balestier very high as an author himself, that is to say, as a person fitted to encounter the simple severity of the human spirit in its appetite for an interesting story. The tales are very fair specimens of the style of story which has been popular in America for the last decade or so, and which no doubt will some time or other cease to be popular. In the opening one, "Reffey," there is a distinct and not quite unsuccessful attempt to fix character of an unusual but not quite abnormal kind. And that all are provincial is hardly a drawback, because they mean to be so. But we cannot say much more for them.

Neither Mrs. Hungerford nor Mrs. Bennett Edwards can be much congratulated on the books that come next in our list. Molly Bawn, Phillis, and the other precedent works of the author of Lady Patty, were not great books; but they were lively and amusing, and seldom offensive to any tolerably charitable taste. It would, perhaps, be harsh to say of Lady Patty that it comes under this latter ban; but it is slight and tawdry, and destitute of any interest of truth to nature, or—for that matter—to convention. An earl's daughter who had six thousand a year even of rente viagère, might, if she were a person of business, urge her daughter to marry a wealthy baronet, and be better pleased still if she married a wealthy marquis; but she would scarcely feel the ecstatic delight represented here at the latter union for the sake of the title. As for The Unwritten Law, its author tells us that it is rewritten from some earlier tale of hers. No doubt declamation against marriage of the ordinary kind might have been fresher some years ago than it is now; but the lapse of years scarcely excuses the use of "permeate" as if it was the same as "penetrate."

We have yet another pair, though of a different kind, before us. A Woman of Shawmut and Timothy's Quest are both American, and both in their several ways good. The first is a romance of colonial times, rather prettily illustrated by Mr. F. T. Merrill, and, if somewhat overloaded with archaism, doing its archaism not unpleasantly; the second is a story half Dickens and half Miss Warner, which also presents no obstacle to the tolerably well-disposed mind. It is indeed the better of the two; but each is the kind of book to suit its own public, and suit it quite respectably.

The Russian stories selected for the first volume of a collection in the "Pseudonym Library" are derived from persons whose names are communicated to us only in the hieroglyphs appropriate to cigarette-boxes. The first and last, "Makar's Dream" and "The New Life," are märchen, and very fair märchen, that is to say, very fair specimens of a good thing. The midmost and longest, "Bad Company," has (we think, but are not sure) been translated into French if not into English before. The translations are all decidedly good, and the matter of the stories is quite readable.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME CLASSICAL TRANSLATIONS.

The Dialogues of Plato translated into English. By B. Jowett. In five vols. Third Edition. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Prof. Jowett has enjoyed in his time many reputations. First known to the world as a contributor to Essays and Reviews, he unwittingly became the central figure in one of those prolonged theological disputations in which Oxford used to delight. Then, as Master of Balliol for more than twenty years, he has been identified with the extraordinary success of his college, both in the examination schools and in public life. His term of office as Vice-chancellor set the stamp upon the existing scheme of university education. But during all this time Dr. Jowett has also been regius professor of Greek, sitting in the chair of Gaisford. How he has interpreted the duties of this office may be seen from the three books he has written, which are all translations of prose authors—Thucydides, Plato, and the Politics of Aristotle. Of these, Plato came first; and now, in the sunset of his life, he has the satisfaction of finding that a third edition of it is called for. When originally published, scholars and litterateurs agreed in declaring that he had made Plato an English classic. But the translator himself was by no means satisfied with his performance. He has ever since been subjecting it to careful criticism, with the assistance of many loyal friends; and at last it comes forth in its final form "revised and corrected throughout." In the present edition, not only have many new essays been introduced, but "innumerable alterations" have been made in the text, and the convenience of the reader has been consulted by the addition of a marginal analysis and by the augmentation of the index from 61 to 175 pages. Of the new matter, we must be content to mention the criticism of Dr. Henry Jackson's novel explanation of the Platonic Ideas in the Preface, and the further discussion of the nature and growth of language in the Introduction to the Cratylus. But, after all, the essence of the book is the translation; and the portion of the Preface laying down the duties and difficulties of a translator is not unworthy to rank with Matthew Arnold's On Translating Homer. Arnold, however, never carried precept into practice. Prof. Jowett, for his part, has not attempted the higher walks of criticism or philology: he has been satisfied to make himself the interpreter of the greatest Greek philosopher to English-speaking peoples on both sides the Atlantic. Translations, like editions, cannot have an immortality of their own; but it may be safely prophesied that the name of Jowett will for many generations be associated with Plato, as that of Conington with Virgil, and that of Jebb with Sophocles. Is not this sufficient glory for a professor of Greek?

CAMEO SERIES.—A Chaplet from the Greek Anthology. By Richard Garnett. (Fisher Unwin.) Readers of Dr. Garnett's Iphigenia in Delphi will expect to find classic grace and power in these translations, and they will not be disappointed. Unless we are mistaken, some small part—e.g., exxxii.—of them has already appeared in the former volume; a few from Martial, and several from the translator's own pen are added. The latter, we think, are quite worthy of the graceful, elvish company in which they find themselves. Here is a specimen, clii.:

"I hardly ever ope my lips," one cries;
"Simonides, what think you of my ryle?"
"If you're a fool, I think you're very wise;
If you are wise, I think you are a fool."

and here another, cliv.:

"Daphne, eluding Phoebus' flame,
Remained the laurel she became;
For poets, observation proves,
Prefer their laurels to their loves."

Probably few people realise how much wit and sport, as well as grace and pathos, the Anthology contains. Let Agathias (cxxiv.) give evidence of this, when the cat has killed the canary bird. Shall it have hearth-rights still?

"Or deem'st the sly allurements shall avail
Of purring throat and undulating tail?
No! as to pacify Patroclus dead
Twelve Trojans by Pelides' sentence bled,
So shall thy blood appease the feathery shade,
And for one guiltless life shall nine be paid."

We think it open to doubt if the immense preponderance of the rhymed heroic metre—in spite of its traditional equivalence to the elegiac couplet—in these translations quite allows a fair chance to Dr. Garnett of exhibiting the light and graceful playfulness of some of the originals. Here, however, is a very good example of its frequent effectiveness (xxi.: Marcus Argentarius):

"Feasting I watch with westward-looking eye
The flashing constellations' pageantry,
Solemn and splendid; then anon I breathe
My hair, and warbling to my harp I breathe
My full heart forth, and know the heavens look down
Pleased, for they also have their Lyre and Crown."

There are many as good as this, but perhaps none better. In xc. we should say that l. 8 should read "what" for "and"; and the pathos of xcvi. is sadly marred by the misprint "so" for "sow." The likeness of clxiv. to Horace's lines, "Nunc ager Umbreni sub nomine, nuper Ofellae Dictus," &c., is observable.

Thirteen Satires of Juvenal. Translated into English by Alexander Leeper. (Macmillans.) This translation, originally a joint work of Prof. H. A. Strong and Mr. Leeper, has, after three editions, been re-written by the latter. It is a meritorious version, less literal, but more literary, than Mr. J. D. Lewis's translation, yet hardly good enough, we think, to persuade people to read, in the form of prose, the most powerful of Latin verse satirists. English prose is so apt to lose the rhetorical antitheses, the cleaving and scathing qualities of Juvenal's verse. Here, for instance, is a familiar passage—Sat. x., l. 150—not badly rendered, yet showing how intractable is the medium in which the translator works. Hannibal is on the march for Rome:—

"Nothing," cries he, "is gained unless we storm
The city gates with our Punic soldiery, and this my hand plants my standard in the very heart of Subura. Oh, what a sight! oh, what a subject for a caricature—the one-eyed general bestriding the Gaetulian monster! What, then, is his end?
Fie, glory! Why, he in his turn is conquered and flies headlong into exile; and there he sits, that august dependent—a gazing-stock at a king's gates—until it may please his Majesty of Bithynia to awake. The soul which once turned the world upside down shall be quelled, not by a sword, not by a stone, no, nor by a javelin, but by that Nemesis of Cannae, the avenger of all that blood
—just a ring."

Somehow, the point has gone—it sounds admonitory, not satirical. The best passage, on the whole, is, we think, the last part of Sat. 13 (pp. 101-4), where the Juvenalian exposition of the tortures of Conscience is finely rendered. Is there, we wonder, any such single word as "cutleek"—a rendering of sectile porrum, on p. 22?

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. THOMAS HARDY has recently given Mr. William Strang a series of sittings for an etched portrait, the result being the most successful likeness yet done of the distinguished novelist. Messrs. Elkin Mathews and John Lane have acquired the right of reproducing it in their promised work, The Art of Thomas Hardy, which Mr. Lionel Johnson has written for publication in the autumn. We may add that the American edition of the work will be issued by the Cassell Publishing Company, of New York.

WE understand that the Bishop of Winchester is preparing a book of prayers for domestic use. The task will be undertaken in a spirit so broad and unsectarian that it is hoped the work may prove helpful to members of every Church. It is uncertain when the volume will be completed, but when ready it will be issued by Messrs. Isbister & Co.

THE Life and Letters of the late Dr. Magee, which are being prepared by the Rev. Dr. John Cotter Macdonnell, Canon of Peterborough, and formerly chaplain to the archbishop, will shortly be issued in two volumes. The volume of Speeches and Addresses delivered on various occasions by Dr. Magee is ready for immediate publication.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will issue, on August 25, the first part of a new serial work entitled Old and New Paris. It is written by Mr. Sutherland Edwards, and will be fully illustrated.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces The Diary of an Idle Woman at Constantinople, by Mrs. Minto Elliot.

MESSRS. HENRY SOTHERAN & Co. have in the press, for publication by subscription, a small quarto volume on angling, by Mr. Fraser Sandeman, entitled By Hook and by Crook. It will have coloured plates of flies, &c., and many other illustrations, from drawings and etchings by the author.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces a volume entitled Four Biographical Sketches: Bishop Thirlwall, Sir Thomas Phillips, Q.C., Bishop Ollivant, and Griffith Jones, written by Mr. John Morgan.

PROF. MEIKLEJOHN, of St. Andrews, has in the press a new Poetry Book for the use of schools and families, including both original poems and others which have not appeared in any previous collection.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly publish a new three-volume novel by Mrs. J. H. Needell, author of "Stephen Ellicott's Daughter," under the title of Passing the Love of Women.

MESSRS. TRISCHLER & Co. will publish immediately The Fascinating Miss Lamarche, a society novel by a new writer (Mr. C. C. Fernival), containing an exposure of the tricks of the sporting fraternity in both high and low life.

MESSRS. TILLOTSON & SON, of Bolton, have already made arrangements for publishing next year, in a series of newspapers, a sensational love story by Miss Braddon, a domestic novel by Mr. B. L. Farjeon, and a number of short stories by popular writers.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately a second and revised edition of The Jews under the Romans, by the Rev. W. Douglas Morrison.

PROF. ALBERT S. COOK, of Yale, has written a book entitled The Bible and English Prose Style. In this work the beginning of such study is facilitated by bringing together the pieces of Scripture which Ruskin calls "the one essential part" of all his education, to which are prefixed comments by critics and scholars, showing the influence of the Bible on English style. It will be published immediately by Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co., of Boston, U.S.

MR. J. HORSEFALL TURNER, of Idel, Bradford, editor of the Yorkshire County Magazine and of many other local publications, announces a handbook for buyers and sellers, to be called "Ten Thousand Yorkshire Books." It will comprise books written by natives or residents, books printed in the county, and books relating to the county, whether anonymous or privately issued. Of these it will give a full description, with published and selling prices, &c. It is based, in the main, upon the author's own library, incorporating also a number of local catalogues.

MRS. HENRY RYLANDS has revealed herself as the purchaser of the Althorp library, which is already being conveyed to Manchester. Its ultimate destination is a handsome building, to be erected in the centre of that city, after designs by Mr. Basil Champneys, and to be called the John Rylands Library. It appears that Mrs. Rylands, some three years ago, conceived the idea of instituting this memorial to her late husband; and that she has been since purchasing a large number of valuable books and MSS., including the Biblia Pauperum from the Borghese library.

A NEW firm of second-hand booksellers and publishers have just set up in business at No. 1, King's Head-court, Shoe-lane, E.C., under the name of Thomas Hardy & Co. We understand that two journalists—who are also book-collectors—are interested in the concern.

THE council of the International Arbitration and Peace Association offer a prize of £50 for a model chapter on "Peace and War," to be incorporated in elementary school readers. Papers may be written in any language, but the selected ones will be translated into French or English before being forwarded to London.

ITALY, like Denmark (ACADEMY, May 21), has been mindful of the centenary of Shelley's birth. She sends us from Florence (Civelli) a volume entitled Gli Ultimi Giorni di P. B. Shelley, by Signor Guido Biagi, who dates from Viareggio, the little town within whose territory the poet's remains were washed ashore and afterwards burnt. The value of the book consists in the new information which it contains about the last scene of all. This is derived partly from the official archives at Florence, Lucca, and Leghorn, and partly from the evidence of certain eye-witnesses who still survive, or did survive two years ago. As might be anticipated, no new light is thrown upon the circumstances of Shelley's death, while no confirmation is given of the story that his vessel was deliberately run down. If we remember aright, the essential facts contained in these documents appeared in the Century Magazine two or three months ago. But it is interesting to have them in their original form, as brought together by an Italian admirer of our English poet. The volume is illustrated with a number of rather rough cuts, of which those of the old sailors are by far the best.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE forthcoming number of the English Illustrated Magazine will contain an article on Mr. Gladstone, written by Mr. H. W. Lucy, with a portrait, engraved by Mr. Biscoe Gardner, for frontispiece. There will also be an historical paper on Doncaster and the St. Leger; an account of the Paris police, illustrated with portraits of the chief detectives; and an article on the Times newspaper.

THE August number of the Eastern and Western Review, which is now published in the middle of each month, has passed into a second edition. We may add that the editor, both of the English and of the Arabic section, has been from the beginning Prof. H. A. Salmoné, of University College, London.

Good Words for September will contain "In the Lane": a September Song, by the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman"; "Pastoral Life on Loch Etive during last Century," by Mr. William Jolly; "Olympia and its Ruins," by Commander Meryon; the conclusion of the Bishop of Ripon's Study on Joel; the second of the series of papers on "Cloister Life in the Days of Cœur de Lion," by the Dean of Gloucester; "Socialism and Social Organisation," by Prof. R. Flint; "A Song of Birds," by Bessie Dill; and the continuation of the serial stories by Helen Shipton and George Manville Fenn.

THE September number of Scrutator's will contain articles on "The Attainment of the Highest North," by Lieutenant Brainard, one of the survivors of the Greeley Expedition; on "The Nevski Prospekt," by Miss Isabel P. Hapgood, the friend and translator of Tolstoi; and on "French Classical Painting," by Mr. W. C. Brownell.

THE Sunday Magazine for September will contain "The Life to Come," by the Rev. J. Munro Gibson; "Our Bible—How it has Come to Us" (fourth paper), by Canon Talbot; "Recollections of Malta," by the Rev. E. J. Hardy; "The Love of Christ, IV., Its Claims," by the Bishop of Winchester; "Under a Glass Roof," a new serial story by Darley Dale; the continuation of Hesba Stretton's story, "Half Brothers"; and poems by Katharine Tynan, Sarah Doudney, Arthur L. Salmon, and J. Ashcroft Noble.

A SELECTION from the unpublished MSS. of the late Dr. Norman Macleod will appear in the next volume of the Scottish Pulpit.

PRINCESS VICTORIA, of Teck, has expressed her "sincere sympathy" with a new magazine, to be called The Young Woman, edited by Mr. Frederick A. Atkins. The list of contributors includes the Countess of Aberdeen, Archdeacon Farrar, L. T. Meade, Annie S. Swan, Dr. H. W. Richardson, Dr. Thain Davidson, Mrs. Crawford, Mrs. Pennell, Mrs. Fawcett, Mr. W. T. Stead, Mrs. Price Hughes, Mrs. Haws, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Mrs. Jacob Bright, Miss Frances E. Willard, and Mrs. Fenwick Miller. The first number will be issued by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., on September 23.

A NEW journal for boys is to make its appearance the first week in October, and it has been decided to call it Boys. The editor will be Mr. Edward Step; and among those who have promised to contribute are Messrs. G. A. Henty, George Manville Fenn, Ascott R. Hope, J. A. Stewart, Robert Overton, S. Baring Gould, Edward Garrett, G. Barnett Smith, Charles Edwardes, F. Scarlett Potter, F. M. Holmes, Arthur Montefiore, and A. H. Miles. The journal will be issued, in weekly numbers and monthly parts, by the Union Publishing Company.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

AVENGED.

If I should quarrel with thee, friend, and say
Hard things from sudden spite,
Be sure my sorrow will revenge thee quite
Before the passing of another day:
So give me way.
Seek not to check the madness of my course.
Each word shall be a dart
To lodge and rankle at mine inmost heart.
Thou art avenged by mine own remorse,
With sevenfold force.

ARTHUR L. SALMON.

IN MEMORIAM.

SIR DANIEL WILSON.

By the death of Sir Daniel Wilson, President of the University of Toronto, Canada has lost its most distinguished scholar and man of letters. But Sir Daniel Wilson was more than a scholar. To him more than to any other it is due that the Province of Ontario retains unimpaired its great centre of higher education—the University of Toronto; it was by his energy and eloquence that the endowment was preserved intact when assailed by a number of denominational institutions, eager for its division. He was the indefatigable defender of academic independence, alike against religious prejudices and against the mean expediences of politicians.

Sir Daniel's career was an interesting one. For some time after leaving the University of Edinburgh he made a living by his pen, and turned his hand to well-nigh every sort of literary work that offered itself. It is said that he was the first to translate into English that well-known children's book, The Swiss Family Robinson. During these years he was on intimate terms with the literary and artistic circles both of Edinburgh and of London; and in his later life nothing was pleasanter than to sit at his hospitable table at Toronto and listen to his stories of Turner and other old acquaintances. He was himself no mean engraver, and one, if not more, of the engravings from Turner's pictures came from his hand. Then, as ever, of untiring activity, he devoted his spare time to archaeology; became the secretary of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland; and wrote the Memorials of Edinburgh, and the far more important work, the Prehistoric Annals of Scotland. The latter was, probably, one of the first works in English which attempted to construct history from unwritten materials.

But Wilson found the effort to combine original investigation with the earning of a livelihood by the pen a severe strain, and consented, therefore, to accept a professorship in University College, Toronto. This was, I believe, during the governor-generalship of Lord Elgin. Arrived in Canada, he, of course, found it impossible to continue his mediæval studies, and turned to the field of inquiry most nearly connected with them—the ethnology and anthropology of savage races, and especially of the North American Indians. He spent a great deal of time and labour over the study of their languages and habits, and became one of the first authorities on the subject. Indeed, Wilson was one of the creators of the new science of Anthropology, or, as he preferred to call it, Ethnology. The very term Ethnology sufficiently indicates that Wilson belonged to that older school which occupied itself chiefly with craniology and similar matters; and he was never greatly interested in what may be called the sociological inquiries of later anthropologists, as for instance into the matriarchate or exogamy.

As President in his later years he was a dignified head of the University. His annual addresses at Convocation were always elevating and stimulating. In a continent where there is a constant temptation to over emphasis and materialism, the old-fashioned literary grace of his public utterances was peculiarly refreshing. The great disaster of the university fire seemed for an hour or so like to kill him; but before the night was over his courage revived, and all his old sturdiness showed itself. He set an example of business-like resolution; and it was chiefly owing to his influence that the work of the University was continued without the omission of a single lecture.

In the difficulties occasioned by the recent "federation" to the University of hitherto independent denominational colleges, and by the widening in other ways of academic borders, it was not always the good fortune of the present writer to find himself in perfect accord with the President's views. It seemed to him that the President was sometimes too mindful of the antagonisms of the past, and that he scarcely realised the change in educational conditions which had taken place during his residence in the country. But Sir Daniel always distinguished between open opposition and underhand intrigue; and no divergencies of opinion made him less considerate, or diminished his courtly and delicate kindness.

W. J. A.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

In the Antiquary for August, Mr. David MacRitchie contributes an interesting paper on subterranean dwellings, a subject which has not received the attention it deserves. Some of the earliest men of whom we have any knowledge lived in caves, and we have no reason to doubt that the practice has gone on from those remote days to the present hour. No one imagines that the cave-dwellers of historic times excavated their abodes. The so-called caves at Nottingham, that of St. Robert near Knaresborough, and many others of a like kind, were older excavations applied to modern wants. Mr. R. C. Hope continues his papers on Holy Wells. He has now arrived in the Isle of Man. We trust that some day or other he will give us a gazetteer of Holy Wells. Mr. John Ward has a paper on the Cardiff Museum, which seems to contain important objects, but arrangement is not its strongest point.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ARISTOTLE AS AN HISTORIAN.

III.

Screyningham Rectory, York.

It is an unfortunate, if not a fatal, thing that Aristotle should fail, practically, to name any of his sources of information for his several statements. Indeed, it can scarcely be said that we know precisely what his notions of historical evidence were. It is not a matter which forced itself particularly on his attention. We have no reason for supposing that he drew any exact distinction between oral tradition and written records, and, again, between records simply embodying old traditions from unknown sources and genuine contemporary narratives of whose trustworthiness we might have a reasonable assurance. He speaks of the reigns of Athenian kings with the same confidence as of the career of Theramenes; nor is there the least ground for supposing that he had any idea of the results which would have followed if the policy of Themistokles, Kleisthenes, and Perikles could have been carried out logically and without hindrance—in other words, that he had any appreciation of the vital principles which were at stake in the great struggle between Athens and Sparta. He knew that the two cities had quarrelled, and that the outcome of the quarrel was the downfall of Athens; but he did not know why the quarrel was (as Perikles told the Athenians that it was) inevitable, or whether the strife was really provoked by Sparta or by Athens. For him the whole course of events exhibited only two parties fighting, and he saw that in Athens there was always a considerable number of oligarchs whose sympathies were with Sparta, not with Athens; but as to the honesty or the treachery of their policy or action he does not attempt to reach any definite conclusion.

We have, then, in every case to sift the statements of Aristotle and to weigh his judgments, accepting no historical proposition on his authority alone; and we have, further, to see how far those who magnify his authority may be taken as trustworthy guides themselves. To say the least, they seem to move not less easily than Aristotle in the dim regions of old Athenian legends. The "creation" of the Archon is assigned with sufficient confidence to the accession of Medon or Akastos; while as to the Areiopagos we are assured that it had at first been a body of advisers nominated by the king from the families of the aristocracy, although the whole picture of Athenian society in the days of Drakon and Solon shows that this "aristocracy" consisted of the heads of clans, one of whom had been by them chosen king, instead of the king having fallen from

Jupiter and chosen a certain number of the clan chiefs for his counsellors. As to Kodros or Medon or Akastos, we have not an inkling of the real state of the case. In their time, or in that of their successors, the Areiopagos was growing, it is said, to be the chief power of the state. In short, we are bidden to follow the lines of constitutional development for periods, of which Cornewall Lewis has said that

"the history of Athens for 794 years during the reigns of sixteen kings, from Kekrops I. to Kodros, of thirteen perpetual Archons from Medon to Alemacon, and also under seven decennial Archons, from Charops in 752 to Eryxias in 684 B.C., and under the annual Archons from Creon in 683 B.C. to the time of Cylon, is a complete blank, except so far as it is decorated with fabulous legends attached to the names of Theseus and of Kodros."

Aristotle does not, indeed, mention Kodros personally, although he names the Kodridai (eh. 3), and although he says that the office of the Polemarchos was instituted because some of the kings had shown themselves unwelcome. We cannot, therefore, say whether he had heard or believed the tale of the devotion of Kodros and of the abolition of royalty, because it had been too highly exalted by his self-sacrifice to be fitly held by any mortal man after him. The truth is that Aristotle seems to be repeating a tradition which he may have obtained from Herakleides Pontikos, whose statement, however, is a little more sweeping, for he says that no more kings were chosen after Kodros because they had generally become luxurious and effeminate. The two explanations exclude each other. It is absurd to walk among quagmires and flatter ourselves that our standing ground is secure.

Here also it cannot be said that we obtain much fresh knowledge from this treatise of Aristotle. Nor are we much indebted to him for what he tells us about ostracism. Of this measure he speaks in a chapter (22), which is little more than a jumble of notes on subjects not directly connected with each other; and if we are to submit ourselves unconditionally to the authority of his name, we shall believe that ostracism was devised for the special purpose of baffling the Peisistratids and their adherents, and that for three years they continued so to get rid of the friends of Hippias. The statement convicts itself. There is no evidence for the repeated application of the measure to the kinsfolk and the friends of the banished despot; and Aristotle (if the chapter be really his handiwork) himself says here that something like two and twenty years had passed since the fall of the tyranny before any use was made of the instrument of ostracism. It is amazing to be told that Kleisthenes devised this plan for the express purpose of getting rid of Hipparchos, who continued to live quietly at Athens for some twenty years; that this forbearance was due to the tolerant and gentle disposition of the demos; and that, having at length so banished Hipparchos and Megakles, a citizen of the deme of Alopekê, they made a raid for three years on the friends of the old dynasty generally, and then took to using ostracism against others, the first victim being Xanthippos, the son of Ariphron and father of Perikles. Of this Megakles we know nothing. For the ostracism of Xanthippos there is no more evidence than there is for the assertion that Kleisthenes was hoist by his own petard; and if, as the text implies, a large number of citizens paid the penalty of their pre-eminence at the same time, it seems strange that Aristotle should not give us their names, or some of them. Misled by his language, some have come to the conclusion that the Athenians made a reckless use of the machinery of ostracism. Instead of exhibiting the forbearance which the Aristotelian treatise in one of its sentences ascribes to the demos, we are told that, having once tasted the pleasures of this summary method of dealing with leading personages, the populace was unwilling to abandon it, and extended it to others from whom no similar danger could be feared. The picture is much like that of a revolutionary mob; but the fact is that, in the eighty or ninety years during which it was used, the measure sent only some ten persons into a banishment which involved neither loss of property nor civil infamy (atimia); that against the abuse of this power the most jealous precautions were taken; that it was rarely, if ever, resorted to more than once in a year; that the necessity of the measure was first fully discussed in the senate of the Five Hundred; and that no one could be banished unless at least six thousand citizens gave their votes for his temporary, and not dishonourable, exile. It is also certain that in the case of Themistokles the issue was determined by the Eupatrids, who put forth their full strength against him. We have the distinct statement of Thucydides that for the main body of the citizens—that is, for the demos, or, if they are to be so called, the populace—he was an object of genuine affection, and that they continued to cherish and reverence his memory after his death, in spite of the lying biography which the Eupatrids had put together to destroy his influence and to blacken his name.

From the subject of ostracism Aristotle passes to the revival of the influence of the Areiopagos after the repulse of the army and fleet of Xerxes. This revival he attributes to the conduct of the members of the Council before the battle of Salamis. His story is that, in the extremity of their dismay, the generals had in a body made a proclamation that each man should save himself as best he could, and that the members of the Areiopagos, by giving a largess of eight drachmas to each of the generals, prevailed upon them to re-enter their ships. This is mentioned distinctly (ch. 23) as the cause of the revived influence of the Council, and of the general good government of the Athenians which followed it. It is a very strange story indeed, for which, as usual, Aristotle does not give the sources of his information. It may be true, or it may be false; but if it be true, the whole narrative of Herodotus of the incidents immediately preceding the battle of Salamis must be dismissed as a magnificent but groundless fiction. That narrative is not without its inconsistencies and improbabilities; but much of it seems to bear the stamp of truth. The story of Aristotle is unlikely to the last degree, if indeed the bribing of ten generals with eight drachmas apiece be not altogether incredible.

It is a curious thing that both this tale and the narrative of Herodotus should have much to do with bribery; but the two stories nevertheless exclude each other. According to the story in Herodotus, Themistokles received from the Euboians a sum of not less than thirty talents, under condition that he should prevent the retreat of the Greeks from Artemision. Themistokles failed in doing this; and the Euboians, if they had actually paid the money, must have felt some regret for the useless waste. With five of these thirty talents he is said to have secured the co-operation of the Spartan, Eurybiades. By three more he conquered the opposition of the Corinthian, Adeimantos. The remaining twenty-two, it is said, he kept for himself. After the fight at Salamis, Themistokles is accused of heavy exactions made by him on the people of the Aegean islands; but the Aegean islanders make no complaint of their wrongs. Nor do the Euboians charge him with having broken faith in the matter of their thirty talents. We cannot for a moment suppose that the Athenians would have refused to listen to the Euboians, had they demanded an account of the way in which their money had been spent; and if the answer, that he had spent eight talents in winning Eurybiades and Adeimantos over to the interests of Athens and of Hellas generally, should have been accepted as valid for this portion of the money, he would certainly have been compelled to yield up most of the remaining twenty-two talents, if not all. The fact that no charge was brought against him by either the Euboians or the Aegean islanders is really proof conclusive that no such sums were ever given or exacted.

But this is not all. If there be one thing on which it may be said that Herodotus is never tired of insisting, it is that the resolution of Themistokles never wavered, and that his courage never failed. In the pages of Herodotus the battle of Themistokles is with the Spartans and Corinthians. Not a hint is given of direct opposition on the part of his Athenian fellow-commanders; and the members of the Areiopagos should have addressed their overtures of bribery less to these than to Eurybiades and Adeimantos. If the need had been urgent at Artemision, it was nothing less than a matter of life or death at Salamis. When the means employed to win them before had not been of the most honourable sort, it might not unreasonably be supposed that with the same men the effect of the same means might with advantage be tried again. Bribery is a thing commonly done in secret; and in the work of Themistokles at this time there is no lack of the element of secrecy. But, strangely enough, the device to which he resorts has nothing to do with bribery. What he did in secret was to send to the Persian king a message which made him issue an order rendering the retreat of the Greeks from Salamis without fighting absolutely impossible. It is by informing them of this that Themistokles finally silences all opposition. Nothing is said of drachmas or talents, although the most savage and insolent of his opponents was the very Adeimantos who had sold himself for three talents off the Euboian coast. According to the story of Herodotus, he had twenty-two of the Euboian talents still. Why did he not hold out again to the Corinthian the bait of two or three more in order so to obtain his heart's desire, if he could obtain it in no other way? The fact is, that the story of bribery, whether by the Euboians or by the members of the Areiopagos, has as much to rest upon as the notion of the treasures which lie under the feet of the rainbow. But Plutarch tells another tale, of which the Aristotelian story may be a variation. According to this tale, the resources of the Athenians after the abandonment of their city were almost exhausted. Their treasury was practically empty when, like the Roman senate after Cannae, the members of the Areiopagos, by their own munificent contributions, roused the zeal of their countrymen for the public weal—a circumstance infinitely more likely to revive or extend their influence than the bribery of a few generals by a few shillings apiece to return to their duty. It can scarcely be said that the statements of Aristotle in this chapter say much for his historical trustworthiness or for his judgment.

GEORGE W. COX.

NOTES ON HERODAS.

Cambridge: Aug. 15, 1892.

I. 25. I was wrong about the ascript. The word looks like καλῆς or κοῆς (not κοῆς). That καλῆς is an error due to confusion with the last syllable of καῖνης is improbable. I think that the gloss is καῖνης (for the ν may be read as α), and that a substantive was written above. In 79 I read καλῆς; how the word ended I cannot say. The superscript seems to be either λῆα, the ι rising from the λ, or κα, the λ being merely a flourish to the top of the λ below. To separate 25 and 79 will seem impossible to many; all the more so, if λῆα is the superscript in 79. But I am by no means certain that Mr. Kenyon's first reading of the superscript in 25 is not the right one, for the first letter, if λ, has, I believe, no parallel; if α, several. Of a word κοῆς I can find no trace; and a gloss κοῆς with δευ written above it is so enigmatic that I prefer to believe that our diplomatists are fallible.

I. 64. καὶ δὲ ἀπὸ πρῆξιν ἡδύων (ῥῆσιν καὶ σοί. Bucheler reads δὲ and ῥῆσιν. The long tail is probably the relic of an α. For the ending cf. II. 58 and 65. I prefer σοί to πρῶς.

II. 8. In support of α[ι] cf. esp. I. 7. — ι δὲ ι is quite legible.

II. 10. In my letter of July 30 it would have been more fair to a reading that I invented, but rejected, to say that αῖν, not μιν, might have stood in the gap.

II. 27. In my letter of August 13 I ought to have said that -α is twice, not once, a dissyllable.

IV. 51. τῶτ' ὑποκνήθη (for the order cf. Soph. Phil. 128); or τῶτ' (αὐτῶ) is read in Archil. 60 and Hipponax 70. For the down-stroke of τ cf. 10; for the short cross-stroke 65, &c. The π is smudged, and its legs are not quite parallel; but this is not uncommon.

V. 30. I am now satisfied that we have ση. For ση = δύσσει cf. Meyer (Gk. Gr., ed. I., § 138 and 142), who shows that the normal contraction is modified, if it would cause obscurity. The form ση would obliterate the ordinary personal ending. I may add that the accent on δῖ seems to me strong evidence in favour of the reading ἀλυσδῖ.

VI. 90. The letters above the last syllable of προκυκλήν I read as κ[υ]κλῖος, i.e., the genitive of προκυκλῖς. The ι and the ι of the preceding line run into one another.

VII. 88. I read λητ αρ ισισι, i.e., τὰ λῆτ' ἑρ' ἱσσι, expunging the second ι as a dittography; and I fancy that the second ι is cancelled by a dot; if so, probably the following σ was dotted. The σ of the first ισ is hump-backed (cf. the last σ in II. 72; also VI. 72, &c.). Mr. Kenyon seems to have tacked on the flap of this σ to the following ι, and so read υ; but he hesitated, and rightly hesitated, to read ουσι.

VII. 113. There are two dots over the ι and υ of υος, which may be the feet of a χ, and I think that I see the letter itself. This gives us ιχουος, which was proposed long ago by Mr. Hicks. I ought to add that the first of the two dots may be looked on as the end of the tail of ρ, and that I looked expecting to find χ.

I must apologise to Prof. Palmer for having in my last letter carelessly used a turn of phrase, which is not only exaggerated, but also appears aggressive and discourteous. I had certainly no wish to be either the one or the other; and no one can be a warmer admirer of Prof. Palmer's gift of divination than myself. F. D.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY.

Early Greek Philosophy. By J. Burnet. (A. & C. Black.)

Essays on Literature and Philosophy. By Edward Caird. In 2 vols. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

Distinction and the Criticism of Beliefs. By Alfred Sidgwick. (Longmans.)

EARLY Greek philosophy is a study which in England has hitherto been left too much in the hands of theologians and littérateurs, or of mere philologists. Mr. Burnet's volume marks a new departure. For refined scholarship, patient criticism of the sources, objectivity of thought, and familiarity with the newest literature of the subject, it may rank with the best German treatises; while it is favourably distinguished from them by simplicity of style and utter absence of pedantry. Mr. Burnet accepts the two main propositions established by Zeller, (1) that Greek philosophy learned nothing from the Oriental systems, and (2) that down to the time of the Sophists it was completely materialistic; indeed, he would go beyond Zeller in his sharp severance of it from theology. On points of detail, however, he frequently differs from the great German historian, generally adopting, as would seem, the views of Baenker. Thus he places Parmenides after Heraclitus, and refuses to consider the subsequent course of thought as a compromise between their respective systems. His treatment of Pythagoreanism is the most original part of the work, and he must expect to see it vigorously contested. Democritus, who has received so much attention of late years, is not included in the present survey. According to Mr. Burnet, he belongs to a later period of speculation. To Leucippus, the real author of the atomic theory, belongs the glory of having brought Greek philosophy to a point beyond which no further progress was possible on the lines hitherto pursued. I must not omit to mention, among the merits of this excellent volume, that it contains a complete translation of the fragments of the early philosophers.

There are many who, without being either dull or fools, would confess that they find the philosophy of Hegel somewhat harsh and crabbed, whether as expounded in the works of the master himself or in those of his numerous disciples. But assuredly under the touch of Prof. Edward Caird it becomes "musical as is Apollo's lute"—or rather as Amphion's, for under the charm of his instrument the most stubborn and inert materials seem spontaneously to group themselves into harmonious and stately edifices. But it is, I think, only in dealing with philosophical conceptions that this easy mastery is shown. Hence the Professor's literary essays, which, doubtless as dealing with more popular subjects, have been placed first, are to my mind much less admirable than the two articles on "Cartesianism" and "Metaphysic," reprinted from the Encyclopædia Britannica, which fill the second volume. The characteristic Hegelian formulæ are indeed brought to bear on Dante; but the result obtained is no more than what Macaulay already saw without any help from Hegel, which is that for the Florentine poet the future world is simply the world of actual experience reflected from a background of eternity. Neo-Hegelianism throws no light on Wordsworth and Carlyle, nor they on it. The power and lucidity of Prof. Caird's philosophical criticism is perhaps too dearly purchased by excessive simplification in some cases, and by tantalising reticence in others. For example, a discussion on Spinoza, in which the influence of Hobbes is ignored, strikes one as incomplete. And an analysis of the relation of metaphysic to religion, with which the second volume concludes, has nothing to say about the personality of God or the immortality of man.

Prof. Caird himself quotes this quatrain from Omar Khayyam:

"There was a door to which I found no key,
There was a veil through which I could not see,
Some little talk awhile of Me and Thee
There was, and then no more of Thee and Me."

Putting object and subject for thee and me may we not say,

mutato nomine de te Fabula narratur?

Mr. Alfred Sidgwick is a careful and subtle thinker, but his literary faculty is by no means on a par with his logical powers; and owing to the very disjointed exposition of his philosophy, together with the almost complete absence of apposite illustrations, it is very difficult to make out what he would be at. The impression left on me is that of an attempt, more amiable than hopeful, to allay the asperities of controversy by sprinkling on the disputants a pinch of dust made by grinding up logical distinctions in the evolutionary mill. "Nature," he insists, "is continuous throughout," hence the things denoted by our conceptions and named by our language pass into one another by a series of infinitesimal gradations. Frame definitions as carefully as you please, there will still be found somewhere or at some time an object of which the notion so defined can neither be affirmed nor denied. Now, as since the time of Socrates, controversy has been carried on by means of definitions, it would be advisable in all discussions to agree on definitions embodying distinctions that are valid relatively to the question at issue. The suggestion would be more pertinent if Mr. Sidgwick had taken the pains to show that his rule has been contravened in practice, still more if it was true, as he seems to think, that the controversies which perennially divide mankind are chiefly concerned with the meaning of words. It is remarkable that he begins by deciding the most important controversy of at least our own time off hand in favour of his own side. In saying that Nature is continuous throughout, he assumes that not only organic but inorganic bodies are connected by a series of transitional links. Of what value, then, would his dialectic be as against opponents like Mr. Mivart or Mr. Wallace who affirm that there are breaks in Nature, notably between man and beast? To this Mr. Sidgwick will, perhaps, reply that the controversy about evolution bears on matters of fact and will be decided by facts, whereas he is interested in the much more obstinate conflicts between rival ideals, where nothing in the nature of things exactly corresponds to the complimentary epithets with which each party decorates its own tastes and pursuits, or to the opprobrious epithets with which it bespatters those of its opponents. As cases in point he instances the question: Shall we put our trust in Conservatism or in Reform? Should we prefer old books or new? Ought fiction to edify or merely to please? (p. 44). But I quite fail to understand how any manipulation of language can bring such questions nearer to a satisfactory solution. In so far as they are really important, it is to the survival of the fittest that we must look for a decision in favour of one side or of a compromise between the two. I must confess that to me such controversies seem rather frivolous; and if, as seems to be implied, they "stir up the angriest feeling" (p. 44) among Mr. Sidgwick's acquaintances, one can only wish those ladies and gentlemen a sweeter temper or a more serious topic of conversation.

ALFRED W. BENN.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION GRANTS.

THE following is a list of the grants for scientific purposes voted at the Edinburgh meeting of the British Association:—

Mathematics and Physics.—Prof. Carey Foster, electrical standards, £25; Lord M'Laren, meteorological observations on Ben Nevis, £150; Mr. J. G. Symons, photographs of meteorological phenomena, £10; Lord Rayleigh, tables of mathematical functions, £15; Sir G. G. Stokes, recording the direct intensity of solar radiation, £10; Mr. H. Fox, magnetic work at the Falmouth Observatory, £25.

Chemistry and Mineralogy.—Sir H. Roscoe, wave-length tables of the spectra of the elements, £10; Prof. Roberts-Austen, analysis of iron and steel, £10; Prof. H. E. Armstrong, formation of haloids from pure materials (partly renewed), £15; Prof. T. E. Thorpe, action of light upon dyed colours, £5; Prof. W. A. Tilden, isomeric naphthalene derivatives, £20.

Geology.—Prof. J. Prestwich, erratic blocks, £10; Rev. T. Wiltshire, fossil phyllopoda, £5; Prof. J. Geikie, photographs of geological interest, £10; Prof. E. Hull, underground waters, £5; Mr. J. Horne, shell-bearing deposits at Clava Chapel-hall, &c., £20; Dr. R. H. Traquair, eurypterids of the Pentland Hills, £10.

Biology.—Dr. P. L. Sclater, table at the Naples Zoological Station, £100; Prof. E. R. Lankester, table at the Plymouth Biological Laboratory, £30; Prof. A. Newton, fauna of Sandwich Islands, £100; Dr. P. L. Sclater, zoology and botany of West India Islands, £50; Prof. W. A. Herdman, exploration of Irish Sea, £30; Prof. J. G. McKendrick, physiological action of oxygen in asphyxia, £20; Prof. W. H. Flower, index of genera and species of animals, £20.

Geography.—Colonel Godwin Austen, exploration of Karakorum Mountains, £50; Sir C. W. Wilson, Scottish place names, £10; Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, climatology and hydrography of tropical Africa, £50.

Economic Science and Statistics.—Prof. W. Cunningham, methods of economic training, £3.

Anthropology.—Prof. W. H. Flower, anthropometric laboratory, £5; Dr. J. G. Garson, exploration of ancient remains in Abyssinia, £25; Dr. E. B. Tylor, north-western tribes of Canada, £100; Sir W. Turner, habits, customs, &c., of natives of India (renewed), £10; Prof. R. Meldola, corresponding society's committee, £30.

A total of £1000.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LANGUAGE OF ARZAWA.

Oxford: Aug. 10, 1892.

Among the cuneiform tablets found at Tel el-Amarna is a letter, now in the Gizeh Museum, which was sent to Amenophis III. of Egypt by the king of a country the name of which was at first read Arzapi. We now know that the last character in the name has the value of wa or ma, not of pi, and that consequently the country in question was called Arzawa or Arzama. The letter is written in a language hitherto unknown; but, thanks to the ideographs contained in it, as well as to the Assyrian words and phrases used in it ideographically, a good deal of the language can be made out. Several of the characters have peculiar forms; and it is only since the discovery of letters from the land of the Amorites in which the same forms occur that they have been identified with certainty. The tentative transliterations formerly given by myself and others must, therefore, be corrected in many particulars.

The copies of the letter made by Dr. Winckler and myself differed in some points; and, accordingly, it became necessary to examine the tablet afresh, in view of our present knowledge of the peculiar form of handwriting presented by it. This I have lately done, and I can now offer scholars a more accurate transcription of the text than was previously possible. Ideographs and Assyrian forms used ideographically are printed in capitals. It should be added that the separate paragraphs of the letter are divided from one another by lines, and that a small horizontal wedge has been drawn over the head of the first character in each paragraph. I add a translation of the text wherever a comparison with similar letters in the Tel el-Amarna collection allows us to make one:

1. a(?)^{*}-ma D.P.† (of "man"); Ni-mu-ut-ri-ya
To Nimut-riya
SAR RAB SAR MAT Mi-iz-za-ri
king great, king of the land of Egypt,
2. X D.P. (of "man") Tar-khu-un-da-ra-us of Tarkhundarans
SAR MAT Ar-za-wa KI-BI-MA king of the land of Arzawa the letter:
3. Y-mi SULUM-in R-SUN-mi DAM-MES-mi unto me is peace: (to) my houses, my wives, TUR-MES-mi
my sons,
4. AMIL-MES-RAB-RAB-INA-TSAB-MES-mi
the officers in my armies
D.P. KUR-RA-SUN-mi
my horses,
5. bi-ib-bi-id-mi KUR-KUR-SUN-mi gan-an-da
my chariots, my countries, abundantly
6. khu-u-ma-an-sulum-in may there be peace!
7. du-ug-qa Z khu-u-ma-an-sulum-in GIS-MES-tu
Again . . . may there be peace (to) thy trees,
8. R-SUN-ti DAM-MES-ti TUR-MES-ti AMIL-thy houses, thy wives, thy sons, the MES-RAB-RAB-INA-officers in
9. TSAB-MES-ti D.P. KUR-RA-MES-ti bi-ib-bi-id-ti thy armies, thy horses, thy chariots,
10. MAT-SUN-ti khu-u-ma-an-sulum-in GIS-thy countries, may there be peace, (even to) MES-tu
thy trees.
11. Ka-a-la-at-ta-mi e-nu-un D.P. (of "man")
O my brother, now
Ir-sa-ap-pa
Irsappa
12. n.p. kha-lu-ga-tal-la-an-mi-in a-u-ma-ni
my messenger I have sent,
TUR-RAK-ti
thy daughter,
13. AN-UD-mi ku-in DAM-AN-ni u-wa-da-O my Sun-god, for a wife that he an-zi
may ask.
14. nu-us-si li-il khu-ud i-ni AN SAG-IR si head
15. ka-a-la-ta up-pa-akh-khu-un i zu-kha
O brother, as a present one zukha la-li-ya
I have despatched of gold
16. SULUM-an-ta
as a peace-offering to thee.

* Of this character only one wedge is left, which, however, would suit the sign for a better than any other.
† Determinative prefix.
‡ Between this character and the next is an oblique wedge, denoting division.

17. a-ni-ya-at-ta la-mu ku-un-da-as kha-ad-
Thy wife (?)
ra-mu
18. ub-bi-wa-ra-ad-mu ne-it-ta up-pa-akh-khi
EUBA-an-da my . . . a present afterwards
19. nu-ut-ta D.P. kha-lu-ga-tal-la-at-ti-in am-thy messenger me-el-la honoured (?)
20. D.P. kha-lu-ga-tal-la-an EUBA khad-khad-ra-a the messenger after . . .
khu-u-da-a-ak
may he obtain
21. na-i-na-ad u-wa-an-du whatever he desires.
22. nu-ut-ta u-wa-an-zi u-da-an-zi ku-
Much (?) he asks, he requests sa-ta TUR-RAK-ti
from thee (?) thy daughter
23. D.P. Kha-lu-ga-tal-as mi-is D.P. Kha-lu-ga-the messenger mine; thy mestal-la-ta
senger
24. ku-is-tu el BIT qar na-as ag-ga-as house . . .
25. nu-mu AN-tu akh-su-us ga-as-ga-as MAT-my, thy god . . . coun-ya-as ub-bi-is-ta-us as-su-un try
26. zi-in-nu-uk khu-u-ma-an-da
may there be.
27. nu-kha-ad-du sa-as-sa SAD-E I-ga-id from the mountains of Igaid
28. nu-ut-ta GIS-KAL-LA bi-ib-bi es-khir much (?) usu-wood, of a chariot for the . . .
up-pa-khu-un la-li
as a present I send,
29. ki-is-sa-ri-is-si D.P. Ir-sa-ap-pa D.P. kha-lu-by the hand of Irsappa [my] [ga-tal-la-mi]
messenger,
30. EST-EN 'su-kha la-li-ya GISone 'sukha I have despatched of gold KI-LAL-BI tu
its weight . . .
31. XX MA-NA GIS-
20 manehs of gold, 3 ban of . . . 3 ban
pir-kar . . .
32. III BAN khu-uz-zi VIII BAN ku-si-it-ti-in 3 ban of . . . 8 ban of . . .
33. C BAN AN-NA TAB al-ga-an C BAN
100 ban of lead, a pair of . . . 100 ban kha-ab . . .
of . . .
34. C BAN SIR tal-li-ya as-sa . . .
100 ban of . . . I have sent, . . .
35. IV TAK ku-ku-bu RAB NI KHI-GA
4 kukubu stones, large, of good appearance
VI TAK ku-ku-[bu TUR]
6 [small] kukubu stones
36. SA NI KHI-GA III GIS-QU-ZA of which the appearance is good, 3 chairs
khir khad-khad-na . . .
37. X GIS-QU-ZA SA GIS-KAL is-khir bi-10 chairs of usu-wood for the . . . of a bi-bi . . .
chariot . . .
38. N akh-khu-uz II GIS-KAL la-li
10 . . . 2 usu-trees I sent.

It is possible that the character I have transcribed wa ought to be read ma; in this case, what I have read ma will have to be changed into ba.

Some of the characters appear under two forms. La has its usual form in certain words instead of its Amorite form, possibly indicating a different pronunciation of the vowel; the ideograph GIS "tree" is written in two different ways; and in l. 22 the second u has the form of kid. The character I have transcribed khir (ll. 28, 36, 37) has also the value of 'sar.

The character I have represented by x is unfortunately partially destroyed; but the traces that remain make it probable that it consisted of the two characters kha-ad, rather than a-na, as Dr. Winckler thought. If so, the word khaad in l. 11 will signify "of."

The characters denoted by the letters y and z may be single characters; but it is better to regard them as composed of the character which has the various values of kuk, ban, ru, ra, du and da, and the suffixes of the second personal pronoun ti and ta.

The translations I have added, wherever it is possible to give them, will show what were some of the grammatical characteristics of the language. The noun had three cases: a nominative, denoted by the suffix -a; an accusative, denoted by the suffix -n; and an oblique case, which ended in a vowel. The adjective was placed after the substantive, and took the same suffixes as the substantive. Thus, khaluga-talus mis is "my messenger" in the nominative, khaluga-tallan min, "my messenger," in the accusative. The latter form is also written khaluga-tallatin, "thy messenger," where the final nasal of the substantive has been assimilated to the dental of the pronoun tin, "thy." The plural terminates in -i, as is clear from a comparison in bibbi, "a chariot," with bibbid, "chariots." It would, therefore, seem that ubbi-warad in l. 18 is a plural. The latter word, when compared with ubbitana in l. 25, shows that compounds existed in the language; one of these is khaluga-talus, "a messenger," the second element of which is the verb which we find in l. 34.

The first and second possessive pronouns offer a curious resemblance to those of the Indo-European languages. Line 10 shows that after certain substantives the possessive pronoun of the second person had the form tu; and, therefore, it is probable that mu in l. 17 is a form of the possessive pronoun of the first person, since khadra, to which it is attached, appears in another letter from Arzawa (Winckler III., No. 238) as khadra-i and khadr-ikki. I may add that in this letter the words khattannas sarru-as may, perhaps, signify "the Hittite king."

The precativ third person was denoted by the prefixes khu-man, while a comparison of the words u-dan-zi (l. 22), u-wa-dan-zi (l. 13), u-wa-nzi (l. 22), and u-wa-ndu (l. 21), shows that the third person of one of the tenses of the indicative was indicated by the prefix (or prefixes) nu, another tense or conjugation being indicated by the insertion of a dental between the prefix and the stem. It is interesting to find that the verbal forms were expressed by means of prefixes, and not of affixes.

On the other hand, the suffix da or (u)da was the sign of the adverb. Here, as elsewhere where a dental (d and z) occurred between two vowels, there was a tendency to nasalise the first vowel.

A. H. SAYCE.

"ETHNOLOGY IN FOLKLORE."

Barnes: August 17, 1892.

I assure Canon Taylor that he has wholly misunderstood the argument of my book. If I ask permission to state it, I do so because of the importance of the subject apart from my exposition of it. I wanted to argue, and thought I had argued, as follows:

(a) A detailed examination of folklore shows that it contains within its own area, independently of any other subject, two distinct lines, at all events, of primitive thought—one line being the exact opposite of the other in motif and action.

(b) An explanation of this fact is needed. Translating the phenomena into terms of ethnology, I classed one line of survivals—the more rude and savage—as non-Aryan in origin, and the second line—less rude and barbaric—as Aryan in origin. The terms non-Aryan and Aryan may be bad, but the ethnic distinctions in folklore remain for whatever names may be proper to give them.

(c) I then grouped a few of the accepted facts about Aryan ethnology together, and concluded that folklore seemed to assist those scholars who believe that there was an Aryan race.

Of course, I know quite well that this conclusion is opposed to the views of Canon Taylor and of those German scholars which he has summarised so admirably in his recent book. But I could not help this. It is the result of my research, such as it is, and could not have been twisted to suit other views. When, therefore, Canon Taylor talks of my premises, he inverts the whole of my argument, and supposes that I began with a few obsolete studies of Aryan folk, and moulded my own work from this. I owe so many pleasant moments to Canon Taylor's friendship that I am particularly glad to acknowledge the personal kindness of his last letter, but I cannot help wishing that he had considered my arguments more narrowly before opposing them.

LAURENCE GOMME.

RACE AND SPEECH IN BELGIUM.

London: August 15, 1892.

The remark of Canon Isaac Taylor, that the Belgians "have come to speak a neo-Latin language," might easily be misunderstood. There is a section of the Belgians who do so—namely, the Walloons; but they are the minority. By far the majority are Flemings, whose tongue, like that of the Dutch and of the popular classes along the shores of the German Ocean and the Baltic, is a Low-German one. The Flemish Belgians themselves call their own language "Neder-duitsch"—Nether or Low-German. This state of things, as regards race and speech, dates from the time of Caesar (De Bello Gallico, II. 4), who already wrote, after a careful inquiry, that "the majority of the Belgians have sprung from the Germans" (plerisque Belgas esse ortos a Germanis).

KARL BLIND.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Bibliography of the Algonquian Languages. By James Constantine Pilling. (Washington: Government Printing Office.) Several years ago Mr. Pilling undertook to compile for the Bureau of Ethnology an authors' catalogue of all the material relating to the native languages of North America. The work, which was intended to form a single volume, has grown under his hands. Four parts have already appeared, in good-sized pamphlets, dealing with as many groups—the Eskimo, Sioux, Iroquois, and Muskogee. The present part, which forms a volume by itself of more than 600 pages closely printed in double columns, is to be followed by another, relating to the languages of the Athapascan stock.

"The Algonquian-speaking peoples covered a greater extent of country, perhaps, than those of any other of the linguistic stocks of North America, stretching from Labrador to the Rocky Mountains, and from the Churchill River of Hudson Bay to Pamlico Sound, in North Carolina; and the literature of their languages is by far the greatest in extent of any of the stocks north of Mexico, being equalled, if at all, by only one south of that line, the Nahuatl. Probably every language of the family is on record, and of the more prominent extensive record has been made. In two, the Massachusetts and the Cree, the whole Bible has been printed, the former being the first Bible printed upon this continent. In two others, the Chippewa and the Micmac, nearly the whole of the Scriptures has been printed, and portions thereof in a number of the other languages. In the Abnaki, Blackfoot, Chippewa, Cree, Delaware, Micmac, and Nipissing, extensive dictionaries have been printed; and of the Abnaki, Nipissing, Blackfoot, Chippewa, Illinois, Massachusetts, Montagnais, and Pottawotami, there are MS. dictionaries in existence. Of grammars we have in print the Abnaki, Blackfoot, Chippewa, Cree, Massachusetts, Micmac, and Nipissing; and in MS. the Illinois, Menomonee, Montagnais, and Pottawotami. In nearly every language of the family, prayer-books, hymn-books, tracts, and Scriptural texts have appeared; several of them are represented by school books of various kinds, i.e., primers, spellers, and readers; and in one of them, the Chippewa, there was printed in 1840 a geography for beginners."

The total number of entries in the bibliography before us amounts to 2245, of which 1926 relate to printed books and articles, and 319 to MSS. Mr. Pilling claims that he has himself seen 2014, and that his descriptions of the rest are mostly derived from eye-witnesses. The plan of the work is alphabetical, according to authors' names. But under the name of each Indian language there are cross-references; and at the end, also, is a chronological index, showing the dates of the several publications. First comes Lescarbot's Histoire de la Nouvelle France (Paris, 1609), which contains numerals and vocabularies; then follows John Smith's Map of Virginia (Oxford, 1612), which gives a vocabulary of sixty-five words and eleven sentences in the Indian language of Virginia. But the real interest begins with the appearance of the name of John Eliot, whose translations into the Massachusetts language fill more than one hundred of Mr. Pilling's columns, illustrated with twenty-one facsimiles of title-pages. Of his Bible of 1663 no less than thirty-nine copies are described, of which nine are on this side of the Atlantic. Other important entries will be found under Pierson, Cotton Mather, and Schoolcraft. Among modern publications the French missionaries are well represented; and we have facsimiles of their Cree syllabaries and Micmac hieroglyphs. The author has done his work with prodigious industry, and with that minute attention to detail which marks American bibliography.

FINE ART.

THREE BOOKS ON MICHELANGELO.

Michel-Ange. Par Emile Ollivier. (Paris: Garnier Frères.)

Michelangelo: eine Renaissancestudie. Von Ludwig von Scheffler. (Altenberg: Geibel.)

Michel-Ange, Poète. Par Gabriel Thomas. (Paris: Berger-Levrault.)

(Second Notice.)

Now is the time to inquire of our three essayists what that peculiar temperament was. M. Ollivier has been at the pains to discuss it through 500 pages, and it is only fair to consider what he makes of it. Fervour and eloquence are precious gifts, and there can be no doubt M. Ollivier has them; but when a writer sets out with the intention of revising all existing biographies, it is a little disappointing to be flooded with misty rhetoric instead of the facts and serious reasons which are to open all our eyes. A study of a great artist is worth nothing if it is not critical. Michelangelo the poet does not, apparently, exist for M. Ollivier, but there remains Michelangelo the sculptor-painter; and here, in spite of a generous enthusiasm to which it is impossible to refuse our sympathy, it cannot be denied that his predilections for a certain pronounced school of thought have rendered his work practically valueless. You cannot safely disregard one entire side of a man's nature if the object is to give a complete picture. M. Ollivier is, to be plain, unequipped for aesthetic criticism, because he sets out with the two remarkable preconceptions that, other things being equal, moral worth connotes artistic excellence; and, secondly, that you can read off a picture as categorically as a proposition of Euclid. It is not hard to see how he brought them to bear upon the painter of his choice. He admired the work, but he studied the man. He came to the conclusion that the man was the strongest Italian since Dante; he went to the artist for corroborative testimony to identify him as a Dante of the chisel. A Catholic himself, he found (how, is not now the question) that his hero was a good churchman of the fourteenth-century type; he turned to the "Last Judgment" and the roof of the Sistine and found justification by works; and then, to support on paper his foregone conclusions, he has been forced into making an unjustifiable and frivolous comparison, to ignore much that was characteristic and emphasise much that was conventional in the man's life, and (worst of all) to bring him into stronger relief by disparaging Titian, Leonardo, and Correggio.

I do not propose to follow M. Ollivier in his struggles to fit his theories to the facts. He dwells at great length upon the Reformation movement as it affected Italy, and regards the "Last Judgment" as Michelangelo's contribution to the Catholic counterblast which began under Paul III. It is not that there is no grain of truth in this sort of reasoning: no doubt, to appreciate the growth of any art, it is necessary to realise that thought is in the air and underlies all creative work. The mistake has been that the standards of what I may be allowed to call the Thomist age of painting (the age of the Spanish Chapel and Campo Santo) have been applied to a work and a world not in the least concerned with them. Under the Renaissance, scholasticism was over for the nonce, with its ex cathedra answers to stupendous questions; Neo-Platonism was in, to suggest more difficulties than it could solve. How to express, in terms of art, the floating, elusive theories and hints with which the air teemed? There was but one way. They must be impersonated; not—as with the old symbolism—by arbitrary signs of sacramental efficacy, not—as with the old allegory—by fanciful analogies applied to an absolute metaphysic, but by form, which should boldly stand for substance, by frank recognition of the tentativeness of all expression, and a plea that beauty should be owned the nearest approach possible to truth. It was a plea for payment by results. "Does my work lift you; does it convince you that this much must be true because it can be thus stated? I admit it is a guess; but, at least, the reality cannot be less than that!" The result of this tolerant and genial receptivity in matters of speculation, and of exquisite tact in technique was a kind of latter-day mythology where matter and mode tended to merge. And that was as it should be. Art is the meeting-place of creeds, because it is independent of them. But M. Ollivier, Rio's latest disciple, does not think so. Rio found the art of Siona most to his liking, and hailed it as the most ideal. Ollivier clings to Michelangelo, whom he must needs prove unapproachable from any side. It follows almost naturally that, in seeking about for arguments to raise him, as a painter, above Titian and Raphael, he hits upon some very silly ones. He takes their types of female beauty and sets them side by side. The "Venus" of Titian is a courtesan; "La Gioconda," a flirt; Raphael's Madonnas are stupid. He muses upon the possible future of these creations with what Calverley would have called "undisguised concern." "La femme de Titien," he says, "de Corrège, de Léonard est . . . d'un éclat sensuel. On prévoit en la contemplant que cette beauté finira : la vieillesse rendra la femme de Titien informe, celle de Corrège épaisse, celle de Léonard sèche" (p. 405). Then comes Raphael's turn: "N'y a-t-il pas quelque chose de massif dans les Madones du Chardonnerot et de la Chaise? . . . Les femmes de Raphaël ne sont pas toujours pesantes, elles sont toujours sans intelligence. . . . on sent en elles un cœur occupé et un esprit vide" (pp. 417-18). In his support he tears from its context a passage from Victor Chorbulez's recent and admirable L'Art et la Nature which, as he should know perfectly well, is clean counter to the point he is trying to make. The last clause, which is the motive of the whole passage, is to the effect that an art such as Raphael's is the result of an equation between the artist and nature:—"Les grandes âmes," says M. Chorbulez, "communiquent à tout ce qu'elles font un peu de leur grandeur, parce qu'en elles tout est naturellement divin ou divinement naturel." That does not read like depreciation of Raphael: M. Ollivier takes it as an endorsement of his assertion that he only painted plump contadinas. It is all the dreariest nonsense, this talk of an indecorous Venus and a toothless Monna Lisa, of flirts and courtesans. What is art if not unmoral? It has as little to do with courtesans as with Virgin-Martyrs. Both classes are of our own making, and art was before them: it is either a law unto itself or nothing at all. In an unfortunate sequel, M. Ollivier attempts to clinch the Buonarroti's superiority as a painter on the same moral grounds. Assuredly as a great-souled, sombre prophet he can yield to none. We can go all lengths with our author when he says, "l'homme égale l'artiste, et la vie est une œuvre aussi sublime que le Jugement dernier." It is: no one will deny it or grudge it. But it, nevertheless, remains an obvious truth that the test of a picture must be—Is it well done? and not—Is it well meant?

Evidently, such methods as these will not discover for us the real Michelangelo. Herr von Scheffler with a finer instinct has gone to the Sonnets. Their very defects have helped him. The power of the thought enclosed has often overmastered the true artistic feeling for form; the expression is now and then crabbed and abrupt; but how vigorous, how searching the thought is! The poet's criticism of himself has been preserved by Gianetti:

"Lo sono il più inclinato uomo all'amar le persone, che mai in alcun tempo nascesse. Qualche volto io veggio alcuno, che abbia qualche virtù, che mostri qualche destrezza d'ingegno, che sappia fare o dire qualche cosa più acconciamente che gli altri, io sono costretto ad innamorarmi di lui; e mi gli do in maniera in preda, che io non sono più mio, ma tutto suo."

It is in reading him that we first discover how true this is. He was an insatiable lover of human power; feeling its imaginative stimulus, the lift it gave to the "power of the wing," and using it always as a means to rise alone into the empyrean. Plotinus rather than Plato may have prompted these solitary flights; but from first to last he remained susceptible to the inspiration of physical, manly beauty. And the somewhat limited range of his verso is due to this exclusiveness of selection. He was "amato del persone"; resembling Socrates in that. So we have none of the large, frank feeling for Nature—the lovely image, the coloured phrase of Shakspeare. There is nothing of the exuberant animalism which, in Lorenzo's songs, has preserved the very perfume of an Italian spring. With him all is introspection, severe self-analysis. Once only—in an early sonnet written, as we suppose, in 1507, where the theme is the fresh beauty of some girl love—we find a music and passion which stir the pulse with a power like some snatch of Herrick's:

"Contento è tutto il giorno quella vesta
Che serra 'l petto, e poi par che si spanda:
E quel c'oro filato si domanda
Le guanei? o'l collo di toccar non resta.
Ma più lieto quel nastro par che goda,
Dorato in punta, con sì fatte tempre,
Che preme e tocca il petto ch'egli allaccia.
E la schietta cintura che s'annoda
Mi par dir seco: qui vo' stringer sempre!
Or che farebbon donche le mie braccia?"

But in general the beauty that he sought or found was intellectual, remote, and cold. Here he was Platonic—as Dante was, as Spenser could be. One misses the art of Plato; one has to put up with the theory of the Symposium without its perfect setting; and perhaps the most positive memory we carry away from his sonnets and madrigals is that his "prima arte" was indeed sculpture. It is not so much that we get all the sculptural qualities—precision, definiteness of outline and Allgemeinheit; but it is that man, not men, was his constant theme: man, the "dieu tombé qui se souvient des cieux," and not men as they love, fight, sleep, or agonise in martyrdom.

That seems to have been the temperament of Michelangelo. He loved man for the spark of divinity he could see within him. But he loved him also for his aesthetic, tangible beauty; and here he was much under the influence of the Renaissance spirit, which made art and the philosophy of life itself Epicurean and selective. It saw in every phenomenon a distinct, recognisable aesthetic quality. Acting on the positive

Italian temper (ever inclined to the concrete) it had produced a critical rather than a passionate view of the world and man. So l'oggi, the Papal secretary, had been able to estimate coolly Jerome of Prag the heretic; Botticelli could paint with the sameunction Madonna and Aphrodite; and Michelangelo could conceive the Doni "Holy Family" as neither Christian nor definitely Pagan, having his imagination stirred purely by the artistic significance of the subject. Herr von Scheffler asks us to remember this in judging the great Florentine, and I cannot do better than conclude with his words. He is speaking of one of the madrigals addressed to Vittoria Colonna (Madrigal V. in Guasti). It not only explains Michelangelo's position towards women,

"es ist zugleich ein Zeugnis von der grossartigen unbefangenen mit der die italiensche Renaissance—immer in Hinblick auf das antike Lebensideal—gewisse Beziehungen als gegeben nahm und estimirte."

The fine impartiality with which the Italian Renaissance estimated certain positive ideas! It is well said. MAURICE HEWLETT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London, August 15, 1892.

In his last letter, Mr. Petrie does not reply to anything that I said in mine; he just says over again several of the things that he has said before.

1. As regards the identification of the Aqanasha with the Achæans, and the archaeological results dependent thereon, he says on August 13 exactly what he said on July 16. My reply was given on July 23.

2. As regards the dating of the Kahun pottery, he says on August 13 exactly what he said on May 14, on June 25, and on July 16. My reply was given on May 21, on July 2, and on July 23.

In both these cases he announces that he is not going to be saddled with statements which he has never made. I need only remark that the statements are down in black and white, and no amount of talk will wipe them out.

3. As regards the tomb of Maket, he says on August 13: "We can only go by the period of the latest dateable objects in any deposit." He said on July 16: "The date of any deposit must be taken to be as near the age of the latest object in it as may be possible." I replied on July 23 that this proposition was inapplicable, as nobody can tell which of the objects in this deposit are the latest, or to what period these belong. He now adds the word "dateable" to make the proposition applicable, but he thereby makes the proposition untenable. He would date the deposit at about 1100 B.C., because it contained objects which he dates from about 2500 B.C. down to about 1200 B.C. That would be all very well if a large majority of the objects could be dated. But very few of them can be dated, and their dates are wide apart. Consequently there is no presumption that the deposit would contain dateable objects of (say) 1000 B.C., if it were later than that date.

4. As regards the false-necked vases from Gurob, he says nothing at all on August 13, although they formed the subject of his letter of July 30 and my reply of August 6. His silence is the more remarkable as he then described the dating of these vases as the main issue.

His letter, however, contains a general statement about "the date of the vases of Mycenaean style." He says:

"(a) That all the data yet found with the widely spread examples in Greece and Egypt show a period of between 1450 and 1100 B.C. (b) That nearly all these data are of names before 1300 B.C., and in those which are later the style of vase is distinctly different from the earlier. (c) That the only hypothesis which could date these vases later than these limits needs the assumption that in every case the vases are associated with the names of long anterior kings to the exclusion of any contemporary datum."

He informs your readers that, "in the absence of a single fresh datum in the recent letters," they may rely upon those propositions. Yet he must know very well that a certain fresh "datum" in these letters upsets the second clause of proposition b. Some false-necked vases are depicted in the tomb of Ramessu III., whom he dates at about 1100 B.C.; and these vases are very closely related, in ornamentation as well as form, to those which he found in the same grave with some pendants bearing the name of Tutankhamen, whom he dates at about 1350 B.C.

The wording of proposition a is ambiguous, and likely to mislead. Examples of Mycenaean pottery have been found at many places, but these "data" have been found with them at very few places indeed, namely, Gurob and Kahun in Egypt, and Ialysos and Mycenae in Greece. And the term "datum" is applied to material for determining dates by reference to the names of kings of Egypt, to the exclusion of material for determining dates in any other way. The "data" from Ialysos and Mycenae consist of two scarabs and two other porcelain objects, all bearing the name of Amenhetep III. or of his queen. I have spoken of these elsewhere.

In the only case where more than one of these dateable objects was found, namely at the tomb of Maket at Kahun, the dateable objects were of widely different dates. Mr. Petrie assigns one of them to the XIIth Dynasty, and others to the times of Tahutmes III., of Amenhetep III. or IV., and of Ramessu II., but none of them to any later date; and he assigns the Mycenaean vase to the time of Ramessu III. So, if he is right in this, the vase was "associated with the names of long anterior kings to the exclusion of any contemporary datum." In fact, the so-called assumption in proposition c holds good in the only case in which there is enough direct evidence to show how the matter really stands.

Mr. Petrie's new position is stronger than his old position. Formerly he argued that a vase must be contemporary with a king, if found in the same grave with some object bearing the name of that king. Now he argues that a class of vases must belong to a certain period, if vases of this class have been found at several places in company with objects bearing the names of kings belonging to that period. And this would be plausible enough, if it were clear that all these objects were contemporary with the kings whose names they bear, and if there were no further evidence to be considered. But there is a mass of evidence from Greek sources—the evidence of history as well as archaeology—which has to be considered in determining the date of the Mycenaean vases.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish in the autumn a volume entitled Architecture: a Profession or an Art, consisting of thirteen essays on the qualifications and training of architects, edited by Mr. Norman Shaw and Mr. T. G. Jackson.

We quote the following from the New York Critic—

"Mr. Whittle, of The Century's art department, has gone to England with the fine proofs of Mr. Cole's engravings of the Old Italian Masters, and Mr. Cole will leave his work long enough to meet him there and sign them; and in the autumn The Century Company will bring out a limited number of copies of a portfolio containing these proofs, hand-printed on Japan paper, each separate proof signed by the engraver and by the printer."

SOME interesting decorative work has been recently finished in connexion with the Council-chamber at Guildhall, at the cost of Alderman Stuart Knill. The allegorical paintings upon the walls comprise first of all the heraldic bearings of the City and of the seventy-seven still existing livery companies. The east wall shows the City arms; and the painting on the north wall represents the fight of St. George with the dragon, with the motto, "Our ancient word of courage, fair St. George, inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons." On the northern wall is pictured Old St. Paul's, and in front St. Paul stands offering his sword of martyrdom for the first quarter of the City's shield. Around him are scattered heraldic words from the Epistle to the Ephesians—the Shield of Faith, the Helmet of Salvation, and the Sword of the Spirit—with the inscription, "Put on the whole armour of God." On the east wall, too, are the arms of the twelve great livery companies, bound together by branches of a rose tree, with the motto, "Now, join your arms, and with your arms your hearts, that no dissension hinder government." Beneath the arms of the minor guilds is the inscription, "Hang out your banners on the outward wall." In other parts of the decorations the old gates of the City are shown, with the motto, "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

WE learn from the address of Sir A. W. Croft, president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, that Mr. J. Rodger's collection of coins, numbering upwards of 8000, has been purchased for the Lahore Museum by the provincial government of the Punjab. Its special feature is the series of Indian Mughal coins, which is almost exhaustive. It is also hoped that Mr. J. H. Rivett-Carnac's valuable cabinet will be bought by the Government of India for the Calcutta Museum. The special feature of this collection is the series of Gupta gold coins, which is unequalled in quantity and quality, containing upwards of one hundred specimens, some unique and most of them rare. During the year 1891 Dr. Hoernle examined and reported on about 2000 coins, nearly all of which were sent to him under the Treasure Trove Act. Only one of them, however, required particular notice—a very rare gold coin of Chandra Gupta II., of the "couch" type, belonging to Mr. Rivett-Carnac.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

De Fidiculis Bibliographia. By Edward Heron-Allen. Part I., Sections 4 and 5; Part II., Book sections, &c. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) The continuation of this valuable bibliography makes mention of many rare and interesting works. The Défense de la Basse de Viole contre les Entreprises du Violon, et les Prétentions du Violoncelle, by Hubert le Blanc, published at Amsterdam in 1740, must indeed be an amusing book. It tells of the "cabal formed by the violin, the clavécin, and the violoncello against the viola-da-gamba," and contains important data concerning the state of music during the first half of the eighteenth century. In mentioning Eugène Sauzay's Etude sur le Quatuor, which contains analyses of the works of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, our author remarks that it "is a work which would greatly benefit many musical critics in the reading." Mr. Heron-Allen evidently does not entertain a high opinion of musical critics, so far, at any rate, as their classical knowledge is concerned. If he had simply said "musicians" it would perhaps have been wiser. There may be critics who require grounding in the old masters; but there are certainly many students of music at the present day who know more about Schumann, Liszt, and Wagner than about Haydn and his two immediate successors. Why is the name of Wasielewski, Schumann's biographer, spelt without the e before the t? In speaking of Le Comte Louis Adolphe le Doucet de Pontecoulant, author of Essai sur la Facture Instrumentale, we are told that "he was still living in 1881." Would it not have been equally simple and more instructive to have said that he died in 1882? Again, of W. Schneider the organist, it is stated that "the date of his death does not appear to have been recorded." The date of his death is, however, given both by Reissmann in Mendel's Lexikon, and by Dr. Hugo Riemann as October 9, 1843. By the way, the first word in the title of Schneider's work mentioned is incorrectly spelt; it should be "Historisch-technische." The famous and extremely rare Musica Teusch by Hans Gerle is mentioned. Of this book only two perfect copies are known, one at Berlin and one in the British Museum. This work appeared in 1532; but Dr. Riemann in his Lexikon speaks of a "Musica Teusch, ander Theil," published in 1533, but only discovered in 1886. "A Treatise on the Harmonic System," with an account of the rise and progress of music, written by John Macdonald, Engineer and Commandant of Artillery on the Establishment of Sumatra, was published in London in 1822. There is no mention of Macdonald in Sir G. Grove's Dictionary; his name, however, is to be found in Mendel and in Fétis, who makes him 122 years old at the time of his death in 1831. Stephen Philpot's Introduction to the Art of Playing on the Violin (1766) is justly described as a "delicious old book." Its author speaks of "three grand Requisites that must conspire to bring any Art or Science to Perfection—(1) A proper Genius; (2) Regular and well-grounded Instructions; and (3) Application."

Wagner-Sketches, 1849. A Vindication by W. Ashton Ellis. (Kegan Paul & Co.) This sketch was suggested to the author by chapters xiv. and xv. of the late Ferdinand Praeger's recently-published Wagner as I Knew Him. Mr. Ellis has studied August Roeckel's Sachsen's Erhebung, Count Waldersee's Der Kampf in Dresden, and A. Montbé's Der Mai-Aufstand in Dresden. He is of opinion that many stories set afloat concerning Wagner really referred to a journeyman baker of the same name, who is supposed to have shot Lieutenant von Krug in the fight on the Zenghausplatz, May 3, 1849. Mr. Ellis may not perhaps have entirely made out his case, but he has shown that some of Praeger's statements ought to be taken cum grano salis. His sketch is full of interesting facts connected with the revolution at Dresden.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 8
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
 Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTÄDEL, of Munich.
 the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
 For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations,
 Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
 Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
 Specimens and price list on application.
 Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.
BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
 and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
 PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
 SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

BIRKBECK BANK,
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
 For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums or deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
 The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Lionel Rignold, Charles Dutton, W. A. Elliott, G. W. Cockburn, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jecks, &c.

COMEDY THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Mr. W. S. Penley, Mr. W. F. Hawtrej, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr. Sam Sothorn, Mr. Cecil Thornbury, Mr. W. Ayson, Mr. G. Tomkins; Miss Nina Boucicault, Miss Violet Armstrong, Miss C. Ewell, Miss Alice Vorne, Miss Caroline Elton. At 8.15. THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NEW SUB. At 9.10, FAITHFUL JAMES. And, at 9.50, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, W. Drycott, C. P. Little, S. Warden, Vaughan, Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Misses G. Kingston, Edith Briant, Sybil Grey, Bertrige, Palfrey, and Ellaline Terriss.

GALEITY THEATRE.
 Lessee and Manager, George Edwardes.
THIS EVENING, at 8, FAUST UP TO DATE. Mesdames Florence St. John, Amy Angarde, Ada Dorce, Kitty Loftus, Cissy Fitzgerald; Messrs. Edmund Payne, George Honey, C. H. Barry, and Arthur Williams.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, T. W. Percival, Harcourt Beatty, Henry de Solia, W. Brunton, jun., H. Gray Dalby, B. Whitcomb, H. Ludlow, Alker, Hennessy, Sauter; Mesdames Lesley Bell, M. Watson, F. Wyatt, L. Wyatt, Maude St. John, Ormesby, Herriek, Patrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

STRAND THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, NOBE (ALL SMILES). Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George Hawtrej, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Eliason, Venie Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Esmond, I. Goldsmith, and C. Zerbin. At 8. NO CREDIT. Misses Esmond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtrej, &c.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.
THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Messrs. E. W. Garden, C. M. Lowne, Seymour Hicks, Cecil Ramsey, and G. Shelton; Misses Liston, Vanburgh, Ansell, Rachel, and Mary Brough. At 8, DAISY'S ESCAPE. Messrs. Billington, Shelton, Lowne, Arlton, and Coventry; Misses Conynham and Brough.

TWO CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Just Out. Large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, price 6s. post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891.

By CHAS. S. MIALL.

Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., writes:—"All who wish to understand the character and position of English Nonconformity will find herein most serviceable help."
 Mr. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS writes: "It is, in fact, a storehouse of information of the most suggestive kind which politicians and publicists as well as declared Free Churchmen will do well to keep at hand both for reference and for guidance."
Daily News says:—"It constitutes a trustworthy history of the struggle for Religious Equality in England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

Discussions of the legal events of the week.
 Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.
 Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law.
 Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.
 Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.
 In this department are given all new Rules and Orders in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.
 Special Reports of Cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.
 Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.
 A complete record of the progress of legislation during each session.
 The "SOLICITORS' JOURNAL" will contain Notes and Reports giving, from week to week, early information and explanation of the Decisions of the Courts on the New Practice.
 A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.
 New legal works are carefully noticed in this department.
 Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies. A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S.

(Late President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England):—

"PEARS' SOAP is an article of the nicest and most careful manufacture, and one of the most refreshing and agreeable balms for the skin."

Pears' Soap

FOR TOILET AND NURSERY.

Its agreeable perfume, beautiful appearance, and soothing properties, commend it as the greatest luxury of the toilet.

SPECIALLY PREPARED FOR THE DELICATE SKIN OF LADIES, CHILDREN, AND OTHERS SENSITIVE TO THE WEATHER, WINTER OR SUMMER.

Fair white hands.

Bright clear complexion.

Soft healthful skin.

NOTHING adds so much to personal attraction as a bright, clear complexion, and a soft skin. Without them the handsomest and most regular features are but coldly impressive, whilst with them the plainest become attractive; and yet there is no advantage so easily secured. The regular use of a properly prepared Soap is one of the chief means; but the public have not the requisite knowledge of the manufacture of Soap to guide them to a proper selection, so a pretty box, a pretty colour, or an agreeable perfume too frequently outweighs the more important consideration—viz., the composition of the Soap itself, and thus many a good complexion is spoiled which would be enhanced by proper care.

Mrs. LANGTRY writes:—"I have much pleasure in stating I have used PEARS' SOAP for some time, and prefer it to any other."

(Signed),

LILLIE LANGTRY.

ADELINA PATTI writes:—"I have found PEARS' SOAP matchless for the hands and complexion."

(Signed),

ADELINA PATTI.

Miss MARY ANDERSON writes:—"I have used it two years with the greatest satisfaction, for I find it the very best."

(Signed),

MARY ANDERSON.

PEARS' SOAP

is sold everywhere in Tablets, 1s. each. Larger sizes, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. (The 2s. 6d. Tablet is perfumed with Otto of Roses.) A smaller Tablet, unscented, is sold at 6d.; but INSIST on having PEARS', as vilely injurious imitations are often substituted.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1060.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MIVANT'S ESSAYS AND CRITICISMS, by A. W. BENN	163
PARKMAN'S A HALF CENTURY OF CONFLICT, by E. J. PAYNE	164
LAST WORDS OF CARLYLE, by J. A. NOBLE	165
TWO EASTERN CHURCHES, by STEPHEN WHEELER	165
SAINTSBURY'S MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS, by ARTHUR SYMONS	166
NEW NOVELS, by J. H. ALLEN	167
SOME BOOKS ON ECONOMIC QUESTIONS	168
CURRENT LITERATURE	169
NOTES AND NEWS	170
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	170
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO TWO FRIENDS," by C. SAYLE	171
CORRESPONDENCE— Jacob's Well and its Skeat, by Dr. F. J. FURNIVALL: The Genesis of the Reading edoklas in Luke ii. 11, by W. S. LEAN; Aristotle as an Historian, IV., by the Rev. Sir George COX; Notes on Herodas, by F. D.	171
DARMESTER'S FRENCH TRANSLATION OF THE AVISTA, by Dr. E. W. WEST	173
TIBETAN LITERATURE	173
THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS	174
CORRESPONDENCE— Bengali Philology and Ethnography, by C. JOHSTON	175
SCIENCE NOTES	175
PHILOLOGY NOTES	176
STRANO'S EARTH-FRIEND, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	176
CORRESPONDENCE— The Vases from Thera, by Cecil TORR; Aegean Pottery in Egypt, by W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE	177
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	178
OLD ENGLISH SONGS, by J. S. SHELLOCK	178

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—MISS ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
Now fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

A PRIZE OF £50 IS OFFERED by the COMMITTEE OF THE INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION
AND PEACE ASSOCIATION for the best MODEL CHAPTER on
"PEACE AND WAR" for use in Elementary Schools.
For copy of circular containing full information apply to the SECRETARY of the Association, 4, Outer Temple, Strand, London.

ROME.—STUDIO and HOUSE TO LET for One or Three Years. Good position. Moderate rent.—
Apply A. G., Mr. Jennings, 16, Duke Street, Manchester Square, London.

LAMBETH PALACE LIBRARY will be CLOSED, for the usual recess, for SIX WEEKS, from the 20th of AUGUST.

BRITISH MUSEUM.
The READING ROOM and NEWSPAPER ROOM will be CLOSED from THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1st, to MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5th, inclusive.
E. MAUDE THOMPSON, Principal Librarian and Secretary.
British Museum, 24th August, 1892.

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO
"BLACK AND WHITE."
The COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

Now ready, price 6s. 6d. net.
THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY
CALENDAR, 1892-3.
Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.
London: Geo. BELL & SONS.

Now ready, in 1 vol.
OMARAH'S HISTORY OF YAMAN.
The Original Texts, with Translation and Notes by H. C. KAY.
MR. AS. With Sketch Map. Demy 8vo, cloth, 17s. 6d. net.
London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE,

90, HIGH STREET, OXFORD.

"The College adheres to its original principle of a severe imparting
Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrine."

PROGRAMME OF LECTURES FOR THE SESSION 1892-93.

Principal—
Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt.
CATHOLIC EPISTLES (Introduction, Criticism, and Exegetical
INTRODUCTION to the FOURTH GOSPEL.
TEXTUAL CRITICISM of the NEW TESTAMENT.

Vice-Principal—
Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
OLD TESTAMENT: Introduction to the Religion of Israel: History of the Text.
COMPARATIVE RELIGION: History of the Doctrine of Revelation:
Brahmanism.

Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., R.Sc.
MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.
Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., will Lecture on SOCIOLOGY
The College OPENS in OCTOBER. All Lectures are Free to the Public.
For further particulars apply to the Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, 18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford:
or to R. D. DARRSHIM, Esq.,
25, George Street, Manchester; } Secs.
or to Rev. H. ESFIELD DOWSON, B.A., Free Cross, near Manchester.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON

(LADIES' DEPARTMENT).

13, Kensington Square (close to High Street Kensington Station).

In this Department Lectures are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College. The Lectures are adapted for Ladies above the age of 16.

A Class will be held for the special preparation of Ladies for the Matriculation Examination of the University of London. This Class will commence on the 12th September.

All other Classes commence on October 10th. On that day at 3 p.m., an INAUGURAL ADDRESS will be given by Prof. HALES (Clerk Lecturer in English Literature at Trinity College, Cambridge), to which all Students and their friends are invited.
For a Prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal,
Miss C. G. SCHWITZ, at the above address.
In return for four stamps, a Complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEMONSTRATOR AND ASSISTANT LECTURER IN BIOLOGY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in BIOLOGY, at a stipend of £120 per annum. It is necessary that candidates should have a special knowledge of Botany. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 9th, 1892.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER
the 20th.

For further information apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 9th, 1892.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE and ART,

NATIONAL ART TRAINING SCHOOL, South Kensington.

Visitor—EDWARD J. POYNTER, Esq., R.A.

Principal—JOHN C. L. SPARKES, Esq.

The ANNUAL SESSION will commence on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th. Art Classes in connection with the Training School are open to the public on payment of fees. The Classes for Men and Women Students meet separately. The Studies comprise Ornament and the Figure, with a view to their ultimate use in Design and Composition, and include the study of Plants and Flowers, the Painting of Still Life, and the Drawing and Painting of Ornament and of the Figure.

Candidates for admission, who are not already registered as students of the school, must have passed the Second Grade Examination in Freeland Drawing. Admission Examinations will be held at the School on Tuesday, September 27th, and October 11th, at 11.45 a.m. and 6.45 p.m. on both days, and on subsequent Tuesdays at frequent intervals during the Session.

Application for information as to fees and for admission should be made in writing to the SECRETARY, Department of Science and Art, S.W., or on and after October 5th, personally, to the Registrar, at the School, Exhibition Road, S.W.

By order of The Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.
DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS.

The NINETEENTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, OCTOBER 10th.
The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees
in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Lecturer Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Secretary:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The universities, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Exeter, Glasgow, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley,
Tamp, &c.
For Prospectus, Ac., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principal—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton, Cambridge).
Professors: Seeley, Kings Coll.; Dr. Doleken, Radolph, Leaman, Louis Ditch, Signor Garcia, Largent, Ferrero, Thurton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EX-

AMINATIONS.—STUDENTS are successfully PREPARED
at the Classes in connection with the North London Collegiate School, under the superintendence of Miss HOSKES. They are also trained for Kindergarten work, and prepared for the Examination of the Froebel Society. Arrangements made for ladies to board in the neighbourhood.—Apply to Miss TODD, 145, Camden Road, London, N.W.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-

TION for filling up about EIGHTEEN VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 15th SEPTEMBER, 1892. For information apply to THE Rector, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS and HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON
Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum,
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
20 to 31, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1892.

- I. GOD'S FOOL. By MAARTEN MAARTENS. Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c. Chaps. XXXVIII.—XLI.
- II. HISTORY and POETRY.
- III. OLD MEMORIES INTERVIEWED. By Mrs. ANDREW CROSSE.
- IV. SAYONARA.
- V. A STROLL THROUGH a GREAT CRUIKSHANK PRESERVE. By G. S. LAYARD.
- VI. TO ONE DEAD.
- VII. AUNT ANNE. (Conclusion.)
- VIII. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.
- IX. MR. MENELAUS.
- X. GEORGE HERBERT.
- XI. MRS. BLIGH. By RHODA BROUGHTON. Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c. Chaps. I.—IV.

NEW NOVELS.

JUST READY.

A GIRL WITH A TEMPER.

By H. B. FINDLAY KNIGHT.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

IN SPIKE OF HERSELF.

By LESLIE KEITH,

Author of "Alasman's Lady," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS. KEITH'S CRIME."

AUNT ANNE.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A story which few people could have written and few would have dared to write."—Daily Graphic.

NOW READY.

THE STORY OF A PENITENT SOUL.

Being the Private Papers of Mr. Stephen Dart late Minister of Lynnbridge, in the County of Lincoln.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

BY A NEW WRITER.

A HIGH LITTLE WORLD,

And What Happened There.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF
"NELLIE'S MEMORIES," &c.

BUT MEN MUST WORK.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

Author of "Not Like other Girls," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE POPULAR EDITION

OR

MISS BROUGHTON'S NOVELS

May now be obtained at all Booksellers and Libraries.

COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.

GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!

JOAN. | NANCY.

NOT WISELY BUT TOO WELL.

RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.

SECOND THOUGHTS.

BELINDA. | ALAS!

"DOCTOR CUPID."

Uniformly bound, each Novel may be obtained separately, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

I.

By Mrs. Alexander.

FOR HIS SAKE.

By the Author of

"The Wooing o't," "Blind Fate,"

"Mona's Choice," &c. 3 vols.

BY

Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.

II.

A BIG STAKE.

By the Author of

"£100,000 versus Ghosts," "Drawn

Blank," "The Criton Hunt Mystery," &c.

3 vols.

August 20th.

III.

BY FLORENCE MARRYAT.

THE NOBLER SEX.

By the Author of "My Sister the Actress."

"Facing the Footlights," "Under the Lilies and Roses," &c.

3 vols.

"Miss Marryat purveys for the holiday season a novel entitled 'The Nobler Sex,' in which her hand shows the same gift as of yore for the concoction of interesting fiction. . . . There is a great deal of power in her present story."—People.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

I vol., cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

BY MRS. ALEXANDER.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

BY MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED.

THE ROMANCE OF A CHALET.

BY E. M. CROKER.

INTERFERENCE. (Second Edition.)

In picture boards, 2s. each.

BY JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P., and MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED.

The LADIES' GALLERY (2nd Edition).

BY MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN.

THE M.F.H.'S DAUGHTER.

In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

BY FLORENCE WARDEN.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

A SHOCK TO SOCIETY.

"It is a pleasant little tale."—Public Opinion.
"The book is sentimental without being mawkish. . . . The story is good in itself."—Scotsman.
"This last tale by Florence Warden is very pleasant reading. . . . Miss Warden's books are generally amusing and are certainly harmless. She does not affect the mawkish sentimentality of many of our lady novelists. . . . It is a pleasure to confess to a real enjoyment in reading her prettily written novels and novelettes."—News of the World.

BELGRAVIA.

A London Magazine. Price 1s.

Serial Tales by ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) and IZA DUFFUS HARDY are running in the above Monthly Magazine.

Now ready.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF BELGRAVIA.

Price 1s.

Containing Contributions by FLORENCE MARRYAT, ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Mrs. J. SALL LLOYD, SOMERVILLE GUNNEY, SAUMAREZ DE HAVILLAND, CHARLOTTE E. MORLAND, &c.

Vol. LXXVIII. (560 pages), elegantly bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edges, price 7s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

LONDON SOCIETY.

A Monthly Magazine. Price 1s.

Serial Tales, entitled "THE COUNTESS PHARAMOND," by "RITA," and "A BURIED SIN," are running in the above Magazine.

Now ready.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF LONDON SOCIETY.

Price 1s.

Containing Contributions by E. M. CROKER, Mrs. ALEXANDER PRASER, the Hon. Mrs. NATHANIEL FLEMING, the AUTHOR OF "MISS MOLLY," BEATRICE G. HILL, &c.

Vol. LXXI. (780 pages), handsomely bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edges, price 10s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

TWO REMARKABLE NOVELS.

JUST READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Terrible Czar.

By COUNT A. K. TOLSTOI.

Translated by Captain FILMORE, of the Black Watch.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

PER ASPERA (A Thorny Path). By

Prof. GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

"A monument of learning . . . a fascinating story."—World.
"A skilful piece of literary workmanship and a pleasing picture of an interesting stage in the world's history."—Pall Mall Gazette.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NOVELS.

New Uniform Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S COMPLETE NOVELS at 2s. 6d. each.

A DAUGHTER OF HETH. With Portrait of Mr. Black.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES OF A PHAETON.

A PRINCESS OF THULE. MADCAP VIOLET.

IN SILK ATTIRE. THREE FEATHERS.

KILMENY. THE MAID OF KILLEENA.

GREEN PASTURES and PICCADILLY. [Next week.]

THE MEMBER for WROTTENBOROUGH:

Passages from his Life in Parliament. Edited by his "Alter ego," ARTHUR A'BECKETT. Author of "Papers from Pump Handle Court," &c. With Fancy Cover Design by E. J. Wheeler. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Bright, clever, and readable."—Daily Telegraph.

THE CHAIRMAN'S HANDBOOK. By

Sir R. F. D. PALGRAVE, K.C.B., Clerk to the House of Commons. Eighth Edition, Enlarged and Rewritten. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

"A brief compilation of suggestions and rules for the conduct of chairman of public and other meetings, based upon the procedure and practice of Parliament."—Daily News.

NEW EDITION, TWELFTH THOUSAND. RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE,

M.P. By G. W. E. RUSSELL, M.P. ("The Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.) With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Written in a manly and independent spirit, which we should expect in one of his lineage. . . . An honest book."—World.
"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste. . . . A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius."—Daily News.

NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

FROM the ARCTIC OCEAN to the YELLOW SEA: the Narrative of a Journey across Siberia, Mongolia, the Gobi Desert, and North China. By JULIUS M. PRIDE, F.R.G.S. With Photogravure Portrait, Facsimiles, and 150 Illustrations. Route Map. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

"A remarkably good picture-book. . . . Full of instruction and amusement. . . . Mr. Pride's narrative leaves throughout definite impressions of the wild regions through which he passed."—Spectator.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada, Japan, and China by Col. HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"One of the brightest and most entertaining books of travel that have obtained publicity during the past decade."—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND EDITION JUST READY.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY. By

E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN

WITHOUT A GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched; yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."—World.

THROUGH FAMINE-STRICKEN

RUSSIA. By W. BARNES STEVENS, Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle. With Portraits of Count Tolstoi and the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The Russian authorities have prohibited from circulation 'Through Famine-Stricken Russia,' the recently issued volume in which Mr. W. Barnes Stevens, the Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, has described his tour through the famine-stricken regions of Russia."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1892.

No. 1060, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Essays and Criticisms. By St. George Mivart. In 2 vols. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

MR. MIVART'S essays are reprinted from the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other reviews. The dates of their appearance in those periodicals is not given, but may generally be inferred from the headings or from the contents. The papers composing the first volume are of an historical and miscellaneous character. They are more carefully written than the generality of such productions, but are otherwise scarcely more worthy of preservation. The contents of the second volume relate almost entirely to biological philosophy, and more especially to the theory of descent. These have a certain documentary value, and will supply materials to the future historian of science in the nineteenth century.

Mr. Mivart tells us (vol. ii., p. 2) that for the progress of science two classes of thinkers are necessary—the men of creative genius, and the critics who test their brilliant theories. His own place is among the latter; and no one can say that he errs on the side of tenderness in exercising his appointed function. "Profound ignorance," "folly," and "madness" are freely imputed to the eminent men whose innovations do not meet with his approval. But hard words break no arguments; and it would be well if Mr. Mivart employed no more objectionable weapons of controversy. Misrepresentation of an opponent's case, and omission of important words from a quotation, are offences that may be charged against him. In a note on p. 385 of vol. i., he cites Haeckel as saying: "We do, indeed, now enjoy the unusual pleasure of seeing most Christian bishops and Jesuits exiled and imprisoned," leaving out the highly significant clause, "on account of their disobedience to the laws of the State." I hasten to add that Mr. Mivart's text contains a direct reference to the Falk Laws, about which Haeckel is speaking in the incriminated passage. Still, the omission looks suspicious, especially when taken in connexion with the author's other delinquencies. In the course of an exceedingly captious criticism on Mr. Herbert Spencer, he charges that philosopher with unconsciously affirming the law of contradiction while denying its validity as an ultimate truth (ii., p. 154). The charge would no doubt be a very serious one were it warranted. But, in fact, it is quite unwarrantable. For Mr. Spencer implicitly assumes the law of contradiction only where he has explicitly admitted it—that is, in regard to states of consciousness. "No positive mode of consciousness," he tells us, "can occur without excluding a correlative negative mode, and the negative mode cannot occur without excluding a correlative positive mode." It is, then, singularly disingenuous or singularly stupid to tax him with inconsistency for not admitting that we may both have and have not failed to dis- sever conceptions which he holds to be states of consciousness. Again, as a result of the psychological teaching of "the two Mills, Bain, Spencer, &c.," there follows, says Mr. Mivart, "an inculcation that the one thing needful is to elicit from each man . . . as many useful actions as possible, i.e., actions tending to promote the material happiness and prosperity of the individual, of the nation, and of the race" (vol. i., p. 327). Plain language is catching; and I should but imitate my author's style in characterising the above assertion as an untruth of that particularly noxious and cowardly kind known as suppression veri.

More than twenty years ago Darwin wrote of Mr. Mivart in a private letter since published, "though he means to be honourable, he is so bigoted he cannot act fairly." The unfairness is certain, but the bigotry is doubtful. If it exists, it is rather philosophical than religious, rather Aristotelian than Catholic. But the best explanation seems to be that the same excitability of temper that leads Mr. Mivart into using the intemperate language already referred to also makes him unwilling to master facts that are either distasteful or of no immediate interest to him. How else can we account for the astounding statement that at the end of the eighteenth century the territories of the House of Austria covered 140,000 square kilometres (less than two Irelands), and the kingdom of France "about the same" (vol. i., p. 66), or for the transference of the Spanish Revolution from 1868 to 1865 (vol. i., p. 201), or for the interpretation of Alcazar (al qisr, "the castle"), as the house of Caesar (vol. i., p. 210)? Incapacity for taking pains is always and everywhere the solution. In his work on Truth, Mr. Mivart attacked the undulatory theory of light without concerning himself to understand it. We need not, therefore, ascribe his misrepresentation of the hedonistic theory of morals to any deliberate dishonesty.

Here is another example of the same reckless precipitation. Prof. Huxley had observed that the necessity of belief in a personal God in order to a religion worthy of the name was "a matter of opinion." This Mr. Mivart denies, and will not allow Buddhism to be adduced as a case in point. According to him, Buddhism is not atheistic, involving as it logically does the existence of what must be a personal God, that is, "a power apportioning after death rewards and punishments according to a standard of virtue" (vol. ii., p. 88). Passing over the naïve assumption that everybody reasons in the same manner, I turn to p. 97 of the same volume, and find that with the denial of human free-will "most certainly falls every word denoting virtue." It follows that Buddhism, as a rigidly necessarian system, can have no "standard of virtue." Mr. Mivart should take to heart his own admonition to Prof. Huxley: "It is surely not less prudent than it is just to refrain from speaking authoritatively of that which we have not studied and do not comprehend" (vol. ii., p. 84).

As regards the main point at issue between these two eminent biologists, it would seem that Mr. Mivart is technically right. A belief in the evolution of living species is not, as Prof. Huxley inferred it to be, incompatible with Roman Catholic orthodoxy. Whether the two creeds are logically consistent with one another, and can be permanently entertained by the same minds, is another question; and Mr. Mivart, who insists that Mr. Spencer's principles are destructive of morality and social order—things just as dear to Spencerians as they are to himself—should not complain if others read their own logic into his theology, and make war against it as not only false but also mischievous to society. What consequences may ultimately follow from the evolutionary premisses is the secret of the future. Meantime history enables us to test Mr. Mivart's extraordinary pretension that Theism, especially under its Catholic form, gave the world freedom of conscience. We are warned not to forget that "it was the Jews and Christians . . . who for the first time . . . maintained the sacred rights of conscience"—with more to the same effect (vol. ii., p. 242). Mr. Mivart is evidently no great classical scholar. He quotes, doubtless at third hand, the best known line in Terence as "Homo sum et nihil humanum," &c.; and he seems to think that Aristotle's τὸ τί ἦν εἶναι meant "What it is to be" (vol. ii., p. 271). Yet how strange that he should never have heard of, or should have forgotten, Antigone's famous vindication of divine as against human law, and the indefensible claim to teach truth put by Plato into the mouth of Socrates! It may be said that these, too, were theistic arguments, and I am not now concerned to deny the fact. But what is the claim to freedom of conscience? Is it the simple plea that if, e.g., I offer a pinch of incense to Jupiter, Christ will condemn me hereafter for having done it; and I am more afraid of hell-fire than of any tortures you can inflict? Surely not; surely there is a principle of reciprocity implied. To claim freedom of conscience for oneself is to allow equal freedom to others. It means, "I think it wrong to profess what I do not believe; it would be equally wrong on your part to profess my belief when you do not really hold it; and I should be very sorry to bribe or bully you into any such dereliction of duty." Now if this was the principle of the Jews and Christians, they certainly did not act on it. Our author is ready with an excuse for his own co-religionists. The mediæval persecutors could not believe in the conscientious scruples of heretics. They were mistaken, not about a question of principle, but about a question of fact (vol. i., p. 383). Were there any truth in this grotesque apology, the heretic who resisted a certain amount of torture would have been released from further molestation on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities. The reverse was notoriously the case. The Jews offer a good test of this alleged Catholic tolerance. They are cited by Mr. Mivart himself as an example of "those conscientious dissenters whose sincerity could be believed," and who accordingly "had their rights of conscience respected by ecclesiastical authority." They were, it seems, "ever protected at Rome" (ibid.). The Jewish historian Graetz has something to tell us about this "protection." Pope Julius III. issued a Bull on May 29, 1554, ordering "that the Jews should be compelled, under pain of corporal punishment, to give up all copies of the Talmud," without which they were unable to exercise their religion properly (History of the Jews, vol. iv., p. 602, English translation). Pope Paul IV., soon after his accession to the Papal chair, issued a Bull, by which

"every synagogue throughout the States of the Church was ordered to contribute ten ducats for the maintenance of the house of catechumens, in which Jews were to be educated in the Christian faith."

By a second Bull it was decreed that "they were only to possess one synagogue; the rest were to be destroyed" (p. 603).

"Pope Gregory XIII. issued a decree that on Sundays and holy days Christian preachers should deliver discourses upon Christian doctrine in the synagogues, if possible in Hebrew, and that the Jews, including at least a third of the community of both sexes and all persons over twelve years of age, must attend these sermons . . . a religious compulsion not very different from the act of Antiochus Epiphanes in dedicating the temple of the one true God to Jupiter" (ibid., p. 696).

Mr. Mivart sympathises with parents who are "oppressed in conscience" by having to send their children to Board Schools (vol. i., p. 308); he has not a word of pity for the unfortunate Roman Jews, not a word of censure for their pontifical spoliators and oppressors.

A. W. BENN.

A Half Century of Conflict. By Francis Parkman. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

Forty-eight years have passed since Mr. Parkman entered Harvard College, and forty-six since he and a fellow-student spent their holidays in following the old Oregon trail, and entertained their Indian friends of the Ogillallah at high tea in the lodge of Kongra Tonga or "Big Crow," whom the learned in Dacota would now more accurately call Kankra Tanka. To make this feast Mr. Parkman purchased at a great ransom the fattest dog in the village, and prepared a stew which filled two cooking-kettles; a third contained the tea, in which a few handfuls of soot were dissolved to give it the semblance of strength. Mr. Parkman must call to mind his pleasant sojourn among those amiable savages with mixed feelings: for "Big Crow" and his people have long since vanished from the face of the earth. In February, 1847, Mr. Parkman's amusing sketches of his adventures began to appear in Knickerbocker's Magazine; and in due time they were issued in a collected form, divided into chapters, to each of which, in accordance with the fashion of that age, there was prefixed a more or less appropriate quotation from

"Childe Harold" or the "Lay of the Last Minstrel." We miss those fragments of familiar rhyme in the reprinted edition of The Oregon Trail. We sometimes regret it; for they formed as it were a link, slight but pleasing, between two generations, two literatures, two worlds, the Old and the New.

It was, we believe, in the course of this expedition that Mr. Parkman formed the project of writing the history of the final struggle between England and France for the possession of North America; at any rate, from that time forward he began to collect materials bearing on this subject. In the course of his reading, his attention was attracted by the striking figure of the Ottawa chief who stirred up the Western Indians to revolt against the English dominion in 1763, after the struggle was over; and Mr. Parkman's first essay in historical writing was The Conspiracy of Pontiac, published in 1851. This product of his youth, which now forms an epilogue or pendant to the main body of his works, served him as a preparatory exercise; and having abundantly demonstrated his command of the English language and of an attractive literary style, Mr. Parkman resolutely abandoned the temptation to go on writing, and applied himself to the more arduous task of reading and collating everything extant which bore upon his subject. Fourteen years passed before he again gave a volume to the world. The Pioneers of New France was published in 1865, and was followed in due time by The Jesuits in North America (1867), La Salle (1869), The Old Régime (1874), and Count Frontenac (1877). This valuable series of works may be regarded as the firstfruits of his mature labours. They belong to what may be called Mr. Parkman's middle period, a period marked, perhaps, by a certain dryness of style, doubtless caught from the ancient books and documents through which the writer had pertinaciously waded; yet there are those who think that, to see Mr. Parkman at his very best, we must turn to The Old Régime and Count Frontenac. We are not of this opinion. Profoundly interesting as these volumes are, their interest largely depends on the peculiar features of the transitory society which they so skilfully depicted; and they cannot seriously compete in importance with the greater work to which he finally addressed himself, the history of the conflict which substantially began with the administration of Frontenac, and only came to an end by the capture of Quebec in 1758.

Of this work, the principal fruit of Mr. Parkman's lifelong studies, the latter part appeared first. In the period 1700-1748 there were still many doubts to be cleared up, and many blanks to be filled by reference to original documents, and to scarce pamphlets which remained to be hunted out in the dusty libraries of Europe. But Mr. Parkman had already got together all that was necessary to the story of the final struggle in the Seven Years' War; and he therefore determined to deal at once with the period between 1748 and 1763. Montcalm and Wolfe accordingly appeared in 1884; the first in order of publication, the last in order of historical succession, of the two divisions of the main work to which his previous volumes were designed to lead up. The remaining division (1700-1748) is comprised in the two volumes which now lie before us. They carry on the story from the point where the author quitted it at the end of Frontenac, to the point at which it is again taken up in Montcalm and Wolfe; and the series is therefore now complete. Most heartily do we congratulate Mr. Parkman on the conclusion of his task. It has, assuredly, been no light one; and the fact that Mr. Parkman's extracts from State archives and other authorities, inaccessible to the general body of readers, fill no less than seventy ponderous volumes, most of them folios, may serve to illustrate the severity of the drudgery which awaits him who woos the muse of history. These are now deposited in the library of the Massachusetts Historical Society for the use of historical students; and the dozen handy and eminently readable volumes which Mr. Parkman has founded on them—and not on them alone, but on the collation of an immense mass of printed material—must have found hundreds of thousands of readers, for some of these volumes have long since passed through their twentieth edition.

Of the instalment of the work now before us it is unnecessary to speak in detail. It evinces the same love of the subject for its own sake, the same aptitude for seizing its picturesque features, the same scrupulous and painstaking accuracy in particulars, which have made Mr. Parkman's books alike popular with the general reader and indispensable to the student of history; and it will fully sustain, if it does not positively heighten, the honourable reputation which the author has long since earned. Mr. Parkman's works contain nothing more graphic than his descriptions of Indian warfare on the border of northern New England during the war of the Spanish succession, and of Pepperrell's famous expedition against Louisbourg; and many, to whom most of the incidents forming the staple of his chronicle are thrice-told tales, will read with interest his account of the little-known expedition of the brothers De Varennes, or La Verendrye, in search of the Pacific in 1742. Preceding Lewis and Clark by sixty-two years, these intrepid explorers discovered on January 1, 1743, what Mr. Parkman pronounces to have been the Big-horn range of the Rocky Mountains, at a point only 120 miles east of the Yellowstone Park. It is certain that no European had penetrated so far westwards. From those great snow-encumbered peaks, which they dared not think of scaling, they fancied that they might have seen the Pacific, though 800 miles of forest lay between. The Indians who escorted them, alarmed by finding that the hostile Snakes (Gens du Serpent) had abandoned their principal camp and gone on the warpath, insisted on retreating; and a blizzard of unusual severity, which fell suddenly upon them, made the explorers fain to consent. In more favourable circumstances these daring pioneers of New France might have reached the Pacific. The appendix contains some important selections from original documents: among other things, passages from papers in the French archives, and from the journal of a French inhabitant of Louisbourg, amply illustrating the well-known fact that France lost Canada simply because her statesmen found North America minus the British possessions all too small a field for their ambition; and extracts from the dispatches of Governor Shirley to the English Government on the question of expatriating the French Acadians (1745—1747).

E. J. PAYNE.

Last Words of Thomas Carlyle. (Longmans.)

No written words of Carlyle were likely to be left to the oblivion of manuscript, and the publication of some such volume as this was to be counted upon with certitude. As a whole the book cannot be considered, even by a fervid Carlyle enthusiast, as a thing of great value; and in the unfinished novel which fills about half of it there are many pages that are not even specially characteristic, but there are passages here and there with an interest of their own which forbids us to dismiss the volume as a superfluity and nothing more.

Even "Wotton Reinfred" is not devoid of attractions. True, the narrative is shapeless and often tiresome, with a touch or two in the latter portion of that melodramatic treatment to which one would have thought Carlyle of all men would never condescend. It proves conclusively enough a proposition which needed no proof, that its author would never have made himself even a moderately successful novelist; but a story which, as an example of the art of fiction, is a very poor thing may still have respectable, or more than respectable, claims to attention. There is a good deal of the same kind of intellectual interest in several of the chapters of "Wotton Reinfred" that there is in Melincourt or Headlong Hall. Representatives of diverse types of character and modes of thought are brought together in a frankly mechanical way, that they may tilt against each other in dialectic lists; and the combat and the combatants are transferred to the page, not indeed with the brilliant dash of Peacock, but with a vigour and solidity of presentation not one whit less effective. Occasionally we have a fine touch, contrasting curiously with the rough and ready, almost unscrupulous, picturesqueness of the writer's later work. There is real subtlety of discriminative insight in the sketch (pp. 86-7) of Jeffrey—for there can be no doubt whatever that he is the original of Williams—especially in the following sentences, which paint a perfect portrait in less than half a page.

"Nothing could be kindlier than his contempt, which, indeed, extended far and wide, embracing, with a few momentary exceptions, the whole actions and character of men, his own not excluded, nay, rather placed in the foremost rank of pettiness. For moral goodness and poetical beauty, save only as pleasurable sensations, he had no name; yet few men had a keener feeling or a better practical regard for both; he was merciful and generous, he knew not why; and a great character, a fine action, a sublime image or thought struck through his inmost being, and for an instant, gleaming in every feature with ethereal light, the gay sceptic had become a worshipper and rapt enthusiast. These, however, were but momentary glows, reflexes of a strange glory from a world he never dwelt in, which he knew not, and soon lost in the element of quiet kindly derision and denial where he lived and moved."

Still more striking, if only on account of its theme, is the analysis of the character of Coleridge—who figures here as Dalbrook—an analysis which has the intellectual thoroughness and the judicial weight, the lack of which we feel so keenly in the brilliant, unscrupulous, caricature sketch which no reader of the Life of John Stirling ever forgets. These things do not, of course, make a good novel; but in virtue of them "Wotton Reinfred" is a fragment which was well worth preserving.

The sketch of the "Excursion (futile enough) to Paris, Autumn, 1851," is, however, by far the most readable item in the contents of the volume. Carlyle evidently wrote it in a very bad temper, and when his temper was worst his style was most vivacious. This chronicle of futilities sparkles and coruscates through every paragraph, and the sparks and coruscations are of a kind to inspire on the part of the reader a feeling of warm sympathy with Carlyle's host and hostess, Lord and Lady Ashburton. The fare, accommodation, and entertainment provided for the man of genius are anathematised with a vigour not excelled in any eulogy of Cromwell or denunciation of Benthamism; and the celebrities of the Paris of the period, sketched with the vividly vituperative pictorialism which, as employed on the portraits of his friends, startled the world in the pages of the Reminiscences. Changarnier has a "placid baggy face," expressing "obstinacy, sulkiness, and silent long-continued labour and chagrin." "I could have likened him to a retired shop-keeper of thoughtful habits, much of whose savings had unexpectedly gone in railways." Roget is "a poor thin man with two voices, bass and treble alternating, who said almost nothing with either of them." Mérimée appears first as a "hard, logical, smooth, but utterly barren man (whom I had seen before in London, with little wish for a second course of him)"; and later on, when the unfortunate Frenchman has been disparaging Carlyle's pet Germans, as an "impertinent, blasphemous blockhead." To Thiers and Guizot in one of the later pages he bids farewell in a fine Carlylean fashion.

"I am told that he [Thiers] is jealous that I respect him insufficiently! Poor little soul, I have no pique at him whatsoever; and of the three, or indeed of known Frenchmen (Guizot included), consider him much the best man. A healthy Human Animal, with due beaverism (high and low), due vulpinism, or more than due; in fine, a healthy creature, and without any 'conscience,' good or bad. Whereas, Guizot—I find him a solemn intrigant, an Inquisitor-Tartuffe, gaunt, hollow, resting on the everlasting No, with a haggard consciousness that it ought to be the everlasting Yea; to me an extremely detestable kind of man."

And so on, and so on. Not specially amiable or specially instructive, but brilliant and unmistakably readable—a judgment which cannot be passed upon the collection of letters to Varnhagen von Ense, where the occasional interest comes and goes in an irritating fitful manner. Much more entertaining are the fourteen pages of Mrs. Carlyle to Amely Bolto, though when one turns to the title-page one cannot help asking with Gêronte, Que diable allait il faire dans cette galère? This husband and wife were not sufficiently one for such identification.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

TWO EASTERN CHURCHES.

The Syrian Church in India. By George Milne Rae. (Blackwoods.)

The Catholics of the East and His People. By Arthur John Maclean, Dean of Argyll and the Isles, and William Henry Browne. (S.P.C.K.)

"The body of Messer St. Thomas the Apostle," we read in the book of Sir Marco Polo, "lies in this province of Maabar in a certain little town having no great population." Maabar, it need hardly be said, was the name given by Mahomedan writers of the middle ages to what is now known as the Coromandel coast. Marco Polo goes on to tell us "the manner in which the Christian brethren who keep the church relate the story of the Saint's death." The tradition that St. Thomas preached the Gospel in India is very old. It was accepted by St. Jerome and was referred to by Gregory of Tours, who wrote in the sixth century. The story told in the Golden Legend about the visit of St. Thomas to "the King of Ynde, Gondeforus," gives a very circumstantial account of the Saint's missionary labours. The local legend states that St. Thomas, after preaching the Gospel first on both the east and west coasts of Southern India, went to China, and also converted the heathen there; that he returned to India, and, having aroused the jealousy of the Brahmins, became a martyr. Nor is St. Thomas the only apostle whose name has been connected with the antiquities of the Christian Church in Madras. Pantaenus of Alexandria went on a missionary voyage to India toward the end of the second century, as related by his pupil Clement, the learned Bishop of Caesarea, but "found his own arrival anticipated by some who were acquainted with the Gospel of Matthew, to whom Bartholemew, one of the apostles, had preached." Jerome tells much the same story. Without going into the details of a controversy which has puzzled a long succession of historians, it may be said that the main issues are these:—Did either Saint Thomas or Saint Bartholemew visit India? Secondly, was it Southern India the apostles visited? and lastly, is there any ground for crediting the tradition which ascribes the foundation of the early Christian churches in Southern India to either of the apostles? The whole question has been carefully investigated by Sir William Hunter, who comes to the conclusion that the evidence of the early Christian writers, tested in the light of later researches, "tends to connect St. Thomas with the India of the ancient world—that is to say, with Persia and Afghanistan; and St. Bartholomew with the Christian settlements on the Malabar coast."

Mr. Milne Rae, who, during the course of his own missionary labours in Southern India, has taken a particular interest in the history of the Eastern Churches, only agrees with Sir William Hunter to a limited extent. He believes that neither St. Thomas nor St. Bartholomew ever visited Southern India, and that the Syrian Church here was a later offshoot of the Nestorian Church of Persia. He is of opinion, moreover, that the Church of Southern India cannot be traced further back than the beginning of the sixth century. Cosmas Indicopleustes, the Alexandrian merchant who wrote about the middle of that century, is, Mr. Rae thinks, our first trustworthy authority. With Mr. Rae and Sir William Hunter both agreed in believing that the India of the legend of St. Thomas lay in the direction of Afghanistan and Persia, there is little more to be said on this point. Still, as there is one side from which Mr. Rae has not approached the subject, we may add a few words. He accepts General Cunningham's identification of "The Kynge of Ynde, Gondeforus," with the Indo-Parthian prince Gondophares, whose coins have been found in Kabul and Kandahar, Seistan and the Punjab, and whose exploits are further commemorated in a stone inscription now preserved in the Lahore Museum. But it is worth mentioning, on the authority of the late Samuel Beal, that evidence may be found in Chinese literature of a remarkable convergence of Christian and Buddhist notions having taken place in North-Western India just about the time when St. Thomas is supposed to have preached there. A Buddhist patriarch named Asvaghosha lived at the court of an immediate successor of Gondophares. One at least of his books is based on doctrines foreign to Buddhism and allied to a perverted form of Christian dogma. This book, according to Mr. Beal, has never been properly examined, but we might reasonably expect, he says, that it will some day clear up all doubts as to St. Thomas's mission. Possibly, too, an explanation of the legend which—wrongly as Mr. Rae and Sir William Hunter think—connects St. Thomas with Southern India may likewise be found in the Chinese books. When travelling in Sze-chuen, the late Mr. Colborne Baber found in a temple near Tzu-chou a carved image of Tamo, with a Latin cross on his breast. This Tamo has sometimes been identified by Roman Catholic missionaries with St. Thomas. Now Tamo is a Buddhist patriarch; and, curiously enough, he came to China from Southern India, travelling by sea in 526 A.D. He is said to have been the son of an Indian king, and to have died in China. He was an ascetic, Dr. Edkins says, of the first water. It is related in the Chinese books that on one occasion he sat with his face to a wall for five years, thus earning the name of "the star-gazing Brahmin." In India he had incurred the enmity both of Brahmans and Buddhists; and, according to Dr. Edkins, he went to China to escape persecution in his own country. Is it not possible that the name Tamo, besides misleading missionaries in our own day, may also have misled their predecessors thirteen centuries or so ago? Tamo was undoubtedly an Indian; and his images, which are numerous in the temples of South-Western China, represent him, Mr. Baber writes, with marked Hindu features and black complexion. It is a significant fact that Cosmas Indicopleustes visited the Malabar coast, and, according to his own account, found a fully-organised Christian church there, only three or four years before Tamo set sail for China. Here, again, is a further indication of the possible conjunction of Christian and Buddhist ideas, and it may perhaps furnish a clue to the St. Thomas myth. When we recollect that Mr. Baber found tin plates in common use on the borders of Tibet, stamped with images of Mr. Gladstone and other European celebrities, who, by local repute, were Buddhas of more or less sanctity, one can easily see that even more wonderful mistakes may some day pass muster as historical facts. Mr. Talboys Wheeler, in his History of India, did not hesitate to suggest that St. Thomas may have been a Buddhist Sraman, who perished in the age of Brahminical persecution; and this might be very near the truth.

In regard to St. Bartholomew, Mr. Rae holds that neither he nor Pantaenus ever went to Southern India. The India where the Alexandrian merchant, circa 190 A.D., heard of the Saint's labours and death, was, he thinks, the valley of the Indus. Here, however, the evidence on both sides is even vaguer than that relating to St. Thomas; and the reader may be left to decide for himself. It must not be supposed, however, that Mr. Rae's book deals only with the origins of the early Madras Church. Working on the theory that it was founded by Nestorians from Persia in the sixth century, he relates the history of the Christian settlements from that period down to the present day. The description of the carved crosses and writings on stone found at St. Thomas's Mount and elsewhere will be invaluable to students. A full and careful account is also given of the controversies which of late years have vexed the Indian branch of the Nestorian Church. In a final chapter Mr. Rae states his reasons for hoping that this ancient Church, after undergoing many vicissitudes, may yet have a happy and prosperous future; especially if its members agree to repudiate the authority of a far-distant patriarch "who has no intelligent sympathy with them, and little or no interest in the country beyond draining off money annually in the form of rasisa, for which he gives nothing in return."

Along with Mr. Rae's scholarly contribution to our knowledge of an obscure episode in the early history of Christianity, mention has also to be made of a work which treats of the Nestorian Church in Kurdistan and Persia, being, as the title-page says, "the impressions of five years' work in the Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission." Dealing, as it does, mainly with the present state of a country likely at any moment to become the subject of grave international complications, this little book must be regarded as something more than a graphic and readable story of missionary labour. To discuss the book, however, from the political point of view would be only to repeat what the Hon. George Curzon has said in his Persia and the Persian Question. It is Mr. Curzon, by-the-by, who tells us that one of the authors—the Rev. W. Browne—by staying at Mar Shimun's village of Kochannis (Qudshanis), under circumstances of great peril and privation, was instrumental in preventing a massacre of Christians by the Kurds. The authors, however, are quite ready to tell a story which might suggest a laugh at their expense. At Urmi, one day, they were riding over the grass at a canter, merely, it was explained to an inquisitive Persian, for their own amusement. "No doubt," quoth the Khan, "they are drunk." One is reminded of Sir John Malcolm's anecdote of the naval officer at Bushire who went for a ride on a too spirited horse. Next day he was informed by a well-meaning native that, although people had been highly amused at his performances in the saddle, his credit had been saved. "I told them," said the obliging friend, "that, like every Englishman, you rode admirably, but that yesterday you were very drunk."

STEPHEN WHEELER.

Miscellaneous Essays. By George Saintsbury. (Percival.)

MR. SAINTSBURY'S new volume contains some interesting work, the best portions of it having been written sixteen or seventeen years ago. The contents of the book, he tells us,

"have been selected from a much larger mass of material, the composition of which covers, in point of time, the best part of twenty years; and instead of the endeavour to secure a factitious unity by dint of some ingenious title, the contents have designedly been made as various in appearance as might be, in the hope that a sufficient real unity of critical standpoint may be found in them, whether their subjects be old or new, English or French, literary or political. For it is possible to disagree with M. Brunetière in his confession and apology, as the author of books made of articles, that 'articles will never make a book.' A book, as it seems to me, consists not so much in ostensibly homogeneous subject, or in the fact that the author has excogitated its plan at a single stroke, as in the unity of method, of treatment, of attitude, and of view. I hope that there is such unity here."

Well, one may admit that there is certainly such unity in all that Mr. Saintsbury writes. For good or ill, Mr. Saintsbury's manner is his own—his manner of looking at things, and his manner of expressing his reflections. He is always consistent in adherence to his own excellent rule of critical conduct: "always to put the exposition of the subject before the display of personal cleverness." He is always consistent in his refusal to enter into those niceties of consideration which appear to his very English sense of things to be mere foolishness—the niceties of consideration which, to critics like Mr. Pater, are the one thing needful in criticism. He is entirely faithful to that whimsical style which has point but not charm, which bristles with offence yet interests by its individuality. And, as ever, he bases his chief claim to consideration on the number of volumes, in at least two languages, which he has read in a given time.

"For myself," he assures us, "I have been and hope (Nemesis not interfering) to be a great reader, and I certainly would not limit myself to one or two literatures only. But what I should like to do before I die is to know as nearly as possible everything that is worth knowing in the two literatures of which [I quote from a lecture] we have been talking this evening."

Those two literatures are, of course, English and French. And there is no doubt whatever that Mr. Saintsbury does know a very great deal about French and English literature. His Short History of French Literature is a work of considerable research, if not of conspicuous thoroughness; and his book on Elizabethan Literature, viewed as a handbook, is both useful and pleasant, though it adds no new page to criticism. I am sure that the essays on Borrow and Peacock, for instance, in the Essays in English Literature must have been of great service to the general reader, to whom Borrow and Peacock are merely names, just as a sympathetic guide-book is of service in pointing out the curious and delightful places, a little aside from the usual route, which the traveller might otherwise have overlooked. And such papers as those on Flaubert and Gautier, in the Essays on French Novelists, had, in their day, even more value. In the volume before us there is an essay on Baudelaire, first published in the Fortnightly Review in 1875, which is certainly one of the best pieces of work that Mr. Saintsbury has ever done, and which, in 1875, was a daring assertion of that unanswerable principle, "Art for Art's sake," which to-day does not even need to be asserted. Mr. Saintsbury has the distinction of being the first Englishman to write an essay on Baudelaire, a writer who has certainly influenced subsequent French literature in a more profound way than any other writer of his time. He remains, too, one of the very few people, French or English, who have written with appreciation and understanding on so difficult, so fascinating, a subject. It is true that the essay has serious faults and limitations: that it is very English after all, that in viewing so sanely the extravagances and eccentricities of Baudelaire, it goes to the other extreme, and would present to us a Baudelaire whose perversity was merely pose, whose vices were purely assumed. It is a great mistake, a fundamental error in criticism, to overlook the solid substratum of vice which unquestionably existed in Baudelaire.

"Wine, haschisch, opium," Mr. Saintsbury assures us, "are interesting to him just as the passion of Delphine is interesting, not at all from a diseased craving for stimulus, still less from the perverse desire which a writer who should have known better has attributed to him, of 'finding beauty in recondite wickedness,' but simply as some of the different means to which men and women have been driven in the endeavour to reach the infinite, and avoid the monster which dogs them—ennui."

This is plausible enough, but the facts are against it. When we remember that after all it was simply a "diseased craving for stimulus," with an immoderate indulgence in every variety of it, that killed Baudelaire, there is no excuse for reasoning away every manifestation of morbid desires in his work, as merely the dramatic sympathy of an unprejudiced observer. It is true, as Mr. Saintsbury points out, that he was well aware of the direction of his own tendencies. Certainly; but that is generally a characteristic of extremely morbid people, though, as a rule, they are not able to appear so impersonal in their confessions as was Baudelaire.

Another very interesting essay is that on "Modern English Prose," which dates from the same period as the study of Baudelaire. Mr. Saintsbury tells us he has included it with much misgiving. The misgiving was hardly necessary, in this particular case: it would have been of more service had it caused the exclusion of an amazing deliverance on "The Modern English Novel," which comes at the end of the volume, and is carefully dated 1892. As a bit of clever fooling, the paper named "Thoughts on Republics" is full of entertainment; and, to enjoy it, one need not take any more interest in the republics and monarchies than Mr. Saintsbury himself appears to do. "A Frame of Miniatures" holds some portraits with which very few people are familiar; and probably Mr. Saintsbury's light and gossiping manner is quite in its place in discussing Parry, Dorat, Désaugiers, Piron, and Panard. Applied to M. Renan, the same treatment is somewhat less effective; though, indeed, the essay is amusing, very amusing, reading. Mr. Saintsbury is always good at giving quotations, and an essay on Chamfort and Rivarol (which is not an exhaustive study of those two temperaments) contains an unusual share of unusually amusing ones. Here is the finest of them all, one of Chamfort's wonderful anecdotes, which I must transfer from Mr. Saintsbury's pages, with grateful acknowledgments:

"Madame de H.—me racontait la mort de M. le duc d'Angoulême. 'Cela a tourné bien court,' disait-elle. 'Deux jours auparavant M. Bonvard lui avait permis de manger, et le jour même de sa mort, deux heures avant la récidive de sa paralysie, il était comme à trente ans, comme il avait été toute sa vie. Il avait demandé son perroquet, avait dit 'Brossez ce fauteuil.' 'Voyons mes deux broderies nouvelles,' enfin toute sa tête, toutes ses idées comme à l'ordinaire.'"

ARTHUR SYMONS.

NEW NOVELS.

Diana Trelawny: the Story of a Great Mistake. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 2 vols. (Blackwoods.)

The Squire. By Mrs. Parr. In 3 vols. (Cassells.)

More Kin than Kind. By B. Loftus Tottenham. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Precious Jewel. By Dora Murray. (Digby & Long.)

Katie's Coronet. By F. Lancaster Lucas. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

George Waring's Choice. By Frank Baron. (Ward & Downey.)

A Son of the Fens. By P. H. Emerson. (Sampson Low.)

A story by Mrs. Oliphant, whatever its length, may safely be taken as worthy of first notice among any average batch of novels; and Diana Trelawny, though not a long tale, is not only conspicuously superior to the other works of fiction now under review, but is an exceptionally good book even for Mrs. Oliphant. Diana, mistress of Trelawny Chase, is a practical-minded woman of thirty, unmarried and disinclined to marry. Originally occupying a humble position as governess at a ladies' school in Brighton, she signals her accession to great wealth, on the one hand by a strict and business-like attention to the improvement of her estates, and on the other by a generosity towards poor neighbours and dependants more lavish than discriminating. Among the recipients of her bounty are Mrs. Norton, a clergyman's widow, and her niece Sophy, who are accommodated with a cottage rent-free on Diana's estate. They were "peevish, humble-minded, weakly little gentlewomen, with nothing remarkable about them except the simple prettiness of the girl Sophy, who was a soft, smiling, golden-haired creature, unobtrusive and gentle as a little bird." Nevertheless the author has contrived to evolve out of these two characters as quaint and as quietly amusing a pair of portraits as any to be found in her writings. Well described, too, are Diana's near neighbours, the Hunstantons, husband and wife, the latter a shrewd, critical woman, the former "a man with nerves and fond of meddling with things that did not concern him much," as his wife was accustomed to say. The removal of these five people to North Italy gives occasion for the introduction upon the scene of an Italian count named Pandolfini; and the meddlesome officiousness of Mr. Hunstanton, who makes up his mind that Pandolfini ought to marry, brings about the "great mistake" which is the subject of the tale. No reader can fail to appreciate either the charming dexterity which Mrs. Oliphant has displayed in working out the details of her plot, or the living reality of her characters, even where the latter play but the smallest part in the action of the story. Who does not know a country clergyman full of the impressive geniality attributed to Mr. Snodgrass, the rector, in the following:—

"Who could have thought of seeing you here?" Mrs. Norton said, as the rector came up to her with that expressive grasp of the hand which was one of his special gifts, and which everybody remarked as the very embodiment of cordiality and friendliness—a sort of modest embrace. He was not glad to see her particularly, nor she to see him; but if they had flown into each other's arms, it could scarcely have been a warmer greeting than that silent clasping of hands without even a 'How d'ye do?' to impair its eloquence."

Those who experience difficulty in comprehending intricate degrees of kinsmanship may perhaps get a little confused over the family relations and history of the Roystons and the Crofts in Mrs. Parr's tale entitled The Squire. When these, however, have been mastered, the narrative is easy flowing and pleasant enough, characterised for the most part by a general placidity and amiability, but nowhere highly exciting, as indeed could scarcely be expected of a tale occupied principally with details of life in a country village. Perhaps, too, the voluminous quantity of facts that have to be kept in mind in order to understand the story will be trying to the patience of many readers. At the commencement of the book we are introduced to the Squire, Humphry Royston, a bachelor of sixty, and we are requested to remember that forty years before he had been disappointed of the woman he loved through the instrumentality of his dearest friend, who carried her off himself. It is true that Humphry had never by word or sign declared his love, and when Robert Croft wooed and won Janet Hales, he, Humphry Royston, had shifted his quarters to the other side of England. Still the blow was none the less keen, and as Robert Croft happened at the time to be under an engagement to marry Humphry's sister Barbara, a family quarrel of serious dimensions was the natural result; and now, forty years after, we find the wound still rankling in the disappointed lover's breast, though Robert Croft and his wife are long ago dead and gone. There is something very cumbrous in all these preliminaries, but the narrative improves in the second and third volumes. Mrs. Parr writes in a clear, unpretending style: many of her characters are very well sketched, particularly David Croft and his mother. Tom Sparshott, an accomplished expert in the art of fictitious love-making, is also deserving of honourable mention.

The author of More Kin than Kind informs us that, on the death of Sir Gilbert Denham of Sitworth Manor, the baronetcy and estates devolved on his son Ralph, who, discovering among the family papers a certificate of his father's marriage with his mother bearing date three years after his own birth, inferred therefrom his own illegitimacy, and voluntarily retired in favour of his wicked cousin Hugh. The fact of a previous marriage having been contracted at a registry office is, however, known to an old servant of the family, a scampish valet who had abandoned his wife and emigrated to America some twenty years before. Returning to England, he now avails himself of his knowledge to levy blackmail upon the present holder of the title. It will be seen from the above brief outline that the plot of More Kin than Kind can scarcely lay claim to much originality. Nor do any of Mr. Tottenham's characters rise very far above mediocrity. Ralph Denham is the usual type of an honest, sturdy young Englishman and makes a fairly respectable hero, Eva Graham is a fit subject of romance, and Hugh Denham will do as a villain; but they are nothing more than conventional characters. Still, the treatment is painstaking and workman-like, and the result is a moderately good average novel.

A Precious Jewel is also a production which might be described, like the foregoing, as "a moderately good average novel," and in nearly every respect except that of length it resembles More Kin than Kind. As before, the plot turns upon the discovery of some old papers showing evidence of illegitimacy; there is another conventional villain; and the story ends, as the other did, in the death of the villain and a general administration of poetic justice. Archibald and Angus Macalister are suitors for the hand of their cousin Muriel, who favours the former. Angus, discovering some documents showing that his brother, who is owner of the family estate, was certainly born out of wedlock, makes use of them for the purpose of obtaining Muriel's consent to a marriage with himself, under the threat of exposing Archibald. There is no unusual feature in the story. The title was originally The Sins of the Fathers, and the present name was substituted at the last moment owing to copyright existing in the former title, as explained in a note by the publishers.

Inventiveness in these days must surely be at a low ebb. In Katie's Coronet we have yet a third novel depending for its story upon disclosures of illegitimacy and invalidity of title. The present work, however, can neither be described as a "moderately good" nor as an "average" novel; it is remarkable chiefly for an extravagant eccentricity of incident, and for the curiously fantastic ingenuity in plot-weaving exhibited by its author. In this case the supposed illegitimacy of Charles Trelana is brought to light by means of forged documents prepared by Lady Rachel Trelana (an earl's daughter, who certainly ought to have known better), and her nefariously disposed son, Horace, the heir presumptive. Charlie, the dispossessed heir, determines to sacrifice himself for his mother's sake, and leaving home secretly one dark night, places his hat and stick close to a roaring abyss of waters, makes a sliding mark with the heel of his boot down the muddy bank, and walks off in another direction to enlist in a cavalry regiment. Just before the occurrence of these events, Charlie's father has been foully murdered, and suspicion falls upon one James Crowthe, a ne'er do weel, who left the neighbourhood on the night of the murder and enlisted in the cavalry regiment which Charles Trelana afterwards joined. Eventually, after some three hundred pages of rather uninteresting incident, it turns out that Horace himself dealt the fatal blow with a life-preserver, and then for some unexplained reason dragged the body of his uncle to the edge of a neighbouring cliff and there propped it up in a sitting posture. James Crowthe emerging soon after from the "Green Man," an adjacent hostelry, gave the body a blow with his stick, out of mere tipsy wantonness, and precipitated it on to the rocks below, whereupon he dropped his stick (which was afterwards recognised) and fled. Lady Rachel broke her neck in a ditch somewhere in the Austrian Tyrol; Horace eloped with a Russian Nihilist princess, and was caught and sent to Siberia. Mr. Lucas does not waste his time with any detailed descriptions of the gentle art of making love; but at the end of his narrative the characters, male and female, are called up in a group, and having been assorted with varying degrees of congruity, are comfortably married off to one another, each wedding having a little chapter to itself. The dialogue of the book is below par, and the style is often slipshod, with a constant tendency to degenerate into slang.

The only noticeable feature about George Waring's Choice is that one entirely fails to discover what his choice really was. He makes offers of marriage to two women, each of whom refuses him. The first is a devoted little woman, spending most of her life in work amid London slums, who loves him deeply, but is prevented from accepting his offer owing to certain religious scruples. The second is a Parisian coquette, who toys with him idly, and for deliverance from whom he afterwards devoutly thanks heaven. On the whole it is a tedious book. It appears to have been written by a barrister with a dilettante enthusiasm for classical music: his hero is a man of little principle, a free-thinker and voluptuary, whose heartless behaviour to an opera dancer whom he has seduced is related with rather shameless composure at the opening of the volume.

The Norfolk bucolic dialect is not familiar to everybody, and the reading of it in print may be tiresome; so that it may be well to caution anyone who purposes ordering A Son of the Fens from his circulating library that the book in question consists of 376 pages of autobiography, the words being spelt for the most part as the peasant who tells the tale would pronounce them. To readers acquainted with the Broads and the Fens, the narrative will no doubt present points of interest.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

SOME BOOKS ON ECONOMIC QUESTIONS.

The Use and Abuse of Money. By the Rev. W. Cunningham, D.D. (John Murray.) From such a title as Dr. Cunningham has chosen one might expect a mere moral lecture on the root of all evil; and lectures of that kind are seldom either entertaining or edifying. But his book (one of a series of University Extension Manuals) is something very different. The subject is capital in its relation to social progress, but the author prefers to call his book The Use and Abuse of Money from a wish to lay stress on the element of personal responsibility.

"The present sketch," he says, "simply follows out some of the suggestions made by Mill, with the view of raising the question whether a full recognition of the human element in economics may not be the best means of attaining to clear definitions of economic terms, and to the distinct statement and thorough discussion of fundamental economic problems?"

Economic science assumes a certain type of human nature, and, within limits, the assumption is convenient and even necessary. But we must discard the assumption if we would understand a distant past, or forecast the future. Dr. Cunningham's purpose has been to lay aside all postulates about labour and capital, all hypotheses about free competition and formulas of supply and demand, and, choosing capital as one of the great factors of our industrial life, to examine how it differs from the corresponding factors of past times and of different civilisations. Such an investigation enables us with a certain confidence to distinguish the more permanent from the changing features of human nature, and to observe the tendencies of our own time, a result worth taking any amount of pains to arrive at. Dr. Cunningham proceeds further to deal with the ethical question as to the right and the wrong use of wealth. What is the consumer's duty in face of the evils of sweating? How far is an investor responsible for the purposes to which his money is applied? Ought a Christian in Birmingham to manufacture idols for export to the heathen? These are some of the hard cases which the author raises, and which he discusses in a temperate and reasonable spirit. Throughout the book he has had to be brief, rather suggesting lines of investigation than exhausting his subject; but he has done a difficult piece of work exceedingly well. To students who bring to it some knowledge of political economy (and for such it is intended) it will be of great benefit; and it will set them thinking, widen their view, and open up to them a field of inquiry in which there is still a great deal to be done.

Principles of Political Economy. By Charles Gide. Translated by E. P. Jacobson, with an Introduction and Notes by James Bonar. (Boston, U.S.A.: Heath.) Mr. Bonar introduces Prof. Gide's book by saying:

"It is neither a primer for beginners, nor a dissertation for the learned, but a guide-book for serious students who have mastered the economical alphabet, and are feeling their way to a judgment of their own on economical subjects. Its place in French economic literature is almost unique. It is helping many a young Frenchman to turn his attention to economic theory, and to study it in the light of the latest discussions. Prof. Gide has Adam Smith's faculty of making his readers think for themselves, and accept no conclusion without following out the process that leads to it."

Mr. Bonar has not exaggerated the merits of the book. It is clear and vivid in style; in matters of controversy the author discusses and does not dogmatise; and, keeping to realities, and mindful of the complexity of modern life, he never allows political economy to degenerate into a verbal juggle. American editions, we suppose, do not sell largely in this country. If so, we should like to see an English edition of Mr. Jacobson's translation, for it is very well done.

"SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES."—The State and Pensions in Old Age. By J. A. Spender. With an Introduction by Arthur H. D. Acland. (Sonnenschein.) This is an attempt, not to solve the problem of national insurance, but to formulate its conditions, and suggest lines for future investigation. Only a Royal Commission can provide all the evidence that is necessary before the matter becomes ripe for legislation, but in the meantime Mr. Spender has brought together and analysed such facts as are already within reach. He deals, fully and clearly, with the primary question of the actual resources of the poor in old age, with the experience of foreign countries, with the character of the schemes already before the public, and the history of English opinion on the subject. Too much cannot be said for the care, ability, and impartiality with which the book is written. Mr. Spender has his tentative conclusions, and sensible ones enough, but he does not parade them. His work is really scientific, in touch with fact, whereas the name of Social Science too often covers nothing better than a multitude of prejudices and vague generalities.

Theory of Value. By F. Von Wieser, of Prague. (Being No. 50 of the Publications of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Philadelphia.) This paper is a reply to some criticisms made by Prof. MacVane, of Harvard, on the Austrian Economists, of whom Prof. Wieser is one. The special question in dispute is the relation between marginal utility and cost of production. To Ricardo, and substantially to MacVane, the determining factors in human economy are the felt dislike of labour and the felt necessity of labouring for commodities. To the Austrians the important features are the felt desire for abundance, and the felt limitation of actual supply. The limitation (and not the labour) in conjunction with the desire explains value. The Austrians, like Socrates, are accused of always talking of the same things in the same ways; and Prof. Wieser's pamphlet may seem to have little new in it. There are, however, some fresh touches. For example, in the proof that capital cannot be resolved simply into labour, or the cost of any manufactured article into mere wages; in the proof that the value of the means of production has weightier bearing on the matter in hand than the income that they eventually bring; and in the criticism of the Utilitarian calculus of pleasures and pains as applied to Economics.

Politics and Property, or Phronocracy. By Slack Worthington. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.) Phronocracy, or the government of reason, is the name which Mr. Worthington has chosen for a system that is intended to effect a compromise between Democracy and Plutocracy. His main ideas are to restrain excessive accumulations by cumulative taxation, and the improvement of government by restriction of the suffrage.

"'No man,' reasons the phronocrat, 'should participate in government who does not possess a certain amount of that which governments are established to protect, and which alone can support government—to wit, property. The simple possession of life, which can be sustained without government, does not entitle a living being to the exercise of any authority regarding the disposition or regulation of that which is the result of inherent force (excellence) or the reward of its energies or opportunities.'"

So far as we have been able to read the book, this seems to us a fair example of Mr. Worthington's style and opinions.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Reminiscences of Charles West Cope, R.A. By his son, Charles Henry Cope. (Bentley.) The chief part of this readable volume is occupied by an autobiographical sketch which the Royal Academician prepared for his children. From this we gather that he was born at Leeds in 1811, and that his father, an enthusiastic artist, displayed the breadth of his professional sympathies by naming one of his children after Benjamin West, and another after J. W. M. Turner. Charles West Cope studied first under Henry Sass, and then at the Royal Academy, after which he paid the usual visit to Rome and Northern Italy. His reminiscences of these earlier years are pleasantly told and interspersed with anecdotes and personal gossip. Returning to England, he seems to have very quickly succeeded in hitting the popular taste, and became an Associate in 1843, and five years afterwards was elected an Academician. That he was exceptionally fortunate in getting this promotion at so early an age appears from the evidence which he gave before the Royal Academy Commission in 1863. In answer to Lord Elcho's question, "What should you consider as the age of a man's majority in art," he replied: "There can be no rule, but if the election to Associateship is a test of majority, then I believe the average age is about fifty." But success is seldom a very interesting thing to those who have no share in it, and Mr. Cope's prosperous career from the time of his election to be R.A. was unmarked by any adverse incidents except those connected with the fresco work in the House of Lords. There the results of much painstaking labour were not only disappointing to the artists employed, but failed to elicit the sympathies of the profession or of the nation. "On looking back," says Mr. Cope, "through these years, I feel how much of life has been wasted in, as it were, writing in the sand. Time's effacing fingers began to obliterate at one end while we were painfully working at the other." The biography contains some reproductions of a few of Mr. Cope's popular pictures, which add to the interest of the volume.

Vernon Heath's Recollections. (Cassells.) Mr. Vernon Heath has been associated with art in two ways. To his uncle, Robert Vernon, the nation is indebted for the valuable collection of modern pictures which bears his name, and in the formation of this collection the uncle was assisted by the nephew. Thus the latter was brought into frequent and friendly communication with the principal artists of the day, especially with Turner, the Landseers, MacIise, and E. M. Ward, and formed lasting friendships with some of them. Again, Mr. Vernon Heath, at an early period in the history of photography, took up that branch of art, and, in one special department, carried it to a high state of perfection. His enlargements by the autotype process were especially successful, and there can be no doubt that much of his success was due to his knowledge of drawing and pictorial art. In delineation of foliage and sylvan scenery Mr. Vernon Heath has been particularly skilful, and scarcely less so in his groups. Being, withal, an agreeable inmate of a country house, he was, and no doubt still is, a welcome guest in every quarter; and this circumstance, while it has helped to make photography a favourite pastime with the leisured classes, has certainly been the means of giving him some very pleasant "Recollections." With these and some amusing anecdotes he has been good enough to entertain us and other readers, and he deserves our thanks for this pleasant service.

Meridiana: Noontide Essays. By Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart. (Blackwoods.) A pleasant, gossiping book like this, written by one who knows how to write, and because writing is a pleasure to him, is just the book to take with one on a holiday. It exercises the thoughts without fatiguing the brain; and if now and then the exercise becomes very gentle and suggests repose, we will not blame it. Deeper problems than those with which these essays deal have been solved in sleep, and the happiest results do not always attend the hardest thinking. Moreover, a holiday book should be as far as possible removed from that dreariest of all educational burdens—a holiday task. Perhaps the only bit of adverse criticism to which Sir Herbert Maxwell's book is open is—in one sense of the term—its want of originality. Most of its contents has already appeared in the pages of periodicals; and the diligent reader of Blackwood's Magazine will, not without pleasure, recognise several essays which, although once read, will well repay reading again. "Manners," "Customs," "Contrast," "Civilisation," "Memory," "Imagination"—these are among the subjects which constitute nostri farrago libelli; and Sir Herbert handles them not merely as a man of letters but as a man of affairs. In his humorous "Country Member's Moan," his love of field sports shows itself; and in a charming paper on "Birds," we see that that love is neither ignorant nor barbarous. We could wish that, among those whose chief object for the next four months will be to fill game bags, there were more "like the late Charles St. John, to whom every passing bird was an object of interest quite apart from its quality on the table or its value at the poulterer's." Sir Herbert speaks sensibly on the subject of "Education"; but he is doubtful whether "Technical Instruction" is not open to the charge of filling heads rather than forming them, and fears that, unless it be undertaken wisely and warily, it may impede the course of true education. Wit and humour, apt quotations, topics of general interest, and a happy style combine to render these Noontide Essays a thoroughly enjoyable volume.

Nature in Books: some Studies in Biography. By S. Anderson Graham. (Methuen.) The subjects Mr. Graham has chosen to study are Richard Jefferies, Tennyson, Thoreau, Scott, Carlyle, Burns, and Wordsworth—a good selection, likely to benefit the student himself in the course of his labours. The essays resulting from those labours display intelligence, if no special depth of insight or profundity of thought. The style is, as a rule, clear and steady, and encourages us to hope that, in his future efforts, Mr. Graham will wholly abandon the overgrown flowers of speech which here and there mar the present work: this for example: "The lady of our desire sings to us in the wind, and in the voice of breaking waves, and the murmur of running streams. She weeps in the falling rain, and smiles in moonlight and sunshine. Her diadem is jewel work of stars, and her veil is of white cloud. In summer she clothes herself with radiant gold and green and purple, and in winter with an august mantle of white, edged with dusky brown where the woods are. And whosoever shall most fittingly tell the tale of his love for her and sing her smile, and bewail her frown, and lament for that she is cruel, and rejoice because she is kind—he is the true artist; for Nature is the inspiration, art the song."

Assuredly Mr. Graham's favourite nature-lover, Richard Jefferies, was never guilty of foolish insincerities such as this; and it is due to Mr. Graham to say he himself errs in this manner but seldom. His worst "study" is of Thoreau. If he had understood the "secret" of Thoreau even to a moderate extent, he would never have given such an inapt description of his philosophy as to name it "the philosophy of idleness." The "study" of Burns is good, and that of Jefferies is probably the best in the book.

Literary Coincidences. By W. A. Clouston. (Glasgow: Morison Bros.) Under this title the learned author of "Flowers from a Persian Garden," and other collections of oriental mythology, has brought together four little essays, which agreeably represent the recreations of a scholarly mind. Two of them—on "Ancient Riddles," and on "St. Valentine's Day in the Olden Time"—have to do with the author's favourite study of folk-lore, and justify the dedication of the volume to Mr. Alfred Nutt. But the longest and by far the most important is the first, on "Literary Coincidences and Imitations." The subject is an interesting one, for it throws light on other kinds of conscious and unconscious borrowings. Mr. Clouston does not deal so much with the unsavoury topic of plagiarism, as with the similarities of thought and phrase that pervade poetical literature. The novelty of his treatment is that he is able to furnish an abundance of fresh illustrations of a somewhat hackneyed theme from both Sanskrit and Persian literature. The fourth article, called "A Bookstall Bargain," runs perilously close to the class of padding for magazines.

MR. CHARLES LOWE, sometime correspondent for the Times at Berlin, has brought out (Heinemann) a cheap edition of his historical biography of Prince Bismarck, which originally appeared, in two volumes, about six years ago. He has added a chapter dealing with the fall of the Chancellor, and has otherwise brought the work up to date.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. FISHER UNWIN announces for publication on September 12, as a volume of "The Story of the Nations," the late E. A. Freeman's Sicily: Phœnician, Greek and Roman, with maps and illustrations.

MESSRS. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & Co. will publish, early in September, a popular edition of Tess of the D'Urbervilles, in one volume, with a portrait of the author for frontispiece.

THE next volume of the "Book Lover's Library" will be Books in Chains and other Bibliographical Miscellanies, by the late William Blades. The book will contain an introductory sketch, by Mr. H. B. Wheatley, on Mr. Blades's work as a bibliographer.

MR. FRANK BARRETT's new novel, Out of the Jaws of Death, will be published next week, in three volumes, by Messrs. Cassell & Company.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a second part of Prof. Ashley's English Economic History and Theory.

THE new volume in the series of "Great Writers," to be published at the end of September, will be Voltaire, written by Mr. Francis Espinasse.

'Tween Snow and Fire: a Tale of the Last Kafir War, is the title of a new novel, by Mr. Bertram Mitford, which Mr. Heinemann will issue early next month, uniform with the author's previous work, A Romance of the Cape Frontier.

A WORK on Rugby Football, edited by the Rev. F. Marshall, will be published next month by Messrs. Cassell & Company. Among the contributors are Messrs. A. G. Guillemard, A. Budd, Rowland Hill, A. M. Croak, W. Cail, H. Vassall, C. J. B. Marriott, H. H. Almond, Sydney R. James, R. W. Irvine, J. J. McCarthy, and W. H. Gwynn. It will be fully illustrated, and will treat of English, Scotch, Welsh, and Irish football, the universities, public schools, and county football, as well as the origin and development of the game.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN announces for next week a second edition of The Naulahka, by Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier, the first edition of 5000 copies having been exhausted in a few weeks.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK, of Edinburgh, have just issued a fourth edition of Canon Driver's Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament. There is still a steady demand for the book.

THE Whitworth trustees have purchased the library of the late E. A. Freeman for presentation to Owens' College, Manchester, on the condition that it be made accessible for purposes of study to all historical students, whether members of the college or not.

THE Berlin Geographical Society has undertaken to commemorate the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, by publishing a work descriptive of the MSS. and old maps in Italian libraries relating to the history of that event, written by Dr. Kretschmer. The accompanying atlas will contain thirty-one maps, now published for the first time. The German Emperor has given a subsidy of 12,000 marks (£600) towards the expense of the undertaking.

ANOTHER interesting announcement is that Mrs. Zelia Nuttall has been placed in charge of the Mexican department at the Chicago Exhibition, and that she is having copies made of the most important Mexican MSS. and other antiquities to be found in the libraries and museums of Europe.

WE quote the following items from the New York Critic:

"MR. WHITTIER has gathered the poems he has written since the publication of Saint Gregory's Guest in 1886, and they will appear early in the autumn under the appropriate title At Sundown. Some of these poems, if not all, appeared in a privately printed book under the same title a year or two ago.

"LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. will be the English publishers of Mrs. Deland's forthcoming novel, The Story of a Child. Before its appearance in book form it will be published as a serial in The Atlantic.

"MR. BRANDER MATTHEWS's arrangement with The Cosmopolitan will end with the current year, so that the last of his regular monthly literary articles will appear in the December number of that magazine. The 'pick' of the papers in which he has been preaching against colonialism in letters will appear next month in a little book, to be called Americanisms and Briticisms, with Other Essays on Other Issues. The Harpers will publish it, in the series with Howells, Curtis, Higginson, Warner, &c.

"POE'S COTTAGE at Fordham, N.Y., has again changed hands. A wealthy Catholic publisher has just bought the quaint and fast-decaying house; and as soon as the present litigation over the title to the property is settled, the new owner will have the cottage lifted up and carried to his country seat a few blocks away. There it will be transformed into a studio and library for the use of the new owner."

MESSRS. J. E. GARRETT & Co., of Southampton-row, have now issued the second Part of their Dallastype facsimile of the first folio of Shakspeare, which is to be completed in fifty-seven Parts. It contains the first sheet of the text of "The Tempest," and thus allows us to judge of the effect of the slight reduction of the size of the page as compared with the original.

MR. WILLIAM E. A. AXON has reprinted from the July number of the Manchester Quarterly (John Heywood) a paper on "Charles Dickens and Shorthand," in which he collects the references to shorthand reporting to be found either in the novels or in the Life, and also gives a description of the system which Dickens used, that of Thomas Gurney, which he also taught to his own son, the present Recorder of Deal.

THE eleventh annual report of the Dante Society (Cambridge, Mass.) records that Prof. Charles Eliot Norton has been elected president in the room of J. R. Lowell, while Mr. Justin Winsor succeeds to the vice-presidency. To avoid confusion, we may state that there is also an American Dante Society, with its headquarters at New York, which issues a year-book of its own. The report of the Cambridge society contains, as usual, a list of additions to the special Dante collection in the library of Harvard College; also a second instalment of documents concerning Dante's public life, which includes the third decree of banishment of November 6, 1315; and a paper on "The Personal Character of Dante as revealed in his Writings," by Miss Lucy Allen Paton, of the Harvard Annex, to which a prize was awarded last year. We observe that again no essay was sent in for the Latham prize, open to graduates of any college in the United States. One of the three subjects chosen for next year's competition is "The Acquaintance of English Writers from Chaucer to Gray with the Divine Comedy."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE September issue of The North American Review will contain an article by Mr. W. E. Gladstone, on "The Elections and Home Rule," to which Mr. A. J. Balfour has undertaken to reply in October.

THE forthcoming number of the Century Magazine will contain for a frontispiece a portrait of Antonin Dvorák, accompanying an article by Mr. H. B. Krehbiel. Mr. Clarence Stedman will deal with "Imagination in Poetry," and Señor Castelar will narrate "How Columbus was wrecked."

THE September number of the Library Review, which will be largely educational, will contain a poem by Bjornstjerne Bjornson, entitled "Over the lofty Mountains," and an article by Miss Katharine Tynan on "Letters in Dublin."

THE Vegetarian Messenger for September will contain a reprint of Carlyle's paper advocating the use of Indian corn, which originally appeared in Fraser's Magazine for May 1849.

THE first instalment of a selection from the unpublished papers of the late Dr. Norman Macleod will appear in the Scottish Pulpit about the middle of September. The selection has been made by his cousin, the Rev. Dr. John Macleod, of Govan.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish on Wednesday, September 14, the first number of a new penny weekly paper for boys, to be called Chums.

WE have received the first number of the Pagan Review, which is frankly based on French models. It is to be the organ of the self-styled "younger men," which is nothing but a translation of les jeunes. The editor, in a "Foreword" of some four pages, attempts to explain what the "new paganism" means; but it is evident that it does not include lucidity. To give the names of the contributors to the first number would convey little information, for we presume that they are pseudonyms. It is enough to state that the Pagan Review can be obtained only from Mr. W. H. Brooks, Buck's Green, Rudgwick, Sussex—which is, we believe, within half-a-dozen miles of the house where Shelley was born.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO TWO FRIENDS.

(A Sicilian Octave.)

Like this poor weed* I lie beneath your feet,
And watch you wander onward hand in hand.
Over your heads the stars in heaven meet
And trace about your forms a golden band.
Trample upon me, happiness complete,
And crush me in this desolate brown land.
You make the fen again so sweet, so sweet—
O lovers, lovers, I can understand.

CHARLES SAYLE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JACOB'S WELL AND ITS SKEAT.

Elm Grove House, Salisbury: August 13, 1892.

THE Cathedral Library here has, among its MSS. a fifteenth century one, No. 103, a long and quaint theological treatise which possesses some interest for the many friends and acquaintances of Prof. Skeat. The work is called Fons Jacobi; and as all its 95 chapters have Latin headings I hope that somebody may be able to point out its original, if one ever existed and still exists. Otherwise the treatise reads like the work of some English preacher or writer, who for "tweyne monyths and more" gave a daily lecture or serious talk to his "freendys," on how the body of each was a pit of lusts, with corrupt water of the great Curse, and full of ooze (wose) of the Seven Deadly Sins; how this corrupt water was to be cast out with the Scoop of Penance, and then the five Water-gates of the five senses were to be shut so that the bad water should not run in again; next, how, with the Skete of Contricion, the Skavel of Confession, and the Shovel of Satisfaction, the ooze (wose) of the Seven Deadly Sins was to be cast out of the pit, or man's conscience; how with the five Spades of Purity, Peace, Poor-ness in Spirit, Abstinence, and Charity, the gravel under the ooze was to be dug in, till the firm ground of the Seven Virtues was reached, and the springs got to fill the well; how the well was to be made foursquare with four Virtues, and its sides levelled with the level of Equity, and plumbed with the line of Truth, &c., &c., and what its windlass, rope, and bucket were to be.

But I will not go through the whole treatise. I want only to quote a bit of Chapter XXV. about the Skeat, and of Chapter XXVII. about the Skavel:—

"Of þe skete I schal telle you this day. Þis skeet is sorwe of herte, but is, contricion for þy synne. A skete is opyn aforn, redy to deluyn into þe nesche wose, and redy to deluene it out. A skete also soundel in þe heuyd is raysed, and reryd on bothe sydes; for ellys it myȝt noȝt receyvin but lytel wose for schelded for to castyn it out. Also þe heuyd of a skete, in þe bothe is hoolle; and ellys þe wose wolde noȝt abyden þerin to ben cast out, but it schulde fallen down agen, thrughe þe skete, into þe pytt . . . (leaf 55). Also a skete hath a long handle, to be holdyn by with manys handys, for to werkyn þerwyth."

The Skeat is thus the street-mudman's scoop or shovel of to-day.

The Skavel, leaf 58:

"Now schal I telle you how ye schal caste out þe hard wose of your synne, þat is, þe hard obstynacye of your synne, with a scauel of confessioun. . . . A scauel, in þe heued beforen, hath a scho of yren, sharp and myȝti, and an heued hole and narrow, and a long stele, an handylle . . . þis handyl must be in lengthe vj spanne . . ."

I am away from books. Can any reader of this say in what oozy district skeat and skavel (or scaut) survive, and whether they have still their fifteenth century form?

F. J. FURNIVALL.

THE GENESIS OF THE READING εὐδοκίας IN LUKE II. 14.

Ackworth: August 18, 1892.

SO long ago as May 19, 1884, in the Cambridge University Library, Mr. Bradshaw opened the Codex Bezae for me at Luke ii. 14, that I might see the reading εὐδοκίας; and I was surprised to notice the corresponding reading consolationis in the Latin of the opposite page, being then unaware, Tischendorf having failed to record this reading, that any other form besides bonae voluntatis occurred in the Latin codices. I at once said to myself, In hominibus consolationis is not Latin, even if ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας is some sort of Greek; and the second momentary thought was, Is consolationis accusative plural? εὐδοκίας might be accusative plural; but at once I thought, No sense will result from this, and bonae voluntatis does not agree. Then I thought, Can both of the Latin forms be nominative plural? Possibly so; only this would imply a reading εὐδοκίαι. Well, I said at once, might not εὐδοκία have been changed to εὐδοκίας through the influence of the immediately following καί? And this is the hypothesis I now venture to suggest, that the original reading was εὐδοκία; that the following καί caused -κία to change to -κίας; and that the Latin consolationes or bonae voluntates followed naturally, only taking the forms sooner or later of consolationis and bonae voluntatis, all originally in the sense of the nominative. Nothing would then be easier for a copyist, who mistook either of the latter forms for a genitive singular, than to change εὐδοκίας into εὐδοκίας, especially if the final ι had become a little curved, facilitating the transition to ε; not to mention the aid rendered by the ο of the preceding ἀνθρώποις (see Westcott and Hort, Notes on Select Readings, p. 55a). So far as consolationis is concerned, the transition to a Greek form which is equally suited by genitive singular or by accusative plural was still more likely to occur. And it is perhaps not out of place to ask, in view of the acknowledged difficulties of construction in the case of the genitive in the Greek, whether made dependent on ἀνθρώποις by a Hebraism, or on εἰς by trajection: Is it just possible that in Codex Bezae a copyist, thinking of the accusative, saw a meaning in it by making it descriptive of what the angels said, "Praising God, and saying,

Glory in the highest to God,
And on earth peace among men.

—His kindly purposes (or His consolations)?"

The plural of εὐδοκία occurs in the LXX in Psalm xli. (Heb. cxli.) 5. But I fear it is the weak point in this hypothesis that no Greek MS. gives the nominative plural in Luke ii. 14.

WILLIAM SCARNELL LEAN.

ARISTOTLE AS AN HISTORIAN.

IV.

Scranyingham Rectory, York.

IT is new information when Aristotle tells us that the attempt of Kylon was made before the so-called legislation of Dracon. The question is whether the information be trustworthy. We have in the same way something fresh, if we can only accept the statement that after the formation of the Delian Confederacy Aristides advised his countrymen to leave their fields and go into the city, where they could find a maintenance in the military service or in other occupations, and that, following his counsel, they established their maritime supremacy, exercising a somewhat despotic power over all their allies except the Chians, Lesbians, and Samians (ch. 24). This advice, as it has been well said, is what we should look for rather from Themistokles than from Aristides; but Aristotle, as usual, does not say how he learnt the facts, and, as usual also, his words seem to convey a false impression, because he withholds explanations where, if we wish really to understand the history, explanations are indispensably needed. Like Aristotle here, Kleon told the Athenians that in their relations to their allies they were tyrants, but Kleon had at the moment a strong inducement to exaggerate; and from neither could we obtain a clear knowledge of the facts. If we give the words of Aristotle their strict meaning, we should suppose that their oppression came from Athens, and that the oppressed allies were innocent persons wrongfully dealt with. There is nothing to tell us that the Delian Confederacy, when first formed, was an association of independent states whose representatives met in synod on a footing of perfect equality. On this footing all contributed, according to the assessment of Aristides, ships and men for the common service, which was that of extinguishing the power of the Persian king in Europe and Western Asia. We have from Thucydides the distinct avowal that the change in these relations was brought about not by Athens but wholly by her allies. The Ionians could no more gird themselves up for long continued strenuous exertion now than in the days of Aristagoras; and it struck them that their end would be gained if they paid more money and furnished fewer ships and men, or none. The acceptance of their proposal enhanced enormously the power of Athens, while in case of revolt the allies became practically helpless against a thoroughly disciplined and resolute enemy.

This extension of Athenian empire may have led Aristides to give advice (if he really did give it) to which some have attached a strange meaning. Their words give the notion that the Athenian people became almost on a sudden idlers of the market-place, managing to get enough to eat without doing any work, or receiving pay for doing nothing, or next to nothing. The ground on which Aristides urged them to migrate to the city was, we are told, that they could count on making their living by the payments given for service in the field or for other duties, the conclusion being that we have here "the beginning of that system of living on the public purse which was carried to such lengths by the later demagogues in their competition for popular favour, whereby, even before payment was introduced for service in the ecclesia, upwards of twenty thousand persons were receiving money from the public treasury." The inevitable inference from these words is that they were receiving that to which they had no right; that the state of things under which they received this money was wrong; and that the recipients were little better than drones or impostors. It is quite possible that Aristotle may not have liked the system; but there is nothing in his description which justifies this modern interpretation of it. Aristotle undoubtedly says that pay was provided for more than two myriads of men from the revenues which Athens was receiving from various sources; but he does not say that they were receiving it from year's end to year's end, or receiving it without doing adequate work for it, or when they were doing no work. Six thousand of these, he says, were jurymen; sixteen hundred were bowmen; twelve hundred were cavalry; five hundred formed the council of that number; five hundred garrisoned the docks; others were on garrison duty elsewhere. To these were added two thousand five hundred hoplites; the men on board the guardships, gaolers, and other officials. All these undoubtedly received pay from the public treasury, but they fairly earned every drachma that they received. English soldiers, sailors, judges, juries,* gaolers, are all paid; but not one of them lives upon the public purse; and the money which comes to each for his work is as entirely his own as the gains of a shoemaker or a miller. Athens may have had too many soldiers or too many gaolers. That is quite another question; and whatever the faults of the system may have been, the advice to adopt it came, according to Aristotle, not from an upstart member of the demos, but from the Eupatrid Aristides.

* Senecio jacobaca, Linn. Ragwort.

The death of Ephialtes belongs to a period for which we should be thankful to have more information. Of the half-century preceding the outbreak of the Peloponnesian war the history was never written in detail. We have a sketch of it from Thucydides, who undoubtedly obtained his materials from men who had a personal knowledge of the events of which they spoke. It is a time which has been strangely misunderstood. The curtailment of the powers of the Areiopagos seems to mark, in the judgment of Aristotle, the point at which the tone of Athenian political life was changed decisively for the worse, the fruit of the change being seen in the rise of demagogues who are regarded as statesmen who looked not to the interests of the state, but solely to what would be popular with the majority. The picture drawn by Aristotle (ch. 26) exhibits the Athenian state as in the hands of utterly incompetent men. The Eupatrids had no recognised chief, although Kimon was the most prominent of their body. The generals lacked all military experience, and were chosen only because they came of good families. The battles which they fought ended uniformly in defeat, which involved the loss of more than half the military population of the city.

Allowing for a moment the truth of these statements, we may note that the demos is not directly chargeable with any of this mischief. It is rather hard to visit on them the disasters caused by Eupatrid commanders. If the demos was to be blamed, it would be for taking part in the election of officers who had nothing to recommend them but their birth. But what are these statements of Aristotle worth? Even those who lay most stress on his authority allow that, of the events immediately following the battle of Argennunsai, he gives a short and apparently inaccurate account; and the remark is true. But of the fight of Argennunsai Aristotle might have heard from those who were present at it. For the times preceding the reforms of Ephialtes he would have to make use of written records, or trust to worn out and worthless oral traditions. But, as usual, we are left with his mere unsupported statements, and all that can be said is that these statements are altogether inconsistent with the brief historical sketch of Thucydides. Some disasters there certainly were: notable among them was the catastrophe in Egypt; and Tolmides as a commander was most culpably rash. But, for the people, it was a time of marvellous and unweary energy; and the victory at Oinophyta was one of the most brilliant achievements in the whole history of Athens. Even in the reverses which they underwent they sometimes practically accomplished their purpose; and assuredly they never allowed failure to damp their courage, or to weaken their will. In short, it is utterly untrue to say that in every battle of this period the Athenians were invariably defeated with serious loss, and that nothing came of their undertakings.

Of the demagogues Aristotle speaks more distinctly. In some of the modern pictures drawn of them we are told that they had their rise during the lifetime or after the death of Ephialtes, and that they were men ready to say and to do anything, if only they could secure power or wealth through the favour of the "populace," and well contented if they could do so by tickling its fancies and gratifying its greeds. To this company Perikles is said to have belonged. He merely carried out, we are told,

"the principle of the sovereignty of the popular assembly; and though he carried it out in such a way as to disguise the real dangers of that principle, he was yet in truth only the first of the demagogues to whom Athens ultimately owed her ruin."

This is a serious charge; but we are driven to ask what may be the dangers of the principle of the sovereignty of the popular assembly. Is it not the principle by which all constitutional states are guided? Is it not the foundation of the supremacy of the British Parliament? Because they adhered to this principle, we are, it seems, to regard the whole body of the Athenian people as hopelessly corrupt. The populace, we are told, subsisted now on the public purse—a phrase which has no meaning, unless it asserts that the populace had no right to be thus supported. But it must again be said that all worked for their pay, and we are not told that they worked ill; and therefore not one of them subsisted on the public purse. It may be true that Perikles instituted payment for service in the law courts; but English juries and judges are all paid, and some are bold enough to talk about the payment of members of the British Parliament, without thinking that the change must necessarily destroy the fabric of the English constitution. But in plain truth Athens was not brought to ruin by the demagogues, nor by the demos; and Aristotle distinctly says that the demagogues had exercised their influence long before the time of Ephialtes or Kleisthenes; and at the head of his list of demagogues he places the venerable name of Solon himself. It is a title which he seems to give to all political leaders, whether these acted in the interests of the Eupatrids or in those of the demos. Thus, his list gives the names of Miltiades and his son Kimon with those of Thonkydides, son of Melesias, and of the ill-starred Nikias on the one side, and of Themistokles and Aristides, Ephialtes and Perikles, on the other. He says, also, that a change for the worse took place in the state of Athens after the death of Perikles, inasmuch as after him the demos received as its leader a man of no good reputation among the Epeikeis, or Eupatrid gentlemen—in other words, one whose manners or character placed him beyond the pale of "good society." This seems to be an allusion to Kleon, who is not mentioned in the list of the leaders who were gentlemen, and of whom it is said that he did great and serious mischief to the demos (ch. 28); but it is not said that Kleon made the favour of the majority his first consideration, or that he set himself to tickle their fancies and gratify their greed. On the contrary, the harm was done, according to Aristotle, partly by his vulgarity, his loud speech, his slanderous language, but in a much greater degree by the despotism which he sought to exercise over them.

It may be no injustice to Aristotle to say that he looked on the career of Kleon as marking the establishment of what has been called unmitigated democracy at Athens; but it is less safe to draw distinctions between the later Athens, in which the populace subsisted on the public purse, as being incapable of empire, and the earlier Athens of the Delian confederacy, as being capable of it. Wonderful to say, it is of this very Athens in the early days of the confederacy and in the time of Aristides himself that Aristotle is speaking when he says that it maintained twenty thousand or more citizens on moneys dispensed from the public treasury.

If we turn to still more serious questions, we can scarcely fail to see that Aristotle seems altogether unconscious of any essential distinction between Athens and Sparta—in other words, between the typical Ionian and the typical Dorian mind. We can scarcely speak of him as realising the fact that, in the lines on which its constitution was built up, Athens was offending against the deepest instincts of the Eupatrid society of the old Aryan world; that the Eupatrid element at Athens was always in entire sympathy with Sparta; and that Spartan polity obstinately refused to advance beyond the individual Polis or city, while that of Athens was always taking a course which, if unchecked, would have issued in the growth of what we now mean by a nation. Athenian polity took this course on land, but was met by the resolute opposition of practically the whole Hellenic world. It followed the same line by sea, and the result was a confederacy, all the members of which enjoyed the full protection of Athenian law. It was, indeed, impossible for a man in the mental position of Aristotle to understand this or to see it. He could not help speaking of Nikias as Thucydides speaks of him, and, again, of Antiphon; but unless we see it, the history of Athens remains little more than a profitless puzzle.

The consequences are still more grave if we fail to distribute praise or blame to the right persons as they come before us in the great drama. One of the parties or sections which enjoyed the full Athenian citizenship under the constitution, as drawn out by the reforms of Kleisthenes, acted unconstitutionally and even treacherously. On which party or section did the guilt of this lie? The payment of citizens serving as soldiers and sailors or in the law courts was as much an established fact at Athens as the payment of British citizens so serving is with us; and unconstitutional and illegal methods for doing away with this payment or for tampering otherwise with the constitution were as unjustifiable for Athenians then as they would be for Englishmen now. It may be said that the downhill course of Athens was the work of the demos under Perikles or other leaders, and that the "populace" was to blame for it. Such a statement would be both untrue and ungenerous. The fatal mistake made by Athens was the Sicilian expedition, and this undertaking was not a plan suggested by the populace. It was an enterprise of the kind against which Perikles had repeatedly and most earnestly warned them; and it assumed its gigantic proportions partly through the lack of judgment shown by Nikias, the Eupatrid who opposed it, and the combined insolence and treachery of Alkibiades, the Eupatrid who was resolved at all costs to bring it about. That a majority of Athenian citizens was led away into an unreasoning approval, or even into a vehement enthusiasm for it, is a fact precisely parallel to the enthusiasm shown by a large proportion of Englishmen for the Jingo policy ascribed to Mr. Disraeli. But if ever a constitution was upset by deliberate treachery, it was the Athenian constitution when assailed, undermined, and overthrown after the catastrophe in Sicily. The stupendous conspiracy, which achieved its ends for a time, is not mentioned definitely in this treatise; but the opinions expressed here stand out in odd contrast with the emphatic judgment of Aristotle elsewhere (Polit. v. 4, 13), that the Athenian oligarchs determined to carry out by violence a work which had been begun with lies. It may be convenient to avoid going into the details of the schemes of the conspirators, which are given by Aristotle; but it is not unnecessary to show that these schemes were all acts of nothing less than the vilest cowardice and treachery against a constitution which they purposed to subvert by foreign aid, while a large, if not the main, body of the citizens was engaged in naval and military service elsewhere. The crime was aggravated when the report was industriously spread that the support of the Great King might be secured if only the constitution were changed to a moderate oligarchy. But by whom were these reports put about? Was this also the work of the "populace"? and is this all that should be said for a scheme which would be much like a plan for working on Englishmen by assuring them that the Russian Czar would graciously take them under his protection if they would only do away with their representative assembly, the franchise, and the freedom of the press, and make a few other trifling changes which would show them to be worthy of his confidence? Yet, as though there were nothing strange or wrong about the matter, we are told that those who preferred the safety of the country to the particular form of its government might be excused for being lukewarm in the defence of the democracy, while those who might have been disposed to resist were paralysed by the terrorism established by the oligarchical clubs and societies. What is meant by the safety of a country apart from all reference to particular forms of governing it? What would be the safety of England apart from the equality of all its citizens before the law? and what are the attractions in the grace of the Russian despot which would excuse Englishmen for being lukewarm in the defence of the English constitution as it has come down to us? The Commons of England under Charles II. were perfectly aware that their king would be well pleased if they would abandon their foolish preference of a particular form of government to the safety of the country. But were they turned from their resolution on this account? and should they have been held excused if they had done so? As to "the terrorism of the oligarchical clubs and societies," did this also come from the demos or populace? Undeniably the whole conspiracy, with all the dastardly cowardice of its secret assassinations, was Eupatrid work from beginning to end, and the opinions expressed by Aristotle (and by the historian Thucydides not less than by Aristotle) of the agents of this infamous treason are at once accounted for. The conduct of the Epieikeis, the Kaloi-kai-agathoi, or gentlemen, of Athens, might not be loyal or patriotic, and it might be well not to speak of it as such in set terms; but by Eupatrids it must not be lightly made the subject of direct censure.

* Is it quite true to say that English jurors are paid, in the same sense as Athenian dikasts received pay?—ED. ACADEMY.

To say this is virtually to maintain that, if we follow the guidance of Aristotle, we shall misread the history of Athens from the close of the Sicilian expedition down to its submission to Lysandros. That history, is the record of persistent treason to the Athenian constitution, shared by the Eupatrid families generally; and therefore Aristotle in this treatise contents himself with bald statements of certain facts, veiling or ignoring the motives of the actors. The consummation of the great treachery at Aigospotamoi is mentioned as though it followed on the rejection of the peace opposed by Kleophon, a piece of information about as instructive as the announcement that the signing of the Great Charter followed the Norman Conquest of this country. What took place at Aigospotamoi, Aristotle (ch. 34) describes as a sea-fight, although he must have known well that there was no fight at all, and that those of the Athenian generals who were bribed had made up their minds that, if possible, there should be none. In short, of the true significance of the event Aristotle knew nothing, or, knowing it, would say nothing.

We need scarcely go further. The general character of the treatise has been sufficiently brought out and tested. It is not unsatisfactory to be brought to the conclusion that, in the way of correcting errors on minor points in the treatment of Athenian history, it leaves not much work to be done, and in the way of reconstruction none. It certainly enables us to determine conclusively the weight to be attached to the authority of Aristotle as an historian.

GEORGE W. COX.

NOTES ON HERODAS.

Cambridge: Aug. 19, 1892.

I. 28. Perhaps we may emend παλαίστρα to the plural, which seems more natural. We should then have one plural in 28, and one singular in 29.

I. 79. I do not think that the superscript can be read as λατι (λαίπει).

II. 27. ἡμέων is used once by Babrias, 90, 2.

VII. 12. In the restoration made by Diels, sixteen letters in l. 12 occupy the same space as nine in l. 13. Nor do I understand αὐτήν, "solam." The τ is followed by a straight stroke on the verge of a small gap—i.e., we have αὐτ[ι]. The space is small, but τ is can be written very closely. The most natural supplement is πν λέγω σοι. I can make no satisfactory sense with ἤν or the conjunction ἤν, so I propose πν ἐκ μιν (αὐ-ις, ἤν, λέγω σοι) λαμπρύνεις. The πν is emphatic, and = the πν . . . ὅτ' ἐστὶ κρίσις of VI. 9. αὐτ[ι] is explained by 5. ἤν replaces the demonstrative of IV. 42. I must confess that the reading is a little tortured. In 12 we have a fresh offence, so that a fresh threat is appropriate. καλῶς ἐγὼ σευ τὴν κακὴν βύρσαν (or ράχιον) ψήσω. I should prefer τὴν ῥάχιον ἀποψήσω, and perhaps the long ι is possible: it is only found short in writers of no metrical authority. Still I do not venture to propose it.

Nor do I care for the ἵππε ἀποψήσω, the reading of Diels interpreted in a different sense.

VII. 88. In my letter of August 20, for "the last σ in II. 72," read "the second σ."

F. D.

SCIENCE.

Le Zend-Avesta; traduction nouvelle, avec commentaire historique et philologique, par James Darmesteter. Vol. I. La liturgie: Yasna et Vispored. (Paris: Leroux.)

IN this first volume of his new French translation of the Avesta (which forms the twenty-first volume of the "Annales du Musée Guimet") Prof. Darmesteter has been able to make use of much information that was practically inaccessible a few years ago, and some of it is still hardly known to the Parsis themselves. It is needless to say that the talented and judicious translator has made the best use of his materials, by producing a work worthy of his fame as an accomplished and accurate scholar and a clear and eloquent writer. His object has been not only to give a correct and readable text, based upon the latest discoveries of manuscripts and their meaning, but also to describe the ceremonial details that accompany the recitation of the text during the celebration of the liturgy. These details and their differences, as practised in India and Iran, have been ascertained partly from the rubrics found in some MSS. and Bombay editions of the text, and partly from information supplied by priests in India in the course of conversation and correspondence. The translation and commentary of 492 quarto pages are preceded by a comprehensive introduction of 119 pages, regarding the history of Zoroastrian studies, the Avesta and its interpretation, the priests and religious apparatus, the rites and ritual, the Gāthas, and the materials for translating the liturgy.

For the Avesta every reader or translator has now to turn to the revised texts edited by Geldner, which are accompanied by the variants of every accessible MS. of any authority. But the translator finds his chief assistance in the Pahlavi version, made probably about 1550 years ago, and revised occasionally during the first two or three centuries of its existence, a copy of which is found in the Copenhagen MS. K⁵ which was completed on November 17, 1323, from a MS. of the copyist's great-grand-uncle, and was the only copy known to Europeans thirty years ago. A few other copies have since been brought to notice, such as J², by the same writer, which is now in the Bodleian Library and was completed on January 26, 1323, according to the most recent investigations, or nearly ten months earlier than K⁵; also Pt¹, Mt¹, and another, all copied last century from a MS. copied in Iran about 1478 from another MS. written by a grandfather of the copyist of K⁵ and J². By collating these MSS., still extant, the translator ascertains the Pahlavi version of the Yasna as it stood about the year 1270; and in Neryosang's Sanskrit translation (made about the year 1200) he can trace a large portion of its Pahlavi original, which may have belonged to a different family of MSS., as we have reason to believe that the predecessor of K⁵ did not leave Iran before 1270.

Prof. Darmesteter places great reliance upon the Pahlavi versions; and in this he is, no doubt, perfectly justified, because he understands them well, and can make due allowance for their peculiarities. In several cases where he finds no help from them, this does not arise so much from any omission on the part of the Pahlavi translator, as from his using words and phrases that we do not, as yet, thoroughly understand; for, though we may now flatter ourselves that the study of Pahlavi has passed through its infancy, we must own that it is still in its earliest boyhood. In a few cases, reliance upon the Pahlavi may be misplaced; but, at all events, it gives us the opinions handed down by tradition to the priesthood of twelve or fifteen centuries ago, and often more than one such opinion on the same passage. It has been the peculiar privilege of the Pahlavi versions that they have locked up the knowledge of learned priests of olden times, and have handed it safely down, through ages of adversity and ignorance, to be imparted by degrees to their remote descendants as soon as these were fitted by education to receive and make use of it.

The aim of this translation of the Parsi liturgy has evidently been to provide both the general reader and the Avesta scholar with all the available information they can possibly require for understanding the text. The translator's commentary, for the use of the scholar, is condensed into some three or four thousand short footnotes, a most convenient arrangement for the reader; and further details are given in special introductions and appendices to certain chapters, affording a carefully arranged mass of information that would require much labour and patience to collect from its original sources. That a few errors may be discovered in this vast store of facts is very probable, but he would be a bold and one-sided critic who would venture to point out any of them without most careful study and an acknowledgment that he had learnt many undoubted facts for every one that he disputed.

E. W. WEST.

TIBETAN LITERATURE.*

WE quote the following from the annual address of the president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Sir A. W. Croft:

"I would also draw attention to the Tibetan publications of the 'Bibliotheca Indica' series, for which we are indebted to Babu Sarat Chandra Das, C.I.E., and Babu Pratāp Chandra Ghosh. This is a comparatively new field of work, which is arousing considerable interest in Europe. The mass of Tibetan literature accessible to us is enormous, and of very unequal value; and it will be necessary to exercise great care in selecting works for publication in this series.

"Reference may also be made to a paper on the life of the Indian Pandit, Atisa, otherwise known as Dipamkara Srijñāna, by Babu Sarat Chandra Das, published in Part I. of the Journal. Dipamkara was a learned Pandit of Magadha, to whom Lha Lama, the king of Tibet, sent messengers in the first half of the eleventh century, inviting him to visit Tibet in order to restore the pure doctrines of Buddhism, which had become debased in that country by an admixture of Tantrik and Pon mysticism. After many refusals, he was prevailed on to visit Tibet in the year 1038, when the king received him with the utmost respect and veneration, and conferred on him the title of Jovo Atisa (the supreme lord who has surpassed all). He revived the practice of the pure Mahāyāna doctrine, and died near Lhasa in 1053, at the age of seventy-three.

"I may also notice the papers of the late Dr. Karl Marx, published in numbers 2 and 3 of Part I. of the Journal, one being a translation of a dialogue from the Tibetan between a wicked king and his minister, and the other a notice of documents relating to the history of Ladakh, at which place Dr. Marx was a missionary. Death has been very busy in the last few years with Tibetan scholars. We have lost Schiefner, Minayeff, and Jäschke; and now the successor of Jäschke at Ladakh has followed him.

"An account may here be given of the Tibetan-Sanskrit Dictionary, on the preparation of which Babu Sarat Chandra Das, as the Tibetan Translator to Government, has been engaged for the last two or three years under the orders of the Government of Bengal. At the close of the preface to his Tibetan Dictionary, published by the Asiatic Society of Bengal in 1831, Csoma de Kőrös wrote:—'When there shall be more interest taken in Buddhism and in the diffusion of Christian and European knowledge throughout the most eastern parts of Asia, the Tibetan Dictionary may be much improved, enlarged, and illustrated by the addition of Sanskrit terms.' The projected dictionary is intended to satisfy this requirement, only much more fully than de Kőrös contemplated. Since his time another Tibetan Dictionary has appeared, the production of Jäschke, the Moravian missionary at Ladakh. This work, though a great improvement on Csoma's, does not meet the critical requirements of the present day. Jäschke had not at his command the resources necessary for such an undertaking. He was thoroughly familiar with Tibetan as a spoken language; but as regards its literary form, he had access to only a limited number of Tibetan works that had been published in Germany and at St. Petersburg, besides a few block-prints obtained from itinerant Lamas at Ladakh. More than this, words of every style and of every age are collected together in Jäschke's dictionary without any attempt at classification.

"The dictionary which Babu Sarat Chandra Das, with his coadjutors, has now in hand is of much wider scope than either of its predecessors, and its materials are derived from many different sources. It was in the first instance undertaken at the suggestion of Prof. Max Müller, who was anxious to ascertain the exact force of the Tibetan renderings of current philosophical terms used in Sanskrit Buddhist literature. These technical terms, it was known, were rendered into Tibetan by their precise syllabic equivalents, in conformity with a system framed for the purpose by the Pandits engaged in the work of translating into Tibetan the sacred books of Indian Buddhism. It was hoped that in this way much new light would be thrown on the original meaning of the philosophical terms of that literature, which is now in many instances most obscure.

"The dictionary has accordingly been framed on these lines. The Tibetan word is first given, and then its Sanskrit equivalent, if any, followed by (1) a literal translation of the word according to its etymology; (2) the sense or senses in which the word is used in speech or literature; (3) illustrative examples taken from Tibetan works either published or accessible in known libraries. In order to secure, as far as possible, an exhaustive vocabulary and a copious supply of illustrations, Tibetan literature has been ransacked. Recourse has been had, not only to Tibetan-Sanskrit vocabularies like the Yyutpatti and the Mahāvṛyutpatti, some of which had already been translated by Remusat into French, and by Csoma into English; and to Sanskrit works like the Kalpatalā Kavyādarśa, with their absolutely faithful Tibetan translations; but also to a still larger treasury of literary and scientific wealth. The Kahgyur, or collection of Buddhist scriptures, comprises 108 volumes of about five hundred leaves each. With the help of Lama Sherab Gyatsho, of the Güm monastery, near Darjiling, 90 of these volumes have been analysed for the purposes of the dictionary. The Tanggyur, which contains 225 volumes, is a still richer storehouse of learning. It contains the text of Pāṇini and other grammarians, treatises from the Sanskrit on ethics, political science, and political economy, and even poems like the Meghadūta—all transcribed literatim in the Tibetan character, together with Tibetan translations and commentaries. The Tanggyur is in fact a cyclopaedia of Indo-Tibetan literature; and the means by which so many ancient Sanskrit works had been preserved in Tibet and interpreted to the people had long been a source of wonder to scholars in Europe. Unfortunately, we possess no copy of the Tanggyur, as we do of the Kahgyur. Babu Sarat Chandra Das has succeeded in obtaining the loan of one volume from the Labrang monastery in Sikkim; but if the whole were accessible to him, the value of his work would be greatly increased.

"But it is not merely the scientific terms of classical literature that will find their place in this dictionary. The work is intended, as far as possible, to be complete; and will include the language of the present time and of every day use—in fact, the current vernacular of Tibet. Contributions have also been levied from a large collection of Tibetan and Bhutia correspondence, captured during the late Tibetan campaign. These contain a great variety of idiomatic and honorific words and phrases, the use of which is confined to correspondence and to polite conversation. From another quarter has been obtained a large stock of words peculiar to the terminology of the Pon mysticism, which is thought to have preceded Buddhism in Tibet. These terms are little known to orthodox Buddhists, and were entirely unknown to either Csoma or Jäschke. Readers of our publications will remember how many papers on the Pon religion Babu Sarat Chandra Das has contributed to the Journal, from books and materials which he collected during his residence in Tibet. Aid is also promised from abroad; Prof. Foucaux of Paris having kindly offered to place at Babu Sarat Chandra Das's disposal the materials that he has himself collected with a similar object, including a long list of philosophical terms from Buddhist-Sanskrit sources. Finally, in the interpretation of Sanskrit terms, Babu Sarat Chandra Das will have the valuable assistance of Pandit Hari Mohan Vidyabhushan, the Pandit employed by this Society.

"The arrangement of the dictionary will be alphabetical; all the words derived from one root being placed together under that root, and each word being again found in its alphabetical place, with a reference to the word under which its meaning is discussed. The difficult question of pronunciation is provided for by a method at once simple and clear. Typographical devices will be used to distinguish modern and colloquial words from those that are scientific or ancient. Some of the work is now ready for the press, but it will necessarily take a long time before so elaborate an undertaking is completed."

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

A PROVISIONAL programme has now been issued of the Oriental Congress which will hold its meetings in London, at Burlington Gardens, from September 5 to 12.

Prof. Max Müller will deliver the opening address, in the theatre of the University of London, on Monday, September 5, at 11 a.m.; and at 3 p.m. on the same day; the several sections will meet, and each choose two vice-presidents and one hon. secretary from among the foreign scholars. Mr. W. E. Gladstone will deliver his address, as president of the section on Archaic Greece and the East, on Wednesday, September 7, at 3.30 p.m., also in the theatre of the University of London. On Thursday evening, from 8 to 10 p.m., a collective visit will be paid to the British Museum. Saturday will be devoted to excursions to Oxford and Cambridge; at the former place the chairman of the reception committee is Sir W. W. Hunter, and at the latter place Sir Thomas Wade. In London the Earl of Northbrook will hold a reception; and Sir M. E. Grant Duff, Mr. Vincent Robinson, and Mr. Colyer Fergusson, will give garden parties. The concluding meeting of the congress will be held in the morning of Monday, September 12; and in the evening of that day the committee will entertain the foreign members at dinner. Invitations for future congresses have already been received from the King of Roumania and from the city of Geneva.

* See "Tibetan Lexicography" in the ACADEMY of July 25, 1891.

The following foreign bodies have signified their intention to send delegates: the Universities of Bonn, Bologna, Giessen, Göttingen, Groningen, Halle, Johns Hopkins, Marburg, Munich, St. Petersburg, Strassburg, and Vienna; the Academy of Sciences at Vienna, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, the Bavarian Academy of Sciences, the Accademia dei Lincei, the Smithsonian Institute, the German Oriental Society, the Italian Oriental Society, the oriental section of the Russian Society of Archaeology, the Oriental Institute of the University of Vienna, the Asiatic Society of Japan, and the Straits branch of the Royal Asiatic Society.

Among the foreign members, most of whom it is hoped will be present, we may mention the following:—

Austria and Hungary: Prof. Georg Bühler, of Vienna; Dr. Rudolf Dvorak, of Prague; Dr. Ignaz Goldziher, of Budapest; Dr. Josef Karabacek; Prof. John Kirste, of Graz; Prof. Leo Reinisch; and Dr. Jaroslav Sedláček.

Belgium: Dr. Abbeloos, Prof. Cohnet, and Prof. C. de Harlez, of Louvain; and Prof. Victor Chauvain, of Liège.

France: Prof. James Darmesteter and Prof. A. C. Barbier de Meynard, of the Collège de France; M. Auguste Barth, M. Edouard Drouin, and Prof. Jules Oppert.

Germany: Profs. Dillman, Sachau, Schrader, and Weber, of Berlin; Profs. Jacobi, Prym, and Wiedemann, of Bonn; Prof. Kautzsch, of Halle-Wittenberg; Prof. Kielhorn, of Göttingen; Profs. Socin and Windisch, of Leipzig; Profs. Ebers and Geiger, of Munich; Profs. Euting, Horn, Leumann, and Nöldeke, of Strassburg; and Prof. Jolly, of Würzburg.

Holland: Profs. de Goeje, Land, van der Lith, and Tiele, of Leiden; Profs. Böhler and Speyer, of Groningen; Prof. Houtsma, of Utrecht; and MM. von Oordt and de Stoppelaar, of the oriental publishing firm of Brill.

Russia: Profs. Chwolson, Sergius d' Oldenburg, Rosen, Shukowski, and Vassiliev, of St. Petersburg; and Profs. Donner and Strandman, of Helsingfors.

India: H. H. Druva and Rajashri Vasudev Madhav Samarth, of Baroda; Taw Sein Ko, of Burma; Dr. M. A. Stein, of Lahore; and Prof. T. W. Arnold.

Italy: Prince Teano and Prof. Schiaparelli, of Rome; Count Angelo de Gubernatis, Prof. F. La Sinio, and Dr. P. E. Pavolini, of Florence.

Scandinavia: Prof. V. Schmidt, of Copenhagen; Prof. Lieblein, of Christiania; and Prof. Piehl, of Upsala.

Switzerland: Prof. Gautier, of Lausanne; Prof. E. Müller, of Berne; Prof. Edouard Naville, of Geneva; and Prof. Wackerragel, of Basle.

United States: President Gilman and Prof. Paul Haupt, of Johns Hopkins; Prof. W. R. Harper, of Chicago; Prof. A. V. Williams Jackson, of Columbia College; and Prof. C. R. Lanman, of Harvard.

Meanwhile, another Oriental Congress will be held at Lisbon from September 23 to October 1. The special feature of this meeting will be papers by Portuguese scholars—"Oriental Studies on the Lusads," by Prof.

Vasconcellos; "Letters from Monomotapa," by Senhor A. Coelho; "The Gypsies of Portugal," by Baron de Combarqua; and "Ethiopian Discoveries," by Senhor Esteves Pereira. Among other papers promised we may mention: "The Religious Condition of the East at the Time of Alexander's Conquest," by M. Félix Robiou; "The Oriental MSS. at Lisbon," by Prof. René Basset, who will also report on those he has found in Northern Africa; "Indian Theogony and Sakti Worship," by Prof. Gustav Oppert, of Madras; "Indo-Egyptian Affinities," by Dr. Carl Abel; and "Sea Voyages by Hindus," by Pandit Mahesh Chandra Nyaratna. There will be excursions to Cordova, Seville, and Granada; while an extraordinary meeting of the Arabic section is to be held in the Alhambra.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BENGALI PHILOLOGY AND ETHNOGRAPHY.

London: August, 1892.

Readers of the last number of the Asiatic Quarterly may remember that, in writing on Bengali Philology and Ethnography, I put forward the view that the population of Lower Bengal is almost entirely Indo-Chinese and Dravidian; and that, while the vocabulary of Low Bengali—the language of the masses—is largely of corrupted Sanskrit, its grammatical form is purely agglutinative.

The Dravidian and Indo-Chinese races in Lower Bengal, who still retain their original non-Aryan tongues—for example, the Kond and the Santali—speak languages purely agglutinative; and it is practically certain that the Bengali masses of Dravidian and Indo-Chinese race spoke tongues akin to the Kond and Santali—that is, agglutinative tongues—before they adopted a corrupt Sanskrit vocabulary.

From these two facts I concluded that to the agglutination of their original tongues was due the agglutinative cast which the Bengali masses gave to their corrupt Sanskrit vocabulary—was due, in fact, the agglutinative character of modern Low Bengali.

To put the same truth in simpler words, I tried to show that the black or yellow races of Bengal had been in the habit of stringing their words together in the particular way called "agglutination," or "gluing"; and that this habit stuck to them when they adopted a corrupt Sanskrit vocabulary, with the result that they glued their new words together in the old way.

To this process I tentatively gave the name of "Inverse Attraction," as it seemed analogous to the inverse attraction of the relative pronoun, where an element is attracted out of its normal grammatical form. But apparently this term is not a very happy one, so that I should propose to change it, and to call the phenomenon which I have described "Racial Remoulding" of adopted tongues.

I have spoken of the relations of Sanskrit and Santali to Bengali, the first giving the substance, and the second the form, to the resultant speech.

By showing how the Sanskrit word is cast in the Santali mould, to produce Bengali, we may show the "Racial Remoulding" actually at work.

SANSKRIT WORD.	SANTALI MOLD.	BENGALI RESULTANT.
N. janas	herel	jan
Ac. janam	herel	jan
I. janena	herel-te	jan-dira
D. janaya	herel-then	jan-ke
Ab. janit	herel-khon	jan-theke
G. janasya	herel-ren	jan-er
L. jane	herel-re	jan-ete
V. jana	e herel	re jan

In both Santali and Bengali, many other agglutinative post-positions may be used, the number of possible cases being very large. In Bengali, I have given those most commonly used by the people of West Murshidabad, of almost pure Santali race. Perhaps the plural illustrates the process of "Racial Remoulding" even better than the singular.

SANSKRIT WORD.	PLURAL. SANTALI MOLD.	BENGALI RESULTANT.
N. janas	herel-ko	jan-lok
Ac. janam	herel-ku	jan-lok
I. janais	herel-ko-te	jan-lok-dira
D. janebhyas	herel-ko-then	jan-lok-ke
Ab. janebhyas	herel-ko-khon	jan-lok-theke
G. jananam	herel-ko-ren	jan-lok-er
L. janeshu	herel-ko-re	jan-lok-ete
V. janas	e herel-ku	re jan-lok

This illustrates the main characteristic of both Santali and Bengali grammar, the formation of cases by post-positions; and the formation of the plural by the same post-positions, after a particle of number—there being properly only one declension in both languages.

I think this example illustrates both graphically and conclusively the mode in which "Racial Remoulding" acts upon adopted tongues, and especially upon the tongue of our most populous Indian province.

CHARLES JOHNSTON.

SCIENCE NOTES.

A COMMITTEE—including Lord Kelvin, Profs. Ayrton, G. Forbes, D. E. Hughes, O. Lodge, J. Perry, Silvanus Thompson, and others—has been formed to give effect to the feeling, among the older members of the electrical profession, that the life-long labours of Mr. Samuel Alfred Varley should be recognised by some substantial testimonial befitting his reputation as a scientific investigator. Subscriptions may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. A. Stroh, 8, Haverstock-hill, N.W.

MR. C. H. GATTY, of East Grinstead, has given £2000 for the purpose of establishing a permanent building for the marine laboratory at St. Andrews, which is the oldest institution of the kind in Great Britain.

THE University Extension meeting at Oxford during the past week has included a practical course of study in botany, under the direction of Mr. Claridge Druce, which was attended by a considerable number of county council students. There were twenty-eight lectures, each followed by a botanical excursion in the vicinity of Oxford. Near the remains of Godstow Nunnery, the conductor found in a ditch a specimen of the plant Nitella mucronata, which has only been discovered three times previously in England—first, about 1720, by Prof. Dillenius at Islworth, next by William Borrer, in Sussex, about 1830, and, thirdly, near Bedford in 1884. The students have studied the natural orders, and have been shown how to collect, to dry, and to arrange an herbarium. In the excursions about 250 plants were named and described.

Nature for last week contains a letter from Mr. E. A. Minchin, of the University Museum at Oxford—who is now the recorder for sponges and echinoderms for the Zoological Record, and who recently occupied a table at the Naples Zoological Station—advocating an international Zoological Record. His proposal is that there should be two parts: (1) for morphology and physiology, which might be done at Naples, on the lines of the existing Zoologischer Jahresbericht; and (2) a systematic part, to the exclusion of the other departments, which might continue to be done in London—the whole, however, to be published in one volume, say at Leipzig.

WE have recently received various Parts of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, devoted to different branches of physical science. Thus, Vol. 60, Part 2 and Part 4, contains a List of the Diamond Island Plants by D. Prain, and descriptions of some new Labiatae by the same author; Materials for a Flora of the Malayan Peninsula, by Geo. King, extending to more than 100 pages; a paper by Surgeon Walsh on certain spiders which mimic ants, wandering about in company with those species which they resemble, and springing upon their victims from behind (a proceeding also adopted by our well-known British Salticidae (Attidae); a List of the Butterflies of Engano, with remarks on the Danaidae, by W. Doherty, of Cincinnati, U.S.A., and figures of several of the most remarkable species of the genus Gerydus, &c. Vol. 59, Part 1, Nos. 3 and 4, contains a remarkable memoir on some of the symbols found on the punch-marked coins of Hindostan, and on their relationship to the archaic symbolism of other races and distant lands, by W. Theobald. It also contains the completion of Mr. E. T. Atkinson's elaborate catalogue of the Coleoptera or beetles of the Oriental region.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. J. Halévy read a paper upon two Semitic inscriptions, now in the Berlin Museum, which, in his opinion, overthrow the commonly received views about the Hittites. The two inscriptions were found at Zinjirli, in Northern Syria. Though greatly worn and mutilated, M. Halévy has been able to read them. They are written in a dialect of Phoenician, closely resembling Hebrew and but slightly influenced by Aramaean. They were engraved by two kings of the country of Yadi, both styled Pannamu, who lived in the ninth and eighth centuries B.C. The former dedicates a statue to Hadad, the supreme god of the Hittites; the latter was restored to his grandfather's throne, as a vassal, by the Assyrian army under Tiglath-pileser III. According to M. Halévy, these inscriptions prove conclusively that the Hittites were a Semitic race. The hieroglyphs found in many parts of Asia Minor must, therefore, be of Anatolian, not of Syrian, origin, the few that have been discovered at Hamath and Aleppo being only the results of a temporary conquest.

In the course of the University Extension meeting at Oxford last week, a lecture on "The Origin and Diffusion of Alphabets" was delivered by Mr. W. Marsham Adams, formerly fellow of New College. It may be remembered that about a year ago Mr. Adams pointed out, in a paper before the Royal Literary Society, a great number of resemblances between the characters of the hieratic or priestly alphabet of ancient Egypt, and those of the Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, Basque, Sanskrit, Runic, and other languages, the form of the characters being almost identical, though their phonetic values for the most part differed in the different languages. For the transference of sound—for in the lecturer's view the sound varies, not the letter—Mr. Adams was unable to account at the time; but since then he has followed up the principle laid down by Champollion, and claims now to have made such an application as will explain the majority of alphabetic values. According to that illustrious discoverer, every hieratic character was the cipher of an object represented in the corresponding hieroglyphic picture, and derived its phonetic value from the initial sound in the name of the object represented by that hieroglyph. And Mr. Adams maintains that the key to the transference is obtained by observing that the sound represented by any character in a non-Egyptian alphabet is the initial sound in the vernacular name of the object represented in the corresponding Egyptian hieroglyph, except in a few instances where the Egyptian value is retained. This principle, or "law of transvocalisation," Mr. Adams illustrated by a great number of examples taken from different alphabets.

THE last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt) contains three cuneiform texts, from the British Museum, published and translated by Mr. S. Arthur Strong, of St. John's College, Cambridge. They are unfortunately much mutilated; but they all belong to the same class of documents, half-historical and half-mythological, which record the fortunes of ancient kings, the foundation of cities, and the building of temples. Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie continues his summary of proofs for the derivation of primitive Chinese civilisation from Babylonia. On this occasion he deals with the evidence for an intercourse by sea between Assyria and the Far East from the eighth century B.C. onwards, which he connects with the advance of the Phoenician navy in the Persian Gulf. The part of China reached by these traders he identifies with the Shantung peninsula and the gulf of Kiao-tchou; and he points out the Syrian and Babylonian ideas which they introduced.

THE last part (Band V., Heft 3) of the Internationales Archiv für Ethnographie (Kegan Paul & Co.) contains an article, in French, by M. G. van Vloten, of Leiden, upon the flags used in the festival of Hussain (i.e., the Muharram) at Teheran, which is illustrated with two admirable coloured plates.

FINE ART.

The Earth-Fiend: a Ballad made and etched by William Strang. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

MR. STRANG is an artist who has generally puzzled the critics. Sometimes his etchings have appeared to the superficial observer to be little better than pastiches, while others have been plainly unlike the work of anybody but himself, while between these extremes are a number respecting which it has been difficult to decide whether it is Strang who is dominant or another. By this time, however, it ought to be quite plain to anyone who has seriously watched his career, that he is an artist of special gifts, that his imagination is varied and vigorous, and that his artistic aims are singularly independent and personal.

In his determination that his work should stand or fall by its merit alone as art, that it should shun any concession to fashionable sentiment or accepted ideals of "beauty," Mr. Strang no doubt handicaps his popularity; but he gains thereby a freer hand on the side where his proclivity is particularly strong, the side of quaint character and grotesque vision. Whether we look upon this ballad as "etched" or "made," the treatment of the theme is marked by unusual largeness and simplicity. Though comparatively a tyro in the art of verse making, the ballad is strikingly successful in the clearness of its narrative and the vividness of its realisation. And it is remarkable that he is at his best when the most severe demands are made upon his imagination. The visit to the witch who makes a horrid "magic mirror" of her own blood in his hand is admirably sustained in its weird vigour.

"She's taen a gullie keen and bricht,
And bled her thrapple
Into his hand, as still as nicht,
The warm bluid rins before his sicht,
As thick as sapple."

"She bade him scan with fixed gaze
His gruesome glass,
Where like a show within a haze,
Figures and fields, a moving maze,
Like dead wraiths pass."

Nor is the combat with the Earth-Fiend described with less power, as

"Wi' locked teeth and pantin' breast,
And ne'er a word,
But girrin' like the savage beast,
They twist and thrav frae west to east
A' filed wi' yird."

The story itself is an invention of no common order. A farmer whose crops are destroyed by an unseen foe learns from a witch that his enemy is a fiend who works at night. He watches for, him wrestles with him, and conquers him; and the fiend becomes his slave, and works for him till he becomes rich and careless. The scene of his prosperity is described in stanzas full of pastoral beauty, like these:

"And then comes Autumn soberly,
And tints wi' gold
The woods and pastures waving free,
And softly studds the lapping sea
Wi' gems untold."

"And here and there a leaf grows sere,
The swallows flee,
And orchards blazon out their gear;
In ripened glory far and near Flames every tree."

But now is the time for the fiend who has been watching opportunity for revenge. All suspicions lulled against him, the uncouth but faithful servant of the family, he falls upon the farmer as he takes his midday rest and wrings his neck. Too late, the reapers miss him,

"But where's the gude man? To and fro
By burn and lane,
They seek him high, they seek him low,
But a' in vain."

"Baith high and low in vain they look;
But, ere the dawn,
A fox, a weasle, and a rook
Have found him stark a-hint a stook
Wi' his neck thrawn."

So ends this powerful ballad with the same strength as it began. It is not only an allegory of life, but a good poem; and its illustrations are like it—full of subtle meaning, capable of different interpretations to different minds, but admirable, in the first place and independently, as pictures. Text and illustrations are actuated by the same impulses; but the ideas common to both are expressed in different languages. The "literary idea" animates the verses, the "pictorial idea" constructs the etching. Both are allied and mutually helpful, but they could be divided without destroying the value of either. Indeed, each of the "illustrations" (even of those which follow the text most closely) has sufficient artistic completeness in itself to stand alone. Almost all of them are "works of art," and, despite of "ugliness," beautiful in that large sense of giving delight both high and strange.

Perhaps the greatest charm of Mr. Strang's designs is their suggestiveness, which extends far beyond the limits of the words illustrated. The lines have given birth to fresh imaginations, and these in turn may well give birth to fresh poems by him or by another. The picture of the farmer reading the Psalms to his wife by firelight is a perfect illustration of the text and a masterly etching, but it is besides this a poem of human life. The mezzotint of the ploughman working by the dim light of night (or morning), and taken just at the turn of the furrow, the large dim bulks of man and horses relieved against the cold sky, is an instance in which the verses have suggested a composition of remarkable grandeur; and the design (also in mezzotint) where the farmer is throwing the bogie is noble enough to stand for the everlasting combat between man and sin. As also in the first rank must be mentioned the etching of the Earth-Fiend, discovered asleep by a crowd of little children. As a grotesque conception fully felt from head to foot, it would be difficult to find anything in modern art to excel the figure of the fiend; and the whole design is of extraordinary originality and power. Here at least we have Strang, and nothing else but Strang.

But perhaps we have a profounder suggestion, a fresher fancy, in some of those other designs more slightly bound to the text: the impressive title-page, with its melancholy man and woman seated back to back beneath the same tree; the beautiful little figure of Cupid mowing; the man crouching at the feet of Justice; the man astride upon the world into which he digs a garden fork. These, with their strange mixture of the real and the mystic, are not the least of the gifts which Mr. Strang has given us, and are a promise of still more precious gifts to come.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE VASES FROM THERA.

London August 22, 1892.

The vases from Thera are coming into notice again after a period of oblivion; and the statement is once more current that their date is fixed at about 2000 B.C. by geological evidence. This geological evidence is to be found in Santorin, et ses éruptions, by M. F. Fouqué, who took a leading part in the discovery of the vases.

These vases were all found underneath the pumiceous tufa—not underneath the lava, as has sometimes been asserted. M. Fouqué thought at first that some of them had been found above this tufa, and said so in the Archives des missions scientifiques (series 2, vol. iv. pp. 243, 249, &c.). But he discovered afterwards that this was a mistake—see p. 108 of his book.

In M. Fouqué's opinion, the whole of this pumiceous tufa is composed of the pumice ejected in prehistoric times from a gigantic cone which formerly covered the bay between the twin islands of Thera and Therasia. Therefore, the vases existed before the collapse of this cone. So, to determine the date of the vases, it was necessary to ascertain when the cone collapsed. To this problem M. Fouqué addressed himself, but "avec de grandes réserves." His views are expressed in almost the same words on pp. 250, 251 of the Archives, and on pp. 129-131 of his book. His principal argument runs thus:—

"Le premier fait sur lequel je m'appuierai est emprunté à l'observation des îlots du centre de la baie. Après l'effondrement et les terribles phénomènes qui l'avaient précédé, il y a eu certainement une longue période d'assoupissement: c'est seulement 196 ans avant J. C. qu'une éruption nouvelle a produit l'îlot nommé Palaea-Kaméni. A partir de cette date, des éruptions successives ont eu lieu pendant les premiers siècles de l'ère chrétienne et ont agrandi l'îlot nouvellement formé. Une seconde période de calme relatif a rempli tout le moyen âge, et ce n'est qu'à partir du quinzième siècle que les éruptions ont repris leur fréquence et leur énergie, et engendré de nouveaux îlots. La seconde période de calme ayant eu une durée de dix siècles environ, on peut, sans témérité, attribuer à la première une durée minima double de celle-ci, surtout quand on compare l'intensité si différente des phénomènes volcaniques auxquels ils ont succédé. D'après cette considération, la formation de la baie remonterait à environ deux mille ans avant J. C."

Now, that is not geology, but a mixture of geology and history; and the history is wrong.

An island was upheaved in the bay between Thera and Therasia in 196 B.C. This upheaval is described by Strabo (i. 3.16), and by Seneca, questiones naturales (ii. 26, cf. vi. 21); both authors getting their materials from the lost work of Poseidonios. The exact date is fixed by Justin (xxx. 4) and Plutarch, de Pythiæ oraculis (11), as they associate the event with the overthrow of Macedon by Rome in 196 B.C.

Another island was upheaved there in 46 A.D. This upheaval and its date are mentioned by Seneca (ll. cc.), by Dion Cassius (lx. 29), and by Aurelius Victor, de Caesaribus (4).

Possibly, there had been another upheaval between 196 B.C. and 46 A.D. According to the current reading of ii. 89, Pliny says that an island was upheaved there in the fourth year of Olympiad cxxxv. This should certainly be cxxxv., for the fourth year of that Olympiad was concurrent with 196 B.C. He says that another island was upheaved there in the consulship of M. Junius Silanus and L. Balbus. They were consuls in 19 A.D.; but M. Junius Silanus was one of the consuls in 46 A.D. Pliny cannot have omitted the upheaval in 46 A.D. from his notice of these islands; so he must be referring here to 46 A.D., but inadvertently assigning the wrong colleague to Silanus. He says also that another island was upheaved 130 years after the former and 110 years before the latter, i.e. about 65 B.C. But his statement is not corroborated; and Seneca says explicitly that the island of 46 A.D. was the second.

There was a terrific eruption, with another upheaval, in 726 A.D. or thereabouts. This is described by Nicephoros Patriarches (p. 64) and Theophanes Confessor (vol. i., p. 622), and also by Cedren (vol. i., pp. 794, 795)—adopting the pagination of the Bonn edition of the Byzantine historians.

Thus there were upheavals in the bay in 196 B.C. and 46 A.D. and 726 A.D., and possibly about 65 B.C. also; but in the intervals the volcano was quiescent. Consequently, there is no foundation for M. Fouqué's opinion that there was a period of activity beginning in 196 B.C., and lasting through the first centuries of the Christian era, and then a period of quiescence for about a thousand years, ending in the fifteenth century. After the eruption of 196 B.C. come two periods of quiescence, of 242 and 680 years respectively; or if the time from 196 B.C. to 46 A.D. be reckoned as a period of activity, the following period of quiescence amounts to only 680 years, and this is followed by another period of quiescence of about the same length. Now, even supposing that the period of quiescence before 196 B.C. was twice as long as the period of quiescence after 46 A.D., the cone did not collapse until about 1550 B.C.; or if this period before 196 B.C. was twice as long as the period next after that date, the cone did not collapse until about 680 B.C. But there does not appear to be any valid reason for supposing that the first of these periods was twice as long as the second, as M. Fouqué suggests. He is of opinion that the volcano was far more violent before the first period than before the second, and therefore required this longer time to rest. But that can only be a matter for speculation.

But a second argument is adduced by M. Fouqué, and this is strictly geological. At the northern point of Therasia the pumiceous tufa was covered with a thick bed of stones intermixed with sea-shells. A period of fully 1000 or 1200 years would have been required for the formation and elevation of this bed. And this process must have been complete before the eighth century B.C.; for there are ancient buildings upon this bed with inscriptions which probably date from that century. Consequently, the pumiceous tufa must have been formed here about 2000 B.C. at latest.

This argument rests on the opinion that 1000 or 1200 years were needed for this process. And that, again, can only be a matter for speculation.

M. Fouqué holds that the pumiceous tufa below these buildings must be contemporary with the pumiceous tufa above the vases, since the whole of the pumiceous tufa on Thera and Therasia is composed of pumice that was ejected from the former cone above the bay during one vast eruption. That opinion he supports in this way:—

"D'abord nous pouvons démontrer que la grande éruption ponceuse a précédé l'effondrement du centre de l'île, car le tuf qui couvre les falaises actuelles de Théra et de Therasia est coupé à pic comme les laves sous-jacentes, ce qui ne peut s'expliquer qu'en supposant qu'il a été entaillé par l'effondrement tout comme le reste."

It is true that the cliffs of Thera and Therasia, which face the bay, exhibit a vertical section of the strata composing them, and that at the top there is a stratum of pumiceous tufa which is cut off abruptly like the others. But this will not suffice to prove that this stratum was there before the cone collapsed and left the present face of the cliff exposed to view.

During the eruption of 196 B.C., pumice was ejected from the new cone in the bay, as Seneca remarks (l.c.)—"deinde saxa evoluta rupesque partim inlaesae, quas spiritus, antequam urentur, expulerat, partim exaesae et in levitatem pumicis versae; novissime cacumenusti montis emicuit." And during the eruption of 726 A.D. pumice was ejected in enormous quantities. According to Theophanes (l.c.) πετροκίσθρους μεγάλους ὡς λίθους τινὰς ἀνατίμναι καθ' ὅλης τῆς μικρᾶς Ἀσίας καὶ Λέσβου καὶ Ἀβύδου καὶ τῆς πρὸς θάλασσαν Μακεδονίας, ὡς ἂν τὸ πρῶτον τῆς θαλάσσης ταύτης κινήσαν ἐπιπολαζόντων γέμειν.

Now, if pumice was ejected then in such abundance as to cover the Aegean and reach places more than 200 miles from Thera and Therasia, vast masses must have fallen on the islands themselves; and these masses of pumice must be represented by some portion of the stratum of pumiceous tufa which now covers the upper surface of the islands.

In attributing the whole of the pumice to one vast eruption in prehistoric times, M. Fouqué has taken no account of the eruptions in historic times. But these eruptions must be responsible for part of the pumiceous tufa at the top of the cliffs; and if a part of that stratum was formed after the collapse of the cone, the whole of that stratum might have been formed after the collapse, although it is cut off so abruptly towards the bay. And apart from the fact that this stratum is cut off abruptly, no facts are adduced by M. Fouqué in support of his opinion that all the pumiceous tufa on the islands is composed of pumice ejected from the cone which afterwards collapsed.

In short, M. Fouqué's theory was that the vases must date from about 2000 B.C. at latest, since they were found underneath pumiceous tufa formed from the pumice ejected from a cone which collapsed about 2000 B.C. But, in the first place, he does not give very satisfactory reasons for fixing the date of the collapse anywhere near 2000 B.C. And then, in the second place, he altogether fails to show that the pumiceous tufa, which covered the vases, need have been formed from the pumice ejected from this cone.

The vases are of no great interest in themselves; but they bear some likeness to vases found at Hissarlik, and at Ialysos and Mycenae. So the date 2000 B.C. has been eagerly adopted by some advocates of extreme views about the antiquity of Greek civilisation.

CECIL TORR.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Milford; Aug. 23, 1892.

A repetition of attacks already answered naturally leads to a repetition of answers. But as I have now fully noticed every fact alleged against my views on the Ægean pottery, I fail to see that I am called on to take further notice of the subject at present.

Whenever a single clear datum can be produced which stands outside of the propositions which I have laid down in my last letter, I shall be glad to consider it.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. WHITWORTH WALLIS, on behalf of the committee of the City of Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery, is arranging for the autumn a special loan exhibition of pictures by living English animal painters, including works in which animal life forms a leading feature. He has been successful in securing fourteen of the principal works by Mr. Briton Riviere and seven or eight by Mr. H. W. B. Davis, and the best-known pictures of Messrs. J. T. Nettleship, John Charlton, A. C. Gow, S. E. Waller, J. C. Dollman, Burton Barber, Heywood Hardy, R. Beavis, J. S. Noble, R. Caton Woodville, Sydney Cooper, Basil Bradley, E. Douglas, Walter Hunt, R. Meyerheim, A. W. Strutt, and others, each artist being represented by four or five works. Mr. J. M. Swan will be represented by a series of studies, together with some of his bronzes. The Prince of Wales is sending an important loan from Sandringham; and among the principal owners who are lending well-known pictures may be mentioned the following:—Earl Spence, the Earl of Rosebery, Lord Armstrong, Hon. C. N. Lawrence, Sir William Hozier, Sir Thomas Lucas, Lady de Gex, Messrs. W. Cuthbert Quilter, Henry Tate, J. Maeculloch, John Aird, N. G. Clayton, Colonel Hargreaves, Colonel Harding, Colonel North; Messrs. W. Y. Baker, W. G. Thompson, Louis Huth, T. J. Barratt, Schumacher, Scrymgeour, Withers, C. T. Jacoby, William Ryland, James Blyth, Lomax, Fenwick, Bryant, Fenton Smith, Robert Muir, Jesse, Haworth, H. J. Turner, Mrs. J. K. Cross, the Fine Art Society, the Trustees of the Chantry Bequest, and the Corporations of Liverpool and Nottingham. The exhibition, which will open in October, bids fair to be as thoroughly representative in character as the David Cox exhibition held in the Birmingham Galleries two years ago, and as the pre-Raphaelite collection of last year, which was visited in less than three months by 260,000 people.

MR. SIDNEY COLVIN, the Keeper of the Prints and Drawings at the British Museum, has just acquired a volume of considerable artistic interest. This consisted of a collection of old Netherlandish and German drawings, the majority of them being genuine and fine works of Lucas van Leyden, and bearing the well-known signature of the master. Nearly all are portrait heads, but a few are figure subjects. When Mr. Colvin purchased them they were in the old binding, which had preserved them for a couple of centuries in an English house; but they have now been taken out, and will shortly be catalogued and placed with the other Lucas van Leyden drawings in the Museum.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a new and revised edition of Fergusson's Ancient and Mediaeval Architecture, in two volumes, with about one thousand illustrations. The work of revision has been entrusted to Mr. R. Phené Spiers.

PART 41 of Archæologia Aeliæna, published by the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, contains an important article by Mr. F. Haverfield upon "The Mother Goddesses"—that is to say, the three deities of Roman times who are only known to us from inscriptions as Matronæ, Matres, or Matræ. It is curious that the first of these names should predominate on the Lower Rhine and in Gallia Cisalpina, and the second in Britain, while the third should not be found outside Narbonensis. This is clearly shown by a dotted map of the Roman Empire and by a tabular statement. Mr. Haverfield first collects, mainly from German authorities, all the evidence that exists with regard to this mysterious cult, and then enumerates 62 inscribed or sculptured stones in Britain which certainly or probably have reference to it. As usual with this periodical, the article is abundantly and excellently illustrated. Among the other contents, we may mention the obituary of Dr. Collingwood Bruce, the topographer of the Roman wall, by Dr. T. Hodgkin; an account of four brasses in the county of Durham, previously undescribed; and a good paper on mediaeval carved chests. One here figured, which is proved by the arms on it to have been made for Richard de Bury, may possibly once have contained part of his historic library. It is now in private hands, having "disappeared" from the Chancery Court-house at Durham so recently as 1855. It would be a pious deed to present it to Trinity College, Oxford, which, we believe, still possesses some fragments of the bishop's bequest.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Songs of the West. In Four Parts. By the Rev. S. Baring Gould and the Rev. H. Fleetwood Sheppard. Third edition, revised. (Methuen.)

Folk-songs of England. Arranged for two voices by Alfred Moffat. (Curwen.)

Every attempt to gather together songs of the olden time is most welcome. Admiration, nay enthusiasm, for the great composers is sometimes apt to beget pride, and a musician who can understand and enjoy a Sonata or Symphony of Beethoven may think country songs and ballads beneath his notice. But the feeling is wrong; for in the study of musical evolution the one is as important as the other; and, besides, the music handed down to us from early times possesses a quaint charm and interest of its own. In the preface to the latter of the above-mentioned works, some remarks by Prof. Stanford are quoted, among which occurs the following:

"Those countries which have the greatest store of national music also produce the greatest amount of creative as well as of general appreciative power. The British Isles have the greatest and most varied storehouse of national music in existence."

It does, indeed, seem a pity that there are not more enthusiasts like the two clergymen who have collected the Songs of the West, so that what they did for Devon and Cornwall might be repeated in other counties. While "interviewing" aged natives of these western lands, they felt that they were, so to speak, in the nick of time, for they tell us: "The singers are nearly all old, . . . and when they die the traditions will be lost." The difficulty of obtaining the genuine form of national airs is at all times great, and in some cases insuperable; they have been altered by cunning or caprice, and perhaps, in some cases, the original has been changed beyond recognition. While fully acknowledging the great service rendered to musical art by Messrs. Gould and Sheppard, one cannot help feeling that the pianoforte accompaniments supplied by the latter produce in many cases a disturbing effect. We do not for one moment question the skill displayed, or the taste, judging the music apart from its connexion; but it does not seem right to clothe ancient melodies in modern dress: it results in a misfit. In some of the arrangements it is only here and there that a harmony or figure proves a stumbling-block; but to take only one example—in "Broadbury Gibbet," the old tonality and the chromatic chords and style of writing are at variance throughout. Mr. Sheppard reminds us that "the melodies are preserved as faithfully as lay in our power," and also that "our desire has been to present them in a form acceptable to the general public." But the one stands over the other, and thus a wrong impression is created from the first. And again, as to pleasing the public—which, according to this gentleman's own showing, would prefer the "vulgarest music-hall performances" to these songs—how could he expect to find his refined writing and tasteful choice of harmonies acceptable?

The accompaniments to the Folk-songs of England occasionally become too modern, as, for instance, in "The Maypole"; though, as a rule, they are plain. Taken altogether, they are good. But one feature in this collection is open to question. All the songs are "arranged" for two voices; and although in some cases no particular harm is done, the deliberate transformation of solos into duets must, on principle, be condemned. In early days it was the general practice to write songs either for one or for many voices.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. . .	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

PUBLICATIONS OF THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

"THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION HANDBOOKS."

Edited by J. Y. W. MACALISTER and THOMAS MASON
(Hon. Secretaries of the Association).

No. 1.—Now ready, price 1s. net.

LIBRARY APPLIANCES: being a Descriptive Guide to the Complete Technical Equipment of Libraries, including Fittings, Furniture, Records, Forms, &c., &c.
By JAMES D. BROWN, Librarian, Clerkenwell Public Library.

No. 2.—Immediately, price 2s. 6d. net.

PUBLIC LIBRARY LAW.
A COMPLETE DIGEST

OF THE

NEW CONSOLIDATED and AMENDED LIBRARY LAW.

By H. W. FOVARGUE, Town Clerk of Eastbourne, and J. J. OGLE, Librarian of the Public Library, Bostle.

As the new Law, which comes into force on the 1st October next, requires Commissioners and other Library Authorities to take various steps in pursuance of its provisions, it is important that all Library Authorities should make themselves conversant with the details of the Act before that date.

In addition to the new Law, this Handbook contains a Complete Digest of the Library Law of Scotland and of Ireland.

N.B.—Copies can still be obtained of Messrs. FOVARGUE and OGLE'S.

DIGEST OF PUBLIC LIBRARY LAW from 1855 to 1890. Although to some extent superseded by the new Law, this work will always be of value for reference, as it contains complete reports of Judgments in the most important leading cases.
Price 2s. 6d. net.

IMPORTANT TO BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

The LIBRARY ASSOCIATION YEAR-BOOK
Price One Shilling net.

In addition to other information valuable to Booksellers and of interest in Libraries, the Year-Book contains a complete List of the Public Libraries in the United Kingdom and of other Libraries represented in the Association, a complete List of Members and their Addresses, and full particulars of the Association's Publications, Syllabus of Examinations and Specimen Questions, price 1s.

Published for the Association by DAVID STOTT, 370, Oxford Street, W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations,
Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.
SEPTEMBER.

HOW TO DRIVE HOME RULE HOME. By FREDERIC HARRISON.

MARS. By Sir ROBERT BALL, F.R.S.

CHOLERA and CLEANLINESS IN RUSSIA. By E. R. LANE.

THE STRAND IMPROVEMENTS. By HERBERT P. HORSE.

AUGUST STRINDBERG. By JUSTUS HENTLY MCCARTHY.

NEW JAPAN. By F. T. PHOTO.

MULREADY. By LADY DICK.

TWO AUSTRALIAN WRITERS. By FRANCIS ADAMS.

THE LATE PRINCE VICTOR OF HOHENLOHE. By His Son.

PROFIT and LOSS. By THE EDITOR.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THE

LINOTYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR BOOKWORK.

*Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.*

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers'
Association, Chicago, has been announced.
The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250
English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED, 30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME.
Messrs. Lionel Lincoln, Charles Dalton, W. A. Elford, G. W.
Cookburn, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W.
Northcott; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs.
H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jones, &c.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.
Mr. W. S. Penley, Mr. W. F. Hawtrey, Mr. Bobb Harwood,
Mr. Sam Southern, Mr. Cecil Thornbury, Mr. W. Aynum, Mr.
G. Tomkins, Miss Nina Bondeau, Miss Violet Annbruster, Miss C. Ewell, Miss Alice Yorke, Miss Caroline Elton. At 8.15. THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NEW SUB. At 9.10,
FAITHFUL JAMES. And, at 9.50, A PANTOMIME RE-
HEARSAL. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, W. Draycott, C. F.
Little, S. Warden, Vaughan, Bertram, and Weldon Cross-smith; Misses G. Kingston, Edith Briant, Sybil Grey, Berridge, Palfrey, and Ellaline Terriss.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Leavees and Manager, Mr. CHARLES W. BISHAM.
THIS EVENING, at 9, the celebrated comedy in three acts, by P. C. Burnand, entitled

BETSY.

Messrs. W. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, S. Valentine, D. S.
James, W. Dale, Mesdames F. Robertson, Eliza Jeffreys, F.
Frances, M. Studholme, A. M. Rae, Jennie Rogers. Preceded at 8.15 by the Operetta FOUR MIGNONNETTES. Miss H.
Crofton, Mr. S. Valentine, Mr. W. R. Shirley. Doors open at 8.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs.
Murray Carson, T. W. Percyval, Harcourt Beatty, Henry de
Solla, W. Brunton, jun., H. Gray Dalby, B. Whitcomb,
H. Ludlow, Alker, Hennessey, Sauter; Mesdames Lecky Bell,
M. Watson, F. Wyatt, L. Wyatt, Maud St. John, Ormsby, Herrick, Patrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

LAST NIGHTS.—THE BROKEN MELODY, at 8.30.
AUGUSTE VAN BIENE as PAUL BORINSKI.
Olga Brandon.
Blanche Horlock.
W. L. Abingdon.
AUGUSTE VAN BIENE as PAUL BORINSKI.
Fred Thorne.
Sant Matthews.
Stephen Caffrey.
Preceded at 8 by the WHITE LADY.
Doors open at 7.45.
Proprietor of Theatre, Mr. Edgar Bruce.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, NOBE (ALL SMILES).
Messrs. Harry Poulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George
Hawtrey, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Ellison, Venie Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Esmond, L. Goldsmith, and C. Zerbini. At 8. NO CREDIT. Messrs. Esmond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtrey, &c.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Messrs.
E. W. Garden, C. M. Lowe, Seymour Hicks, Cecil Bannasy, and G. Shelton; Misses Liston, Vanburgh, Ansell, Rachel, and Mary Brough. At 8. DAISSY'S ESCAPE. Messrs.
Billington, Shelton, Lowe, Arlton, and Coventry; Misses Conynham and Brough.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 11th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other
Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.,
Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging
Christ," &c.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on maximum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives all deposits, & allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANK RAYSON, Joint Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, sent free on application. FRANK RAYSON, Joint Manager.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS AND TEXT-BOOKS

FOR THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATIONS, LONDON UNIVERSITY AND COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATIONS.

LATIN.

- CÆSAR—GALLIC WAR. With Notes and Vocabulary.
BOOK I. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOKS II. and III. By Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
CICERO—DE SENECTUTE. With Notes and Vocabulary by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
PRO LEGE MANILIA. Edited by Professor A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
THE SECOND PHILIPPIC ORATION. Edited by Professor J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. 3s. 6d.
EUTROPIUS—BOOKS I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary by W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
HORACE—ODES. With Notes and Vocabulary.
BOOKS I., III., and IV. By E. T. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
JUVENAL—THIRTEEN SATIRES. Edited by E. G. HARDY, M.A. 5s.
LIVY. With Notes and Vocabulary.
BOOK V. By M. ALFORD. 1s. 6d.
BOOK XXI. Adapted from Mr. CAPES's Edition by J. E. MELHUISE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
SELECTIONS from BOOKS V. and VI. By W. CECIL LAMING. 1s.
LUCRETIVS—BOOKS I. to III. Edited by J. H. WARBURTON LEE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
OVID—FASTI. Edited by G. H. HALLAM, M.A. 3s. 6d.
TACITUS—AGRICOLA and GERMANIA. Edited by A. J. CHURCH, M.A., and W. J. BRODRIBB, M.A. 3s. 6d. Or, separately, 2s. each.
VIRGIL—ÆNEID. With Notes and Vocabulary.
BOOK I. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOKS II. and III. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
BOOK IV. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOK VI. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOK VII. By Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d.
ECLOGUES. With Notes and Vocabulary, by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

GREEK.

- AESCHYLUS—PROMETHEUS VINCTUS. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
DEMOSTHENES—DE CORONA. Edited by B. DRAKE, M.A. Revised by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 3s. 6d.
THE FIRST PHILIPPIC. Edited by Rev. T. GWATKIN, M.A. 2s. 6d.
EURIPIDES—ALCESTIS. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
MEDEA. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
MEDEA. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
HECUBA. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
ION. Edited by Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 2s. 6d.
HERODOTUS—BOOK VI. Edited by Professor J. STRACHAN, M.A. 3s. 6d.
BOOK VII. Edited by Mrs. MONTAGU BUTLER. 3s. 6d.
HOMER—ILIAD. BOOK I. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOKS I., IX., XI., XVI., XXIV. Edited by J. H. PRATT, M.A., and W. LEAF, Litt.D. 1s.
THUCYDIDES—BOOK III. Edited by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A. [In preparation.]
XENOPHON—ANABASIS. With Notes and Vocabulary.
BOOK I. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d. With Exercises, by E. A. WELLS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOK II. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOK III. By Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
BOOK IV. By Rev. E. D. STONE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

ENGLISH LITERATURE AND HISTORY.

- ADDISON—SELECTIONS from the "SPECTATOR." With Introduction and Notes by K. DEIGHTON. [Shortly.]
BACON—ESSAYS. With Introduction and Notes, by F. G. SELBY, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
THE ADVANCEMENT of LEARNING. By the same Editor. [December, 1892.]
BROWNE—RELIGIO MEDICI. Edited by W. A. GREENHILL, M.D. 2s. 6d. net.
BURKE—REFLECTIONS on the FRENCH REVOLUTION. With Introduction and Notes, by F. G. SELBY, M.A. 5s.
HELPS—ESSAYS WRITTEN in the INTERVALS of BUSINESS. With Introduction and Notes by F. J. ROWE, M.A., and W. T. WEBB, M.A. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
JOHNSON—LIFE of MILTON. With Introduction and Notes, by K. DEIGHTON. 1s. 9d.
MILTON. With Introduction and Notes.
PARADISE LOST. BOOKS I. and II. By M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
L'ALLEGRO, IL PENSEROSO, LYCIDAS, ARCADES, SONNETS &c. By W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
COMUS. By the Same. 1s. 3d.; sewed, 1s.
SAMSON AGONISTES. By H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 2s.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
SCOTT—THE LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. With Introduction and Notes by G. H. STUART, M.A., and E. H. ELLIOTT, B.A. 2s.; sewed, 1s. 9d.
CANTOS I.—III., 1s. 3d.; sewed, 1s. CANTO I., 9d.
SHAKESPEARE. With Introduction and Notes, by K. DEIGHTON.
THE TEMPEST. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
THE MERCHANT of VENICE. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
AS YOU LIKE IT. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
TWELFTH NIGHT. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
HENRY V. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
CORIOLANUS. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.
MACBETH. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
HAMLET. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.
KING LEAR. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.
SOUTHEY—LIFE of NELSON. With Introduction and Notes, by M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
TENNYSON. With Introduction and Notes.
THE COMING of ARTHUR and THE PASSING of ARTHUR. By F. J. ROWE, M.A. 2s.
GARETH and LYNETTE. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. [October, 1892.]
GERAINT and ENID. By the Same. [November, 1892.]
WORDSWORTH—POEMS SELECTED by MATTHEW ARNOLD. 2s. 6d. net.
A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, LL.D. With Analysis. Part III. 1540—1689. Part IV. 1689—1873. 3s. each.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

- MOLIERE—L'AVARE. Edited by L. M. MORIARTY, B.A. 1s.
LES FEMMES SAVANTES. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 1s.
HAUFF—DIE KARAVANE. With Notes, Vocabulary, and Exercises, by H. HAUER, Ph.D. 3s.
SCHILLER—DIE JUNGFRAU von ORLEANS. Edited by J. GOSWICK. 2s. 6d.
MARIA STUART. Edited by C. SHELDON, D.Litt. 2s. 6d.

DIVINITY.

- THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. LUKE. The Greek Text, with Introduction and Notes, by Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.
THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. The Greek Text, with Introduction and Notes, by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
A CLASS-BOOK of the CATECHISM of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 1s. 6d.
A FIRST CLASS-BOOK of the CATECHISM of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Same. 6d.
AN ELEMENTARY INTRODUCTION to the BOOK of COMMON PRAYER. By Rev. F. PROCTOR and Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 2s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1061.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW VOLUMES.

THE DIPLOMATIC REMINISCENCES of LORD AUGUSTUS

LOTUS, P.C., G.C.B., 1837-1862. With Portrait. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 32s. [Ready Shortly.]

THE NEW BIOGRAPHY OF COLUMBUS.

THE CAREER of COLUMBUS. By CHARLES ELTON, F.S.A.

320 pp. and Map. Demy 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. [Just Ready.]

FOOTBALL. The Rugby Union Game. Edited by Rev. F. MARSHALL.

With numerous Illustrations. Medium 8vo. cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. [Ready Shortly.]

OUT of the JAWS of DEATH. By FRANK BARRETT. Author of

"Fettered for Life," "Lady Biddy Fane," &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d. [Ready Shortly.]

THE SNARE of the FOWLER. By MRS. ALEXANDER. Author of

"The Wooing o't," &c. 3 vols. 31s. 6d. [Ready Shortly.]

A FOOT-NOTE to HISTORY. Eight Years of Trouble in Samoa.

By R. L. STEVENSON. 6s. [Now Ready.]

THE BEACH of FALESÁ and the BOTTLE IMP. By

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Illustrated. 6s. [Ready Shortly.]

THE WRECKER. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON and LLOYD OSBOURNE.

Illustrated. 6s. [Fourth Edition now ready.]

LEONA. By MRS. MOLESWORTH. Author of "Carrots," "Little Mother

Bunch," &c. 6s. [Just Ready.]

THE NEW OHIO: a Story of East and West. By EDWARD EVERETT

HALE, Author of "The Man without a Country," "Sybil Knox," &c. 6s. [Ready Shortly.]

THE ART of MAKING and USING SKETCHES. From the French of G. FRAIPONT, Professor at the College of the Legion of Honour. By CLARA BELL. With 50 Illustrations from Drawings by the Author. 2s. 6d. [Ready Shortly.]

A LIST of Cassell & Company's New Volumes for the Season 1892-3 will be forwarded post free on application.

NEW SERIALS.

Now ready, Part I., price 7d., of an ENTIRELY NEW WORK, entitled

OLD AND NEW PARIS. Profusely Illustrated.

The most Complete, Popular, and Fully Illustrated Descriptive and Historical Account of Paris, Past and Present, ever published.

* * With PART I. is issued a Large Map in Colours of PARIS and ITS ENVIRONS, expressly prepared.

Now ready, Part I., price 7d., of the New Serial Issue of

CASSELL'S UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

With about 800 Illustrations.

With Part I. is issued a LARGE TINTED PRESENTATION PLATE.

The New Paper for Boys.

THE BRIGHTEST THE BIGGEST THE CLEVEREST THE MOST ENTERTAINING THE MOST AMUSING THE MOST READABLE

Journal for Boys ever yet issued will be published under the title of

"CHUMS"

EVERY WEDNESDAY, PRICE 1d.,

NUMBER 1 ready SEP. 14, 1892.

1. "CHUMS" will be written by the most entertaining authors, and edited by one of the most brilliant writers for boys of the present day.
2. "CHUMS" will be full of spirited and amusing Pictures drawn by the best artists.
3. "CHUMS" will contain Serial and Short Stories by leading writers for young people.
4. "CHUMS" will be full of good Jokes and interesting Papers.
5. "CHUMS" will have practical and entertaining Papers on Games, Sports, and Pastimes.
6. "CHUMS" will offer a larger number and greater variety of Prizes than any other paper.
7. "CHUMS" offers, in No. 1, about 600 Prizes, including a variety of Money Prizes, a Bicycle, Cricket Bats, Sets of Colours, Tennis Rackets, &c.
8. "CHUMS" will contain true narratives of exciting adventures in all parts of the globe.
9. "CHUMS" will introduce a new character to the world—"Waggles," our Office Boy, the story of whose misadventure will be full of fun.
10. "CHUMS" will tell of boys' doings at School and at Home, written by boys for boys.

An enormous demand is anticipated for Number 1 of "CHUMS," and it is requested that Orders may at once be registered at the Bookellers', so as to prevent disappointment in securing a copy on the day of publication.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, PARIS, AND MELBOURNE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

ARMSTRONG'S ELIZABETH FARNSESE, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	185
GALE'S A COUNTRY MUSE, by Mrs. GRAHAM TOMSON	186
PARKIN'S IMPERIAL FEDERATION, by W. WICKHAM	187
BOUGRET'S NOUVEAUX PASTELS, by JOHN GRAY	188
MRS. TALBOT CORE'S THE GENTLEWOMAN AT HOME, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON	188
A PROTESTANT CHURCH IN THE PYRENEES, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	189
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	190
OLD TESTAMENT LITERATURE	191
NOTES AND NEWS	192
ORIGINAL VERSES: "THE QUEST OF THE SPIRIT," by Miss A. WERNER	193
OBITUARY: R. L. NETTLESHIP, &c.	193
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	193
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	193
CORRESPONDENCE— Date of Chaucer's "Italian" Period , by A. W. POLLARD; "Up Fagus at the Fair"; an Explanation , by Mrs. JEANIE MORISON; "Fahel"; Numbers xxi. 14, by the Rev. S. A. BMYON; Notes on Herodas , by F. D.	194
THE TELL EL-AMARNA TABLETS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM, by Prof. SAYCE	196
CORRESPONDENCE— Note on Fedibastura , by Col. G. A. JACOB	196
INDIAN JOTTINGS	197
PHILOLOGY NOTES	198
KERNODE'S CATALOGUE OF THE MARKS CROSSES, by Prof. G. STEPHENS	198
CORRESPONDENCE— Aegyptian Pottery in Egypt , by Cecil TORR	198
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	199
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	199

FOR SALE, an excellently preserved
MUMMY, in elaborately painted case, both inside and out, 2,400 years old. Price £35; a bargain.—JOSEPH GREEN, 8, South Hill Park Gardens, Hampstead, London, N.W.

PHILOSOPHY.—Logic, Metaphysic, and Ethic.—Oxonian, with first-class references, wishes to READ with Persons at Home or Abroad in above mentioned.—Address E. D., Crayford, Kent.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—MISS ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO
The COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions of luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be so much improved that the System, as a Device, will be no more needed.

MARK TWAIN (Mr. S. L. Clemens) says
of Professor Loissette: "He showed me how to LIGHT UP the dark cellar of my Memory." Languages learned rapidly. Prospects (containing opinions of pupils who have PASSED EXAMINATIONS and of members of the Medical, Scholastic, Clerical, Military, and other professions) post free from Professor LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford-st., London.

Shortly, Fifth Edition.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL?
and HOW CAN I KEEP SO? a clear explanation of the Salisbury Treatment. 272 pp. By ELMA STUART, Kenilworth. With Portrait in 1880. Price net, post free, 3s. 3d. Will be sent at once on receipt of remittance.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS.
The NINETEENTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, OCTOBER 10th. The classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving, Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be Open Daily for practical work.
The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Secretary—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General Course of Lectures on Zoology by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., commences on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th, at 1 p.m. These Lectures are intended to meet the requirements of Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London.
A Special Course of Lectures on ANIMAL VARIATION, addressed to Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology will be given in the Lent Term.
J. M. HAINES, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEMONSTRATOR AND ASSISTANT LECTURER IN BIOLOGY.
The Council is prepared to appoint a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in BIOLOGY, at a stipend of £120 per annum. It is necessary that candidates should have a special knowledge of Botany. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.
For further information apply to
CARDIFF, August 9th, 1892. IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY AND POLITICAL ECONOMY.—
The Council is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.
For further information apply to
CARDIFF, August 9th, 1892. IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART, NATIONAL ART TRAINING SCHOOL, South Kensington.

Visitor—EDWARD J. POYNTER, Esq., R.A.
Principal—JOHN C. L. SPARKES, Esq.
The ANNUAL SESSION will commence on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th. Art Classes in connection with the Training School are open to the public on payment of fees. The Classes for Men and Women Students meet separately. The Studies comprise Ornament and the Figure, with a view to their ultimate use in Design and Composition, and include the study of Plants and Flowers, the Painting of Still Life, and the Drawing and Painting of Ornament and of the Figure.
Candidates for admission, who are not already registered as students of the school, must have passed the Second Grade Examination in Practical Design. Examinations will be held at the School on Tuesday, September 27th, and October 10th, at 11.45 a.m. and 6.45 p.m. on both days, and on subsequent Tuesdays at frequent intervals during the Session.
Application for information as to fees and for admission should be made in writing to the Secretary, Department of Science and Art, S.W., or on or after October 5th, personally, to the REGISTRAR, at the School, Exhibition Road, S.W.

By order of The Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girtton), Cambridge.
Professors—Society. King's Coll.: Dr. Dolcken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Richl, Signor Garcia, Larpet, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

HAMPSTEAD—Mr. and Mrs. SONNEN-
SCHEIN RECEIVE BOARDERS at the HAMPSTEAD COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, for GIRLS, THE KNOLL, EAST HEATH. Preparation for London University Examinations. Accomplishments by eminent Professors. Lessons in Swimming at the Baths, and in Riding. Lawn-Tennis and open air Gymnasium. Beautiful situation on the Heath, and every domestic comfort; sanitary arrangements perfect. Prospectuses and references as above.

OXFORD.—ASCHAM SCHOOL.—
Home for Daughters of Gentlemen. Highest Educational advantages. Arrangement for Anglo-Indian children. Univ. and Foreign teachers. Prep. Roy. Coll. and Acad. Music, Univ. Loc. exams, &c. Reference—Rev. Canon Christopher, Oxford. Vacancy PUPIL-GOV.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for filling up about EIGHTEEN VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 7th SEPTEMBER, 1892. For information apply to THE REGISTRAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager

THE OPENING MEETING of the
NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS,
Hos. President and Patron—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, President—Prof. F. MAX MÜLLER, K.M., will be held in the THEATRE of the UNIVERSITY of LONDON, Burlington Gardens, at 11 a.m., on MONDAY, the 5th SEPTEMBER, when the PRESIDENT will deliver his ADDRESS.
C. DELMAR MORGAN,
T. W. RYDS DAVIDS, { Secretaries.
C. D. GISSING, }

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY,
OCTOBER 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th, 1892.
CONDUCTOR—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

BAND and CHORUS of 450.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—"Elijah." Principals: Mdine Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Norman Salmond.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.—Schumann's "Pilgrimage of the Rose," Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), &c. Miss MacIntyre, Miss McKenzie, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Plunket Greene.
THURSDAY MORNING.—Mozart's "Requiem Mass," Symphony (Written for the Festival) by Frederic Cliffe, Mendelssohn's 14th Psalm. Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Andrew Black.

THURSDAY EVENING.—Selection from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," Ballad for Orchestra, by A. C. Mackenzie; Brahms' "Song of Destiny," Scene from L'Étoile du Nord, Weber's Oberon Overture, Mdine Albani, Miss McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. H. Piercy, Mr. Plunket Greene.

FRIDAY MORNING.—Bach's "Mass in B minor," Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Piercy, Mr. Norman Salmond.

FRIDAY EVENING.—Cantata, "Arethusa" (first performance), by Anna Gray: Duet from Gounod's Romeo and Juliet, Schubert's Symphony in B minor, Selection from Sullivan's Touquet, "Santuzza's Song" from Mascagni's Condottiero, Brahms' "Song of Triumph," Hungarian Songs, Overture Richard Third, by Ed. German, Miss MacIntyre, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Plunket Greene.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Dvorak's Spectre's Bride, Suite de Ballet by Corning Thomas, Air from Saint Simeon and Judaea, "The Profusion," by C. Hubert Parry, Beethoven's "Hallelujah," Miss Anna Williams, Miss MacIntyre, Miss McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Andrew Black.

SATURDAY EVENING.—Selection from Handel's Works, and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, Mdine Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. H. Piercy, Mr. Norman Salmond.

Sir Joseph Barnby (at the special request of Sir Arthur Sullivan) will be the Conductor on Saturday morning. Dr. Hubert Parry, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. A. B. Gray, Mr. Frederic Cliffe, and Mr. Edward German will conduct their own works.

SERIAL TICKET (consisting of a separate Ticket for Seven Concerts) £5 5 0
SINGLE TICKET—FIRST SEATS—Morning 1 1 0
" " " " Evening 0 15 0
" " " " SECOND SEATS—Morning 0 10 6
" " " " " " Evening 0 8 0

GALLERY AND FRONT SEATS (A) 15 0
" " " " (B) 10 6
SECOND SEATS (A) 8 0
" " " " (B) Unreserved 3 6

Applications for Tickets must be accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of the Tickets required. Programmes can be had (free). All communications to be addressed,

ALD. FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Offices, Municipal Buildings, Leeds.
Sept. 1st, 1892.

THE TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

LISBON (23rd SEPTEMBER to 1st OCTOBER, 1892).

President-Patron: HIS MAJESTY DOM CARLOS I.

Orientalists and friends of Oriental studies are specially invited to take part in the above Congress, which will be followed by literary excursions to Cintra and other places of interest in Portugal, and to Cordova, Seville, and Granada in Spain. The programme of work comprises all known branches of Oriental learning, as also recent explorations, and subjects bearing on "Portugal and the East." The subscription (£1), papers to be read at the Congress, books for presentation, or collections for exhibition, may be forwarded to "The Delegate General," at the Portuguese Legation, 12, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., from whom also particulars may be learnt regarding Prize-translations and the award by the Congress of Diplomas, Medals, and other honours. The dates of the Congress and of its excursions have been so fixed as to enable members to attend the Americanist and other Congresses, Exhibitions, and Columbian Festivities that will take place in Spain between September 12 and the end of October. Reductions in Railway fares, &c., are being arranged for Members.

FOR PUBLICATIONS of the NINTH
INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS, including SUMMARIES of ORIENTAL RESEARCH in Sixteen Specialities, apply to PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WORING.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MA YFAIR, W.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 223.—SEPTEMBER, 1892.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—SINGULARLY DELUDED, chaps. vii.-xi.

CYCLONE OF APRIL 29 IN MAURITIUS, by the Lieut.-Governor, Hubert E. H. Jerningham, C.M.G.—THE REMEDY FOR LANCASHIRE: A BERMA-CHINA RAILWAY, by Holt S. Hallett—With Map.—AN EXPERIMENT IN HOLIDAYS, by H. Preston Thomas.—"USO DE MILLE," by Wallace Bruce.—THE DIVINATION-STONE OF KALI: LOVE AND CRIME IN INDIA—TITLES, AND A DISSESSION—OR TWO, by Arnold Haultain.—GAMES, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—HOLY WAZAN, by Walter B. Harris.—THE AGRICULTURAL INTEREST AND THE EIGHT HOURS QUESTION, by Warneford Moffatt.—WHAT NEXT?

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

AN AMERICAN VIEW OF HOME RULE AND FEDERATION. By ALBERT SHAW.
THE GROWTH OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE. By JOHN RAE.
PROFESSOR HUXLEY AS A THEOLOGIAN. By Prof. SANDAY, D.D.
CANINE MORALS AND MANNERS. By Dr. LOUIS ROUSSON.
EDWARD VI.: Spoiler of Schools. By ARTHUR F. LEACH.
TALENT AND GENIUS ON THE STAGE. By GEORGE BARLOW.
FLORA SACRA. By A. E. P. R. DOWLING.
EVOLUTION NOT REVOLUTION IN MODERN WARFARE. By SPENCER WILKINSON.
THE LAST DECADE OF THE LAST CENTURY. By Professor J. W. HAYES.
THE STRATEGIC VALUE OF EGYPT. By Major OTTO WACHS.
LETTER TO THE EDITOR. By R. W. DALL, LL.D.
ISMIST & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE,

No. 304, SEPTEMBER, 1892, price 1s., contains—

1.—DON ORSINO. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Chaps. XX.—XXII.
2.—CHAPTERS FROM SOME UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS. By Mrs. RITCHIE. VIII.
3.—FAIZULLAH.
4.—A SCHOOL FOR MIRTH.
5.—THE METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL. By H. CLARENCE BOURNE.
6.—HOW PIERRE CAME HOME. By Miss WYLDE.
7.—THE CONSOLATIONS OF POETRY.
8.—THE STRANGER IN THE HOUSE.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For SEPTEMBER, 1892, price Sixpence, contains—

1.—MR. GLADSTONE. With Portrait. HENRY W. LEE.
2.—A ROYAL RECEPTION. The Action of "M. DEMOISELLE IRE." Illustrated by T. S. C. COWHER.
3.—THE WORK OF CANADIAN LUMBERMEN. LEE J. VANCE Illustrated.
4.—DONCASTER and the ST. LEGER. "VIGILANT" of the Spartan. Illustrated by F. G. KILTON.
5.—JOTTINGS IN SYRIA. Sir GEORGE THOMAS, Bart. Illustrated.
6.—THE PARISIAN POLICE. A. SHADWELL. With Portraits by W. D. ALMOND.
7.—COLLABORATION. HENRY JAMES.
8.—THE "TIMES." EDWARD VINCENT. Illustrated by Edmund J. Sullivan.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

NOW READY.—SEPTEMBER, 1892.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 49.

A FRENCH VIEW OF THE LIBERAL GOVERNMENT. By JOSEPH REINACH, Editor of La République Française.
THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE IN THE PAMIRS. By Prof. VAMBERG.
MY PARIS NOTEBOOK. By ALBERT D. VANDON.
A MONKEY'S ACADEMY IN AFRICA. By Prof. R. L. GARNER.
THE RENAISSANCE IN ITS BROADER ASPECTS. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.
EXPERIMENTS IN THOUGHT-TRANSCERENCE. By Mrs. HENRY SIDGWICK.
"BRIGHT EYES AND DARK EYES." By Prof. MAX MÜLLER.
THE RELATION OF GENERAL CULTURE TO PROFESSIONAL SUCCESS. By the late Sir MORELL MACKENZIE.
A PLEA FOR THE ENGLISH SILK INDUSTRY. By Mrs. LOUIS LESTER.
THE FORERUNNERS OF COLUMBUS. By KARL BLIND.
DOUGLAS JERROLD. By EDWARD COPPING.
ACTORS AND AUDIENCES, FRENCH AND ENGLISH. By FREDERIC FÉRAUD, Vice-doyen de la Comédie Française.
LITERATURE. By EDWARD GOSSE.

London: LONDON, GREEN & CO.

BIRKBECK BANK,

ESTABLISHED 1851.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, AND ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.
FRANCIS KAYENSBROT Manager.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 278, for SEPTEMBER

1. THE GRAMMAR SCHOOLS OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY. By Dr. J. G. FROD.
2. NEW OPENINGS IN THE TEACHING PROFESSION.
3. PRESENT-DAY HANDWRITING. By JOHN JACKSON.
4. THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, BOV. Part II. By EMILY MITCHELL.
5. SCHOOL, CHAPELS and CHAPLAINS.
6. THE TEACHING OF ENGLISH COMPOSITION.
7. CORRESPONDENCE: Modern Greek—Aural Language Teaching—Set Books and Privileged Editions—A Clough Memorial.
8. OF CASUAL NOTES:—Notes on Elementary Schools.
9. TECHNICAL EDUCATION.
10. FOREIGN NOTES:—France, Germany, Cape Colony, New Zealand.
11. REVIEWS AND MINOR NOTICES.
12. SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES.
13. TRANSLATION PRIZE COMPETITIONS.

Price 6d., per post, 8d.

Offices: 80, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE ARENA.

2s. 6d. SEPTEMBER, 1892. 2s. 6d.

THE FUTURE OF ISLAM. By DR. FROD.
OLD STOCK DAYS. By JAMES A. HERN.
THE COMMUNISM OF CAPITAL. By Hon. JOHN DAVIS.
PSYCHICAL RESEARCH. By Rev. J. M. SAVAGE.
BACON & SHAKESPEARE—III. By EDWIN REED.
SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF TYPHOID FEVER. By C. E. PAGE, M.D.
THE BIBLE WINE QUESTION. By A. L. GUSTAFSON.
A PROSE EPIGRAM. By HAMILTON GARLAND.
WALT WHITMAN. By Professor WILLIS BOUGHTON.
DRESS REFORM—A Symposium.

BRENTANO'S, 5, AGAR STREET, W.C.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

2s. 6d. CONTENTS, SEPTEMBER, 1892. 2s. 6d.

MRS. MAVERICK—An Open Letter to the Queen. By GAIL HAMILTON.
INNOCENCE IN THE IGNORANCE. By AMELIE RIVES.
A FORECAST OF MR. GLADSTONE'S NEW ADMINISTRATION. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.
NOT IN SOCIETY. By Mrs. AMELIA E. BARR.
A PLAIN TALK ON THE DRAMA. By RICHARD MANSFIELD.
REMINISCENCES OF JOHN BRIGHT. By his Nephew, CHARLES MCLAREN.
ELECTIONEERING METHODS IN ENGLAND. By H. W. LACEY.
THE ILLUMINATING POWER OF ANECDOTE. By S. ARTHUR BENT.
THE HOMESTEAD STRIKE—Three Views. By the Hon. Wm. C. OATES, The Hon. G. THORNTON CURTIS, and Master Workman POWDERLEY.

BRENTANO'S, 5, AGAR STREET, W.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class
BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., OULS, R.A.; PETTIE, R.A.; PRINSEP, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Office: 27, CRANBURY LANE, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.THE YEAR-BOOK of the IMPERIAL

INSTITUTE of the UNITED KINGDOM, the COLONIES, and INDIA. A Statistical Record of the Resources and Trade of the Colonial and Indian Possessions of the British Empire. Compiled chiefly from Official Sources. First Issue 1872. Royal 8vo, 10s. net.

SCIENTIFIC and TECHNICAL

PAPERS of WEINER VON SIEMENS. Translated from the Second German Edition. Vol. I. Scientific Papers and Addresses. With Illustrations and a Portrait of the Author. 8vo, 14s.

NEW CHAPTERS in GREEK HIS-TORY. Historical Results of Recent Excavations in Greece and Asia Minor. By PERCY GARDNER, M.A., Professor of Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. 8vo, 15s.

PRIMITIVE CULTURE. Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Language, Art and Science. By EDWARD B. TYLOR, F.R.S., Keeper of the Museum, Oxford. Third Edition, Revised. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

SPECIAL ASPECTS of the IRISH

QUESTION. A Series of Illustrations (in and since 1846). Collected from various sources and reprinted. By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. Crown 8vo, 1s., cloth; 3s. 6d., paper covers.

NOVELS FOR FAMILY READING.

MAJOR LAWRENCE. By Hon. Emily LAWLESS, 6s.

MISS BLAKE of MONKSHALTON. By MISS FORD, 7s.

MARCIA. By W. E. NORRIS. 6s.

ESTHER VANHOMRIGH. By Mrs. WOODS. 6s.

COMEDY of a COUNTRY HOUSE. By JULIAN STURGIS, 6s.

PLAIN FRANCES MOWBRAY. By Hon. EMILY LAWLESS, 6s.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS.

Edited by Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University.
The STUDY of ANIMAL LIFE. By J. ARTHUR THOMSON, University of Edinburgh. With 80 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. (Just out)

The REALM of NATURE: a Manual of Physiography. By HUGH ROBERT MILL, University of Edinburgh. In Coloured Maps and 60 Illustrations. 200 pp. Crown 8vo, 2s.

FRENCH LITERATURE. By H. G. KEENE, Wadhams College, Oxford, Fellow of the University of California. 200 pp. Crown 8vo, 3s.

ENGLISH COLONISATION and EMPIRE.

By A. CALDER OTT, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Coloured Maps and Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The FINE ARTS. By Prof. Baldwin Brown, University of Edinburgh. Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The USE and ABUSE of MONEY. By W. PENNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Economic Science, King's College, London. Crown 8vo, 3s.

The PHILOSOPHY of the BEAUTIFUL. By Prof. KNIGHT, University of St. Andrews. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The ELEMENTS of ETHICS. By JOHN H. MURHEAD, Balliol College, Oxford, Lecturer on Moral Science, Royal Holloway College. Crown 8vo, 2s.

Many other volumes are in preparation. Full particulars on application.

MURRAY'S ENGLISH HANDBOOKSENVIRONS of LONDON, including a

Circuit 20 miles round. Two Parts. Post 8vo, 21s.

These volumes contain interesting historical accounts of all the notable places from ST. ALBANS on the North to REPTON on the South, WINCHESTER on the West to GRAVESEND on the East.

ENGLAND and WALES. Arranged

Alphabetically, with List of Railway Stations, Hotels, and all Places and Objects worth seeing. 1 vol. Maps. Post 8vo, 12s.

Forming a tasteful and equally useful, being a compact volume, as a travelling companion or for reference at home.

COUNTY HANDBOOKS, with Maps and Plans

EASTERN COUNTIES. 12s.	SOUTH WALES. 7s.
KENT. 7s. 6d.	NORTHAMPTON and RUTLAND. 7s. 8d.
SUSSEX. 6s.	SHROPSHIRE and CHESTER. 6s.
SURREY HANTS. 10s.	LANCASHIRE. 7s. 6d.
WILTS. DORSET, and SOMERSET. 12s.	YORKSHIRE. 12s.
DEVON. 7s. 6d.	LINCOLNSHIRE. 7s. 6d.
CORNWALL. 6s.	DURHAM and NORTHUMBRIA. 10s.
GLOUCESTER, HEREFORD, and WORCESTER. 9s.	WESTMORLAND and CUMBERLAND. 7s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. 7s.	IRELAND. 10s.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS.

With 400 Illustrations. 8 vols., crown 8vo, £5 10s. 6d.

For Complete List of the Handbooks and full particulars apply to the Publisher.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A Story by Miss RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c., is commenced in the SEPTEMBER Number of THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

SECOND EDITION.

2 vols.

"Mrs. CLIFFORD has achieved a success of a very unusual and remarkable kind in this book. She has had the extreme daring to take for the subject of her story the romance of an old woman, and to fill her canvas with this one figure..... 'AUNT ANNE' and her treatment are quite original and new. She is often laughable, but always touching; her little figure is full of an old-fashioned grace, though grace combined with oddity; her sense of her 'position,' her susceptibilities in that respect, her boundless generosity, are always delightful. Indeed, we do not know when we have met with a more loving and recognisable, as well as attractive personage in fiction."—Spectator.

2 vols.

"It is impossible, in the brief sketch we have been able to give of this human tragedy, to convey any adequate idea of the air of intense realism in which the whole story is suffused. 'The STORY of a PENITENT SOUL' is less an autobiography than a cry de profundis—as difficult to criticise as the wail of a lost soul—a human document indeed."—Daily Chronicle.

3 vols.

"For a thoroughgoing Yorkshire story, evidently written by a Yorkshireman, with absolutely correct characteristics and local setting, the reader may be commended to 'A HIGH LITTLE WORLD.' The author certainly understands his own people, and has the art of reproducing them in strong and natural situations, true of type, broad and intense, stiff in the back and obdurate of will..... This moorland drama is full of interest and illusion..... There is a chapter on 'heredity,' after the recently set models, which is as ghastly and strenuous as the Norse dramatist's 'Ghosts.'" —Athenæum.

A NEW NOVEL, NOW READY.

A GIRL WITH A TEMPER.

By H. FINLAY KNIGHT.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES."
IN SPITE OF HERSELF.

By LESLIE KEITH,
Author of "Alasnam's Lady," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

Will be ready, at all Libraries, early next week, a New Novel, in 3 vols., entitled

THE HEAD OF THE FIRM.

By Mrs. J. H. RIDDELL.

Just ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE ATTACK ON THE MILL.

(L'Attaque du Moulin.)

By EMIL ZOLA.

With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE.

SECOND EDITION OF

THE NAULAHKA: a Story of

West and East. By RUDYARD KIPLING and WOLCOTT BALESTIER. Crown 8vo, price 6s.
"The rapid progress of the narrative of harem intrigue and thrilling adventure, with its setting of Eastern magnificence, and enriched by a vivid and unconventional imagery, carries one forward with a breathless rush. 'The Naulahka' is the best of Mr. Kipling's long stories, and that is saying a good deal."—Observer.

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

Crown 8vo, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d., each.

THE HERITAGE OF THE KURTS

From the Norwegian of BJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSEN.

"The story opens with an extremely clever and plain-spoken narrative of the history of the Kurt family..... The closing scene is in dramatic force and moving power superior to almost anything written by Björnson in a similar strain. It is marked by all that suggestive compression and kind of inevitable directness which constitutes one of Björnson's greatest and most original gifts."—Glasgow Herald.

Previously Published.

IN GOD'S WAY. By Björnstjerne Björnson.	By FROTH. By Armando Palacio Valdés.
PIERRE and JEAN. By Guy de Maupassant.	FOOTSTEPS OF FATE. By Louis Couperus.
THE CHIEF JUSTICE. By Karl Emil Franzos.	PEPIA JIMENEZ. By Juan Valera.
WORK WHILE YE HAVE THE LIGHT. By Count Lyof Tolstoi.	THE COMMODORE'S DAUGHTER. By Jonas Lie.
FANTASY. By Matilde Serao.	DOÑA LUZ. By Juan Valera. [In preparation.]

THE CROWN COPYRIGHT SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 5s. each.

COME LIVE WITH ME AND BE MY LOVE.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN,

Author of "The Moment After," &c.

"No work of fiction more thoroughly English and rustic in idiom and thought, dialogue, and characterisation has been produced in this country since the publication of 'Under the Greenwood Tree.'"
—Daily Telegraph.

Previously Published.

A QUESTION OF TASTE. By Maarten Maartens.	THE PENANCE OF PORTIA JAMES. By Tasma.
ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN. By Amélie Rives.	INCONSEQUENT LIVES. By J. H. Pearce.

PRINCE BISMARCK: an Historical Biography.

By CHARLES LOWE, M.A., late Berlin Correspondent of the Times. With Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Just now, when men are discussing the effects of a change of ministry in England upon the European politics in which the great Chancellor so often played the part of a Napoleon of diplomacy, there is considerable timeliness in the appearance of Mr. Charles Lowe's able study of Bismarck..... The interest in this admirable book is not exclusively confined to masterly expositions of the schemes of statecraft and policy."—Sunday Star.

THE SPEECH OF MONKEYS.

By Prof. R. L. GARNER. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"These eight years past Prof. Garner, in an endeavour to ascertain the language of the Simian race, has studied the speech of hundreds of monkeys of all tribes; and this curious volume contains the main facts reached in that period. His results are sufficient to encourage him and other workers to try and determine the language of the lower animals."—National Observer.

THE JEW at HOME: Impressions of a Summer and Autumn spent with him in Russia and Austria.

By JOSEPH PENNELL. With Illustrations by the Author. Small 4to. [Shortly.]

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN,
21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Low's Standard Novels

BY

Popular Authors.

SUITABLE FOR THE SUMMER HOLIDAY SEASON.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NOVELS.

New Uniform Revised Monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S COMPLETE NOVELS at 2s. 6d. each.

GREEN PASTURES AND PICCADILLY.

A DAUGHTER of HETH. With Portrait of Mr. Black. THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a PHAETON. A PRINCESS of THULE. MADCAP VIOLET. IN SILK ATTIRE. THREE FEATHERS. KILMENY. THE MAID of KILLEENA.

BY R. D. BLACKMORE.

Crown 8vo boards, 2s; cloth, 2s. 6d. each (unless otherwise stated).

LORNA DOONE. Thirty-Sixth Edition. 2s. and 2s. 6d. Illustrated Edition for Presentation, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

CLARA VAUGHAN.	MARY ANERLEY.
CHRISTOWELL. — ALICE LORRAINE.	KIT and KITTY. 6s.
CRIPPS the CARRIER.	SPRINGHAVEN. 7s. 6d. Illustrated.

THOMAS HARDY,

Author of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles."

In Uniform crown 8vo volumes, boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d. each.
FAR from the MADDING CROWD.	THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.	THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.	A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
THE LAODICEAN.	TWO on a TOWER.

BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Uniform crown 8vo volumes, half-leather, 3s. 6d. each.
AN OCEAN FREE LANCE.	A STRANGE VOYAGE.
THE FROZEN PIRATE.	A SAILOR'S SWEET-HEART.
A SEA QUEEN.	THE WRECK of the KROSVENOR.
LITTLE LOO.	BETWIXT the FORELANDS.
THE LADY MAUD.	MRS. DINES' JEWELS. 2s. and 2s. 6d.
MY WATCH BELOW.
JOHN HOLDSWORTH, Chief Mate.
JACK'S COURTSHIP.

BY FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Author of "Rudder Grange."

THE SQUIRREL INN. 6s.	THE CASTING AWAY of MRS. LECKS and MRS. ALESHINE; and THE DUSANTES. Boards 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.
THE HUNDRETH MAN. 6s.
THE LATE MR. NULL. 6s.
THE BEE-MAN of ORN. 5s.	RUDDER GRANGERS ABROAD. 2s. 6d.
ARDIS CLAVERDEN. 6s.
THE MERRY CHANTER. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.	THE STORY of VITEAU. New Edition. 3s. 6d.

TWO REMARKABLE NOVELS.

JUST READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Terrible Czar.

By COUNT A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Captain FILMORE, of the Black Watch. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.
"A thoroughly well written book.... We commend the volumes to all lovers of excellent fiction."—Manchester Guardian.

PER ASPERA (A Thorny Path). By

Prof. GEORG EBERS, Author of "An Egyptian Princess," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.
"A monument of learning.... a fascinating story."—World.
"A skilful piece of literary workmanship and a pleasing picture of an interesting stage in the world's history."—Poll Mail Gazette.

London: SAMSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1892.

No. 1061, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Elizabeth Farnese. By Edward Armstrong. (Longmans.)

THE subject of this work is a striking figure in a singular period of European history. The half century between the Peace of Utrecht and the world-wide conflict of the Seven Years' War was an epoch marked by no great movement of a religious, national, or social kind; and it lent itself, accordingly, to the intrigues of politics and to the merely personal ambition of kings and statesmen. Among the actors who played a leading part in this ever shifting drama of crooked diplomacy and of self-seeking scheming Elizabeth Farnese was conspicuous; with the exception, indeed, of Frederick the Great, she was perhaps the most audacious and the most unscrupulous. She had none of the qualities of a great sovereign, and none of the fascinations of an attractive woman: she sacrificed the interests of her adopted country, and betrayed and deserted most able ministers, in the pursuit of selfish and secondary ends; and her conduct was often extravagant, unwise, and reckless. But she steadily pursued a distinct object, the aggrandisement of her consort, herself, and her children, with a tenacity and boldness that must be almost admired; and, in spite of adverse circumstances, she was largely successful, if her success was hardly for the good of Europe.

This volume is an elaborate study on the life and career of this singular personage, and it deserves much praise for its author's industry. Like most biographers of the present day, Mr. Armstrong has largely compiled his materials from State papers and documents of the period; and his estimate of the "Terzaghi of Spain" is mainly derived from unpublished despatches of different envoys at the Spanish court, and from the correspondence of Alberoni, and other ministers of the Queen. He has, however, drawn much from other sources, especially from St. Simon's Memoirs, and histories of greater or less merit; and he has spared no pains to completely master his subject. This would be a work of a high order if mere research could make a biography good, but we cannot say it deserves that distinction. Mr. Armstrong has little of the artistic or critical faculty: he does not make the best use of his vast knowledge; his judgments on men and courts sometimes want discernment. As for Elizabeth Farnese, he fairly points out the characteristics of her acts and conduct; but he does not indicate clearly enough how unwise and insensate these often were, and his estimate of her is too favourable. His narrative, too, is ill-ordered and overloaded with tedious details, though here and there it contains well-considered passages, and it abounds in curious and instructive anecdotes. We regret to add that the language of the book is occasionally slipshod, and even vulgar. How could an Oxford man write such a sentence as this—"The protection and extension of the Electorate, and the boycotting of the Pretender by the chief European Powers, were the two planks in the platform of George's ministry?"

Mr. Armstrong has thrown some fresh light on the early life of what we may call his heroine. Elizabeth Farnese had quick parts, and showed decision of character while still a child. She acquired superficial and showy accomplishments; but, having been brought up at a petty Italian court, she was out of the current of European politics, and had not the slightest acquaintance with them; and she had little intellectual or moral training. The first proof she gave the world of the strength of her will was her summary dismissal of the Princess des Ursins, the domineering Egeria of Philip V., and the great spy of France at the Court of Spain; but this was certainly due to Alberoni's counsels. Within a few weeks she had gained a complete ascendancy over her proud, half-mad, and wholly fickle husband; and for nearly thirty years she was the supreme director and real arbiter of the policy of Spain, though she had, at least, two very able ministers. This is significant of the force of her energetic nature; but, unhappily, her powers were usually employed in furthering selfish domestic interests, repeatedly opposed to the national welfare. Mr. Armstrong does not attempt to conceal this distinctive feature of the conduct of the Queen, conspicuous even in that age of intriguing kingcraft; but he does not dwell enough on the resulting mischiefs. On four great occasions Elizabeth involved the fortunes and the prospects of Spain in the hope of gaining mere personal ends; and if she ultimately realised these in fact, she was, on all four occasions, untrue to Spain, and an evil genius of the country she ruled. We shall not try to enter the labyrinth of wars, of treaties, and of diplomatic makeshifts, which compose the history of these events, and shall simply refer to Mr. Armstrong's narrative, which might, as has been said, have been better arranged. We may indicate, however, the broad results: and they prove that the Queen was an injudicious sovereign. In the hope of placing her husband on the throne of France, a throne which he had pledged his oath not to occupy, she threw France into the arms of England, exposed Spain to French and English invasion, and brought ruin on the nascent Spanish marine, against the advice of a great minister, in a premature attempt at Italian conquests. In order to gain the hand of Maria Theresa for Don Carlos, her eldest son, she entered into a compact with Charles VI., the inveterate enemy of Philip V., to dismember France, the natural ally of Spain; and it was not her fault that she did not carry out her purpose. She next took the side of France against Austria in the war which rose out of the Polish succession—a war in which Spain had no concern—in the hope of placing Don Carlos on the throne of Naples; and if she succeeded in this enterprise, she made enemies of French generals and statesmen by her refusal to co-operate with Villars on the Adige, and by the directions she gave to the Spanish army. On a later occasion she joined in the onslaught of France, Prussia, and Bavaria upon Maria Theresa—for she was seeking a patrimony for a younger son at a time when Spain was fighting for her colonial empire with England, a greatly more powerful enemy; and if Elizabeth here was again successful, she involved Spain in tremendous peril. Her selfish and purely personal policy lessened, no doubt, the power of the Hapsburgs in Italy; but it is questionable if this was for the good of Italy, and nothing can be more certain than that, in these four cases, her conduct was plainly injurious to Spain.

Nor was it only in these striking instances, but throughout the course of a long reign that Elizabeth was an inpolitik ruler. The first and most apparent interest of Spain, after the fierce strife of the disputed succession, was peace and a general national reform; yet, disregarding Alberoni's advice, she plunged the country at once into a fatal war, and indulged in frequent wars as if they were pastimes; and Alberoni's reforms were wholly his own. The next and hardly less important interest of the monarchy was to stand well with England, a power rapidly winning a supremacy at sea that meant ruin to Spain's colonial empire and the destruction of the chief source of her wealth; but Elizabeth insulted, defied, and quarrelled with England, and even experience did not teach her her error. Again, the true policy of Spain was to cultivate the closest friendship with France, to prove that there were really "no Pyrenees," to anticipate by years the family compact; but the "Terzaghi" alienated and made France hostile, not once, but over and over again, and never really cared for the French alliance. And what can be said of her abandonment of Alberoni, a man probably not inferior to Richelieu or Cavour in genius, but that her ingratitude was only surpassed by her folly? No wonder then that she was disliked in Spain as an unpatriotic and bad sovereign; and though this sentiment was partly due to the national jealousy of foreign rulers, the main cause was her unpatriotic policy. It must be added that every court in Europe distrusted the queen as a dangerous schemer; and this estimate made her a mark for suspicion at Madrid as well as in London and Paris.

We certainly think these bad points in the conduct of the Queen should have been placed by Mr. Armstrong in fuller relief. As we have said, however, his volume abounds in information of sterling value, even if this is not wrought up with an artistic hand. His sketches, too, of leading personages are careful and well drawn, although not brilliant, striking, or graphic. The best is, perhaps, that of Alberoni.

though he hardly does justice to that great minister:

"How far as a foreigner he could have succeeded in reviving Spain and her colonies it is impossible to decide; but almost all the beneficial projects of the century may be traced back to him. His natural bent, like that of the younger Pitt, was rather towards administration and reform than to the guidance of a gigantic war. His diplomacy was over-fanciful; but luck turned against him to an unforeseen extent. . . . His truest title to distinction is, perhaps, the fear which he inspired. He might well boast, in the words of Bragadin, that the greatest powers of Europe were more fearful of his counsels and his impetuous resolutions than of the material force of Spain. The English Whigs recognised that the old campaign against the Bourbons must be fought out again, that their capital had been transferred from Paris to Madrid, and that their diplomatic armory had been taken with them."

Had Alberoni been given a free hand to govern Spain for only ten years, we believe he would have made her a great power, have, perhaps, given an Infant the crown of Naples, and freed Italy from Austrian tyranny. That he did not succeed was due to the party ambition and reckless meddling of an ungrateful mistress. The private life of the Queen of Spain was in pleasing contrast with her public policy. It was her fate to be tied to a most disagreeable consort, morose, hypochondriac, fickle, sickly; and yet she was always a devoted wife. Nor was this in order to maintain and secure her power; strange as it may appear, she was truly attached to that scarecrow of royalty, Philip V. She was, too, an ambitious and bold parent, and made the interest of her children her first object; and yet she was an affectionate stepmother to the offspring of her husband and Louisa of Savoy. Her court was, in the main, decorous and pure; it presented none of the licentious scenes of that of George I., or of that of the Regency of France; it was not a sty of sensuality like that of Saxony, and of more than one of the Italian sovereigns. Mr. Armstrong gives us a full account, drawn for the most part from St. Simon's Memoirs, of the daily life of the King and Queen; it was strange and eccentric, yet simple and homely. In spite of a career of reckless ambition, Elizabeth remained a true woman; an ornament of her sex in her social relations, an unsullied model of domestic virtue. In these respects she was not inferior to Caroline of Anspach and Maria Theresa, though in other respects she is not to be named with either.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

A Country Muse. By Norman R. Gale.
(David Nutt.)

IN these days of strenuous sympathies and painstaking appreciations, when many a bard who knoweth not a pink from a peony feels it incumbent on him (if only in parenthesis) to babble of green fields in language new, how comely and reviving it is to the spirits of just men, long oppressed by floral catalogues and horticultural banalities, to meet with such a volume as A Country Muse! This new book of Mr. Gale's is aptly named; for, truly, his Muse is as genuine a rustic as ever trod the meadows. Yet, for all that, she is no romping peasant wench, no village coquette, but a most fair and gracious damsel who, for sure, on honey-dew hath fed, and drunk the milk of Paradise.

Many of these poems produce an effect of illusion as nearly perfect as may be. Now and again therein you may think to catch the perfumed breath of cowslips, or the scent of summer hedgerows sweet with dog-rose and honeysuckle. Here, for your delight, is no laborious checking off of picturesque items; neither is the soul vexed by obviously aesthetic arrangements of garden produce and tuneless fowls of the air. You find the fragrance, merely, of leaves and dew, the note of Philomela herself: that same small, sober-kirtled songstress whom, says the legend, the emperor (made wise at last) preferred above his clever mechanical singing-bird of gems and gold.

No one, however "letter-perfect," could sing thus without an intimate knowledge of, and a very quick and lively tenderness for, his motive. Nor is it possible, by taking thought alone, to create an atmosphere, or to add one touch of illusion to a stanza, more especially as regards the genre of which Mr. Gale has proved himself so finished an adept: so subtle are its intonations, so intangible its charms of illumination and colouring. How well this poet knows and loves Nature, in the widest sense of the word, he who runs may read: from cover to cover of this little book there is scarce a line but declares it.

Passionate, sensuous, and simple with an adorable simplicity, he pipes you songs you cannot choose but hear; he plucks you the fruit, nor brushes away an iota of its bloom; he captures the wild-bird, and brings it to you in the hollow of his hand without so much as ruffling a wing feather. Besides all this, too, his verse has the crowning merit of manliness: calm, strong, unassertive, it stands as a burning and a shining ensample to such demonstrative minstrels as must needs trumpet forth the importance of their virility with more noise than dignity.

Descending to detail, the most ambitious, perhaps, but none the less sincere, among these poems is that entitled "A Creed," the rare philosophy whereof is as remarkable as its charm of fine composure and happy phrasing:

"God sends no message by me, I am mute
When Wisdom crouches in her furthest cave;
I love the organ, but must touch the lute.

* * * * *

No controversies thrust me to the ledge
Of dangerous schools and doctrines hard to learn;
Give me the whitethroat whistling in the hedge.

* * * * *

I am content to know that God is great,
And Lord of fish and fowl, of air and sea—
Some little points are misty. Let them wait.

I well can wait when upland, wood, and dell
Are full of speckled thrushes great with song,
And foxgloves chime each purple velvet bell.

* * * * *

At eventide I lean across a gate
And, knowing life must set as does the sun,
Muse on the angels in the Happy State.

* * * * *

My song is all of birds and peasant homes,
For on such themes my heart delights to dwell
And sing in sunshine till the shadow comes.

I sing of daisies and the coloured plot
Where dandelions climb the thistle's knee—
I take what is nor pine for what is not.

I am for finches and the rosy lass
Who leads me where the moss is thick, and where Sweet strawberry-balls of scarlet gleam in grass.

And this I know, that when I leave my birds,
The Rehened walls, the heartsease, and the heath,
I shall not wholly fail of kindly words.

And while I journey to the distant Day
That first shall dawn upon the eastern hills,
Perchance some thrush will sing me on my way."

Surely such sayings as these are diviner than reams of fin-de-siècle discontent. Happily had Herrick lived now instead of then he might have written much such poetry as Mr. Gale's.

In "A Thrush in Seven Dials," a brief excerpt from which I cannot forbear from quoting, there is a certain gentle humour, as well as an infinite pathos:

"In fluffy listlessness she sat
And dreamed of all the grassy west—
How she had feared the parson's cat,
And how she built her earliest nest!
Sometimes a French piano hurled
Metallic scales adown the street,
That seemed to buffet all the world,
So hard and clear, so shrill and fleet!
No maddened music of this kind
Could tempt the thrush to rivalry;
She pecked an inch of apple-rind
And waited till the din went by.
There from a tiny patch of sun
She made an April for her heart!
Imagined twigs, and sat thereon
Though shaken by the milkman's cart."

Mr. Gale has, moreover the delectable gift of taking on at will, without the faintest taint of mimicry, a dainty sixteenth-century manner, which yet never degenerates into mannerism. Of this, the two songs commencing severally "Maid of the yet unconquered heart" and "I will not say my true love's eyes" are among the happiest instances. The very happiest, however, to my mind is that admirable lyric, "Strephon to Chloris," only to be found in an earlier volume called Violets (privately printed at the Rugby Press). Two pastorals, to wit, "The last cow's milked" and "'Tis Mary the milkmaid singing," as purely idyllic as aught I have read, irresistibly suggest the idea that, had Mr. Thomas Hardy been an optimist and a writer of rhythms, he might, without incongruity, have been responsible for both. I have, in fine, but one grievance against the votary of the Country Muse. 'Tis not as deep as a well nor as wide as a church door; but it is a good, robust grievance all the same. While giving much, he has not given all, of his best. From his early and privately printed posies of poetry he has not gathered up all the choicest blossoms. He has included in the present collection several lyrics that, good as they are, might not too grievously have been missed, while (worse) he has left far sweeter numbers hidden away in the cloistered obscurity of unattainable editions. In A Country Muse, for example, he gives the comparatively trivial "I kissed thee once," which, by the way, invites disadvantageous comparison with Leigh Hunt's incomparable "Jenny kissed me"; and ignores the following delightful lines in Violets:

"With all the words that love could hope to wake
I strove to aid my soul's divine endeavour;
But Ruth would never listen. How I ache
To speak no more again, no more for ever.

"O saffron tulips in the heart-shaped bed,
Her coldness could not understand my crying;
And now I would (for joy and hope are sped)
That I, ere ye are dead, might lie a-dying!"

Again, the lines on p. 46, to "A Maid Sleeping on a Lawn," are commonplace by contrast with the "Love Song" in Anemones (a dainty brochure, published by George Over, of Rugby, in '89) of which I give the first and third sextains:

"You ask me where, when royal June reposes
From parching hours and browning mid-day heat,
She hoards her host of red and white-robed roses,
And saves the scent that lingers round her feet!
My Love's the heiress, and my Love's kissed cheeks,
Through bitter blasts and sullen winter weeks."

"You ask if all the saintly snow has drifted
Around those elms that guard the old park drives;
Or all the flakes their feathery crests have lifted,
To fringe our own dear bench beyond the hives.
Nay, for the snow has kept its whitest part,
To drift upon the highlands of your heart."

Together with his purely lyrical qualities, Mr. Gale has a happy turn for terseness that is apt to make for epigram; as may witness these lines, entitled "Love," from Violets:

"Love that is love
Defies all rule and measure:
Love that is love
Is time and life and treasure,
And peace and pain,
And restlessness and leisure;
But not, poor fool,
A sweet perpetual pleasure."

And those, under the heading of "My Grave," in "Meadowsweet."

"Let grasses tangle. Leave me there in rest,
Nought stirring but the thistledown and blades:
And then, perchance, some bird may build a nest,
And, singing on my heart in evening shades,
Teach me to know your faithlessness was best."

My excerpts have already been perhaps unconsciously copious, and thus I do not dare to quote the beautiful "Finis" to Anemones. It is, however, to be hoped that, ere long, Mr. Gale may find it in his heart to give us another and a more fully representative volume.

As regards externals, A Country Muse is moderately pleasing, the cover being inoffensive and the title-page agreeably set forth. But the type is something insignificant in size, and unsatisfyingly pale and wan.

GRAHAM R. TOMSON.

is master of his subject, and puts his arguments before the reader temperately and conclusively — conclusively so far as the broad principle of strengthening in every possible way the bonds which unite the mother country to her colonies is concerned: as to any one special method of obtaining this desirable end he is neither prejudiced nor dogmatic.

The change that has taken place during the last ten years in public opinion with regard to federation in its widest sense is very striking. The school which held that the colonies were nothing to the mother country or the mother country to the colonies, except in the early stages of the latter's existence, is nearly extinct, or only represented by a few politicians or doctrinaires who on this point have no followers of any importance. Federation, on the other hand, in some form or other, is approved of and desired by the bulk of thinking men, whether at home or in the colonies. This certainly is the experience of Mr. Parkin; and, therefore, it was hardly necessary to devote a whole chapter to combating the antiquated views of Mr. Goldwin Smith, or several pages to Mr. Andrew Carnegie, a personage scarce of any authority, and now especially discredited.

How greatly the colonies gain by their connexion with the mother country is abundantly shown. The fleets of Great Britain now protect them and their commerce.

"The portion of the whole colonial trade which consists of interchange with the United Kingdom, and in the safety of which presumably the United Kingdom has a close and direct interest, is £187,000,000. This leaves £273,000,000 of independent trade carried on with foreign countries, or between the colonies and dependencies themselves. Compared with the sea-borne trade of great foreign powers which support large war navies, Sir John Colomb finds this independent trade to be 'about four times as much as the whole sea-borne trade of all Russia; about equal to that of Germany; about three-quarters that of France; two and a-half times that of Italy; and nearly half that of the United States.' The whole of this vast and rapidly increasing independent trade has precisely the same guarantee of protection from the naval power of the Empire as the trade of the United Kingdom itself; yet, while the net expenditure (1890) incurred by the United Kingdom in the Naval Estimates is £14,215,100, the whole contribution of the colonies and dependencies for the same purpose only amounts to £381,516, of which India alone provides £254,776. In other words, out of every pound spent for the protection of the nation's commerce at sea the United Kingdom contributes 19s. 5½d., the outlying empire 6½d. This comparison is made even more striking when combined with the statement that the united revenues of the colonies and dependencies amount to £103,000,000, against the £89,000,000 which represents the revenue of the United Kingdom. The vast capital now invested in ships, armament, and naval establishments, believed to amount to more than £80,000,000, is paid wholly by the taxpayers of the United Kingdom."

It has been alleged that the colonies are under the disadvantage of a liability to be involved in wars undertaken by the mother country; but long experience has proved how small this risk is, and it is not impossible that if they were independent they might, like the Spanish republics of South America, be involved in wars one with another. These republics, had they remained attached to Spain, would have been engaged in no war whatever for the last half century, whereas we have lately seen a most sanguinary war between Chili and Peru and Bolivia, to say nothing of constant and bloody insurrections, revolutions, and civil wars in most of the republics themselves. It has always seemed to us that one difficulty, and a great one, in the way of federation was the arrangement of the proportion of the expense incurred for the defence of the whole empire to be borne by each division of it, and the probability that states may object to paying heavily for that which is now supplied to them gratis.

But perhaps it is in the question of finance that the colonies gain most by their present connexion with the mother country. With the United Kingdom at their back, the colonies are able to borrow at a very advantageous rate of interest. The public debts of the Australian colonies alone amount to nearly £200,000,000; but if each colony was to set up for itself it could only borrow at ruinous rates, and a stop would of necessity be put to the execution of many works of public utility. Still, however much it is for the interest of every colony to remain part of the empire, it is conceivable that at times of political excitement and disturbance they might not look to their own real interests, but be led into courses which, however mischievous in themselves, when once adopted could not be altered. This is a strong argument for federation or national consolidation.

Mr. Parkin, in his concluding chapter, considers what is the best as well as the most practical method of effecting the desired consolidation.

"There are," he says, "clearly two ways in which national unity might be attained: one would be by a great act of constructive statesmanship, such as that which gave a constitution to the United States, that which confederated Canada, and that which is doing the same for Australia."

The second way is very different.

"Instead of radical change and reconstruction, we may look to a policy of gradual but steady adaptation of existing machinery in the new work which must be done."

And it is obvious that the last method is the one, in the author's opinion, most likely to prevail. He refers, with approval, to the suggestion of Lord Thring, that the agents-general of the colonies should be elevated to the position of ministers of foreign states, and, by being made privy councillors, be given in addition the right of constitutional access to the British Government. In the meantime, Mr. Parkin wishes to see every possible means taken to draw the colonies and the mother country closer together; and in this desire we heartily join, and recommend his book to our readers as both interesting and instructive.

WM. WICKHAM.

Imperial Federation: the Problem of National Unity. By George R. Parkin. (Macmillans.)

MR. PARKIN tells us that this book has been written at the request of many friends, and the result justifies their wish. The author

Nouveaux Pastels. Dix Portraits d'Hommes.
Par Paul Bourget. (Paris: Lemerre.)

A BOOK by M. Paul Bourget is a kindly advent for nous autres barbares. With some affinity, there is much sympathy between M. Bourget and the large section of English society that looks with wakeful eyes upon the course and development of French literature, and chooses with intelligence flowers to its fancy from that fertile garden. To so many of us, especially to our women folk, M. Bourget's work is a fortunate assimilation of most "good" qualities; he brings no disconcerting element into his craftsmanship. "Cet autre," says Philippe Dubois—perhaps the most interesting of the portraits in this Nouveaux Pastels, the "feroce" of letters who is often more right in his estimates than the author would have his readers infer—speaking of fashionable Parisian writers as they exist to-day: "Cet autre n'est qu'un intrigant de salon, habile à sucrer Stendhal et Balzac pour l'estomac affadi des femmes du monde." An epigram would be vulgar; let us assume that M. Bourget knows perfectly well which particular writer of the vogue is best described in the phrase of Philippe Dubois, and thus credit him with an additional delicacy of subtle irony. Without being original, or rather say bizarre, he is, or has the air of being, in the movement of letters; and writing in France he has the greater freedom of observation and frankness of utterance, the denial of which is so sore to the genius of English writers, or some of them.

The Nouveaux Pastels is a complement to the Pastels, the Dix Portraits de Femmes, so charmingly baptised as a collection, so thoroughly Bourgeoisque.

Looking at M. Bourget as a lesser artist—it would be an impertinence, a vulgar, insulting flattery, to pretend he is a greater—and asking for that precise quality of pleasure he is to convey to us, which we cannot get elsewhere, to use the words of Mr. Pater in applying the test indicated by that master critic, do we not find it supremely in his peculiar knowledge of the complex soul dwelling in the fragile body of the Parisienne, and in his manner of revealing that soul under the play of the various emotions to which it is liable? This preference, this special interest, which shows M. Bourget to such great advantage in the Pastels, gives colour to all his work in all its aspects. It can be detected from the perusal of the Nouveaux Pastels alone, where scarcely any direct indications are to be met: in the sinuously weak and undulating phrase, the atmosphere in which he presents his characters, above all in his attitude when looking at graceful and gentle childhood, at adolescence timid or defiant at the sense of its inexperience of life, as opposite natures are affected.

The Nouveaux Pastels dares a comparison with its predecessor which it is scarcely wise to insist upon, by a painful consistency of duplication. Why necessarily ten portraits, for example?—when it is evident the book would have been immeasurably better had it contained only eight, omitting "Un Joueur" and "Le Frère de M. Viple." The latter is saved by a description of the confusion and dismay in the house of a provincial mayor, where a group of Austrian officers are billeted during the invasion of 1814. The other is not saved at all. Add that these two pot-boilers repeat the mannerism of M. Bourget, which surely has ceased to be a pure joy, of telling the story at second-hand. This is found, for the rest, in four of the remaining eight stories.

"Marcel," the story bracketed with "M. Viple's Brother," is a perfect gem. It is so simple, so simple; and woven with the sweetness and delicacy of touch necessary to describe fitly the frail flower of a child whose portrait it is. Its purports to be derived from the same source as "Madame Bressuire," that gracious story in the Pastels (following the artifice to which I have referred), the papers of one François Vernantes, whose super-sensitiveness is admirably conveyed in the diction of "Marcel." M. Vernantes goes down to a certain town of l'Île de France to revisit a scene endeared to him by the memory of a passionate friendship of his childhood. The name of the town, he writes,

"dont je m'interdis de tracer les lettres, évoquait pour moi, quand je le rencontrais dans un journal, sur un indicateur de chemins de fer, au hasard d'un livre, des profils de maisons anciennes avec des toits bruns, et, surplombant le canal ou la rivière, d'antiques balcons de bois brunâtre garnis de fleurs. Je revoyais la roue noire d'un moulin, en train de tourner d'un mouvement doux, et, à chaque fois, ses palettes secouaient une pluie de gouttes, brillantes comme des diamants. La tour à demi détruite du château, les débris de remparts couronnés de jardins, le clocher, à jour de l'église et sa flèche inachevée, que j'ai souvent contemplé en pensée ces détails, et le paysage à l'entour, avec sa couleur d'été—c'est le seul mot qui rende pour moi l'impression que m'ont laissée les champs de blé à demi moissonnés, la luxuriance des herbes et des feuillages, l'haléine chaude qui sortait de la terre et le lumineux apaisement qui tombait du ciel. C'est encore là un effet de cette virginité de sensation propre à l'enfance."

Then he recalls the incidents with which this sunny memory is associated in his mind. He had been sent to pass his holidays with a cousin, a bachelor, the wealthy member of the family, whom his parents hoped to interest in the future of their son. He is taken by his cousin to see Marcel, who lives with his grandmother, his only surviving relative. The relation of the old lady and the grandson is evidently a strange one. Severity on the one side, and shrinking dread on the other, present a curious anomaly to the child who has never been treated with anything but idolatrous indulgence. "Does she always call you 'vous'?" "Always." "And you her 'madame'?" "Yes." "That is funny." At this Marcel bursts into a fit of passion and tears. "Go away," he says, "go away, I do not want you to play with me any more." The innocent offender is stirred to the very depths of his nature, and devoted friendship springs up between the two boys. They ramble about and amuse themselves through the days of summer. During this time Marcel tells his companion the story of his suffering: how the marriage of his parents had been hateful to his grandmother; how his mother had lain ill for months and months, and then died; and she was so beautiful, with her yellow hair and her tender eyes, that you could not think how anyone could hate her. And poor Marcel inherits all the resentment his parents bore in life. These childish conferences bear fruit in a scapegrace enterprise. The two boys set off by night to traverse on foot the twenty leagues that separate them from Paris, to pluck roses from the grave of Marcel's mother, bring them back to the grandmother for the morning of her birthday, and beg her to forgive the dead and to love Marcel. Naturally they are overtaken the first thing in the morning, and brought back in disgrace. But the motive of their flight leaks out, and there is complete reconciliation between the grandmother and Marcel. The story is told with great tenderness and with a graciousness of language of which the extract above is a guarantee.

"Un Saint," which begins the volume, is a marvel of subtle and close analysis; as a story it is the most complete in the book: discursive, but in that it resembles all the rest, with the exception of "Maurice Olivier." The background of it, too, is deliberately interesting, a "nationalised," and consequently deserted, monastery, in which two remarkable frescoes of Benozzo Gozzoli have just been revealed by an accident: a perfect frame, in fine, to the portrait of Philippe Dubois.

French novelists who know anything about England suffer from a morbid craving to enlighten their less fortunate countrymen upon some phase of English character. M. Bourget, who really knows much about the land of fogs and its bloodthirsty inhabitants, has not failed to fall a victim to this weakness; with a result, in the character of Sir John Strabano (who is also called Sir Arthur) that is a blot upon the fairness of "Maurice Olivier."

JOHN GRAY.

"THE VICTORIA LIBRARY FOR GENTLEWOMEN."—The Gentlewoman at Home. By Mrs. Talbot Coke. (Henry.)

SUBDIVISION is a mark of progress. The medical profession is now so made up of specialists that the "general practitioner" is nowhere. In politics Whig and Tory are no longer sufficiently explicit or implicit terms, and a church congregation must indeed be small if it comprehends no more than the elect and the reprobate. As to society, its sets are so numerous as to defy enumeration, and it would even appear that some subtle distinction exists between ladies and gentlewomen. The Ladies' Newspaper is, we presume, the organ of the one section, the Gentlewoman of the other; and the latter—perhaps as being more literary in its tastes or as needing more instruction—has a special "library" of books prepared for its use by the most competent authorities, dealing with every subject in which "a gentlewoman" can be permitted to feel an interest. It is scarcely necessary to say that the very first of those subjects is Society, and we are not surprised to find that next in order come a treatise on Health and a Book of Sports. The gentlewoman who has successfully mastered (if that be the correct word) the arts of society, the principles of hygiene (as understood by Dr. Kate Mitchell), and the mysteries of golf, has become duly qualified to undertake the management of a home and a husband, with the assistance, of course, of Mrs. Panton, or Mrs. Talbot Coke, or some other experienced adviser. The ideal at which to aim is, we are told, to make the home "just like the woman who owns it." This ideal, it will be seen, admits of infinite variety, and is, like many ideals, a trifle indefinite. It has, however, this advantage. If size and colouring are to be taken into consideration, the hues and proportions of the rooms would need adjustment from time to time to bring them into correspondence with the personality of the mistress; and then what task could be more fascinating to the gentlewoman than this? One can see the matron, whose charms have been mellowed by advancing years, adding a warmer tint to the walls and draperies of the boudoir and drawing-room, or, later on, when "the raven locks were turned to snow," introducing some subtle harmonies of grey and silver to blend with the softened splendour of age. Enterprising firms would address themselves to the solution of the delicate problems, and Mrs. Talbot Coke might earn a new measure of gratitude by explaining—in the simple yet technical language which she has at command—how to render mediaeval the homes of the middle-aged, and make houses grow old as gracefully as their owners.

However, in the volume before us, Mrs. Talbot Coke has not gone far into this branch of her subject. What she has done has been to bring together a number of more or less useful hints for "those about to furnish," and to contrast the sterility of the past with the superabundance of the present. Bareness and severity have given place to affluence and liberty—the latter showing itself (or himself) in tints and fabrics at which our grandparents would have looked aghast. The sobriety—the almost Quaker-like simplicity—which used to characterise the homes of the middle-class English is altogether gone. Mrs. Talbot Coke's fancy delights in irregularities of outline and varieties of colour. The windows must be quaint in shape and various in size; the chimney pots of antique design. The dining-room walls should be "covered with a rich red-and-gold Tyne-castle tapestry, which forms an excellent background for divers old portraits. The cornice is dark carved oak, as is the mantelpiece, [the latter?] reaching nearly to the ceiling and laden with beaten copper, blue-and-white Nankin jars, and here and there a touch of yellow pottery. The carpet is of rich Turkey pile, in oriental colours, showing a glimpse of a parquet border. The sideboard is flanked on one side by the entrance door, on the other by one opening into a 'buttery hatch.' . . . The curtains are of dull red cut velvet, the chairs covered with the same material in ruddy gold."

In strict harmony with all this must be the smoking room (for the march of improvement stops not at its doors), while in the boudoir—painted "all Arabian brown"—the eye is to be delighted with "a bold design of large storks flying across a rich red background," and a broad frieze of gold leather paper—"leads pleasantly up to a yellow coiling paper." Mushrabayah arches and mirror and screen, Eastern rugs, oddities from Gibraltar, Mooltan, Tangier, and China, together with "grotesque little brass gods from India," form the curta suppellex of my lady's chamber.

If, through Mrs. Coke's efforts, and without any sacrifice of comfort and convenience, the houses we live in can be rendered more delightful to the eye and satisfying to our often inarticulate artistic cravings, let us have them so by all means. Domestic virtue does not need for its development an ugly room; and it is possible that, when the gentlewoman's own home has been rendered tasteful and harmonious, she may extend her operations to the dwellings of her poorer neighbours, and diffuse some little colour over lives which are monotonously grey or even sadly sombre.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

A PROTESTANT CHURCH IN THE PYRENEES.

Osse: Histoire de l'Eglise Reformée de la Vallée d'Aspe. Par Alfred Cadier, Pasteur. (Pau.)

THE contents of this book are hardly sufficiently indicated by its title. It includes a full description, and a sufficient history for most purposes, of the whole of the Vallée d'Aspe, of its geography, of its peculiar autonomy, of the manners and customs of its inhabitants, as well as of the little community of three or four hundred Protestants who have maintained themselves in the village of Osse from the first introduction of the Reformation to the present day.

The chief interest of the volume for readers of the ACADEMY will perhaps lie in the Vallée d'Aspe, as an example of that self-government which we find so often in and on both sides of the Pyrenees, and among all races there. The so-called Republic of Andorra is the best known, but not the best specimen of it. The continuance of this self-government in the Vallée d'Aspe was probably owing to its three strong positions, where the mountains close in upon the Gave, at the Pont d'Escot, at the entrance of the valley; at the Pêno d'Esquit, midway; and at the Portalet, or Fort d'Urdos, at the foot of the pass into Spain. The Romans, notwithstanding, forced a road through the valley, and made it one of their highways into Spain. But, in mediaeval times, the Aspois managed always to hold the pass at the Pont d'Escot, and to compel their seigneur to give hostages, and to swear to observe the liberties of the valley before entering it. The general administration was entrusted to two assemblies, one for the upper, one for the lower half of the valley; but each village managed independently its own local affairs. There are traces of ancient tribal government, of a house-community like that of Upper Aragon, and until quite recently of a common management both of the arable and the pasture lands of each commune; the besiau, or assembly of freeholders, deciding what crops should be sown, when reaped, and what should be done with the fallow. Even after its incorporation with the crown of France, the defence of the valley was entrusted to a local militia; the general taxes, which were very few, were paid in a lump sum by the assemblies, and assessed to individuals by the abbés and jurats of each village. We have one criticism only to make on M. Cadier's account. He indulges in no theories, but he sometimes attributes to Protestantism what has nothing to do with religion at all, and is in its remote origin anterior to Christianity. Thus, following M. Gerber, a former pasteur, he asserts that the Protestants are taller and of purer race than their Roman Catholic neighbours; but in the nearest village to Osse on the west, the Basques of Ste. Engrace are even taller. So, too, Basque Navarre, the Labourd, Spanish Navarre, and the Basque provinces, which continued Roman Catholic, all preserved an even greater autonomy than the Protestants of Osse.

M. Cadier is a staunch admirer of Jeanne d'Albret, and of all that she did in the interest of the Reformation in Béarn. He assigns to her "a genius for toleration." After full consideration of his authorities I find myself unable to agree with him here. Catherine de Medicis, from religious indifference, would, it seems to me, have accepted some kind of modus vivendi between the two religions: the marriage of her daughter to Henri of Navarre can hardly be explained except with a view to this; but all such overtures were met by continually more stringent decrees against Romanism by Jeanne d'Albret, and by the Etats de Béarn, who, in October, 1571, "supplioient Sa Majesté vouloir faire passer par la loi inviolable la dite abolition, avec défense à peine de la vie de faire à l'avenir en tout le pais, publiquement, ou secrètement, aucun exercice de la Papauté." (Bordenave: Histoire de Béarn et Navarre, p. 319, Paris, 1873.) Measures such as this made the struggle internecine, and rendered such a deed as the massacre of St. Bartholomew the only too probable issue.

The story of the little congregation at Osse during the short period of Protestant ascendancy, and still more so after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes down to the Revolution, and thence to the present day, is full of interest. M. Cadier has been able to make use of materials never before printed, especially with regard to the refugees from Osse in London. The Protestants hold their own, but do not increase; and since the Revolution they have lived generally on good terms with their Roman Catholic neighbours. Among the curiosities of history narrated in the volume is one of the strangest of all tales of mediaeval sorcery. The Vallée d'Aspe is also one of the chief homes of Béarnais Gascon poetry: Despourrins, Navarrot, and Destrade belong to it. Of the two first a biography is given by M. Cadier. In Osse and at Lescun lingered to our own day the avrost singers, improvisers of funeral lamentations, like the coceri of Corsica, the plañideras of the Basques, and the Spanish endecheras. Of the last of them, Marie Blanque, an account is here given; at her death the custom was put an end to through the influence of the Protestant schoolmaster,

M. le Barthe, about 1860. M. Cadier has omitted to describe the curious Spanish silver chalices, and the handsome gold patène with a representation of the Last Supper in repoussé work, which form the Communion plate of the congregation.

The book is worth the attention not only of those interested in the history of the French Reformed Church, but also of students of early institutions and of village communities. Customs which have been attributed to particular races elsewhere will be found here in a new form.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

NEW NOVELS.

Aunt Anne. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

The Nobler Sex. By Florence Marryat. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Terrible Czar. By Count A. K. Tolstoi. Translated by Captain H. Clarke Filmore. In 2 vols. (Samson Low.)

Number Twenty. By H. D. Traill. (Henry.)

The Old Maid's Sweetheart. By Alan St. Aubyn. (Chatto & Windus.)

In Sin or Folly. By Arthur Nestorien. (Digby, Long & Co.)

But Men Must Work. By Rosa N. Carey. (Bentley.)

A Double Ruin. By Sophie Kappey. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

The Herb of Love. "Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

A Shock to Society. By Florence Warden. (White.)

Mrs. Smith's Craze. By Henry Ross. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Verbena Camellia Stephanotis, &c. By Walter Besant. (Chatto & Windus.)

It is no small achievement in these days to introduce a perfectly new character into fiction. New names, new surroundings, new renderings of old stories, are common enough; but an absolutely fresh personage, whom we have never met before, is extremely rare in the novels of this novel-reading age. Mrs. Clifford's Aunt Anne is such a personage. She is unlike all the old ladies one knows—pleasantly unlike them, though her little weaknesses might be inconvenient in an actual acquaintance. Her way of running up other people's bills, and of incurring debts of her own which it is out of her power to pay, is indefensible on any ground of political economy or private morality. But it is all part of the lavishness of her very generous nature. Small and fragile in body, she has spirit enough for a tragedy queen. She does nothing by halves, and nothing meanly. When she entertains guests in her humble cottage, her old-fashioned stateliness makes the meagre fare seem ample; when she goes out to dine with friends, she remembers—even at the cost of the dressmaker whose bill is left unpaid—what is due to herself in the matter of personal appearance. But Aunt Anne's foibles are all on the surface, while her virtues are an essential part of herself. She is the embodiment of a quaint, fantastic, sort of goodness—of goodness which is too credulous of good in others, and never quite realises the practical side of things. If she had stepped straight from some early part of the last century into this latter part of our own century, she could not be a more perfect example of old-world ideas, old-world manners, old-world sincerity. To know her is to love her, and the love she inspires in the small circles to which Mrs. Clifford introduces us is very touching. Those circles have interests of their own, of which we learn something; but their chief use in the story is to serve as a foil, a desirable background, to the gentle movements, the always winning personality, of Aunt Anne. There is a thread of sadness in the story which endears the little old lady to us all the more. She suffers, as so trusting and unsophisticated a soul is bound to suffer, in a world where craft still prospers and guile is not unknown. But she is at her best, she is positively heroic, in the crisis of her fate; and the memory of her which remains when the story is all told is that of a great little soul whose life in its brightness and its sadness has made the world sweeter. Mrs. Clifford is to be congratulated upon having produced a book which is a marked advance upon her previous stories, and from the promise of which still greater things may be expected.

A very different atmosphere pervades the next book—strangely called The Nobler Sex—in which the chief character is again a woman. When there is nothing noble about either sex, it is obvious that neither can be the nobler of the two, and Miss Florence Marryat's people are all pretty equally bad. The heroine, who tells her own story, seems to imagine that the defilement which involves all the other characters leaves her pure; but her conduct will scarcely support that view in the opinion of most readers. Indeed, the whole story is an odious account of the ways of people whom nobody would wish to know, and it is as undesirable to make their acquaintance in a novel as it would be in actual life. Books of this sort are repellent at the best, but perhaps they are most so when the absence of any literary merit makes their moral demerit more evident. One feels some satisfaction in saying that Miss Marryat does not invest the nastiness of her subject with any niceness of style; while, as for her literary aptitude, it should be enough to say that she renders three well-known lines from Wordsworth in the following manner:

"A primrose on the river's brink
A primrose was to him, and nothing more."

Captain Clarke Filmore's translation of the late Count A. K. Tolstoi's gruesome romance is apparently well done, but it is doubtful whether it was worth the doing. Readers have been surfeited of late with Russian horrors, and though the incidents in this story are sufficiently remote—(they belong to the sixteenth century)—there is so much unrelieved brutality about them that the book is painfully unpleasant. Count Tolstoi's preface states that he has been "careful to minimise the horrors of this awful reign as much as possible," but one cannot conceive of a much worse description of horrors than those graphically set forth in The Terrible Czar.

In spite of its undoubted cleverness, and even of its humour, Mr. Traill's Number Twenty is depressing. One likes to believe, with Tennyson, that "... thro' the ages one increasing purpose runs,

And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns";

but in Mr. Traill's forecast the twentieth century is given over to the prigs, the pessimists, and the dullards. We find the typical baby of the century annotating the bad logic and false political economy of Dr. Watts. In its adolescent stage the century undertakes the revision of Shakespeare, with the result that Shylock is fully vindicated, and virtue is triumphant in the person of a non-murdered Desdemona. But the poets fare for a time worse than the dramatists. Their ebullitions of the Muse are accounted a disease in them; and those in whom the symptoms are less severe are sent to hospitals specially set apart for their treatment, while the sufferers in more acute cases are drafted off to asylums. The last and worst fault of the poor century seems to be its inability to see a joke; and Mr. Traill may say of some of his critics that the same inability is a palpable defect in them. Perhaps it is; but one wishes, nevertheless, in regard to a period about which it is pleasant to feel the liveliest hopes, that his humour had taken a more cheerful turn.

The dainty exterior and generally attractive look of The Old Maid's Sweetheart prepare one for a story of no common sort. And at the first glance at the pages within one sees that the tale they have to tell is well worth following. Letitia Primrose is a delightful survival of a type that is rapidly disappearing. Her love for her young sister Cynthia, her habitual unselfishness, her self-sacrifice under a sorrow that darkens her life, are told with a sympathetic force and grace that reflect the dear lady's own tenderness. The West Country surroundings—the roses and high green hedgerows, the foxgloves, boughs of briar, and dappled bells, and the "Pretty dear" refrain of the thrush—make an admirable setting to the picture, alike in its brightness and its sadness. The other characters are drawn with much skill, but Letitia is the central figure, the one charming personality in an idyl evidently inspired by herself alone.

One would hope that "Arthur Nestorien"—passages of whose autobiography supply the story of In Sin or Folly—is an exceptional person, for he inherits some undesirable qualities which do not seem to have been checked by wise training. A young man with an abundance of money, disregarding all customary discipline, and as far as possible defying necessary laws, works out his life according to his own changing impulses, and a sad failure it turns out to be. That is the story, which is very ably told. Social shams and conventionalities are discussed with a good deal of vigour; and after a rapid and somewhat brilliant fashion certain of the graver problems of life are so touched upon as to set the reader thinking—always the best effect a book can have.

Miss Carey is an accomplished writer of tales, and her skill is admirably shown in the short story But Men Must Work. The heroine—who tells the tale—has a modest way of self-depreciation, and the habit of seeing merits in others which escape general observation, if indeed they exist. These interesting qualities help to relieve an otherwise sad experience, which eventually gives place to a general round of happiness. The people are sketched in, and the plot is worked out, with the delicacy of touch and brightness of effect familiar to Miss Carey's readers.

"It was a pitiful story, old as the hills, and as sad as old." So says Miss Sophie Kappey of the story which she proceeds to tell in A Double Ruin. Pitiful it is, but so powerfully is it told that the reader is carried on from page to page without a pause in the intense interest which the sad incidents excite. No small skill was required for the production of so delicate and impressive a picture, under conditions which admit of so little brightness and necessitate so much shadow.

A volume of the Pseudonym Library with so quaint a title as The Herb of Love is not a book to be left unread by anyone who likes a spice of magic. It is a Greek story, full of gipsy lore, in which the "herb of love" plays the part of a love potion, though the charms of the gipsy girl, Zemphyra, are a far more powerful factor in the plot.

One took up Miss Florence Warden's little story, A Shock to Society, expecting to find something new and possibly startling in it. But one experienced neither physical nor mental shock, and it seems hardly likely that "society" has felt any. Improper as it may be for an earl's daughter to marry a farmer's son, such things do happen, and "society" on the whole takes them very calmly. Not, however, that it would not pronounce very emphatically against them if its opinion were asked—which it seldom is.

Of the five short stories in Mr. Henry Ross's volume, the first—Mrs. Smith's Craze—is perhaps the best; but an attempted robbery, whether the attempt be made in jest or earnest, is too commonplace a device to make an effective incident.

Mr. Besant's volume contains several reprinted stories, of which "The Doubts of Dives" is the most familiar, and will remain the most popular.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

OLD TESTAMENT LITERATURE.

Historisch-kritische Einleitung in die Bücher des Alten Testaments hinsichtlich ihrer Entstehung und Sammlung. Von Dr. A. Kuenen. Autorisirte deutsche Ausgabe. Zweiter Theil: die prophetischen Bücher. (Leipzig: Reissland; London: Williams & Norgate.) The patriotism which leads the most learned writers of Holland to use their own vigorous but little-known language involves a regrettable delay in the transmission of their valuable results to the world outside. It was long before Kuenen was generally known, except by name, either in Germany or in England, simply for want of a translator. When the ice had once been broken, the assimilation of Kuenen's work in Germany became more rapid; and comparatively soon after the appearance of the original work German readers have before them excellent translations of the first two parts of the second edition of Kuenen's Onderzoek, or Introduction to the Old Testament. To all those who, whether formally orthodox theologians or not, believe that true progress consists, not in piling down results to suit ecclesiastical prejudices, but in recognising the sure basis supplied by the last half century's work, and working onwards and upwards, in harmony with the general forward movement in critical history, we heartily recommend this second part of the most complete and most critical work on Old Testament "Introduction" as yet published. Anyone who will take the pains to compare it with the first edition will see (though, of course, less distinctly than in the case of Part I.) how truly conservative the much-maligned Abraham Kuenen really was. He has been the leader in many a critical reform; "but after all," as a biographer has recently said of Mr. Gladstone's political innovations, "these changes were, in their inception, distasteful to their author." And it is probable that had Kuenen's life been spared, several points on which he is either adverse to some younger critics or which he has, at any rate, left somewhat doubtful, would, in the near future, be decided by him in a non-traditionalist manner. Certainly, no taunts directed against the mutability of criticism would have deterred him from progress; and one may hope that some of the younger compromising English students of the Old Testament will be encouraged by his example, and by that of Delitzsch, to bid a sad farewell to proved errors such as that of the unity of Isaiah xl.-lxvi. Could this volume have been translated into English, we in England might have been forwarder than we are, and misapprehensions as to the state of critical progress might have been somewhat less prevalent. But it is not, perhaps, too late to suggest to some young and open-eyed English scholar the utility of an abridgment, in a single volume, of the parts of Kuenen's Onderzoek which have already been published. The work is bound to succeed, and, by the time a second edition is required, the third (alas! incomplete) part of the original would doubtless have appeared. The second edition, if supplemented in the spirit of the author, ought then to become the recognised authority on free and unbiassed Old Testament criticism in its present stage. We need only add the first half of Part I. (on Hexateuch-criticism) has been translated into English by Mr. Wicksteed (Macmillan); and also that a thoroughly intelligent survey of the contents of Part II. of the Onderzoek, with full notices of the points in which Kuenen differs both from his former self and from some of the contemporary workers, will be found in the Jewish Quarterly Review for 1891. Its author is the Hibbert Lecturer for 1892, Mr. Claude G. Montefiore, who displays in it a modesty and a calmness worthy of the lamented author of the Onderzoek.

The Composition of the Book of Genesis. With English Text and Analysis. By Edgar Innes Frigg. (David Nutt.)

"The aim of this book is constructive: its errors will be mainly on that side. It is the result of the scanty leisure of several years of busy ministerial work, and therefore, perhaps, deserves some mercy from the critics."

Such is the claim, the admission, and the appeal of the writer in his brief preface. Though not absolutely the first English scholar who has faced the problem of the critical reconstruction of the constituent documents of Genesis, he is the first in this generation to resume the work so ably but so inadequately attempted by the Bishop of Natal. The form in which the documents are given implies much careful consideration, and whatever be the verdict of the best critics on those points in which the author claims his independence, his edition of Genesis will certainly be indispensable for some time to come as a companion to more elaborate treatises. For the chief novelties we may refer the reader to chaps. xviii., xix., xxi. 6, 8-21, xxvii., xxviii., xlix. But these can easily be set aside for future study. The introduction shows considerable descriptive power. We hope to return to this book in the spirit of the words "Non ego paucis offendar maculis."

WE may also mention here, if only as a bibliographical curiosity, Genesis Printed in Colours, with an Introduction by Edward Conz Bissell (Hartford, Conn., U.S.). Prof. Bissell, who is himself well known as a conservative critic, has here printed, for the benefit of his pupils at the McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, the English text of Genesis, according to the Revised Version, in ink of no less than seven different colours, in order to show the different sources from which the book is supposed to have been compiled. The scheme of analysis adopted is that of Kautzsch and Socin, as given in the second edition of Die Genesis mit Aeusserer Unterscheidung der Quellschriften (Freiburg, 1891), which does not materially differ from the views generally accepted by advanced critics. The seven colours represent respectively P, J, the Redactor, J', matter found only in ch. xiv., JE, and E; while glosses are underlined. The general result is certainly to give colour to the witty remark that the book of Genesis, if not by Moses, is at any rate a mosaic. Our only complaint is that all the hues are not clearly distinguishable by artificial light.

THE so-called "Book of the Covenant," i.e., Ex. xx. 22-xxiii. 33 (cf. Driver, Introduction, pp. 28, 33, 115), has lately attracted the attention of several rising scholars, notably Cornill and Budde. Dr. Bruno Baentsch has now given us a regular monograph, Das Bundesbuch (Halle: Niemeyer), in which the original form of the book, its relation to the records among which it is inserted, and its position in the Old Testament legislation, are treated with much acumen. The author protests against the opinion that a law loses in dignity the further it is removed from the Mosaic age. The dignity of a record of revelation can under no circumstances be claimed by legal paragraphs; revelation has to do with the lofty, universal ideas which take form in a great personality, and in consequence open a new era of development. A legislation is only the deposit of such an idea; it arises from the attempt to apply this idea to all the circumstances of life. There is no trace of a Mosaic kernel in the Book of the Covenant, nor of its owing anything to the attempt to adapt Mosaic ordinances to a later time. Its laws produce the impression of having sprung fresh from the needs of the time in which they were formulated. It has, however, been much edited. Originally it only contained the so-called "judgments"; to these different strata of moral and religious directions were attached, which have been retouched in a Deuteronomistic spirit. Thus we can best explain the position of the "words of Jehovah" in the second part, and the want of plan. It may be inferred, from Gen. xxxi. 38-40, that originally the "judgments" were fuller than they are now. They must have been already known to J, and we may assume that they were not new in the eighth century B.C. As for the "words," we can only understand them as the products of the older prophetic spirit (cf. Amos and Micah). They are intermixed with directions as to worship of earlier origin. Thus the book became a compendium of the most important rules in legal, moral, and religious matters. It was worked up by the editor into the historical work of J. E.

WE are glad to see that a fourth edition of Dr. Driver's Introduction to the Old Testament has appeared. The alterations are but slight, and chiefly bibliographical. The addition of two fresh indices (to Hebrew words and phrases, and to Biblical passages respectively) will much enhance the utility of the work.

Geschichte der Hebräer. By Von R. Kittel. Zweiter Halbband; Quellenkunde und Geschichte der Zeit bis zum Babylonischen Exil. (Gotha: Perthes.) Prof. Kittel's handbook to the history of Israel is well known to all students who read German; it would furnish an excellent foundation for that short school and college history which an important minority of schoolmasters are asking more and more earnestly. Its characteristics are precisely those which should commend it to English students in this transitional period, in which a goodwill to know is largely in excess of ability to enter into the principles of advanced criticism. Prof. Kittel is not an 'advanced' critic; but in the fundamental principles of the higher criticism he is at home, and he has no disposition to speak evil of those who are somewhat bolder than himself. One commendable feature in the book is the "daylight" in which all the facts are placed; a more expansive and illustrative treatment is rightly left to the teachers who use this work as a textbook. Unlike most English writers of handbooks, the author is careful to give references to the best critical sources of information for still unsatisfied readers.

A THIRD edition, "revised and improved," of Prof. Driver's well-known treatise on The Use of the Hebrew Tenses (Oxford: Clarendon Press) will be generally welcome. A comparison of it with the second edition reveals numerous minute improvements, several additional notes, and one important new section (§ 209). The author himself calls attention to some of the points in which continued study has led to a development of his views. Like most other scholars, he regards with more and more distrust the many anomalous forms or constructions which violate the principles of Hebrew and even Semitic grammar. To a greater extent than previously he has come to admit that Hebrew grammar has been artificially complicated by a corrupt text (see, especially, the note on § 174, and the "observation" on § 190). He has also enlarged the notices of the exegetical and text-critical views of other scholars, and the index of Biblical passages has been considerably augmented. On the whole, for its accuracy of statement, sobriety of judgment, and fairness and even generosity of tone, this helpful work still deserves to stand at the head of English grammatical treatises.

THE Clarendon Press has also issued this week the first Part (containing the letter Aleph, pp. 88) of a new Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, which is based upon Edward Robinson's translation of Gesenius and upon the latest German editions of the same. The Biblical Aramaic will be given at the end, in a special Appendix. The work has been divided as follows among the three editors:

"Prof. Driver, of Oxford, is responsible for the pronouns, the prepositions, and the other particles, and for the words etymologically related to these; Prof. Briggs, of the Union Theological Seminary, for words important to religion, theology, and psychology, and for their related words; Prof. Brown, of the same institution, for the other parts of the work, as well as for the plan and the general editorial management."

Reserving for the present any detailed criticism, we may remark that this is a worthy companion to the two other great lexical enterprises which the Oxford University Press has also in hand—Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary; and the Concordance to the Septuagint, begun by the late Dr. Edwin Hatch, and now being continued by the Rev. Henry A. Redpath.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Life of Lord Sherbrooke, upon which Mr. Patchett Martin has been for some time engaged, will deal mainly with his public career in New South Wales and in England. But it will also include an autobiographical fragment, giving an account of his schoolboy days at Winchester—where Lords Selborne and Cardwell were among his contemporaries in "Commoners"—and of the Oxford Movement seen from outside.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish immediately a popular biography of Columbus, by Mr. Charles Elton. It is founded upon the most recent American and Italian literature on the subject, and gives special attention to the geographical knowledge at Columbus's disposal, and to the exact evidence about the Scandinavian legends.

THE next volume in the "Rulers of India" series will be Albuquerque, written by Mr. H. Morse Stephens, the author of Portugal in "The Story of the Nations." It is largely based upon the study of little-known authorities, and will present the administration of Portuguese India in a new light.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication Captain Cook's Journal of his first voyage round the world (during which New Zealand and the east coast of Australia were first explored), from the original MS. The Journal, which has never been printed before, will be illustrated with maps and charts, and will be edited with notes and an introduction by Captain Wharton, R.N.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish early in the autumn the second volume of Dr. A. K. H. Boyd's reminiscences of St. Andrews, dealing with the last twenty-five years, and with persons many of whom are still living.

THE new volume of the "Children's Library" will be a translation of La Belle Nivernaise, by M. Alphonse Daudet, with illustrations by M. Montegut. It will be ready next week.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK will begin in November the monthly publication of the Dryburgh edition of the Waverley novels, with illustrations by Messrs. William Hole, George Hay, Hugh Thomson, Gordon Browne, and others. Each volume will contain about ten fine wood engravings.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON announce a series of volumes, to be called "The Bookman's Library," consisting partly of reprints and partly of original matter. The first two, to appear in November and December, will be (1) The Poetry of the "Dial," arranged under the names of the authors, according to a copy marked by Emerson in the possession of Mr. Alexander Ireland; (2) The Complete Works of Emily Brontë, that is to say, Wuthering Heights and the Poems, both reprinted from their first editions, together with a prefatory essay attempting to trace the sources of the novel.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish early next week a three-volume novel by Mrs. J. H. Riddell, entitled The Head of the Firm. The same publisher announces for immediate publication a translation of M. Emile Zola's L'Attaque du Moulin, with an introduction by Mr. Edmund Gosse.

MESSRS. EDEN, REMINGTON & Co. have in the press the following new books:—The Land of Ararat; or, Up the Roof of the World, by Mr. A. F. Macdonald; For the Sake of the Family, by Miss May Crommelin; In the Bear's Grip, by Mr. Charles H. Eden; How I Became Eminent, by Jean Middlemas; The Melbournians, by Mr. Francis Adams; A Bad Purser, by Mr. George Underhill; Masterpieces of Crime, by M. Albert D. Vandam; and The Veiled Hand, by Mr. Frederick Wicks.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish shortly a translation of M. Zola's last book, La Débâcle, by Mr. Ernest A. Vizetelly.

An Englishman in Paris, of which a fifth edition is now announced, is being translated into German by Dr. N. Heinemann.

THE author who writes under the name of "Hermione" in The Christian Leader has completed a new work, to be published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier, of Edinburgh, entitled John Gentleman, Tramp.

MESSRS. LAMLEY & Co., of South Kensington, announce for early publication an anonymous volume containing satirical sketches of public characters. It will be entitled The Silver Domino: or Side Whispers Social and Literary.

A MEMOIR of the Rev. Canon Slade, Vicar of Bolton, by his successor, Canon Atkinson, will be published shortly by subscription.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON announce that the first large edition of The Life and Times of Sir George Grey has been exhausted, and that a second edition will be ready next week.

THE third edition of Round the Empire, by Mr. Parkin, with a preface by Lord Rosebery, is now in preparation, and will be ready in a few days.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish early this month the fifth edition, corrected and enlarged, of The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford, edited by his friend Reuben Shapcott.

A THIRD and cheaper edition of The Fate of Fenella, the novel by twenty-four authors, with over seventy original illustrations, will be ready in a few days.

NEXT week will be published the first number of Pleasures: Afoot, Afield, and Afloat, an illustrated weekly paper, devoted to sport, travel, and the amusements and recreations of town and country.

WE hear that the author of the work entitled Thoughts and Reflections of the late David Tertius Gabriel, whose identity has excited so much curiosity, is the well-known editor and philosophical writer, Mr. J. E. Samuelson.

THE municipal council at Rome has authorised the placing of a commemorative inscription on the Palazzo Verospi, where Shelley lived when he wrote "The Cenci" and "Prometheus Unbound."

WE know of no library publications that contain more valuable bibliographical information than those of the Boston (U.S.) Public Library. For example, the last quarterly Bulletin begins with an elaborately classified list of the books placed in the Bates Hall library between May and July, filling more than thirty pages. Next comes a chronological index to historical fiction, dealing with the United States from the Revolution to the Civil War. Then follows a carefully compiled list of portraits of Benjamin Franklin, which is illustrated with photographs of two pictures in the library, by Duplessis and Greuze. The latter, by the way, can hardly be genuine. Finally, we have a catalogue of a collection of early New England books, formed by the late John A. Lewis, and presented to the library by his widow. The publications of the Mathers alone number more than two hundred, including Increase Mather's The Wicked Man's Portion (1675), which is regarded as the first book printed at Boston. We should add that full details about each book are appended.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE QUEST OF THE SPHINX.

ALL through the hoary ages,
Nobody knows how long—
Since the Nile-waves at sunrise
Thrilled unto Memnon's song—

All through the solemn ages
She lay—and to-day she lies,
Deep in the heart of the Desert,
The Sphinx with the wonderful eyes.

Over the seas, of old time,
Many a brave man came—
Through the pestilent jungle-marshes,
Through the desert's wind-blown flame.

They came, with their wisdom and learning.
They came, in their power and pride—
And they looked right under her eyelids,
And sank at her feet, and died.

So, motionless, through the ages,
Circled by harms and charms,
She lies, with her bosom resting
On her mighty, folded arms.

Over the tawny sand-waste,
The suns that set and rise,
Flame on her brooding forehead,
And her deep, unfathomed eyes.

Never a word hath she spoken,
But the slow tears gather and fall,
For her children slain and scattered,
The wronged and scorned of all.

And to-day the hunters are saying,
"Let us up and be bold:
Let us learn the Sphinx's secret,
And gather her hoards of gold.

She has mocked our wisdom and cunning,
She is dumb, for good or ill:
Lo, now, we will yoke and bind her,
And bend her to our will!"

From the east, and the west, and the north,
They gather—from many a land—
They gather and march, where the Sphinx dreams on,
Between the sky and the sand.

And, lo! there was one who loved her,
And sought her from afar:
Not for the gold of her rivers,
Or the caves where diamonds are—

But only because he loved her,
Close to her side he came,
Through the reeking paths of the jungle,
Through the waste of sand and flame.

And he said: "O loved and slandered,
O long misprised and unknown!
They are going forth for thy ruin—
To barter thy blood and bone.

"They have parted the lands of thy dwelling—
They yoke thy brood to the plough—
Yea, the sword is sharpened to slay thee—
And who shall save thee now?"

And she leaned her lips above him—
She leaned, and she whispered low:
"I hear the clang of the trumpets,
And the trampling of hosts that go.

"I know there is strife and crying
In the lands beyond the sea;
But fear thou not, O my true heart,
All this is nothing to me!

"The nations hold me their captive,
Theirs to save, or to slay;
I have waited my time for ages,
And God is the Judge, not they.

"They fret, and they toil, and they triumph;
I sit here, dreaming and dumb—
I am sad for the woes of my children,
But I know that my day will come!"

Close to her breast she drew him—
That heart so loving and wise:
And he looked up into the sweetness
Of her sad and patient eyes.

And he rests asleep on her bosom,
Smiling in dreams, till the morn,
Over the desert shall rodden
For the day of God's latest-born.

A. WERNER.

OBITUARY.

R. L. NETTLESHIP.

"How is it that the mountains appear to have fascinated chiefly those persons whose general intellectual endowments have been so high?" This quotation from the recent volume on Mountaineering, in the "Badminton Library," will have occurred to many when they read the sad news of the past week from Chamonix. It is exactly ten years since Francis Maitland Balfour, of Cambridge, died in an attempt to scale one of the Aiguilles of the Mont Blanc chain; and now a like fate, in the same region, has befallen the best-known tutor of Balliol. In this case the only satisfaction is to know that the accident was of that nature which implies no imputation of foolhardiness. Though no longer young, Mr. Nettleship possessed a robust physique, and was accustomed to manly exercises. He had brought himself into training by previous climbs; the route by which he proposed to ascend Mont Blanc is now considered the easiest; and he took with him two local guides. But a sudden snowstorm on the mountains, lasting for twenty-four hours, is a danger that can hardly be foreseen or provided against. The guides lost their way; and after a night spent on the open glacier, Mr. Nettleship perished from cold and exposure. His last act was to shake hands with his companions, and to utter words of encouragement and farewell.

Richard Lewis Nettleship was born in 1846 at Kettering, in Northamptonshire, where his father was a solicitor. He was the youngest of five brothers, one of whom is professor of Latin at Oxford, another is the well-known animal painter, and a third is the ophthalmic surgeon at St. Thomas's. He was educated at Uppingham, in the days when that school produced scholars rather than cricketers. At the age of seventeen he won the first scholarship at Balliol, his colleagues being Mr. R. T. Reid (now Q.C. and M.P.) and Lord Francis Hervey. His academical career was the most brilliant of that time, his distinctions including the Hertford, Ireland, and Craven scholarships, the Gaisford Greek verse, and the Arnold historical essay.* By one of those accidents that will happen, he missed obtaining a first class in the final schools. But in the very year of his failure he was elected to a fellowship at his own college; and there he remained, as tutor

* The title of this essay was "The Normans in Sicily." For many years afterwards, Mr. Nettleship contemplated writing a book on the subject, and he once devoted large part of a year's holiday from teaching to a visit to the island. Indeed, we believe he only abandoned the idea when Prof. E. A. Freeman's great work on Sicily was announced. Then he parted with the collection of books he had formed, which are now in the Chetham Library at Manchester.

and junior dean, for more than twenty years. We are not aware that he ever held any university office, except that of public examiner. His name appears as the author of no books, though he contributed a paper to Hellenica (1880), and edited the Works of T. H. Green, his friend and teacher (3 vols. 1886-88), together with an introductory memoir. The whole of his time was devoted to the service of his college, and the best memorial of him will be that enshrined in the memories of successive generations of pupils. Alike in the lecture room, on the river, and in the concert hall, he played a prominent part; so that even those undergraduates who did not appreciate his peculiar temperament always respected him, and frequently ended in enthusiastic admiration. To such the pathetic circumstances of his death will seem a fitting close to a life of so much labour and self-sacrifice.

"Here—here's his place, where meteors shoot, clouds form,
Lightnings are loosened,
Stars come and go! Let joy break with the storm,
Peace let the dew send!
Lofty designs must close in like effects:
Loftily lying,
Leave him—still loftier than the world suspects,
Living and dying."

We have also to record the death of Dr. R. A. Lipsius, at Jena, which he had been professor of theology for more than thirty years. He died on August 19, in the sixty-third year of his age. His studies lay chiefly in New Testament criticism, and in the philosophy of religion, where he professed himself a pupil of Schleiermacher. His best known work is Die Apokryphen Apostelgeschichten (3 vols., 1883-87). We understand that he has left instructions in his will that his library should not be scattered, but should, if possible, be acquired by some theological institution. It is particularly rich in complete series of learned periodicals. It is now being exhaustively catalogued by Prof. Baumgartner, of Jena, who will be glad to answer any questions regarding it.

ANOTHER death which we have heard of this week is that of Dr. Matthias de Vries, of Leiden, who, by his lexicographical works, earned for himself the name of the Jacob Grimm of Holland. So far back as 1860 he edited a North-Frisic Grammar; but his most important work is his historical dictionary of the Dutch language, in which he was assisted by Dr. L. te Winkel. Most of his life was spent as a master in the High School at Leiden; and there he died on August 18, in his seventy-third year.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Expositor for September the reader will naturally turn first to the continuations of several striking articles: Prof. Ramsay's, on "St. Paul in Asia Minor"; Prof. G. A. Smith's, on "The Geography of Palestine"; Prof. Milligan's, on "Some Parables"; and Mrs. Macdonell, on "Dora Greenwell." Prof. Driver also gives a friendly sketch of Dr. Robertson Smith's latest publication; Mr. Llewelyn Davies, a new view of the "many mansions" in John xiv. 2; and Prof. Marcus Dods, a survey of recent literature on the New Testament.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

DAUXON, Catalogue des Incunables de la Bibliothèque de Sainte-Genève, p.p. M. Pelletier. Paris: Boird. 12 fr.
GRÉVILLE, H. Chénierol. Paris: Mon. 3 fr. 50 c.
HUGES, K. Ueb. die Musik einiger Naturvölker. Hamburg: Kriebel. 2 M.

- MEY, C. Der Meistergesang in Geschichte u. Kunst. Karlsruhe: Ulrici. 2 M.
MICHEL, E. Lea Van de Velde. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 4 fr. 50 c.
MONTAUD, G. En Egypte: Notes et croquis d'un artiste. Paris: Lib. Illustrée. 20 fr.
MONVAL, G. Lettres de Adrienne le Couvreur, réunies pour la première fois. Paris: Plon. 6 fr.
PEPE, J. Il Cicco de Forlì, Cronista e Poeta del Secolo XVI. Naples: Detken. 1 fr. 50 c.
PORTAL, C. Catalogue des Incunables et des Livres de la première moitié du 16^e Siècle de la Bibliothèque d'Albi. Paris: Picard. 5 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BACHER, W. Die Biblexegese der jüdischen Religionsphilosophen d. Mittelalters vor Maimuni. Strassburg: Trübner. 4 M.
COHEN, P. Der Cyprianische Text der Acta Apostolorum. Berlin: Weidmann. 1 M. 60 Pf.
GRAETZ, H. Emendationes in pterose sacrae scripturae veteris testamenti libros. Ed. W. Bacher. Fasc. I. Jesaiae prophetae librum et Jeremiae libri cap. i.-xxix. cum supplemento ad reliqua Jeremiae libri partem continens. Breslau: Schottlaender. 10 M.
TEXTE u. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur. 8. Bd. 3. Hft. Die katholischen Briefe, v. B. Weiss. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 7 M. 50 Pf.
VERMULEN, Das 19. allgemeine Konzil in Bologna. Regensburg: Habel. 2 M. 40 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BISMARCK, Fürst. Politische Reden. 2. Bd. 1862-1865. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
BLIEBER, K. Geschichte u. Geist der europäischen Kriege unter Friedrich dem Grossen u. Napoleon. 1. Bd. Friedrich der Grosse u. die Revolution. Leipzig: Friedrich. 3 M.
BRUNE, P. Histoire de l'Ordre hospitalier du Saint-Esprit. Paris: Picard. 12 fr.
DENIELE, H. Les Universités françaises au moyen âge. Paris: Bouillon. 2 fr.
GESCHICHTSQUELLEN, thüringische. Neue Folge. 2. Bd. 2. Th. Jena: Fischer. 20 M.
HELMOLT, H. F. König Ruprechts Zug nach Italien. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
HILSEN, Ch. Das Forum Romanum. Rome: Spithoever. 2 fr.
LEWISON, H. Fasti praetorii inde ab Octaviani imperii singulari initio usque ad Hadrianum exitum. Breslau: Preuss. 5 M.
MAAG, A. Geschichte der Schweizertruppen im Kriege Napoleons I. in Spanien u. Portugal (1807-1814). Biel: Kuhn. 6 M.
MAIR, G. Res Rationae. Ein Beitrag zur ältesten Geschichte Tirols. Klagensfurt: F. v. Kleinmayr. 1 M.
MONTMANT, G. Germania historica. Auctorum antiquissimorum tom. ix. Chronica minora saec. iv. v. vi. vii. ed. Th. Mommsen. Vol. i. fasc. 2. Berlin: Weidmann. 15 M.
MÜLLER, W. F. v. Das französische-Garde-Regiment am 10. Aug. 1792. Lucerne: Häber. 5 fr.
PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 50. Bd. Leipzig: Hirzel. 5 M.
RADLOFF, W. Arbeiten der Ordon-Expedition. Atlas der Alterthümer der Mongolei. 1. Lfg. Leipzig: Voss. 37 M. 50 Pf.
SCALFA, P. L. di. Donne e Gioielli in Sicilia nel medio evo e nel rinascimento. Turin: Clausen. 25 fr.
SCHILLMANN, R. Die Entdeckung Amerikas durch Christoph Columbus am 12. Oktbr. Berlin: Nicolai. 2 M.
STCHERBATOFF, le Général Prince. Le Feld-Marchal Prince Paskewitch: sa vie politique et militaire, d'après des documents inédits. Paris: Reinwald. 45 fr.
VAISSIERE, P. de. La découverte à Augbourg des instruments mécaniques du monnayage moderne et leur importation en France en 1550. Paris: Bouillon. 1 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BARTS, Maurice de. Les Bases de la morale et du droit. Paris: Alcan. 6 fr.
BRUNIA, S. Fauna fossile terziaria di Markusevee in Croazia. Berlin: Friedländer. 3 M.
FAMINTZIN, A. Uebersicht der Leistungen auf dem Gebiete der Botanik in Russland während d. J. 1890. Leipzig: Voss. 4 M.
HELMHOLTZ, H. v. Goethe's Vorahnungen Kommender naturwissenschaftlicher Ideen. Berlin: Paetel. 1 M. 50 Pf.
KLUNZINGER, C. B. Bodenseefische, deren Pflege u. Fang. Stuttgart: Enke. 5 M.
LEHMANN, A. Die Hauptgesetze d. menschlichen Gefühlslebens. Leipzig: Reissland. 8 M.
LORET, V. La Flore pharaonique, d'après les documents hiéroglyphiques et les spécimens découverts dans les tombes. Paris: Leroux. 8 fr.
LUDWIG, F. Lehrbuch der niederen Kryptogamen. Stuttgart: Enke. 14 M.
MOREAU, E. Manuel d'Ichthyologie française. Paris: Masson. 8 fr.
OATLOFF, F. Die Stammbätter v. Sphagnum. Coburg: Riemann. 18 M.
SACCARDO, P. A. Sylloge fungorum omnium hucusque cognitorum. Vol. x. Pars II. Discomycetae-Hyphomycetaceae. Berlin: Friedländer. 38 M. 40 Pf.
SARASIN, P. u. P. Ergebnisse naturwissenschaftlicher Forschungen auf Ceylon in den J. 1884-1886. 3. Bd. Die Weddas v. Ceylon u. die sie umgeb. Völkerschaften. 1. Lfg. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 24 M.
SEMPER, C. Reisen im Archipel der Philippinen. 2. Bd. 18. Hft. System der nudibranchiaten Gasteropoden. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 30 M.
TARKER, J. Zur Kenntniss der Odontogenese bei Ungulaten. Dorpat: Karow. 2 M.
VERWORN, M. Die Bewegung der lebenden Substanz. Jena: Fischer. 3 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BARTHÉLEMY-SAINT-HILAIRE, J. Traduction générale d'Aristote: Table alphabétique des matières. Paris: Hachette. 30 fr.
BRUGMANN, K. Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der indogermanischen Sprachen. 2. Bd. 2. Hälfte. 2. Lfg. Verhale Stammbildg. u. Flexion. Strassburg: Trübner. 11 M.
BURCHARD, G. Die Intensiva d. Sanskrit u. Avesta. 1. Th. Leipzig: Harrassowitz. 1 M.
BIBLIOTHEK, keltisch-schriftliche. Hrsg. v. E. Schrader. 3. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Berlin: Reuther. 8 M.
CRUSIUS, O. Untersuchungen zu den Mimiamben d. Herondas. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsche Wörterbuch. 4. Bd. 1. Abthlg. 2. Hälfte. 9. Lfg. Gerietzt-Geschicht. Bearb. v. R. Hildebrand u. K. Kant. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.
KALPHEISCH, K. In Galeni de placitis Hippocratis et Platonis libros observationes criticae. Berlin: Heinrich. 2 M.
KRAPP, E. Der substantivirte Infinitiv, abhängig v. Präpositionen u. Präpositionaladverbien in der hitorischen Griechit. Heidelberg: Winter. 3 M.
LIEBIG, B. Zwei Kapitel der Käkikā. Uebers. u. m. e. Einleitg. versehen. Breslau: Preuss. 4 M.
LORENZ, P. Observations de pronominum personalium apud poetas Alexandrinos usu. Berlin: Heinrich. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LOTH, J. Lea Mots latins dans les Langues brittoniques (gallois, armoricain, cornique): phonétique et commentaire. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.
MARTIN, J. Die Proverbe du Conte de Bretagne, nebst Belegen aus german. u. roman. Sprachen. Erlangen: Blaesing. 80 Pf.
MATTHIAS, Th. Sprachleben u. Sprachschäden. Ein Führer durch die Schwankung. u. Schwierigkeiten d. deutschen Sprachgebrauchs. Leipzig: Richter. 5 M. 50 Pf.
MEROUET, H. Lexikon zu den Schriften Cicero's. 2. Th. Lexikon zu den philosoph. Schriften. 2. Bd. Jena: Fischer. 43 M.
PRIEST, F. C. Die heitischen Ischriften. Ein Versuch ihrer Entzifferung. Berlin: Peiser. 6 M.
RAPOLLA, D. Vita di Quinto Orazio Flacco con ragguagli novissimi. Naples: Detken. 5 fr.
VICTORIS, S. A. de Caesaribus liber. Ad fidem codicum Bruxellensis et Oxoniensis recensuit F. Pichlmayr. München: Lindauer. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DATE OF CHAUCER'S "ITALIAN" PERIOD.

London: August 27, 1892.

The year of Chaucer's first visit to Italy has long been taken as a dividing line in his career, entitling us to date every poem which shows the influence of any Italian poet as subsequent to 1372-73. But since this most helpful assumption was first made, we have obtained from other sources approximate dates for almost all the poems in which the influence of Italian poetry is prominent. We have good reasons for believing that the Parlement of Foules was written about 1382, Troilus and Cressida not long before the House of Fame, the House of Fame about 1383, the Legend of Good Women subsequently to this and before the Canterbury Tales, the bulk of the Tales in or after 1385. There is no longer any need to argue from the inherent improbability of Chaucer's acquaintance with the works of Dante, Petrarch, or Boccaccio before 1372. There is positive evidence that the poems which show traces of this acquaintance are, as the old argument anticipated, of a later date. Nay, more—it cannot but strike us that every one of the poems we have named belongs to a date subsequent to 1379, i.e., subsequent not only to the first but also to the second visit to Italy. The question arises: Was it not on the later of the two Italian missions that the influence of Italian literature was for the first time strongly felt? The paraphrase of Dante in the Lyf of Seint Cecyle may seem to answer this question in the negative, for the tale itself is so poor that we cannot possibly assign a late date to it. But the paraphrase occurs not in the story itself, but in the (vastly superior) Invocation to the Blessed Virgin which is prefixed to and separate from it. It is in this Invocation that we find the references to the narrator as a "Son of Eve," and the allusion to "readers"; so that we cannot suppose that it was inserted (as insertions were made in other poems) when it came up for revision before being assigned to the Second Nun in the Canterbury Tales. But the Invocation may still have been written and added any time between 1379 and 1385, and its superiority to the poem itself is a fair argument for some such later date. It would, too, offer an explanation of Chaucer's rather puzzling selection of this tale, rather than those of Grisild or Constance, for mention in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, if we suppose him to have recently tackled the Invocation on to it; but this is, perhaps, a small point.

If, for whatever reason, we regard the Invocation as later work, I believe it becomes impossible to point to any poem by Chaucer written before 1379 in which there is a trace of Italian influence. But it is not necessary to go so far as this. Chaucer may have read a little Dante and Boccaccio on his first visit to Italy, and even have made extracts from them; but it does not follow that he bought MSS. of their works to take home and study. Up to the date of his first mission he had had no very lucrative employment—when he went to France in 1369 he had to borrow £10 (= £150?) from a friend—and though he was allowed 100 marks for his expenses in 1372, and a further 38 marks when he came back, it is doubtful if this left him any great margin for book-buying at the prices which books then cost. Moreover, his purchases are far more likely to have been in Latin than in Italian, books written in the language which he knew well rather than in that which he was probably only just acquiring; and we know, in fact, of at least two Latin works—(i.) Petrarch's Grisilda (though I hope Petrarch gave him this and wrote his name in it), and (ii.) Boccaccio's De Casibus Virorum et Feminarum Illustrum—which it is almost certain he did obtain on this occasion. But if he still had money to spare and bought his Divina Commedia, his Teseide, and his Filosostrato, in 1372-73, and went on writing from Latin and French sources right up to 1380, or thereabouts, he hardly made the use of his new treasures one would expect. If, on the other hand, he perfected himself in Italian and bought his books during his long stay in 1378-79, we have a good explanation of the wonderful leap-up in his poetry which gave us Troilus, the Parlement of Foules, the House of Fame, and the Knights Tale, all in the course of a few years. If I am right, we must lengthen his Latin-French period on to 1378, and make his period of Italian influence stretch not from 1373 but from 1379 to about 1387. I put forward this theory as a suggestion which occurred to me while reading Dr. Koch's admirable paper on "The Chronology of Chaucer's Writings"; and I shall be very grateful if any Chaucer scholars, of greater experience than I can pretend to, will give their views on it.

ALFRED W. POLLARD.

"OF FINE AT THE FAIR": AN EXPLANATION.

Edinburgh: August 20, 1892.

In a review of Dr. Berdoo's "Browning Cyclopaedia," which appeared in the Spectator of April 9, the following passage occurs:—

"'Fine at the Fair' is the main subject of an earnest little volume by Miss Morison, and it becomes in her hands one of Browning's 'most spiritual and instructive' writings, as well as one 'hopelessly misunderstood.' . . . her estimate compares a little oddly with Browning's own words on 'Fine' which are quoted by Dr. Berdoo. Browning, he says, when asked what it was that the poem intended to express, said 'his fancy was to show morally how a Don Juan might justify himself, partly by truth, somewhat by sophistry.'"

* See Dr. Koch's excellent paper on "The Chronology of Chaucer's Writings," lately published by the Chaucer Society.

As the words are quoted as Mr. Browning's own it seems desirable to show that they are in no way contradictory of the view of the poem taken in my little book.

"Somebody," says Mr. Browning in a letter to his dearest friend and most valued critic, M. Milsand, quoted in Mrs. Ritchie's charming sketch of the Browning household in Harper's Magazine for May—"somebody quite ignorant of what I may have meant to write, and only occupied with what is really written, is needed to supervise the thing produced." Like himself, Mr. Browning's poems are many-sided; and it is easy to see, in reading them, how, as his work went on, new vistas of thought and feeling and imagination were constantly opening out before him on every side, leading him ever further and deeper and higher than the initial thought-germ from which they sprang. Hence, doubtless, his feeling that one wholly ignorant of his first intention was in reality best fitted to grasp the completed poem as a whole. What he "meant to write" had a way of dwindling into so very insignificant and one-sided a fragment of "what was really written." This is notably the case in "Fifine at the Fair"; and as the grand roll of his thought and feeling unfolds itself, Dr. Berdoe's quoted "fancy" dwindles into such an insignificant part of the whole that, but for the initial motto, it might be ignored altogether. The "fancy" itself, however, is a characteristic, if a comparatively insignificant, part of the poem. It is a constant theory of Mr. Browning's that even the worst have always "some fancied right" whereby to "excuse their foulest wrong"; and such an apology, put into the mouth of some person whose action is generally and justly condemned, is a favourite pastime of his. He loves to mark with his subtle insight just how far they have truth on their side, and just where the divergence begins; and in many of his poems he works this out, and shows how crime itself is often the exaggeration and misapplication of what is in itself a truth. Thus, the subtle metaphysical truths with which he deals in "Fifine at the Fair" might, he implies, be pushed beyond their legitimate bearing to excuse a life of license, and this is suggested rather than expressed by the motto he has associated with the poem. But it is the deep underlying truths themselves which the poem emphasises and which constitute its essential teaching, not the "sophistry" of their possible misapplication. And, indeed, so far as this poem is concerned, I am inclined to deny such an apology, either in its truth or in its falsehood, the place of its germinal idea, even on its human side, and to regard the mould of a Don Juan's possible excuse for himself, into which the poem is thrown—as, in the name of his wife's "Sonnets from the Portuguese," whose notes never rang from harp so far from home—as little more than the transparent veil which the delicacy of an instinctive and perhaps half-unconscious personal reticence seeks to throw over the living experience of a man, who, with a heart consciously elsewhere, yet frankly acknowledges and seeks to explain to himself and others, how here he still "lives and likes life's way," and that without any treason to the permanent and supreme affection.

JEANIE MORISON.

"VAHEB": NUMBERS XXI. 14.

New York.

The various interpretations of obscure passages in the Bible, such as the one which I now venture to discuss, have in these recent years attracted the attention of savants in a marked degree, and elicited much critical acumen and scholarship. I propose, in the present instance, to examine the well-known passage in Numbers xxi. 14, and propound a new reading of the hitherto επὶ λεγόμενον, יהב, Vahab.

The following are some of the principal ancient and modern renderings of this interesting and disputed text:

HEB. TEXT.

על כן יאמר בספר מלחמות יהוה את ורה
בסופה ואת הנחלים ארנון:

A. V.

"Wherefore it is said in the book of the wars of the Lord what he did in the Red Sea and in the brooks of Arnon" (marg. reference has "Vaheb in Supha").

LXX.

Δια τοῦτο λέγεται ἐν βιβλίῳ Πόλεμος τοῦ Κυρίου τὴν Ζωδὸν ἐφλόγισε, καὶ τοὺς Χιμαρῶντος Ἄρνον.

"Propterea dicitur in libro: Bellum Domini ipsam Zoob inflammavit, et torrentes Arnon."

ONKELOS, CHALD. PARAPHRASE.

על כן יאמר בספר קרבין דעבד יהוה את
ימא דכופא ונבורין דעל נחלי ארנון:

"... that which God did on the Red Sea and the mighty deeds at the brooks of Arnon."

VULGATE.

"Unde dicitur in libro bellorum Domini. Sicut fecit in mare Robro, sic faciet in torrentibus Arnon."

"As he did in the Red Sea, so will he do in the brooks of Arnon."

TRACT. HERRACHOTH, POL. 51A.

The tradition in the Talmud gives an entirely different rendering.

"There were two lepers, whose names were Eth and Vaheb, in the rear of the Israelitish camp. [Thus Eth and Vaheb were besupha, "at the rear," בְּסוּפָה.] While the Israelites were traversing the brooks of Arnon, the Amorites hid themselves in holes which they had dug on both sides of the road, waiting till the Israelites should pass by, and then to suddenly attack them from the ambuscade. But they [the Amorites] did not know that the ark of the Lord, which made every high place low and smooth ways for Israel, was going before them.

"When the ark arrived, the hills on each side approached and destroyed the ambuscaded enemy. Their blood mingled with the waters of the brooks of Arnon. The lepers [Eth and Vaheb] at the rear end of the camp were the first who beheld it, and brought the tidings to the Israelites. Then Israel sang this song:

"Spring up, oh well, sing ye unto it,
The princes digged it," &c."

I do not, when science is antagonistic, put much confidence in Talmudic or other traditions. I merely quote the above to show the conflicting interpretations.

We thus see (excluding the last traditional rendering) that the various commentators may be divided into two classes—viz., those who render Vahab to mean a place, and those who say that it is a verb, and coming from יהב, yaheb, "to give."

Luther leaves the words untranslated, thus: Vahab in Supha.

Gesenius,† Keil, Delitzsch, Lange, and others,

* A. Gosman, in his textual and grammatical notes in Lange's Commentary on Numbers, remarks: יהב, Vahab, which our version after the older Jewish commentators renders gave, or did, is now regarded as a proper name; סוּפָה, not the sea nor any proper name, but as in Nahum i. 3—יהוה בסופה ובשפיריהו. Kennicott gives numerous variations in the verse. Some MSS. have אמר ורה in one word, instead of אמר ורה; the ב of בסופה is changed into a כ (see Kennicott, Variae Lectiones, in loco).

† Thesaurus sermo Vahab, יהב, says: "Quamquam omnis hic sermo, utpote ex medio libro quodam dependit deponitur, abruptus est et perobscurus, perquam tamen probabile, Vahab in Supha esse locum in confiniis Moabiturum et Amoriturum."

follow in the footsteps of the LXX translators, and exclude the Red Sea. They say that Vahab is an Amoritish fortress, and בְּסוּפָה, b'supha, has nothing to do with the Red Sea, but must be rendered "storm." Thus, "Jehaveh advancing in storm, he took Vaheb and the brooks of Arnon."

The substitution by the LXX translators of Zoob for Vahab, a z for a v, points directly to the uncertain renderings of certain words even at that early period. Whenever I read this passage, I did not pass it over without a careful consideration of its meaning. It is, perhaps, owing to my Egyptian studies that my attention is so strongly attracted by everything relating to that country, especially when apparently connected with the Holy Land. It occurred to me that the ו "v," in Vahab, stands for ר "r," רהב Rahab. The horizontal line of the ר has been shortened by the transcriber. If this be the case, Vahab would then become Rahab. And the verse in question will stand thus:

"Wherefore it will be said in the book of the wars of the Lord [i.e., the narrator of sacred history, when he shall write the wars of the Lord] that which happened to Rahab, "Egypt," in Supha, the "Red Sea," Yam Suph, and that which has taken place at the brooks of Arnon."

In other words, these two miracles will be recorded, side by side, as it were, to compare them, each being equally marvellous, and both of the same character. That Rahab stands for Egypt is an undisputed fact. Compare וְאֵתְּכֶנָּה מִתֵּן רַחַב, "With his understanding he wounded Egypt." Rahab. (Job xxvi. 12.) הֲלֹא אֵתְּכֶנָּה רַחַב מִחֻלְלֵה הַנִּין, "Art thou not he that cut Rahab [Egypt] and wounded the dragon" (Isaiah li. 9). אֵתְּכָה דָמָה כְּחֻלֵּל רַחַב (Psalms lxxxix. 11). אֲזִכֵּר רַחַב וּבָבֶל לִיּוֹדֵי, "I will make remembrance of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me" (Psalms xevii. 4). But when we reflect that the word was of doubtful interpretation anterior to the destruction of the Temple, so early, in fact, as the time of Ptolemy II. Philadelphus, we are at once convinced, at the very outset of Jewish interpretations of the Scripture, that it was not only due to the shortening of the horizontal line of the ר which converted it into v, but to a general similarity in writing the two letters which may be observed in the early Hebrew of the Asmonean period, also on the engraved gems of the Phoenicians.†

SAMUEL AUGUSTUS BINION.

NOTES ON HERODAS.

Cambridge: Aug. 31, 1892.

On p. 133 of the ACADEMY, for δῖον "it is necessary," read "as it is."

VI. 90. On p. 153 I ought to have written προκυκλῖς, proparoxytone. Even so we should expect it to be a "nomen agentis," with προκυκλῖδος as the genitive. But as the word is peculiar (the nearest parallel that occurs to me is προκύλης, ἀρτόκυλης), I leave my reading and explanation for what they are worth.

VII. 12. On p. 173, for "λαμπύρεις," read "λαμπύρεις"; I take the sentence to be interrogative.

F. D.

* This Lapsus calami, making the ר into a v, or vice versa, is strikingly illustrated even in our present day. See Alphabet (table) in Encyclopædia Britannica, 9th edit., vol. i., 600, where the horizontal line of the ר in the Square Hebrew has actually been extended so to make it very closely to resemble ר.

† Compare Table of Alphabets in Madden's Nismata Orientalia (Square Hebrew), London, 1881.

SCIENCE.

The Tell el-Amarna Tablets in the British Museum: with Autotype Facsimiles. (Printed for the Trustees of the British Museum).

THE British Museum collection of cuneiform tablets found at Tel el-Amarna consists of eighty-two pieces, and the long-expected volume containing copies of them has now been published. At Berlin and Gizeh are nearly 240 more, including fragments; and these, together with some tablets belonging to private persons, were given to the world in a series of admirable facsimiles by two German scholars in 1890. From the first moment of their acquisition the collections of Berlin and Gizeh were accessible to any scholar who wished to consult them; the collection at the British Museum has been jealously kept under lock and key, and even the best Assyriologist in the employment of the British Museum itself has been forbidden to examine it.

If the result were commensurate with the long delay in the publication of these precious relics of the past, we should not complain. But now that the volume containing them has at length been "printed by order of the trustees" of the Museum, it proves to be eminently unsatisfactory. The "autotype facsimiles," or rather photographs at the end of the book, are worthy of all praise. But, unfortunately, the least legible tablets, or portions of a tablet, cannot be reproduced in this way, and it is just these parts of the collection which the scholar wishes to have before him in as exact a form as possible. The copies of the tablets have been made by Dr. Bezold, and it is needless to say that they are excellent. But here, again, an evil genius has presided over their presentation to the public. Instead of being autotyped, as in the Berlin edition of the Tel el-Amarna texts, an attempt has been made to print the copies. We say an attempt, since it was necessarily doomed to failure. Not only is the type difficult to read, but it is impossible to represent by means of it the precise forms of the characters, which are all-important for determining certain palaeographical and historical questions, or to allow the reader to discover the extent to which a half-legible character has been preserved.

There are two Introductions, the second of which is called a "Summary of the Contents of the Tablets." They are more than unsatisfactory. What is correct in them has, for the most part, been taken without due acknowledgment from others; what has not been so taken is in great measure either useless or incorrect. What is the object of filling space with the Hebrew or Arabic spellings of well-known local names? The scholar does not want them; the reader who is ignorant of Semitic languages wants them still less. Except in a few rare instances, the new identifications that are proposed prove that their author is not yet qualified for attacking the difficult subject of the ancient geography of the East. In defiance of both philology and geography, the town of Timasgi is identified with Damascus, although the name of Damascus, under its proper form, occurs in one of the letters.

A footnote makes the matter worse, by showing (like an assertion on p. lxx.) that the author had never heard of Nöldeke's demonstration that the Tunip of the Egyptian monuments is the modern Tennib. Even where a geographical identification has long been known and established, he contrives to blunder. The reader who is not an Assyriologist will be much puzzled, for instance, by the conflicting statements which are made about Kara-Duniyas or Babylonia. On p. xxv. it is described as "Northern Babylonia"; on p. xxxii. it is transferred to Mesopotamia; and in the Index it is said to be "in or near Babylonia"! The notes of interrogation, moreover, attached to some of the identifications indicate the slight acquaintance of their author with the present position of our knowledge of ancient oriental geography quite as clearly as does the want of such notes in other cases.

The translations and paraphrases of the inscriptions cannot, unfortunately, be trusted. Thus the statement of the Egyptian king, that his "daughter has never been given to anyone," by which, of course, is meant that she was unmarried, has been turned into "the daughter of the king of the land of Egypt hath never been given to a 'nobody'";—a probable remark for the Pharaoh to make to a powerful neighbour! So, again, the words kasid ana ala . . . u istemu ana[ta]—"he arrived at the city . . . and they have heard the report"—have been paraphrased "the city had been captured, and the report of its fall had been brought." In the same tablet, Udumu, or Edom, and other cities are, according to the paraphrase, stated to have "rebelled." What the tablet really says is that "all the cities of the foreign land are hostile," Edom being the first of the cities to be mentioned. There are quite enough passages of doubtful signification in the tablets without multiplying them where the sense is clear.

A very useful index of the proper names has been added to the volume, though the notes of interrogation which are sprinkled over it seem sometimes to have got into the wrong places. We are glad to see, however, that the unhappy identification of Ubi with the Hobah of Genesis, which is asserted dogmatically on p. lxviii., is queried in the Index. It is a pity that the equally unhappy identification of the Canaanitish word zukini with the "Hebrew" soken is not furnished with a similar query. And it is a still greater pity that some little trouble should not have been taken to determine the exact spot where the discovery of the tablets took place. Instead of this, we are told at the beginning of the Introduction that it "is said to have been accidentally made by a peasant woman when searching for antiquities in the loose sand and broken stones at the foot of the mountains behind the village, in which there are several interesting rock-hewn tombs."

Mr. Petrie's excavations this winter have shown that the tablets were actually found where the villagers have always maintained they had disinterred them, in the mounds of the old city itself and close to the débris of the royal palace. It may be added that the name of the village to which reference is made is pronounced "Tel el-Amarna," and not "Tell el-Amarna" as given on the title-page of the volume. The final consonant is never doubled before a vowel in the pronunciation of Upper Egypt, as it is in other parts of the Arabic-speaking world, and to write "Tell" transports us out of Egypt into Syria.

In the space at our disposal it is not possible to describe in detail all the shortcomings of the last publication of the British Museum. We can point out only the more glaring of them. But enough has been said, it may be hoped, to show that the English letterpress must be received with caution by those who are not Assyriologists. If the authorities of the Museum intend to edit any more Assyrian texts let them spare us all Introductions.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTE ON VEDĀNTASĀRA.

London: Aug. 31, 1892.

All who have read this excellent summary of the doctrines of the advaitavādin school of Vedantists are aware that, near its close, the author quotes a couplet and a half in support of his remarks as to the kind of life to be lived by the jīvanmukta. I subjoin the passage as it stands in Dr. J. R. Ballantyne's Lecture on the Vedānta, and in Dr. Otto Böhtlingk's Sanskrit Chrestomathie (1877):

"Tad uktam—
Buddhādvaitasatattvaśya yatheshācharamam
yadi |
Sūnām tattvadriśam chaiva ko bhedo 'suchi-
bhakshave ||
Brahmavittvam tathā muktā sa ātmanō na
chetara iti "

Now, as this stands here, it looks like a connected quotation from one author; and these two scholars, apparently, so regarded it, and translated accordingly, making what sense they could out of the third line. They render it thus:—

"If he who rightly understands that there is no duality may act as he chooses, then what difference is there between dogs and those that know the truth in respect [say] of eating what is unclean?—[for the dog may eat as he chooses, and so, it seems, may the enlightened sage. Well, the difference consists in] the knowledge of God. So, such a one [as knows God—and not the dog, who knows nothing of the truth—] being liberated, is, and no one else is, the knower of Soul."

"Wenn derjenige, der das wahre Wesen der Einheit erkannt hat, nach freiem Belieben verfährt, welcher Unterschied besteht alsdann zwischen Hunden und denen, die die Wahrheit erkannten, wenn sie Unreines essen? Die Kenntniss des Brahman. Wer auf diese Weise erlöst wurde, der und kein anderer ist ein Kenner der Seele."

Before I published my own translation in 1881, I had discovered, by independent laborious research, what I might have ascertained at once from Rāmānirṭha's Commentary if I had then possessed it, namely, that the first couplet is Naishkarmyasiddhi iv. 62, and has no connexion whatever with that which follows. Having no clue, however, to the source of the latter, I was compelled in translating to follow on the lines of my predecessors. Subsequently, I found that the best MSS. added the word iti after aśuchibhakshane, thus completely separating the first two lines from the third; and, also, that the commentator Rāmānirṭha ignored the third line entirely. I had got no further than this when I brought out a third edition of my Hindu Pantheism last year; but it will be seen, from the remarks on page 127, that I felt we were all wrong in our rendering of the passage in question.

A few months ago, however, I, quite accidentally, found the source of the line which had so long puzzled me. It forms the second half of Sankara's Upadeśasāhasrī xii. 13, and the whole verse reads thus :—

“Yo vedānupadrashtṛitvam ātmano 'kartṛitām tathā |
Brahmavittvam tathā muktva sa ātmanjo na chetaraḥ” ||

Rāmātirtha explains it as follows :

“Yo vedeti. Yo Brahmavittvam muktva Brahma-vid aham asmiti abhimānam tyaktva yathā śrutyuktam tathā 'tmanō 'luptachinnatratayā drashtṛitvam tathā 'kartṛitvam cha veda sa ātmanjo ātmataitvabrahmayin na chetaro yo 'bhimānaśam api bhajata ity arthaḥ.”

We can now understand Nṛsiṃhasarasvatī's comment on the three lines. He says :

“Jīvanmuktasya yatheshācharanaprāsungo nāsti . . . asmin arthe granthāntaram saivādayati taduktam iti. Jīvanmuktasya Brahmajñānitvā-bhimāno nāstīty atrāpi sammatim āha Brahmavittvam iti.”

The passage is thus shown to consist of two distinct quotations. That from Suresvara is directed against the idea that one who knows Brahma may act as he chooses, while the other is intended to warn against the slightest conceit of “I” on the part of the enlightened man. The same half couplet is quoted for the same purpose by Vidyāranya in the second chapter of his Jīvanmuktiviveka (p. 47 of Anandāśrama edition), where he says :

“Nauv ātmajñānino vidyāmada āchāryair nābhy-upagumyate. Tathā chopadeśasāhasryām uktam

‘Brahmavittvam tathā muktva sa ātmanjo na chetaraḥ’ |

iti. Naishkarmyasiddhāv (i. 75) api—

‘Na chādhyātmābhimāno 'pi viduḥśo 'styāsur-atvataḥ’ |

Vidusho 'pyāsuraśchet syān nishphalam Brah-madarsanam’ ||

iti. Nāyam doshaḥ. Jīvanmuktiparyantasya tatt-vajñānasya tatra vivakṣhitatvāt. Na khalu vāyam api jīvanmuktānām vidyāmada abhyupagacchehhamaḥ.”

Still, the extremely abrupt, not to say unnecessary, introduction of the topic embodied in the third line, combined with the significant fact that that line is ignored by the learned Rāmātirtha, who explained it in his comment on the Upadeśasāhasrī, furnishes a strong argument for its exclusion.

I have in the press an edition of the text of the Vedāntasūtra together with its two Commentaries, which are now brought together for the first time. The entire work contains hundreds of quotations from all sources, but most of them have been traced and verified.

G. A. JACOB, Colonel.

INDIAN JOTTINGS.

DR. M. AUREL STEIN, principal of the Oriental College at Lahore, has now ready for publication the first volume of his critical edition of the Rajatarangini, of Chronioles of the Kings of Kashmir, upon which he has been engaged for some years. This work, which was written by the poet Kalhana in the middle of the twelfth century, is of special interest as being almost the sole example of historical literature in Sanskrit. Hitherto it has only been known from editions based upon corrupt MSS. written in Devanagari, all of which show that they were copied from a MS. written in Sarada, the characteristic script of Kashmir. Dr. Stein has been fortunate enough to discover the original archetype, which has a curious history. It was written in the latter half of the seventeenth century by a Pandit, who was not only a most industrious copyist, but also himself a learned scholar, so that the text possesses a critical value. When Prof. Bühler visited Kashmir in 1875, in the course of his search for Sanskrit MSS., he was able to demonstrate the superiority of the Sarada original to the Devanagari transcripts, but he could not obtain access to the archetype, though he ascertained that it existed in the possession of a certain Pandit. On the death of this Pandit, the codex was divided among his heirs; but the fragments have been collected and entrusted to Dr. Stein for the purpose of the present edition. In the Preface, he gives an elaborate account of the condition of the MS., pointing out the value to be attached to the marginal notes in various later hands. His critical text is entirely based on this Sarada archetype, little attention being paid to the various readings in the printed editions, which are due to misreadings and corruptions. The volume is printed at the Education Society's Press at Bombay; and is illustrated with a facsimile of two pages of the MS., showing the different hands, and with an architectural vignette for frontispiece. If we may judge from advance sheets, this will be not only a most scholarly piece of work, but also an admirable example of Indian printing. In a second volume, Dr. Stein hopes to give exegetical notes on the text, with a commentary on matters of historical and antiquarian interest, and also (if possible) a map showing the ancient topography of Kashmir. For this he is well qualified by repeated visits to the country, as well as by his friendship with native Pandits.

THE second volume of the new series of the Archaeological Survey of India is devoted to a catalogue of the antiquities and inscriptions in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, compiled by Dr. A. Führer, whose successful excavation of Jain remains at Mathura has been more than once mentioned in the ACADEMY. No part of India, not even the Punjab, is so crowded with historic spots, associated not only with the life and teaching of Buddha, and with the Hindu theogony, but also with the Muhammadan conquest. Most of the ground has already been worked over by Sir A. Cunningham and his assistants; but it is hardly too much to say that even the best known spots would repay further examination, while there are square miles and miles of ruined mounds still almost untouched. We continually hear of finds of ancient coins made by peasants during the rainy season; but the author is careful to point out that what is now wanted is systematic exploration, like that of Mr. Petrie in Egypt. The present volume is based rather upon printed documents than upon original research, though it shows everywhere the traces of personal knowledge. Its object is to carry out the orders of the Government, by placing on record a catalogue of the existing monuments, classified according to their archaeological importance, their state of repair, and their custody. It is arranged in the order of administrative divisions and districts; but copious indices enable the student to bring together any particular line of investigation. It is pleasant to add that this book again reflects credit upon its printer as well as its author.

MR. STANLEY LANE-POOLE has reprinted his Introduction to the volume on Mughul Emperors in the “Catalogue of Indian Coins in the British Museum,” in the hope that it may be useful to historical students who are not specially numismatists. It is issued, in an edition of one hundred copies, by Messrs. Archibald & Company, of Westminster, who have already made their mark as publishers by their “Oriental Miscellany.” Undoubtedly it contains a vast amount of detailed information with regard to the Mughul Empire of Hindustan, such as an accurate study of coins can alone supply; but we must confess that its interest is numismatic rather than historical. One of the most important chapters is that dealing with the coinage of the East India Company, where the author claims to have been the first to identify the pieces struck at Bombay shortly after 1716. It is here also that he makes a curious mistake, when he states (p.c.) that the Nawab Siraj-ud-daulah gave the Company permission to establish a mint at Calcutta in 1759; the Nawab had then been two years dead. We doubt also the etymology of “John Company” given in a note on p. xvi., without any authority; it is not even mentioned by Sir H. Yule.

B. PADMARAJA PANDIT, of the Archaeological Survey of Mysore, has sent us a circular announcing his intention to commence, in April of next year, the publication of a monthly periodical devoted to Jain literature. For the last ten years he has devoted himself to the collection of Sanskrit MSS. on Jainism; and he has also accumulated materials for a biographical history of Jain authors, from the time of Vardhamana, the last of the Tirthankaras, whom tradition places in the seventh century B.C. The work will be issued from his own printing press at Bangalore.

PART IX. of Epigraphia Indica—the organ for the publication of the inscriptions collected by the Archaeological Survey of India—begins a new volume, and also contains the preface and indices for the volume that is concluded. Dr. James Burgess, the general editor, here points out the scope of the work, and acknowledges the services of his collaborators. Out of a total number of about 50 papers, no less than 21 have been contributed by Prof. Bühler, of Vienna, and 19 by Prof. Kielhorn, of Göttingen, both of whom served their apprenticeship in Sanskrit studies at Bombay. We are glad to learn that

“The Government of India has sanctioned the continuance of the work in a second volume, and much progress has already been made in preparing the materials for it. It will contain a revised edition, with facsimiles, of the great inscriptions of Asoka by Prof. Bühler, who will also supply other papers on Jain inscriptions from Mathura, on the Sanchi inscriptions, &c. The Government has secured an impression of the Badal pillar inscription, and, through the favour of Col. S. S. Jacob, of Jaipur, rubbings of the Harsha inscription have been obtained, which, together with others, have been edited by Prof. Kielhorn. Muhammadan inscriptions have hitherto been overlooked, or but sparingly edited. It is intended to give them a place in the new volume, for which two series of considerable length [from Delhi and from Bengal] have already been prepared [by Dr. Paul Horn].”

The new Part contains some materials of interest. Prof. Kielhorn re-edits, from fresh rubbings, a copper-plate from Nagpur, of which the companion plate has disappeared from the local museum; and also two stone inscriptions, which were brought from the Central Provinces by Dr. Fitzedward Hall, and are now preserved in the cabinet of the American Oriental Society at New Haven. Mr. H. H. Drava, a native scholar who attended the Christiania Congress as a delegate from Baroda, publishes, with facsimiles, three new copper-plates from Gujarat, one of which goes back to the closing years of the sixth century. The two remaining papers—by Prof. Bühler and by his pupil Dr. Kirste—deal with comparatively modern inscriptions from Gujarat; but they are made to throw light upon political history, upon the development of mixed dialects, and upon the ecclesiastical divisions of the Jains.

THE July number of the Indian Antiquary—which has reached us with commendable promptitude—contains an article by Dr. E. Hultzsch, of Bangalore, on a Sanskrit inscription as the sacred town of Kanchipura (Conjeveram), dated in 1249 A.D., which may be assigned to a local dynasty of Worangal; and also an illustrated paper, by Lieut. R. M. Rainey, on some wild tribes inhabiting the Chin frontier of Burma.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

DR. R. ROST, whose approaching retirement by reason of age from the librarianship at the India Office was announced, has been permitted a further extension of office for one year.

At a later meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Halévy made some additional remarks upon the inscriptions from Zinjirli, referred to in the ACADEMY of last week. He argued from these inscriptions that the Hittites played an important part in the transmission of the Phœnician alphabet. It was from the Hittites, and not directly from the Phœnicians, that the Aramaeans borrowed the alphabet of twenty-two letters, which they afterwards carried as far as India. An exact knowledge of Hittite idioms serves to explain the existence in Hebrew of certain grammatical forms and words, which are found neither in Phœnician nor in Aramaean: they are those elements which were introduced into Hebrew at the time when Hittite colonies were in contact with the children of Israel.

FINE ART.

Catalogue of the Manks Crosses, with the Runic Inscriptions and various Readings and Renderings compared. By P. M. C. Kermode, F.S.A., Scot. Second edition. (Williams & Norgate.)

THE Runic remains of the Isle of Man are of great interest to students. They can be historically dated (twelfth century), and they are in the old Norwegian dialect. They early drew attention. Bishop Gibson gave several in the second tome of his folio edition of Camden's Britain (1753), pp. 1456-7. Since then, many distinguished men—P. A. Munch, Gudbrand Vigfusson, Worsaae, Prof. Browne, and others—have given their help. Almost every year one or two new ones turn up, and they already number seventy-six. Mr. Kermode's second edition is the last contribution to this subject. The Crosses bear elaborate ornamentation, partly copied in Scandinavia. Among other curious figures of men and animals, they also give mythological scenes, such as Fafnes roasting the heart of the dragon, or with his thumb in his mouth near his steed Grani and one of the talking birds, or stabbing the monster with his sword. One stone even shows us Loke bound, below a serpent spitting poison upon him.

Mr. Kermode is preparing a subscription edition of all these pieces, including the few Roman and Ogham rustings, in quarto, to be illustrated with large photographs. Among the names on the monuments several are remarkable, Keltic and Norse, some hitherto unknown or very rare. A couple of old Manx place names also occur. I therefore hope that this handsome little volume, the first printed and bound in Ramsey, will be welcomed as it deserves.

GEORGE STEPHENS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: August 29, 1892.

In his last letter Mr. Petrie announces that he has nothing more to say. That being so, I beg permission to go briefly through the questions which he has raised in this correspondence, pointing out exactly how they stand now.

1. The Aquashas are mentioned in inscriptions relating to the invasion of Egypt in the fifth year of King Merenptah, and are not mentioned elsewhere. There is nothing in the inscriptions to show who the Aquasha were, or whence they came. There is nothing whatever to connect the Aquasha with the Achæans beyond the fact that both the names begin with A.

I cannot make out from Mr. Petrie's recent letters whether he is still prepared to maintain that the Aquasha were Achæans. From July 16 onwards he has contented himself with saying that various Egyptologists maintain this view, and that his own archaeological results would still hold good, even if this view could not be maintained. If it be an "archaeological result" to say that certain things were made by a certain race at a certain period, this last statement is not in accordance with the facts.

2. As for the dating of the Kahun pottery, this question has not been discussed upon its merits in the present correspondence. The point has been whether Mr. Petrie did or did not commit himself to the view that this pottery dates from the time of King Useratesen II. in the XIIIth Dynasty. His final statement is this:—"I recognised the conclusions on the Kahun pottery to be debatable, although I fully adhere to those conclusions being the fair result of the evidence." I went carefully through the evidence in my review of his book in the Classical Review, and have nothing further to say on that matter.

3. A three-handled vase of Mycenaean ware was found in coffin 9 in the tomb of Maket at Kahun.

Coffin 9 must have been buried after coffin 1, for 1 lay at the further end of the tomb, and 9 blocked the way to it. Coffin 1 contained (among other things) several scarabs, a blue glass frog, and some beads. Two of the scarabs are inscribed with the name of Tahutmes III. Mr. Petrie thinks that one of the scarabs is as old as the XIIth Dynasty, and none of them later than the XVIIIth; that the frog is of the time of Amenhetep III. or IV.; and that the beads are not earlier than the time of Ramessu II., at the beginning of the XIXth Dynasty.

Coffin 9 must have been buried before coffin 11, for 9 lay half-way down the tomb, and 11 blocked the entrance. Mr. Petrie says that coffin 11 is like a coffin from Gurob, which he has assigned to the beginning of the XIXth Dynasty, and is unlike coffins of the XXIIInd Dynasty. The date of the Gurob coffin was inferred from the date of various objects found in the same group of tombs, and the date of those objects was merely guessed from their style. See Gurob, p. 39.

The only other things in the tomb, which are described by Mr. Petrie as dateable, are a knife and some beads. He thinks that the knife is nearer the XIXth Dynasty than the XXIIInd, and that the beads are not earlier than the time of Ramessu II. at the beginning of the XIXth Dynasty and not so late as the XXIIInd. The knife and the beads must have been buried before coffin 11, for the knife was in 7, which lay next to 9, and the beads were on the ground close by.

It is upon this evidence that Mr. Petrie gives the Mycenaean vase a date midway between the beginning of the XIXth Dynasty and the XXIIInd Dynasty. His final statement is this:—"We can only go by the period of the latest dateable objects in any deposit." In my opinion the evidence will show that this Mycenaean vase was buried after the time of Ramessu II., but will not show how long afterwards. The "dateable" things are so few, and their dates lie so wide apart, that no inference can safely be drawn from them about the date of the other things in the tomb.

4. Several false-necked vases were found at Gurob. Five of them were in the same grave with a kohl-tube inscribed with the name of Amenhetep III. A few others were in the same grave with some pendants inscribed with the name of Tutankhamen. One was in the same grave with a little eye inscribed with the name of Ramessu II. One was in the same grave with a very small tray inscribed with the name of Seti II. In the first two instances the vases were of Mycenaean ware and ornamented with patterns. In the last two instances the vases were of Egyptian ware, and without ornament.

Mr. Petrie formerly maintained that a vase must be contemporary with a king, if found in the same grave with some object inscribed with the name of that king. That is what he said about these vases in the Hellenic Journal (vol. xi., p. 274), and Illahun (pp. 16-18). But in the course of this correspondence he has taken up a safer position. He now maintains that a class of vases must belong to a certain period, if vases of this class have been found at several places in company with objects inscribed with the names of kings belonging to that period. In this he refers to the Mycenaean vases from Ialysos and Mycenæ itself, as well as those from Gurob and the tomb of Maket, which had alone been mentioned previously. He refers also to the Aegean vases which he has lately found at Tel el-Amarna; but these cannot be included until he has given some better account of their discovery, and shown that they are not only Aegean but Mycenaean.

At Ialysos some Mycenaean vases were found in the same group of tombs with a scarab inscribed with the name of Amenhetep III. In a volume on Rhodes, which I published seven years ago, I ventured to say that this scarab was a work of the XXVIth Dynasty, and consequently about 800 years later than the time of Amenhetep III. And nobody, I believe, asserts that it is older than the XXIIInd Dynasty. Mr. Paton afterwards remarked in the Hellenic Journal (vol. viii., p. 449), that the scarab was not found in the same tomb with the vases, but only in the same group of tombs, so that the date of the vases was not to be inferred from the date of the scarab.

Mycenæ has yielded a scarab inscribed with the name of Queen Ti, the wife of Amenhetep III., and also some fragments of a porcelain vase and a small porcelain slab, both inscribed with the name of Amenhetep III. These have all been found within the last few years. I have lately called attention to the fact that the hieroglyphs on the slab exhibit a series of blunders which would never have been made by an Egyptian workman of the time of Amenhetep III.

Nobody is entitled to argue that the Mycenaean vases must belong to a certain period, simply because they have been found in company with objects inscribed with the names of kings belonging to that period, unless he is prepared to prove that these inscribed objects all date from that period.

Nor is anybody entitled to put forward this argument, unless he can give good reasons for supposing that inscribed objects really dating from this period were not retained in use for any length of time before they were buried with the vases. The evidence points the other way. In the tomb of Maket a Mycenaean vase was found in company with two scarabs inscribed with the name of Tahutmes III. There were no other inscribed objects in the tomb. But there were things there which showed that those scarabs were not buried until at least 250 years after the time of Tahutmes III. It is also worth noting that the ornamentation is substantially the same on the false-necked vases represented in the tomb of Ramessu III., and on the false-necked vases found at Gurob in the same grave with some pendants inscribed with the name of Tutankhamen, who reigned fully 250 years before Ramessu III.

But the date of the Mycenaean vases is not to be determined by evidence from Egyptian sources only. This evidence must be weighed against that larger mass of evidence which goes to prove that there is no great gulf between these vases and the purely Greek vases of the seventh century B.C., or between Mycenaean antiquities generally and the purely Greek antiquities of that century. And all this archaeological evidence has to be combined with the historical evidence about the date of the Mycenaean civilisation.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

PROF. LEGROS has announced his intention of resigning at Christmas the Slade chair of fine art at University College, London, which he has held since 1876.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. propose to issue this autumn a foreign art supplement to the Magazine of Art, suggested by the success of their "Royal Academy Pictures." It will be entitled "European Pictures of the Year," and will contain reproductions of pictures exhibited at the chief art centres on the continent, with an introduction by Mr. M. H. Spielmann.

THE September number of Temple Bar has an article entitled "A Stroll through a great Cruikshank Preserve," in which Mr. G. S. Layard supplements Reid's Catalogue by giving an account of some of the greatest rarities in the collection of Mr. Bruton, of Gloucester. It appears that Mr. Bruton, in partnership with another Cruikshank collector, Mr. Truman, have acquired the copyright of Reid's Catalogue, and contemplate bringing out a new and more correct edition, towards which they possess many interesting memoranda in Cruikshank's handwriting.

THE Art Journal for September contains a summary of the art sales of the past season. It appears that the number of pictures that fetched over fourteen hundred guineas each was no less than fifty-five—a larger number than in any previous year. In 1885 the number was only two.

THE twenty-second autumn exhibition of pictures in oil and water-colours will open at the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, on Monday next, September 5.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Heuzey read a paper upon one of the oldest monuments of Chaldean art discovered at Tellah by M. de Sarzec, which is known as the "stele des Vantours." M. de Sarzec has been able to find and piece together several additional fragments, from which it appears that the name of the person who set up the pillar was Eannadu, King of Sirpula, son of Akurgal, and grandson of the very old King Ur-nina. He is represented in front of his warriors, beating down his enemies, sometimes on foot, sometimes in a chariot, of which only a trace remains. The details of the armour resemble in some respects that of the Assyrians of a much later date. From what can be read of the inscription, it seems that the conquered enemies belonged to the country of Is-lan-ki. There is also mention of a city of Ur, allied with Sirpula. The pillar was sculptured on both faces. On the reverse is a royal or divine figure, of large size, holding in one hand the heraldic ensign of Sirpula (an eagle with the head of a lion), while the other brandishes a war-club over a crowd of prisoners, who are tumbling one over another in a sort of net or cage. In illustration of this scene, M. Heuzey quoted the passage from Ilabakkuk (i. 15), describing the vengeance of the Chaldeans: "they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag."

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Hutchings & Romer:

Israel in Chaldeu: A sacred dramatic Cantata. By F. Eidersheim. It must be honestly confessed that the music of this Cantata is not particularly strong or striking; but the composer has a certain power of characterisation, and his "Chaldean" and "Jewish" choruses differ in style. There is another feature deserving of praise, and that is the moderate length of the various numbers. The solos are the least satisfactory portion of the work.

The Legend of Elissa: Cantata. By R. Orlando Morgan. It is hard to complain of a composer for not displaying originality; he cannot give what he does not possess. Mr. Morgan's music flows along pleasantly; and, now and again—as in the "Legend" song, and the duet, "Silence thy flattering voice"—he rises to a fairly high level. But there are other moments in which the music says but little.

Going for Patagonia. By Ffrangcon. A lively little song, but the accompaniment does not show a practised hand.

Sing Heigh-Ho. By Lillias Green. Kingsley's lines are here set to peculiar music, which is artificial rather than original.

Old England. By Clement Locknane. Words by Mr. A. L. V. Ewbank have been adapted to the old melody, "The Oak and the Ash." The first stanza is all very well, but some new features might for variety's sake have been introduced into the accompaniment of the other two stanzas.

Speriamo. By Joseph Romano. A ballad of very ordinary type. There is no soul, and, at times, no sense in the music.

Doncœur. By A. Vianesi. A very light but rather graceful pianoforte piece.

The Rose of Castile. For Violin and Pianoforte. By Guido Papini. This is an effective little piece of its kind. It is showy and not difficult. The accompaniment suits the flowing melodies of Bulfe.

Christmas Bells. By Dr. W. J. Westbrook. A good, vigorous part-song.

THE following short and simple vocal duets deserve mention: "Night is coming," by John Barnett; "The Evening Star," by Thomas Anderton; and "The Night is Nigh," by Clement Locknane.

THE

LINOTYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE CLARENDON PRESS.

NEW BOOKS.

THE FIRST INSTALEMENT OF A NEW HEBREW LEXICON.

Just published, Part I. (ALEPH), small quarto, paper covers, 2s. 6d.

A HEBREW and ENGLISH LEXICON of the OLD TESTAMENT. With an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic. Based on the Lexicon of WILLIAM GESSENIUS, as Translated by EDWARD ROBINSON, late Professor in the Union Theological Seminary, New York. Edited (with constant reference to the Thesaurus of Gesenius as completed by E. Rödiger, with authorised use of the latest German editions of Gesenius' Handwörterbuch über das alte Testament) by FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., Davenport Professor of Hebrew and the Cognate Languages in the Union Theological Seminary, with the co-operation of S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford; and CHARLES A. BRIGGS, D.D., Edward Robinson Professor of Biblical Theology in the Union Theological Seminary.

Recently published, Volume I., demy 8vo, half-roan, 18s.

HISTORY of the NEW WORLD called AMERICA.

By EDWARD JOHN PAYNE, M.A.

"The volume is both interesting and valuable, and bids fair to be the beginning of a work that will claim a place among the best and most important and valuable historical compositions of our time."

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.—A NEW EDITION OF

THE LAW and CUSTOM of the CONSTITUTION.

Part I. PARLIAMENT. Edited by Sir W. R. ANSON, Bart., D.C.L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford.

Recently published, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE LAW and CUSTOM of the CONSTITUTION.

Part II. THE CROWN. By the same Author.

"The question, How does the Constitution work? is far from easy to answer. We do not hesitate to say that in the volume now before us we have a better answer to the question than any that has yet been attempted. The picture which Sir William Anson has presented is invaluable to the public, to politicians, and to students."—St. James's Gazette.

Just published, Fourth Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the HISTORY of the LAW of REAL PROPERTY, with Original Authorities. By KENELM EDWARD DUGBY, M.A., Judge of County Courts, late Victorian Reader in English Law, and formerly Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

"The principal changes in the present edition consist of the addition of the translations from Granville and Bracton, which it is hoped may be of use."

Just published, Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

SPECIMENS of FRENCH LITERATURE, from VILLON

to HUGO. Selected and Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

"In this edition a few misprints, omissions, &c., have been corrected, and the references have been adjusted, where necessary, to the Third Edition (1889) of the 'Short History of French Literature.'"

3 vols., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

Recently published, A NEW EDITION OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

A HISTORY of FRANCE. By G. W. KITCHIN, D.D., F.S.A.,

Dean of Winchester. With numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables.

Volume I.

B.C. 58 to A.D. 1453.

Third Edition, Revised.

Volume II.

A.D. 1453 to A.D. 1624.

Second Edition.

Volume III.

A.D. 1624 to A.D. 1793.

Second Edition.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND CORRECTED THROUGHOUT.

5 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt top, £4 1s.; and in half-morocco, £5.

THE DIALOGUES of PLATO. Translated into English, with Marginal Analysis and an Index of Subjects and Proper Names, by B. JOWETT, M.A., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford.

"We can give no one who values true culture better or more valuable advice than to recommend him, if he can afford it, to possess these five fascinating volumes."—Standard.

3 vols., demy 8vo, with 14 Maps, half-roan, £3 3s.

THE LAND-SYSTEMS of BRITISH INDIA. Being a

Manual of the Land-Tenures and Systems of Land Revenue Administration prevalent in the several Provinces. By B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C.I.E., F.R.S.E., M.B.A.S., late of the Bengal Civil Service and one of the Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

"In range of view, accuracy of statement, and lucidity of exposition, it surpasses anything that has been previously written on this important subject."—St. James's Gazette.

REPRINTED FROM MR. ROBERTSON'S LARGER EDITION OF "THE SEASONS" AND "THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE."

Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

THOMSON.—THE CASTLE of INDOLENCE. Edited by

J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A.

"The best edition."—Scotsman.

"Thomson, to our thinking, has never been so fully or so well edited before."

"An excellent piece of editing."—Scottish Review.

(Glasgow Herald).

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

CICERO.—PRO MILONE. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. B. POYNTON, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Hertford College, Oxford.

"The commentary is all that can be desired. The notes, both critical and explanatory, are full. Events in history are aptly brought in to illustrate particular points, and parallel passages quoted to explain and confirm points of syntax. The indices are a valuable addition, and great praise is due to the Introduction. It is itself a piece of excellent writing. Altogether, there will be found good work here, and good results ought to be expected from its use."—Schoolmaster.

BOOKS FOR OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1893.

RIEHL'S SEINES VATERS SOHN, and GESPENSTERKAMPF.

Edited, with Notes, by HENRY T. GERRANS, Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 2s.

"This Edition is intended to aid beginners in their preparation for class-instruction. An attempt has been made to explain all words, especially compound words, which are not found in the ordinary small dictionaries, and it is hoped that the attention paid to particles may add to the value of the notes."

For ordinary grammatical rules a grammar will, it is assumed, be consulted. Idioms are frequently illustrated by means of instances drawn from every-day conversation, and a system of cross-references will aid the student in comparing passages in which similar phrases or constructions occur.

The Introduction suggests a few points for the consideration of teachers, who may amplify the editor's remarks to suit the capabilities of the class.

A brief statement of a few geographical and historical facts which throw light on the first story appears in the form of an Appendix.

Both stories have been slightly abbreviated in order to meet the needs of junior pupils.

SHAKESPEARE (SELECT PLAYS). THE TEMPEST. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, Hon. D.C.L. and LL.D., Fellow, Bursar, and Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

A COMPANION TO SHAKESPEARE.

SHAKESPEARE as a DRAMATIC ARTIST. A Popular Illustration of the Principles of Dramatic Criticism. By R. G. MOULTON, M.A. Second Edition, Enlarged, crown 8vo, 6s.

CAESAR.—THE GALLIC WAR. BOOKS I. and II. Edited by the Rev. C. E. MORERLY, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, late Assistant Master in Rugby School. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

"For the convenience of Senior Candidates at the Oxford Local Examinations of 1893, the Text and Notes of Book III. have been bound up with this edition of Books I., II.; price of Books I.-III., in stiff covers, Two Shillings."

LIVY. BOOK VII. With Introduction and Notes, by A. R. CLUER,

B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. New Edition Revised by P. E. MATHESON, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of New College, Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

VIRGIL.—AENEID. BOOK VI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by J. BARROW ALLEN, M.A., late Scholar of New College, Oxford.

[In the Press.]

VIRGIL.—AENEID. BOOKS IV.-VI. Edited, with Introduction

and Notes, by T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College; and A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford, and Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham Colleges, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

HORACE.—ODES. BOOK I. With Notes for the Use of Schools,

Index of Metres, &c. By E. C. WICKHAM, M.A., Master of Wellington College, and late Fellow of New College, Oxford.

[Nearly ready.]

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK III. With Introduction, Notes,

&c., by J. MARSHALL, M.A., Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"For the convenience of Senior Candidates, Books III. and IV. (by the same Editor) are bound up together; price in cloth, Three Shillings."

EURIPIDES.—MEDEA. With Introduction and Notes, by C. B.

HEBERDEN, M.A., Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY, BOOKS VI., VII. With Introduction, Notes, and Table of Homeric Forms. By W. W. MERRY, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

EUCLID REVISED: containing the Essentials of the Elements of Plane Geometry as given by Euclid. With Additional Propositions and Exercises. Edited by R. C. J. NIXON, M.A., Mathematical Master in the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast, formerly Scholar of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. Book I., stiff covers, 1s.; Books I. and II., cloth, 1s. 6d.; Part I., Books I.-IV., cloth, 3s.; Part II., Books V., VI., cloth, 3s.; Complete, Books I.-VI., cloth, 6s. Supplement, 6d.

GEOMETRY in SPACE, containing Parts of Euclid's Tenth and Twelfth Books. By the same Editor. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY PLANE TRIGONOMETRY, that is, Plane Trigonometry without Imaginaries. By R. C. J. NIXON, M.A. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[Just published.]

A CONCISE ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH

LANGUAGE. By W. W. SKELTON, Litt.D. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

A PRIMER of ENGLISH ETYMOLOGY. By the same Author.

Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

A PRIMER of FRENCH LITERATURE. By George Saintsbury,

M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s.

A HISTORY of GERMAN LITERATURE, from the Accession of Frederick the Great to the Death of Goethe. By WILHELM SCHERER. Translated from the Third German Edition by Mrs. F. C. CONYBEARE. Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER. Crown 8vo, 5s.

AN ELEMENTARY LATIN DICTIONARY. By Charlton T. Lewis,

Ph.D. Square 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A GREEK-ENGLISH LEXICON, abridged from Liddell and Scott's

Quarto Edition. Square 12mo, 7s. 6d.

FULL CATALOGUE OF CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS, post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1062.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

LONDON UNIVERSITY EXAMS.

UNIV. CORR. COLL. TUTORIAL SERIES.

HEAT AND LIGHT, ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF. By R. W. STEWART, B.Sc. Lond.
3s. 6d. This book embraces the entire Matriculation Syllabus, and contains over 150 Diagrams.
"A student of ordinary ability who works carefully through the book need not fear the examination."—Schoolmaster.

MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY, ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF, embracing the entire Matriculation Syllabus, with numerous Diagrams. By R. W. STEWART, B.Sc. Lond. 3s. 6d.
"Plain and intelligible to the ordinary reader. A capital example of what a good text-book should be."—Educational News.

THE TUTORIAL LATIN GRAMMAR. By B. J. HAYES, M.A. Lond., and W. F. MASON, M.A. Lond.
Ready this month. 3s. 6d.

LATIN COMPOSITION AND SYNTAX. With copious Exercises. By A. H. ALLCOCK, M.A. Oxon., and J. H. HAYDON, M.A. Camb. and Lond. 2s. 6d. Key, 2s. 6d. net.
"One of the best manuals on the above subject that we have met with for some time."—Schoolmaster.
"The clearness and concise accuracy of this book throughout are truly remarkable."—Education.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE: its History and Structure. By W. H. LOW, M.A. Lond. Just ready. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH PROSE READER. By S. BARLET, B.-ès-Sc., and W. F. MASON, M.A. Lond. 1s. 6d. With Vocabulary, 2s. 6d.
"A good selection."—Schoolmaster.

CO-ORDINATE GEOMETRY: the Right Line and Circle. By WILLIAM BRIGGS, LL.B., B.A., F.C.S., and G. H. BRYAN, M.A. 2s. Key, 4s. 6d. net.

"Is thoroughly sound throughout."—Education. "An admirable attempt on the part of its authors to realise the position of the average learner, and to provide for the wants of the private student."—Educational Times. "The best book we have seen on the subject."—Board Teacher. "Every difficulty seems to be anticipated."—School Journal.

ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICAL ASTRONOMY: a Text-Book for the Lond. B.A. and B.Sc. By C. W. C. BARLOW, M.A. Lond., Camb., and Edin., and G. H. BRYAN, M.A. Camb. 6s. 6d.

"This book supplies a distinct want. The diagrams are clear, the style of writing lucid, and the mathematical knowledge required but small."—Teacher's Monthly. "An admirable text-book."—School Board Chronicle. "Completely successful."—Literary World. "Sure to find favour with students of astronomy."—Nature.

A MANUAL OF LOGIC. By J. WELTON, M.A. Lond. 2 vols. Vol. I., 10s. 6d. [Vol. II. in preparation.]
This book embraces the entire B.A. and B.Sc. Syllabus, and renders unnecessary the purchase of the numerous books hitherto used.

"A clear and compendious summary of the views of various thinkers on important and doubtful points."—Journal of Education. "The manual may be safely recommended."—Educational Times. "Excellent marginal analyses."—Freeman's Journal.

HEAT, TEXT-BOOK OF, covering the entire London Int. Sc. and Prel. Sci. Syllabus, with numerous Diagrams and Calculations. By R. W. STEWART, B.Sc. Lond. 3s. 6d.
"Clear, concise, well arranged, and well illustrated."—Journal of Education.

LIGHT, TEXT-BOOK OF (uniform with the Text-Book of Heat). By R. W. STEWART, B.Sc. Lond. 3s. 6d.
"Clear and precise."—Practical Teacher.

ANALYSIS OF A SIMPLE SALT, with a Selection of Model Analyses. By W. BRIGGS, LL.B., B.A., F.C.S., and R. W. STEWART, B.Sc. Lond. 2s.
"Useful and trustworthy assistance."—Nature.

Complete Catalogue of over 250 books specially adapted for London University Exams., including Special Subjects for 1892 and 1893, free on application.

London: W. B. CLIVE & Co., University Correspondence College Press Warehouse, 13, Booksellers Row, Strand, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

NICHOL'S LIFE OF CARLYLE, by LIONEL JOHNSON	205
FITZPATRICK'S SECRET SERVICE UNDER PITT, by R. DUNLOP	206
BACHELOR'S THE AINU OF JAPAN, by Prof. KEANE	207
LELAND'S TRANSLATION OF HEINE, by R. McLINTOCK	208
SCOTCH CLERICALISM OLD AND NEW, by W. WALLACE	209
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	210
SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE	211
NOTES AND NEWS	212
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	213
ORIGINAL VERSE: "PURPLE CLEMATIS," by Miss FLORENCE PEACOCK	213
JURITARY: DR. W. F. SKENE	213
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	213
MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY'S LIST	213
MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHREIN & CO.'S LIST	214
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	215
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Cryptogram in the Cambridge Juvenius , by Whitley Stokes; Saints and Sequences , by the Rev. F. E. Warren; The Obit of St. Columba , by the Rev. Dr. B. MacCarthy	215
HOUTSMAN'S HISTORY OF THE SELJUK TURKS, by Prof. VAMBERY	216
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	216
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on some Jainu-Prikrit and Pili Words , by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris; China and Babylon , by Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie; The History of the Moghul Emperors Illustrated from their Coins , by Stanley Lane-Poole; "Tel" and not "Teli," by Mr. H. Rassam	217
PHILOLOGY NOTES	218
RIDGEWAY'S ORIGIN OF METALLIC CURRENCY, by Canon ISAAC TAYLOR	218
CORRESPONDENCE—
Aegean Pottery in Egypt , by Cecil Torr	221
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	221
THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	221

DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY, Vol. I. to XVI., FOR SALE, in perfect condition.—Apply A. X., Academy Office, 27, Chancery Lane.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

NEW CLEARANCE CATALOGUE

(No. 78) of SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS, now offered at Greatly Reduced Prices
(52 pages), sent gratis and post free to any address, includes many important Works in Travel, History, Biography, &c.,
Theology, Angling, Sport, and Natural History,
Magazines, and over 1,400 Cheap Novels.
A SPECIAL CATALOGUE of Ancient and Modern Books, including
Rare and Curious Works in various Classes of Literature, post free.
BERGLAS & FOULIS, Booksellers, 9, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be so much improved that the System, as a Device, will be no more needed.

MARK TWAIN (Mr. S. L. Clemens) says
Professor Loiset: "He showed me how to LIGHT UP the dark cellar of my Memory." Languages learned rapidly.
Prospectus (containing opinions of pupils who have PASSED EXAMINATIONS and of members of the Medical, Scholastic, Clerical, Military, and other professions) post free from Professor LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford-st., London.

MEMORY

NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

SICILY: Phœnician, Greek, and Roman.

By the late E. A. FREEMAN, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., &c.

Maps, Index, and Illustrations. Cloth, 5s.

Professor Freeman passed the above work for press, with the exception of the Index, before he left England on his last journey.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE NEW NOVEL IN READING AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE HEAD OF THE FIRM.

In Three Volumes.

By Mrs. J. H. RIDDELL,

Author of "George Geith of Fen Court," &c.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

LORD TENNYSON.

By kind permission I am producing a fine large BRONZE MEDAL of LORD TENNYSON, in order that the Portrait of his Lordship may be preserved in a metallic and everlasting form.

The Medal will be of the finest workmanship, and limited to 500 brilliant Proof Specimens at 7s. 6d. each. Velvet-lined Cases for same 2s. 6d. extra.

Will be ready September 17th.

Persons desirous of having their names entered as Subscribers for Specimens please address by letter

MR. ROCHELLE THOMAS,
Worthgate House, Highbury Park, London.

Under the patronage of H.M. the Queen and Royal Family.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions of luxé. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations,
Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.
LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

THE

LINOTYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,
30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE and ART.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE,
STEPHEN'S GREEN, DUBLIN.

SESSION 1892-93.

The Royal College of Science supplies Courses of Instruction in the Sciences applicable to the Industrial Arts, especially those which may be classed broadly under the heads CHEMICAL MANUFACTURES, ENGINEERING, and MINING.

A Diploma of Associate of the College (A.S., B.C.Sc., L.) is granted at the end of the Three Years' Course, the required conditions being complied with.

Four Royal Scholarships, of the value of £50 yearly each, with free admission to the Lectures and Laboratories, are attached to the College. Two are offered for Competition each year to Associate Students not being Royal Exhibitors, on the completion of their first year's course.

The Fees payable by Non-Associate Students are—£2 for each separate Course of Lectures, £1 for Half Course of Experimental Physics, or £10 for all the Lecture Courses of a Faculty, for the Session.

For ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY—£2 for a Special Course of One Month, £5 for Three Months, £9 for Six Months, £12 for the entire Session.

For PHYSICAL LABORATORY—£1 per Month (one hour a day), £2 for a Special Course of One Month, £3 per Month for six hours a day, or £6 for the Session (one hour per day).

For ASSAYING—£5 for Three Months, £9 for Six Months, £12 for the entire Session.

For ZOOLOGICAL LABORATORY—£2 for a Special Course of One Month, £3 for 1st Medical or 2nd Arts Course Royal University of Ireland, or £5 for a Special Course of Three Months.

For BOTANICAL LABORATORY—Same as Zoological Laboratory.

For GEOLOGICAL LABORATORY—£2 for a Special Course of One Month.

For DRAWING SCHOOL—£3 for the Session, £2 for One Term.

The Chemical and Physical Laboratories and the Drawing Schools are Open Daily for Practical Instruction.

Mathematics, Mechanics, and Mechanics	Professor W. McF. ORR, M.A.
Descriptive Geometry, Drawing, Engineering, and Surveying	Professor JAMES LAMB, M.A.
Chemistry (Theoretical and Prac- tical) and Metallurgy	Professor W. N. HARTLEY, F.R.S., F.C.S., F.R.S.E.
Physics (Theoretical and Prac- tical)	Professor W. F. BARNETT, F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A.
Geology	Professor G. A. J. COLE, F.G.S., Dean of Faculty for the Session.
Mining and Mineralogy	Professor J. P. O'REILLY, C.E., M.R.I.A.
Botany	Professor T. JOHNSON, D.Sc., F.R.S.
Zoology	Professor A. C. HADDON, M.A., F.R.S., M.R.I.A.

The Course of Chemistry, Physics, Botany, Zoology, Geology, and Mineralogy are recognised by the Royal University of Ireland, and Certificates of Attendance are granted to Medical and other Students attending the Courses, and the Chemical, Physical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories.

Programmes may be obtained on application at the College, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal College of Science, Stephen's Green, Dublin.

The FIRST TERM of the Session will commence on MONDAY, the 3rd OCTOBER, 1892.

Notes—Incoming Associate Students will be required to pass an Entrance Examination in Elementary Mathematics and Elementary Practical Geometry, as indicated on page 3 of Programme, copies of which may be had on application from the Secretary.

Professor J. P. O'REILLY, Secretary.

THE DATCHEROL TRAINING COLLEGE.

CAMBERWELL GROVE.

(In connexion with the Datcherol Collegiate School for Girls.)

Principal—Miss RIGG.

Mistress of Method and Lecturer—Miss C. E. L'ARPENTER;

Assisted by other Teachers and Lecturers.

A full Course of Training and Preparation for the Cambridge Teachers' Certificate (Theory and Practice). Lectures on the Theory, History, and Practice of Education. Special provision made for instruction in Physiology and Hygiene, Elocution, Drawing, and Swedish Drill (Ling's System). Abundant opportunity for practical work (in a school of more than 400 pupils). Model and Criticism Lessons. Regular Class Teaching. Fees moderate. Good home for Students. Apply—Principal.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS.

The NINETEENTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, October 10th. The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be Open Daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Secretary:—

1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER IN BIOLOGY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in BIOLOGY, at a stipend of £150 per annum. It is necessary that candidates should have a special knowledge of Botany. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to
Cardiff, August 9th, 1892. IYON JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to
Cardiff, August 9th, 1892. IYON JAMES, Registrar.

HAMPSTEAD—Mr. and Mrs. SONNEN-SCHEIN RECEIVE BOARDERS at the HAMPSTEAD COLLEGIATE SCHOOL for GIRLS, THE KNOLL, EAST HEATH. Preparation for London University Examinations. Accomplishments by eminent Professors. Lessons in Swimming at the Bath, and in Riding, Lawn Tennis and open air Gymnasium. Beautiful situation on the Heath, and every domestic comfort; sanitary arrangements perfect. Prospectuses and references as above.

GERMAN READING BOOKS

Adapted for Schools and Private Tuition.

BY
Dr. C. A. BUCHHEIM,
Professor of German in King's College, London.

I. EASY GERMAN READINGS.

1. NIEBUHR'S GRIECHISCHE HEROENGESCHICHTEN. With Notes, Questions for Conversation and Vocabulary. Thirtieth Edition. 2s. 6d.

2. GOETHE'S ITALIENISCHE REISE (Sketches from Goethe's Travels in Italy). With Notes, Vocabulary, and Literary and Biographical Introduction. Eighth Edition. 2s. 6d.

3. SYBEL'S PRINZ EUGEN VON SAVOYEN. With Notes and Biographical Notice. Third Edition, thoroughly Revised and Improved. 2s. 6d.
"Dr. Buchheim's notes give all the historical and geographical information needed."—Journal of Education.

II. DEUTSCHES THEATER.

(A Collection of Modern German Plays.)

PART I. Contents: 1. Elgenson. 2. Dichter und Page. 3. Der Hainsepp. With Notes and Vocabulary. Twelfth Edition. 2s. 6d.

PART II. Contents: 1. Der Prozess. 2. Ein theurer Spass. 3. List und Phlegma. With Notes and Vocabulary. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d.

(PARTS I. and II., together in 1 vol., 4s. 6d.)

